Mr. BLACK. No; and I am glad the gentleman referred to that particular phase of the matter, because that is the argument we members of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service are having urged upon us quite frequently in an effort to get us to increase the amount of the annuity now paid under the present law. The advocates of such an amendment say there is a big fund of several million dollars stacked up in the Treasury by the contributions of the employees. That simply means that the Government holds this sum in trust to pay these annuities to the two or three hundred thousand Government employees who have paid it in. Does not anybody think that the contributions on the part of the Government employees will create any surplus fund? It will be all needed, and more, to meet liabilities under the retirement act which are bound to accrue in later years. I remember when I joined the Woodmen of the World the rates were very low, the membership was new and composed largely of young men, and we saw the great big fund piling up in the treasury of the order, and we were assured that the rates would never increase. Experience, however, has taught us different. As the average ages of the members have increased, the deaths have correspondingly increased, and rates had to be increased. The gentleman need not deceive himself. The actuaries have found that the employees will contribute under present rates—I am not sure of the exact amount, but I will look it up and put it in the RECORD—but my recollection is that the employees will contribute about 35 per cent of the fund when they pay in the 2½ per cent of their annual salaries and the Government will contribute the balance.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I am glad the gentleman will do that, because I think his figures are just reversed.

Mr. BLACK. I do not state that I now have the correct figures in my memory, but I will put them in the RECORD.

Mr. HIMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HIMES. I do not know whether or not I have the correct impression, but the gentleman made a statement awhile ago concerning legislation on the part of the committee. Does the gentleman mean to convey that the committee is considering legislation that would amend the retirement act so that the retirement would be based on the period of service?

Mr. BLACK. No. I said there was considerable agitation for an amendment of that kind. I did not say that such agitation was on the part of the committee.

Mr. HIMES. The gentleman does not know of any member of the committee who is advocating that?

Mr. BLACK. No. I said there was considerable agitation that this should be done. In fact, one of the questions asked by the Commissioner of Pensions of the board of actuaries and answered by them on page 17 of their annual report is as follows:

Question 5. Certain associations of employees are desirous of having the law amended to permit retirement on demand after 30 years of service. What increase in the normal cost to the Government would result if the suggested plan were adopted by the Congress?

Answer. The following table shows a comparison of the normal cost of the proposed plan with that of the existing plan:

Comparison of normal cost to Government under plan permitting retirement after 30 years of service with existing plan.

Group.	Cost of existing plan.		Cost of proposed plan.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman from Texas advise the House as to the average length of service of the employees who would be retired under the bill as originally passed?

Mr. BLACK. The original bill provided, if the gentleman from Nebraska will permit, that any employee who has reached the retirement ages which I have mentioned and who had served 15 years or more would be eligible for retirement.

Mr. EVANS. I understand that; but does the gentleman have the information as to what under normal conditions would be the average length of service before retirement?

Mr. BLACK. No; I could not give the figures upon that proposition. The retirement act has not been in effect long enough to make statistics available in that line. Now, gentlemen, in conclusion I want simply to say I realize how easy it is for us to yield to our generous impulses in matters of this kind, saying, "Well, I will vote for this proposition. The cost of it comes out of the Government." But, after all, the Government is simply the people back home. And their backs are rather heavily burdened with taxation at the present time.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BLACK. Let me finish this statement and I will. When I know that there is no thought of the man in industry, agriculture, and business, no thought of his retirement at 55, I am not going to vote for the retirement of Government employees at 55 years of age and pay them a gratuity at the expense of the taxpayer. I am not willing to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I know the gentleman from Texas desires to be absolutely fair and square in the matter and I know he does not wish to convey any impression to the Members of this House that is not absolutely just and correct; but when he makes the statement that the contribution to this retirement fund reaches 67 per cent by the Government, or thereabout, and 33 or 35 by the employees, he is absolutely wrong. I hold here in my hand the report as to this particular question and fund as it is given by the Government actuaries, and in it he will find the amount provided by the employees is 2.50, and the amount provided by the Government is 1.06, which substantially and absolutely controverts the statement made by the gentleman and supports my statement to this House.

Mr. BLACK. No; if the gentleman will permit, what I said in my remarks a moment ago was that when the bill was originally before the House the estimate of the actuaries was that the contribution on the part of the Government employees would be about 35 per cent and on the part of the Government 65 per cent. I also stated to the gentleman that I had not read the recent report of the actuaries giving the experience of their further studies, but I will get the report and put the correct figures in my remarks. I do not dispute the figures which the gentleman has stated in so far as they apply to the new employees who come into the service, but he must remember that there were several hundred thousand employees in the Government service, many of them employed for a long term of years, to whom the act applies.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. The gentleman will certainly not say that what might have been proposed in any original bill before the House has anything to do with the bill as it was passed by the House. We are now speaking of the bill as it was actually passed by Congress, and, if the gentleman pleases, I reiterate that the Government actuaries positively state, as I have just said, that the fund is provided by a contribution of 2.50 from the employees and 1.06 by the Government.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is probably correct as to the new employees who enter the service. But the retirement law applied not only to new employees but to all employees in the Government service at the time the act was passed. There were several hundred thousand of these. A valuation of the assets and liabilities of the civil service retirement and the disability fund as of June 30, 1921, is made in the Report of the Board of Actuaries and is found on page 9. It shows the Government will ultimately contribute 67 per cent of the fund and the employees 33 per cent of the fund, payable to those in the service June 30, 1921. These figures, found on page 9 of Senate Document No. 107, confirm the correctness of the figures which I have stated.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. LONDON. In its practical effect this bill, if it becomes a law, will apply to about 240 men?

Mr. BLACK. Well——

Mr. LONDON. Let us get that clear.

Mr. BLACK. I have no desire that it be otherwise. I want the gentleman from New York to be clear in his mind that this is a bill of general application and applies to the future as well as the past, and I want the House to understand that. It not only means these employees who have been recently separated from the service will be granted retirement pay at age 55 but it includes any employee who may be separated from the service hereafter.

Mr. LONDON. It applies only to those who will be involuntarily separated after 15 years' service?

Mr. BLACK. It is a bill of general application, as I stated to the gentleman.

Mr. LONDON. Yes; and it applies only to those separated involuntarily through no fault of their own.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. LONDON. In order to obtain any benefits from the provisions of this bill one will have to have rendered 15 years' service and then be dismissed from the service for no fault of his own. Is that correct?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman does not mean all forms of Government service, does he?

Mr. BLACK. This includes all civil service Government employees.

Mr. LAYTON. Would it cover these Coast Guard employees who have been discharged from the Government service on account of age?

Mr. BLACK. It would unless they are covered by some separate law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], in my opinion, inadvertently, has not presented this issue fairly to the Members of the House. This is an emergency measure. He would give the House to understand that it is arbitrarily reducing the retirement age of all Government employees to 55 years. That is not the fact. As the result of the close of the war and of the disarmament conference a reduction in the civilian forces at the arsenals and navy yards has been made down to and below the pre-war level. The provision in the bill as reported by the conference committee that an employee must have been 15 years in the Government service in order to be entitled to the benefits of its provisions necessarily limits the application of the bill to men who were in the Government employ before the war when we were on a purely peace basis.

Now, it could not have been looked for or reasonably expected that these old and experienced employees would have been separated from the Government service before they reached the retirement age, but because of this extraordinary situation they have been so separated.

Moreover, this conference report, contrary to the general impression, does not give these men the full pension. It simply allows them a proportionately reduced pension, when they reach the retirement age, from the money they and their associates have contributed from their own wages. The original bill as it passed the House would not have applied to more than 100 employees, and the bill as amended by the Senate and recommended by this conference report will not apply to more than 300 employees throughout the country. This bill is intended to meet a condition that can not, in my opinion, happen again, because we never, if we are going to have any Army and Navy at all, will have a civilian force in the navy yards and arsenals lower than we will have by the end of the present fiscal year. If the time ever comes when the War Department and the Navy Department are entirely abolished, then and then only you may have more employees affected than the small number that I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is an emergency measure. It is a humane measure. I trust that the conference report will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, to agree to the conference report and accept the Senate amendment to this bill will enlarge the spirit of civil service. If the opponents of this measure say that it sets a new precedent to decrease the age of labor for men, then I stand for the new precedent. We will not protect in this particular Senate amendment, though the bill is general in its application, all those who are separated from the service involuntarily in the future; but we will protect men in the navy yards to the extent of several hundreds, 300 I understand, in the whole country—men who served their country patriotically and faithfully during the war, who could have gotten double and triple the wages they received during the war in other services. It is a sad picture to-day, and a picture that I personally know of, to see men 55 years of age who have served in the navy yards of this country and who have been broken down in health, and who have only one profession—we will say boilermakers, or repairers of boilers of naval ships—deprived of their employment. These men who are involuntarily separated from the service and who have passed the age of 55 will be without the means of livelihood, and notwithstanding their patriotic service in sticking to their work in the navy yards, they will be wanting in the means of making their livelihood, because no other service will need or accept them.

So I am heartily in favor of accepting the Senate amendment and agreeing to the conference report. In support of this we have the valuable precedents of progressive, fair-minded private corporations which have liberal retirement features and through whose liberal treatment of their employees they have had very little trouble during the present strike and previous strikes. We have other precedents of great private corporations which make liberal provisions for old-age pensions.

The life of the average man is under 60 years; and it is not a matter of charity, but a matter of justice which is in keeping with the humanitarian views of the present age, that we should give men separated involuntarily from the service of their country the benefit of five years in their declining years.

Therefore, I hope, in line with the principle of governmental liberality and fairness with respect to this particular class to which I have referred, that we will agree almost unanimously to the conference report and accept the more liberal provision of the Senate for these worthy men. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the whole subject of retirement laws for employees of the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the bill H. R. 12622.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE NATION'S FARM, LABOR, AND RAILROAD PROBLEM.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, the coal miners have returned under exactly the same conditions as when they struck, yet with cost of production the same, the price of coal at the mines is from three to four times the price in effect at the time the strike was called. Such a discrepancy shows clearly to those that will take the trouble to look behind the barrage the machinations that will be employed by the unscrupulous profiteer to gouge the public.

Mr. Speaker, I had a dream. Old Ben Johnson had been reading to Bill Shakespeare from the Literary Digest all about a political hero named Daugherty, who had flouted both Congress and the Constitution by refusing to invoke the Clayton antitrust laws against coal, oil, steel, and railroads, packer and other combines, while, on the other hand, he had used this same antitrust act to bring injunctions against labor organizations which Congress had declared legal; and that in overruling both Congress and the Constitution this hero, whose given name was Harry, in order to make a thorough job of knocking out 250 labor unions, which had the O. K. of Congress, had ordered out 5,500 marshals and deputies, at a cost of a million dollars, and issued a call for 40,000 more.

At which Bill Shakespeare made this comment:

"I am tempted to inquire, as I did upon another occasion 300 years ago, 'Upon what meat has this our Cæsar fed that he has suddenly become so great?'"

"Well," said Ben, "this is the story they tell:

"There is a fellow called King Coal in Pittsburgh and another called King Steel in Wall Street. They are very good friends, Coal having a 25-year contract with Steel to furnish fuel at prices much below that which the public enjoys paying. Now, King Coal and King Steel have developed a peculiar habit; their great indulgence is melons in the form of dividends, and during the five years of the World War the habit became chronic. But in time of peace it is not so easy to find good dividend melons. So they cast about and decided that the next thing to war in making good steel and coal prices is a strike; the strike curtails production, which in turn puts up prices, which again produces melon dividends.

"King Steel said: 'I have another grievance. You know I still enjoy the good old 12-hour day of our grandfathers, and there is a hive of bees called labor unions who have a newfangled notion that an 8-hour day is enough. Besides, they insist that part of my melon shall go into bee food.'

"King Coal said: 'Those same bees are stinging us. They don't like it because I take so much of their honey to sweeten my melons. Now, you can see, I have got to have plenty of melon, because I not only need melon dividends but have a whole Mellon family for stockholders.'

"Now, it happens," said Ben to Bill, "that both Coal and Steel own railroads, or are owned by railroads, or have railroads for brothers, cousins, uncles, and aunts. The railroads got their melon supply from the Government in the shape of 40 to 80 per cent increase in rates. It was only fair play that these railroad relatives should turn in and help Coal and Steel get their melons by shutting off coal and steel deliveries and thereby raising prices and producing melons.

"So it was voted that the strike was the thing. That could easily be brought about—any little pretext, like contracting out shopwork in violation of the contract with labor unions and Government orders, or refusing to renew wage contracts with the bees for their honey supply, or raising a little question of 'seniority' over the issue of which is the oldest bee in the hive.

"'Now,' they said, 'all we need to do is let our political friends, those fellows for whom we had to subscribe so much of our melon in campaign times, run this job. If they back and fill and back and fill, and keep it up long enough, keep this strike going for three or four months, we shall get our prices and our melons.' So that was done until coal prices went up 100 per cent and to small buyers 300 and 400 per cent. Then finally steel prices begin to follow suit and begin to climb to a war basis. The coal strike is then settled because no longer needed. But King Steel has only begun to get his and then trouble is started.

"'It seems,' said Ben to Bill, 'there is a small bunch of railroads, mostly in the South and West, that King Steel and King Coal do not own or control and are not related to even as second cousins. And this bunch, getting tired of the backing-and-filling tactics of the political bunch, started to settle the strike themselves without reference to the politicians by making satisfactory negotiations of their own with the bees.

"So something had to be done, and that quickly. King Steel and Wall Street relatives pondered. Those beehives had to be busted. There were 250 of them—some contract. Finally they found the solution—let Harry do it.

"'So that,' said Ben to Bill, 'is how it comes that Harry is flouting Congress and the Constitution to kick over the 250 hives of working bees and calling out an army of 40,000 marshals and deputies. The strike hatreds must be kept up or the beans will be spilled by direct arrangements between railroads and labor unions, and the unions will not be killed.'

"Mr. Speaker, in view of the official statement of the honorable Senator from Indiana the actuality of the dream may be difficult to verify. The honorable Senator says that Caesar is fed another way, that he is simply fed up on section 15 of the Clayton Act.

"That is why I have introduced an amendment (H. R. 12622) to this section 15. The celebrated poet, Oliver Wendell Holmes, father of the eminent jurist of our Supreme Court, once laid down the rule for mending chaises that had been broken down as follows:

'Tis mighty plain, that the weakest place must stand the strain. And the way to fix it, I maintain, is to make that place as strong as the rest.

When the President, on August 18 last, reviewed the situation before the Congress both coal and rail strikes seemed within a few days—hours—of adjustment. Since then the coal strike has been adjusted. The coal miners have returned to their work, with the prospect that the country will be relieved from the dangers of a coal famine, provided rail facilities are ample to meet the problem of transportation.

At that time the railway shopmen had acceded to the President's first proposal, that railway operations be resumed, all issues to be determined by the findings of the Railway Labor Board, the striking operatives to resume work without loss of seniority rank. The railway executives turned down this first proposal by refusal to restore to the strikers their former seniority rank. To the President's amended proposal, that the men return to work, leaving the question of seniority to the decisions of the Railway Labor Board, the striking shopmen refused to accede, on the alleged ground that the board had already committed itself against the principle of restored seniority.

The railway contest intensified until, on September 1, a Chicago district court, at the instance of the Attorney General, issued an injunction against all labor organizations in any way involved, said to be 250 in number, and the Department of Justice has issued notices to all United States marshals and deputies to make arrests for violation of the injunction.

In addition to violence, which all men agree should be enjoined, provided the injunction applies only to those threatening such violence, the Chicago injunction restrains the labor organizations and their officers in the following particulars:

Speaking to railway workmen with a view to encourage, influence, or instigate them to cease from work or remain on strike.

Giving interviews to the press or publishing speeches or other matter calculated to encourage, influence, or instigate the purposes of the strike.

Using the telephone, telegraph, or other means of communication to the same end.

Holding public meetings to encourage the strike or create public sentiment and sympathy in behalf of the strikers and their alleged cause.

The use of the strike-benefit funds of labor unions and other organizations to aid and support the strikers and maintain the purposes of the strike.

Application has been made by one of the labor organizations enjoined, the electrical workers of this District, who went on strike at the Washington Terminal July 1, for an injunction against the United States district attorney and the United States marshal and deputies restraining them from making arrests in pursuance of the Chicago injunction, on the ground that it violates the guaranties of the Constitution providing for free speech, free press, and the right of peaceful assembly, and likewise violates the express provisions of the Clayton Act, under which the injunction was issued.

Master mechanics of railway orders, the Association of American Railways, and the Attorney General all agree that the rolling stock of operating railways is in bad repair, endangering the safety of life and property. The Attorney General estimates that one-half of the cars and locomotives on the line are in need of repair.

The acts of Congress providing for adjustment of railway disputes, inspection of railway equipment, and requirement of the railways to institute necessary repairs and employ standard safety appliances stand inoperative and nonenforced. The President in his address August 18 cites that the railroads were the first to ignore and refuse to comply with the decisions of the Railway Labor Board, and adds:

> When these failures of many of the carriers to abide by the decisions of the board were brought to my attention, I could more fairly appraise the feeling of the strikers, though they had a remedy without deciding to paralyze interstate commerce.

The president of the American Federation of Labor and the secretary of the central strike committee have issued statements that railway executives of 92 railroad companies have violated 104 times the decisions of the Railway Labor Board.

Interviews from the executive offices of the Government indicate that the extreme provisions of the Chicago injunction exceed the authority of the court under the provisions of the Constitution and the acts of Congress under which the injunction was issued, and that a more or less radical modification of the injunction order is likely before any injunction is made permanent. At the same time it is admitted even by the spokesman for the strikers that acts of violence and disorder and the employment of force in resisting the attempts of railway companies to operate their lines have no place under the laws of this country and are in all respects deplorable and merit prompt legal suppression and punishment of the guilty.

I have little faith in an appeal to force for permanent settlement of industrial disputes, by employers or employed or by the Government as intervenor, by injunctions and troops. A resort to force is an application of war measures to the activities of peace, and instead of allaying is calculated to promote the feelings of class antagonism that are the main cause of industrial disputes. One of the most rational views is that of Secretary of Labor Davis in his Labor Day speech at Mooseheart, Ill.:

> Not one industrial dispute in a thousand has ever been permanently settled except in one way—by the negotiations of reasonable men, in a reasonable frame of mind, who sat down to discuss the issues in a spirit of fairness and cooperation. * * * We must ultimately come to the state of negotiation for settlement. One hopeful phase is the negotiations between railroad heads and labor representatives. If part of the lines effect an adjustment and restore business and reap the profits of the enormous traffic pressing upon them from all sides, it will influence the stiff-necked and hard-boiled competitors to seek a like peace in the welfare of their roads.

Will arrests or threats of arrest, aimed to restrain employees from exercise of their constitutional rights, aid or retard the success of pending negotiations? Will such arrests and threats of arrest promote or are they calculated to disturb and destroy that reasonable state of mind and spirit of fairness and cooperation which Secretary Davis has so well described as fundamental to negotiations for a permanent settlement?

Any party which goes into a court of equity with an appeal for justice under the provisions of the Constitution or of an act of Congress must go in with clean hands and must strictly comply with the provisions of the Constitution and of the congressional act under which the party seeks a remedy. And when the Government itself is such a party and seeks an injunction in a court of equity, it can not ask for a ruling in conflict with the Constitution and the act of Congress under which the action is brought.

It has been stated that section 15 of the Clayton Act is the provision under which the Chicago injunction was brought. But as all provisions of the act must be construed in harmony the express provisions of sections 6, 15, and 20 are alike under purview. Section 6 provides that labor and agricultural organizations are lawful combinations which can not be held as "conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws." Section 20 specifically exempts from injunction any persons, singly or in concert, engaged in a peaceful strike, or distributing strike benefits, or holding meetings to promote the purposes of such strike, or persuading others to join or aid in such strike, and provides "that no restraining order shall be granted by any court of the United States" to enjoin employees from such activities.

An injunction which ignores the constitutional provisions of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right of peaceful assembly, and likewise disregards both the letter and spirit of the Clayton Act, under which the injunction is sought, can have no reasonable effect other than to inflame the feelings of the strikers and inspire them to retaliation, instead of promoting the "reasonable frame of mind" and the "spirit of fairness and cooperation" necessary to secure a peaceful and permanent adjustment of the industrial and railway dispute. The utterances of labor leaders and of railway executives corroborate this conclusion.

The duty of the hour is to aid the attempts of those roads and employees that are seeking to find a basis of agreement that will permit the undisturbed handling of traffic. This implies that we remove unnecessary and provoking causes of class antagonism between employers and employees. It was the intention of Congress so to do when we enacted sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, declaring that labor and agricultural organizations were not combinations in restraint of interstate commerce, and providing that promotions of peaceful strikes and distribution of organization funds in aid of the same were not violations of the antitrust laws and subject to injunction by the courts.

But it seems that both the Attorney General and the Chicago district court hold that section 15 authorizes the Government to enjoin labor organizations against engaging in a strike movement or distributing funds, issuing orders, holding meetings, and publishing interviews and speeches in behalf of such movement—sections 6 and 20 to the contrary notwithstanding. The result is that labor leaders who are disposed to join railroad executives in effecting adjustments for the operation of some 50 or 60 railroads are being placed under arrest and driven to fights in courts, while the feelings of antagonism between employers and employees are to that extent intensified.

If section 15, as thus interpreted, is a cause of offense and is used to nullify the provisions of sections 6 and 20 and erect obstacles in the peaceful negotiation, Congress has an easy remedy at hand by an amendment of section 15, so that it may no longer prove an obstacle to the purposes of the act. This can be accomplished by the following proviso:

> Provided, That the authority granted in this section for issuing injunctions by request of the Attorney General shall not extend to the peaceful operations and purposes enumerated as exempt from injunction in sections 6 and 20 of this act.

The effect of such an amendment will accomplish the following purposes: First, it will demonstrate to labor organizations that the attitude of the Government is fair and consistent, and that Congress is not guilty of appearing to deal fairly with such organizations in one section of an act and then leaving a loophole for the annulment of said purpose in another section of the same act. Second, it will aid to remove the chief disturbing factor in negotiations now pending, and hasten the consummation thereof, and the restoration of traffic.

The Department of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, reports that the country is now completing the harvest of a $6,000,000,000 crop which will be the prime source of the restoration of normal prosperity, provided that crop can be promptly and efficiently marketed and distributed. The prosperity of the country hangs upon speedy adjustment of transportation and to promote that end I urge such amendment of the Clayton Act for the removal of the chief obstacles to that "reasonable frame of mind" and "spirit of fairness and cooperation," which, as Secretary Davis stated, are the prime essentials to negotiations for a permanent industrial peace.

The position taken by Congress in the Clayton Act and the proposed amendment of section 15, which I have introduced, to prevent the evasion of that act is not a novelty. It has been tried out in the original home of trades-unions, Great Britain, 16 years ago, making injunctions like that invoked in Chicago illegal, just as they have been under sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act since 1914.

It was assumed that the Clayton Act had stopped the Federal judges in their abuse of power, which had exceeded all tolerable bounds and resulted in their constituting themselves prosecutor, jury, and judge. The American people are a docile, law-respecting, reasonable people. They will not be remiss in respect of courts so long as they limit their activities to the function of courts of justice. But the people regard with displeasure overstepping of one department by another, and if the Clayton Act will not curb the tendency of Federal judges to make tyrants of themselves other means should be found that will.

This branch of Congress, at least, was sincere in those provisions of the Clayton Act assuring labor and agricultural organizations against injunctions for alleged breach of the antitrust laws. When the Esch-Cummins railroad bill was before Congress, and the Senate was ready to sacrifice the progressive and just provisions of the Clayton Act regarding labor and agriculture, by repealing sections 6 and 20 through a provision in the Esch-Cummins Act, this House stood firm and refused to accede to the Senate provision. What the House refused to do a Chicago district judge, who owes his appointment directly to the Attorney General, has attempted to do by a temporary injunction. The Chicago court has not granted a permanent injunction which could be appealed to a higher court and overthrown. The Chicago court plays safe by extending the temporary injunction 10 days at a time.

The amendment I have introduced is to prevent any court from putting Congress in the attitude of double-crossing labor and agricultural organizations; to prevent a court from saying that Congress in sections 6 and 20 grants immunity of such organizations from anti-trust laws, but in section 15 authorizes courts to enjoin such organizations; to stop district courts from saying that Congress authorizes them to declare that strikes are illegal, in the same act that makes peaceful strikes and their maintenance legal. It is aimed to show labor and agricultural organizations that Congress plays fair, that it does not extend to workingmen and farmers a glad hand with one hand while stabbing them with the other.

Meantime, since putting in my amendment to the Clayton Act, United States district attorneys have been daily assailing labor organizations in the Chicago courts in the attempt to blacken the character of their leaders and the purposes of their organizations, and all governmental activities for strike settlement have been rendered null and void. The roads and their employees have been negotiating separately until it is now reported that 60 roads are on the point of resuming full operations, with the striking employees reinstated without loss of seniority.

CAN THE ATTORNEY GENERAL ENJOIN FARM ORGANIZATIONS?

If the Attorney General, under the operations of section 15 of the Clayton Act, can bring injunctions against labor organizations, he can also, by the same authority or usurpation of authority, enjoin agricultural organizations, for labor and agricultural organizations are provided for in the same section and clause of the act. They are in the same class. The provision covering the two provides:

SEC. 6. That the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations instituted for the purposes of mutual help and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations or the members thereof be held or be construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws.

If anything, labor organizations are more specifically protected against injunction than agricultural organizations, because labor organizations are likewise protected by section 20, which expressly exempts all strike activities from injunction. But the Attorney General and the Chicago district court maintain that they can lawfully bring injunction under section 15 in defiance of both sections 6 and 20. So, if they can bring injunctions against labor organizations which are protected by two sections of the Clayton Act, they can likewise enjoin farm organizations which are protected by section 6 only.

To learn whether special interests are trying to destroy farm organizations, read the Wall Street Journal, the financial daily of the stock and produce exchanges, and the organs of the grain and produce exchanges, the live-stock and cotton exchanges, and a certain class of daily newspapers. The Wall Street Journal charges editorially that farmers, through their organizations to stabilize prices, are among the chief offenders against the antitrust laws and deserve prosecution. It doubtless speaks for the various classes of middlemen that make their profits by hauling farm products—grain and produce, live-stock and cotton exchanges, elevator and warehouse companies, packers and their private car lines, and the various affiliated railways and banks. All these applaud the Attorney General and the Chicago court for enjoining labor organizations. The demand for injunctions against farm and labor organizations alike proceeds from a common source and for a common purpose—the serfdom and industrial dependence of the producing classes, both farm and factory, upon those who make their dividends by the exploitation of industry.

It is therefore just as necessary to farm organizations as for labor organizations to amend section 15 of the Clayton Act under which the Attorney General is claiming his authority to evade the Clayton Act in the courts. The prime object of the railway and coal interests in the recent strikes and of the steel, oil, and packing interests behind and affiliated with them was to break down the labor union. That is the prime objective of the injunction. These special interests are determined to destroy the power of workingmen to have a voice in fixing the prices of their product, namely, the wages of labor. From the same source comes the protest against the proposal of the farmers to have a voice in the fixing of the prices of farm products.

It was at the demand of these interests that when the administration, of which the present Attorney General is a conspicuous spokesman, came into power, that this reorganized Federal Reserve Board restricted farm loans and raised the rates thereon and started calling loans, to be followed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the Esch-Cummins bill, in raising railroad rates 40 to 80 per cent. These were the two governmental acts which started the farmers of this country on the road to bankruptcy.

It is this condition that makes possible to-day the outrageous situation where it is cheaper for the farmer to burn their grain than buy coal at the present inflated price.

On the one hand, the farmer is manipulated far below the cost of producing his product, and the things he buys are manipulated by trusts and combinations who by one method or another seek to evade the laws and sell their product far above cost of reasonable profit. In other words, the farmer sells at wholesale and buys at retail.

The farm organizations of the country sought relief from this intolerable condition by attempting to market their surplus products abroad, their views being incorporated in the Norris bill. But even this small boon to the farmer could not be allowed to pass unnoticed. In order to prevent the farmer from securing any direct benefits through independent initiative, the Norris bill was killed and the Kellogg substitute put in its place, so as to compel the farmer to get all advances for exporting his crops from banks and other agencies, who get a 2 per cent rake-off on all Government advances. The War Finance Corporation within the past few days has reported to Members of Congress its operations for 1921 and up to August 15, 1922. It shows that out of a total of $400,000,000 advanced for export and numerous other purposes over $300,000,000, or three-fourths, went to banking and financing institutions, including live-stock loan companies and exporters, while only $97,000,000 went to cooperative marketing associations representing the farmers. Only a little over one-eighth of the Treasury advances, or $53,000,000, was used to finance exports; so it is not at all difficult to understand why the export of food products for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, as reported by the Department of Commerce, were less than even in the bad year preceding by $450,000,000, or nearly 50 per cent, and due to lack of providing a market for our farmers, wheat is selling for 60 and 65 cents while Canadian wheat is bringing 8 to 10 cents more.

The same attitude of antagonism to measures calculated to give the farmer a share of independence and prosperity has shown itself in killing land reclamation projects, the last step in this line being to strike reclamation from the soldiers' adjusted compensation act. So detrimental to certain interests is any semblance of farm independence and organized effort that this Congress has even been favored by a message from the White House that a "farm bloc" in Congress is prejudicial to the welfare of the country. Manufacturers' blocs, railroad blocs, banking blocs, Wall Street blocs we have with us always as mentors, guides, and directors of laws and tariff schedules; and one of our executive departments—the United States Shipping Board—seems to be operated exclusively as the agency of a shipping bloc, which aims to operate merchant marine companies by the use of Treasury funds appropriated under the name of ship subsidies.

It is not difficult to understand the attitude of such interests and their political representatives, whether in executive, legislative, or judicial positions, against the independent activities of farm organizations. It is the idea of the reactionary group that both farmers and workingmen should take what it has been deemed wiser to give to them; and if they do not like it enjoin them. If they organize to resist, bring injunctions to destroy the organizations, arrest the officers of the organizations if they issue instructions or advice to members, prohibit their public meetings, even prohibit their exercise of the constitutional guaranties of free speech, the use of a free press, and peaceful assembly. And bring such injunction proceedings even under the provisions of the Clayton Act, although that act expressly provides that farm and labor organizations are not combinations in restraint of commerce and can not be enjoined as such.

My State of Minnesota has just produced a bumper crop of potatoes, estimated at about 30,000,000 bushels. The price of potatoes is over $1 per bushel in New York, wholesale. But the farm price in Minnesota is reported at approximately 25 cents, which is less than cost of raising them. The difference between the New York price and the Minnesota price is absorbed by the produce markets, warehouses, and railroads. Should the potato raisers organize to warehouse their own product and ship them in their own private cars, as the "Big Five" of the "packers' combine" is permitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General to do, and by means of such organized action should be able to realize enough of the 75 cents differential between New York and Minnesota to pay for the actual cost of raising potatoes, replacing the soil fertility, and the cost of seed for next year's crop, what would happen? Why, the Wall Street Journal and all the other organs of the produce exchanges and shippers would be after the Attorney General to bring an injunction under the Clayton Act; and if he cares no more for the word "agricultural" than for the word "labor" in line 3 of section 6 of that act the Minnesota potato growers would speedily be enjoined if they said the word "potato" either in a public meeting, in the public press, or over the telegraph or telephone.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a misunderstanding as to the effect of this bill. This bill applies to one class only, namely, to those who are involuntarily separated from Government employment after at least 15 years' continuous service because of no fault of their own. Point 2 to be borne in mind is that, instead of getting his full annuity, the annuity which he would have gotten at the age of 70 or at the age of 62, under the terms of the retirement act, he gets only a portion of the annuity. In other words, he is placed in the same position that a policyholder in an insurance company is placed in when he gets the cash surrender value of his insurance policy or a paid-up policy. He gets what the future full annuity is worth at the time that he is separated from the service. You should remember that when you vote for it. That has not been referred to in the discussion.

Mr. ANSORGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. ANSORGE. Is it not also a fact that none of these employees will receive a pension until they reach their retirement age? It seems to be an impression that these men are going to receive their pension at the age of 55. The bill says they shall not receive it until they reach the retirement age.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman should read section 2.

Mr. LONDON. Under section 2 he may apply for an immediate annuity. He has the right to apply for an immediate annuity in lieu of the larger annuity at the age of retirement. In other words, he may ask for the surrender value of his future annuity. It is a very simple proposition. No gratuity is involved, no generosity is involved. You are only following the method which insurance companies are compelled by law to carry out with their policyholders.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How do you determine the amount?

Mr. LONDON. It is worked out actuarially. The gentleman will find on page 5 a very clear statement of it. Section 2, on page 5, gives the method of computation, and because this mathematical method of computation is difficult to follow, you should not vote against the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I think the membership of the House will agree that no bill passed by the House was intended to do more good than the so-called retirement bill, but in reality it has worked an extreme hardship to a great many faithful employees of the Government, in that men engaged in a special line of work for the Government for 28, 29, or 30 or more years have been involuntarily left off the pay roll. The Civil Service Commission has ruled that a man reaching the age of 55 years is not entitled to register for labor. Therefore these men who have reached the age of 59, some of them within three or four months of the age of retirement, have been discharged from the service, and if they want to go back again they can no longer be employed by the Government but must seek employment elsewhere. So a great hardship has been worked on these men who have given the best of their lives in the building of battleships, in the repairing of battleships, in the building of guns, for 25, 30, and sometimes 35 years. If they go out and seek employment, what do they get? When they go to the great corporations, the first question asked is, "What is your age?" A man says, "I am 58 years of age." "Where have you been employed?" "I have been employed in an arsenal or a navy yard." The minute these men say they have reached the age of 57, 58, or 60 no great corporation wants them. They are left without employment. They can not get employment. Then to make it worse Government institutions close their doors to them, notwithstanding the fact that they have been faithful employees of the Government. I say, that being the case, the least we can do is to be fair with the men who have given the best years of their life to the Government and who through no fault of theirs have been separated involuntarily from the Government service. That is what this bill says. Men who have been separated involuntarily, men who have been faithful to the Government, men who have given the best that is in them to the Government, are the beneficiaries of this bill, and unless we pass it we close the avenues of employment to many of them throughout the country.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the deficiency bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the tariff. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On what subject?

Mr. WOODRUFF. On the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The state of the Union is tolerably wide.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I may say to the gentleman from Virginia that if the permission is granted my remarks will be tolerably wide.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we ought to have a more specific statement than that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House Resolution 324.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on House Resolution 324. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform us what is the title of that resolution?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is a resolution which should be very familiar to the gentleman from Wisconsin. It is known as the Woodruff-Johnson resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on House Resolution 324 I will print two memorandums forwarded to his superiors by a special agent in the Department of Justice, Maj. W. O. Watts:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1922.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. W. J. BURNS, CHIEF BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Subject: Reference to the conduct of war-graft cases.

1. As verbally directed by you Wednesday night last, I submit the following narrative report of my duties and observations since employment by the department July 6, 1921.

DUTIES.

2. From the inception of my duties until about the middle of November I worked principally on the United States Harness Co. case, under the supervision of Attorneys C. B. Brewer and J. L. Lenihan, both of whom were assigned on this case. Since the date mentioned I have been principally engaged on

(a) Cases pertaining to irregular sale of surplus property and adjustment of claims of H. Miller and his several associate firms, and

(b) Analyzing sales of surplus property during 1920 and 1921, concerning which I charged irregularities while a major in the Army and executive officer of the surplus property division, and subsequently thereto, and also noting additional irregularities as disclosed by the Secretary of War's reports to Congress, which I secured by loan and have used in conjunction with my previous investigations.

KENYON CASE.

18. On this occasion Mr. Lenihan and I walked from the Department of Justice to the Munitions Building. During the trip conversation touched upon the Kenyon case.

In this, Mr. Lenihan stated that Mr. Brewer and Mr. Sheppard had no case. He said Mr. Hogan had gone over his side of the matter with him fully in connection with his charges against Mr. Brewer, and that it looked bad for Mr. Brewer. He stated, "I can say right now that the Kenyon check for $350,000 will be released within a week." I asked him whether or not he had studied the Sheppard-Brewer report and he said he had not, but that he had read Mr. Hogan's briefs and was satisfied in his own mind that there was no case.

EXTRACT.

19. Memorandum from Mr. Myers to Mr. Lenihan, December 5, 1921:

"Herewith is a report of Capt. Joseph R. Sheppard, jr., in reference to the claim of C. Kenyon Co. (Inc.) on raincoat contract No. 1514. This report, to my mind, established that there were duplications of inventories in different claims submitted by the Kenyon Co. to the War Department and in different items of the claim on this particular contract. These duplications were contained in a statement made by a firm of accountants employed by the Kenyon Co. Frank Hogan, the attorney for the Kenyon Co., concedes that there may be duplication in the statement. But who would suggest under such circumstances that there had been a false or fraudulent claim against the United States within the meaning of the statute?

"I am convinced that a false or fraudulent claim within the meaning of the statute must mean a deliberate attempt to obtain payment from the Government for something for which there is no basis for liability whatever, and not merely the presentation of overlarge or even padded account for the audit and inspection of officers of the Government.

"Mr. Hogan has promised to submit to me this week a more condensed brief of the case, in which the personal equation will play a less part, and which will deal with the law from his standpoint. As you know, payments to the amount of $350,000 are now being withheld from the Kenyon Co. on other contracts as to which there is no question pending the decision whether or not the award on contract No. 1514 should be forfeited under the statute. Mr. Hogan represents the Kenyon Co., while possessing physical properties of great value, like many other manufacturing enterprises, is now short of liquid assets. He stated to go into the new year with this $350,000 against the Government on its books will seriously embarrass the company.

"In view of the great delay that has already transpired, I felt warranted in saying to him that the department would dispose of the matter one way or the other prior to the 1st of January.

"I have had Colonel Goff request the Bureau of Investigation to designate an accountant to check over the report and ascertain first what the total amount involved in the alleged duplication is. The memorandum went down Friday, and I hope that the man will be designated within the next few days. In view of the very crowded week ahead of me, I wonder if I can not ask you to consider the report, to supervise an analysis of it by the accountant, and to give me, if possible, before the close of the week a brief recommendation as to the disposition of the matter.

"I think the principles involved are somewhat similar to those which you have discussed so clearly in the Maxwell case, and that, therefore, you will not have much difficulty in arriving at a conclusion of the law." (Copy of this memorandum attached—Exhibit No. 1.)

20. Shortly after Mr. Lenihan received Mr. Myers's memorandum of December 5 I was in his office, when he mentioned the Kenyon case and read to me extracts of this memorandum.

He said that his findings would be different to those of Sheppard and Brewer; that there was no case.

21. I reminded Mr. Lenihan that he was confronted with a precarious situation in arriving at a reverse opinion of the department's two accredited attorneys, who had established a case after months of careful investigation based on first-hand information. I also stated that he was at a decided disadvantage for the reason that he would necessarily have to render his opinion on the report itself, unless he personally made a thorough investigation.

22. Mr. Lenihan said that Sheppard was not with the department any longer, and that Mr. Brewer had made a deplorable mess of the case.

23. Inquiry was made as to whether he would close the case without further reference to Mr. Brewer, and Mr. Lenihan replied that Mr. Myers had said that his report would be referred to Mr. Brewer.

24. On December 15, at 9.30 a. m., I was in Mr. Lenihan's office regarding some corrections I desired made in his memorandum to Mr. Myers of December 14 re H. Miller & Co. case, on which I had rendered a report December 3, which had been referred to him. While going over this memorandum with Mr. Lenihan the telephone rang, and Mr. Hogan was on the wire. Mr. Lenihan said, "Hello, Frank," and then a long conversation ensued. Mr. Hogan talked and Mr. Lenihan intervened several times with "Thanks, Frank, for the information." Mr. Lenihan was reticent about answering Hogan, appearing much embarrassed and desiring to end the conversation as quickly as possible. Mr. Hogan was apparently aggressive and insisted on discussing the Kenyon case, forcing the issue, and, from the tone of Mr. Lenihan's answers, I was constrained to believe that Mr. Hogan was in possession of a copy of Mr. Lenihan's brief. Mr. Lenihan said that "Mr. Myers is back and will get the report to-day, and he will soon know all about it." Mr. Hogan kept referring to specific points, and Mr. Lenihan said that such of these as he had not covered in his memorandum he had discussed with Mr. Myers, and said, "Over all, the items in the claim are all right as a lump sum."

COMMENT.

26. Mr. Myers's memorandum of December 5 appears to me to be an extraordinary set of implied, if not definite, instructions to Mr. Lenihan to reach a finding such as he did in his memorandum of December 12. These instructions, as well as Mr. Lenihan's reply, might well be construed as emanating from the defense counsel:

"a. Mr. Myers admits 'duplications of inventories in different claims.'

"b. But who would suggest under the circumstances that there had been a false or fraudulent claim against the United States within the meaning of the statute?"

The question naturally arises as to how these diverse statements can be reconciled with the fact that duplicate payments were actually made.

"c. Mr. Myers informed Mr. Lenihan that the Bureau of Investigation had been requested to 'designate an accountant to check over the report and ascertain first what the total amount involved in the alleged duplication is' and expressly requested Mr. Lenihan to 'supervise an analysis of it by the accountant.' Mr. Lenihan ignored these instructions and rendered his report recommending the disbursement by the Public Treasury of more than one-third million dollars without the formality of an audit in a case where two reputable Government attorneys had found fraud after an extensive investigation."

27. The "Maxwell case," so clearly discussed, had been found by Mr. Lenihan to be "no case," and closed, although it is charged as being highly fraudulent.

28. Paradoxical as it may seem, Mr. Lenihan, in his memorandum of December 12, to Mr. Myers, proceeds to state:

"Pursuant to your memorandum of the 5th instant, I have examined the files in the above matter; also the statement of Mr. Frank Hogan, attorney for the Kenyon Company, and the statement of Mr. Sheppard, formerly of this department.

"Up to this time I have been unable to obtain the services of an accountant to check over the statements in order to ascertain the exact amount of duplication. There seems to be no question that there were duplications. However, I agree with your conclusions that the duplications are immaterial except in so far as they might be the basis for charges of fraud.

"I do not have before me the original statements and records concerning these various claims. Mr. Sheppard points out various discrepancies in the several claims. His conclusions are that these discrepancies show fraud on the part of the contractor.

"In the absence of an explanation, it might well be that a conclusion might be reached that some of the items were presented willfully, knowingly, and with intent to defraud, and that, therefore, the entire claim should be disallowed."

29. Mr. Lenihan then follows with this unique "conclusion" and recommendations:

"After a consideration of the entire matter I have reached the following conclusions:

"2. That there was no fraud upon the part of anyone connected with the presentation or settlement of the claims.

"Recommendations.

"1. That a letter be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury notifying him that the department has concluded its investigation and finds that there is no case and requesting him to pay the Kenyon Co. the $350,000 now being held by his department.

"2. That the Secretary of War be notified of the result of the final investigation and that a copy of the department's letter to the Secretary of the Treasury be inclosed."

30. In the face of the two paragraphs above quoted and his admission that "I do not have before me the original statements and records concerning these various claims," Mr. Lenihan can hardly justify his conflicting "conclusion" that he had reached his findings "after a consideration of the entire matter."

31. Furthermore, Mr. Lenihan omits to mention the important fact that he was fully aware of the fact that Attorney Brewer had jointly participated with Attorney Sheppard in the more complete investigation and definite findings contained in their report, which he used as a basis for his own immature findings.

32. Mr. Lenihan's investigation and study of this case must of necessity have been elementary to a degree, since the case was referrd to him on December 5 and his report was completed December 12.

This allowed him but one week in which to study the case and write a 32-page memorandum. Of course, it was a physical impossibility to make any sort of a fair and impartial investigation and review within so short a period, and Mr. Lenihan admits that he did not attempt such a procedure.

33. How, then, can Mr. Lenihan reconcile with public interests and his sworn duty as a public official his recommendation that "a letter be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury notifying him that the department has concluded its investigation and finds that there is no case and requesting him to pay the Kenyon Co. the $350,000 now being held by his department?"

34. In my opinion this is a vital matter for the department's consideration. Mr. Hogan, as before stated, is now opposing the department in the United States Harness Co. case, the Kenyon case, and will shortly appear as counsel in the Eisner case. It is possible that Mr. Hogan may represent other of the numerous defendants in cases I have caused to be investigated by the War Department, the congressional committee, and other cases on which I have been engaged now for two years.

35. According to Mr. Hogan's own statement, as repeated by Mr. Lenihan, he has "agents" in all Government departments.

36. I deem it vital to the department's welfare to inquire into and take the necessary precautionary measures to circumvent and curtail the influence of Mr. Hogan within the department if such he actually has.

37. Assuredly, Mr. Hogan's disreputable remarks concerning attorneys of such integrity as Mr. Herron and Mr. Brewer reflects no honor or credit on himself, and to a lesser degree on Mr. Lenihan, a departmental official, who failed to justly rebuke such unwarranted attack, but rather elected to reflect such with his stamp of full approval.

38. Mr. Hogan has called on Mr. Lenihan on numerous occasions and held lengthy clandestine conversations.

DELAY IN WAR FRAUD CASES.

50. The New York World of February 4, among other things states:

"Attorney General Daugherty has headed off, temporarily at least, a threatened revolt in the Republican ranks by appointing as a Special Assistant Attorney General, Charles G. Searle, of Rock Island, Ill., for the purpose of pushing the investigation of the U. S. Harness Co. and other cases growing out of the Graham committee's inquiry into war contracts, the World learned to-day. His appointment was at the insistence of WILLIAM J. GRAHAM, of Illinois, chairman of the Select Committee of the House to investigate expenditures in the War Department.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. GRAHAM and other Congressmen have been extremely dissatisfied at the slow progress of the so-called war cases, particularly that of the Harness Co., have been making in the Department of Justice. The Graham report was made in February, 1921, and since then not a single case referred by it to the department has resulted in an indictment. The dissatisfaction reached a climax early this week, when members of the committee visited the department and demanded to know what was going to be done about the Harness Co. matter, 'The truth is,' the Congressman was told, 'we haven't a man here in the department who is equipped to handle the case as you think it should be handled.'"

51. The World of February 16, 1922, states:

"Republican Congressmen threaten to quit party.

"WASHINGTON, February 15.—What is the Department of Justice doing about the embalmed salmon scandal?

"What has been done with the Graham committee's recommendations for civil and criminal prosecution of the packers who sold rotten salmon to the United States Army, well knowing that it was to be eaten by the doughboys?

"What does the Attorney General intend to do about the Graham committee's evidence showing the conditions under which this salmon was canned and showing that one batch of it was remanufactured into fertilizer?

"These questions are being asked by a group of semi-insurgent Republicans in Congress who were responsible for the investigation that revealed a wicked disregard for the health of our soldiers. Some of these G. O. P. members are at the breaking point with the party over the failure of the administration to push the war-contract cases. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, of South Dakota, himself an overseas veteran, declared to the World correspondent:

"'If the Republican Party will not punish the men responsible for crimes like the salmon scandal, I am through with the party. But I still have hopes that some action will be taken.'"

51. That the department is open to some criticism for unnecessary delay I am of the opinion admits of no doubt.

52. The Graham committee conducted hearings on war-fraud cases for some 18 months, the record of which is contained in more than 20 printed volumes and a number of special reports.

53. The majority committee found many cases of fraud and recommended prosecutions. On its record in establishing unquestionable cases of fraud, the majority committee may well be expected to expect reasonably prompt action by the Department of Justice.

54. The minority committee invariably, so far as I am able to determine, made its findings in defense of the late administration. It is a positive fact, as borne out by the record, that the minority committee rendered no assistance in arriving at a true and just finding in any of the cases presented by me. This was an especially distressing disappointment to me, since I was of the same political faith.

On the other hand, I found Mr. GRAHAM, chairman of the majority committee, and other majority members, intensely interested in establishing the true facts. In view of its defensive record the minority committee can ill afford, in my opinion, to now complain.

55. Upon my appointment as special agent I brought a set of these hearings and reports to the department for general use and two additional sets have since been obtained. As far back as July last I urged upon Mr. Brewer and Mr. Lenihan prompt action in the Harness and other cases, and have never ceased to urge more speedy action. On numerous occasions I have stated to these attorneys that Colonel Goff would probably call upon us unexpectedly for a show-down and find us unprepared. We have been and are now woefully lacking in an organization capable of handling the enormous amount of important work involved in a competent and effective manner.

The lack of such an organization and a fixed policy of action has been so marked as to almost warrant the assumption of a hopeless view of success.

56. Almost from the inception of my appointment in July the situation has been hopelessly impracticable, if not intolerable. In the early stages of the War Fraud Bureau, Mr. Lenihan began jockeying to get charge of the Harness case as well as the bureau itself. He was voluble in his denunciation of Mr. Brewer's lack of experience in law, resented his retention on political grounds; said that he would not work under a Democrat and objected to working with him, as to do so would loose him prestige. His expressed theory was that he had won his spurs in the administration's counsels in the recent campaign, therefore, he had a right to a voice in party policies.

57. He said that it would not improve my standing in the department to be associated with Mr. Brewer, who had no standing.

He informed me that he was close to Colonel Goff and would control the War Fraud Bureau. On numerous occasions he came to the office and related conversations which, he said, had taken place between himself and Colonel Goff. His remarks were not always discreet and were at times such as to arouse a doubt in my mind as to whether the department would ever proceed in the war-fraud cases.

58. On one of these occasions Mr. Lenihan's remarks were so pointed and explicit as to almost indicate final judgment. The circumstances were: About the first of October ex-Senator George E. Chamberlain, member of the Shipping Board, phoned me and offered me an important mission which would carry me to Europe, and asked me to come to see him. This I did, and learned from another official of the Shipping Board, to whom I was referred, that the mission would necessitate my stay in Europe for possibly a year.

59. Although I could ill afford to turn this proposition down, in my financial distress, I resolved to do so in the interests of the successful termination of the Harness case and other important matters in which I was so deeply interested, and felt that the Department of Justice would need my services. I further reasoned that unless I personally prepared and pressed those cases that the Government would lose large sums of money, the guilty would go unpunished, and my labors of nearly two years would fail as a natural consequence.

Mr. Lenihan then seemingly developed a particular interest in my welfare. He urged me to accept the appointment.

He went so far as to say that the war fraud cases would never develop into prosecutions, as it was against public policy; that the congressional hearings amounted to nothing; that my work might soon terminate; that the appointment would be a just recognition of my services; that I had sacrificed enough already, etc.

60. I am not informed as to Mr. Lenihan's real powers and limitations, but have constantly labored under the hope that they were not so great as he assumed them to be. I have rather believed that he has overestimated himself, and that the department would correctly appraise his true value when the test came.

61. When he was new in the department, Mr. Lenihan remarked to me that he had never tried a case in a Federal court; that he knew nothing of Federal court or departmental procedure, and that the intricacies encountered were a maze to him in which he had to grope his way.

62. On looking up Mr. Lenihan's rating in a lawyers' guide for 1920, I find that he was licensed as an attorney in 1910, and is classified in "b" grade, the second rating listed, worth $1,000–$2,000.

Moreover, Mr. Lenihan has stated to me that during the last two years of the war his earning power did not exceed $75 per month, and that he had to borrow funds to reach Washington to accept his present position.

These facts are here mentioned for the purpose of showing that Mr. Lenihan had not attained any great degree of eminence in his profession prior to receiving his present appointment of $5,000 per annum, which he now deems inadequate.

63. So this is my appraisal, possibly crude, but at least honest, of the unfortunate conditions existing in the so-called war frauds bureau on November 19, 1921, when Colonel Goff announced in conference the detail of Mr. A. E. Myers, his assistant, to be in charge of the immediate supervision of the bureau.

64. When Mr. Myers was assigned I hailed his detail with joy, in the belief and hope that conditions would immediately improve and great accomplishments would rapidly follow. The inaction and events which have since transpired have served to almost wholly dispel such hopes. The so-called war frauds bureau, as now constituted, is so indefinite in its organization and scope of action as to be scarcely worthy of the name.

65. Mr. Myers's cooperation in my work has been so indefinite as to be negligible. It must be remembered that he has been intimately associated with Mr. Lenihan, whose advice he has sought and relied upon from the beginning. Following the conference November 19, a conversation ensued after Colonel Goff left the office. I remained for a time and took part in this. The significance of this talk was that by his very first action Mr. Myers is believed to have registered his position. Mr. Lenihan then had under consideration the Maxwell case. Mr. Myers instructed Mr. Lenihan to get his (Myers's) report on the Muscle Shoals case and follow same in making his findings in the Maxwell case.

The astonishing facts are that Mr. Myers had found no case and had actually closed the Muscle Shoals matter.

66. What happened is a matter of record. Mr. Lenihan subsequently said that he had found no case. He also said, while preparing the Maxwell report, that he was taking great pains with it, as it would be his model to be followed in all subsequent cases.

He also then jokingly said that he was going to put a sign on his door, "No-case office," as all such cases were being sent to him.

67. In the latter part of November Mr. Myers asked me to rush a report on the H. Miller cases. I rendered a preliminary report on December 3, supported with ample proofs of crime sufficient for the immediate indictments of Army officers and others.

The department has been in possession of these proofs since my employment. Mr. Myers then said he had in view a good attorney, whose appointment he would secure at once. No such appointment has been made, although I have since urged this plan upon Mr. Myers, obtaining further assurances. Mr. Myers referred the Miller report to Mr. Lenihan, with whom it is now lodged.

68. I have gone to Mr. Myers's office several times and shown him important matters on which I have been working, and have requested him to come to my office and make a general survey of the work in hand and counsel with me as to the methods and improvements.

I have called to his attention the utter lack of a satisfactory contact with the War Department for securing the necessary records, explained the difficulties of my progress, and have asked for remedial action.

Mr. Myers has never considered these requests of sufficient importance to dignify them with a compliance.

He has never deemed it expedient to come to my office and make any sort of a survey, yet he has seen fit to spend hours and constant attendance in Mr. Lenihan's office.

69. At a conference held by Colonel Goff on Saturday, November 19, 1921, which was attended by members of the War Fraud Bureau, I then gave to Colonel Goff an outline of important matters which I deemed absolutely necessary to the prompt and effectual conduct of our investigation. Colonel Goff then instructed me to prepare a letter for his signature to the Assistant Secretary of War calling for this information, which I did under date of Monday, November 21, 1921. (Exhibit No. 2.)

70. Having heard nothing from this communication, which I laid on Mr. Myers's desk, I wrote him a memorandum on December 22, one month later, requesting that these documents be referred to me for use in the preparation of reports on H. Miller and his associates on which I was engaged, should they have been received. (Exhibit No. 3.)

71. On the same date Mr. Myers replied, stating that "the letter dated November 21 was not sent for the reason that I thought some of this material could better be obtained through negotiation than by written request. Mr. Borchardt has arranged to obtain this material and much other data and will have it in this office available for reference in the future." (Exhibit No. 4.)

72. I again wrote Mr. Myers on the same date calling his attention to the importance to us of this information if we were to effectively proceed with the war-graft investigations, stating the necessity therefor. (Exhibit No. 5.)

73. Mr. Myers then came to my office, somewhat annoyed, and informed me that Mr. Borchardt would obtain the desired information. On December 27 Mr. Myers called me to his office, where Mr. Borchardt was present. Mr. Borchardt handed to me one photostatic sheet covering sales in bulk, a copy of which was in my possession, but of little value. (I know how this report is made, and have in my possession overwhelming proofs showing false entries involving millions of dollars.)

74. Mr. Myers stated that they were unable to obtain the papers I desired, as there were some 30,000 copies, and that the department had no funds with which to photostat them, etc. I informed Mr. Myers that there were not more than 3,000 copies of the papers we desired, but in view of the apparent obstacles, I stated that I believed I could procure, through Mr. Graham, the War Department's copy to Congress. Mr. Myers suggested that I do this, if possible. Accordingly, I called Mr. Graham by phone, and he courteously made the necessary arrangements with Congressman ROYAL C. JOHNSON, who gladly loaned me the recent reports. Mr. Graham further went with me to and arranged with the Clerk of the House, Mr. Tyler Page, for my access to previous reports.

75. I have been engaged on these reports since December 28, and am not yet through.

This analysis is well justified by the disclosures so far obtained; the work will be concluded as rapidly as possible.

76. Attention is invited to copy of memorandum from Mr. Lenihan to Mr. Myers dated November 28 (Exhibit No. 6), relating to me and cases in which I am interested. Mr. Lenihan is not accurate in stating that "I have never discussed with him the merits and demerits of these cases." He has discussed with me some of the cases at considerable length.

77. Mr. Lenihan appears to me to have had a good deal to do with the delay. He said, "I have felt that our limited organization should first dispose of the cases under investigation before instituting new investigations."

78. If Mr. Lenihan knows anything, he knows that the following of such a plan would assuredly result in delays so detrimental to our case as to be utterly untenable and impossible of success.

If Mr. Lenihan was really interested in the department's welfare, the question arises in my mind as to why he did not see fit to recommend the extension of "our limited organization," so as to provide for the disposal of the immense task confronting us in a proper and expeditious manner.

79. If Mr. Lenihan has ever exerted himself to this end, I have yet to hear of it. He has, on the other hand, impressed upon me the impossibility of extending the organization.

80. Mr. Lenihan then proceeds to say:

"I would recommend that after Major Watts has completed his report on the H. Miller case he be requested to furnish a statement of each case concerning which he has knowledge so that you may then determine as to whether or not the cases should be thoroughly investigated."

This recommendation would seem to determine a condition of trust and final reliance by Mr. Myers on the recommendations of Mr. Lenihan. The Miller case is now being held up, and I have not been requested to furnish statements covering any other cases. Certainly the plan outlined and recommended is not indicative of promptness or conducive of good results.

81. I have so many cases requiring attention that I fear the statute of limitation, although recently extended, will have expired before this plan could be successfully concluded.

82. As a result of my recent investigations, as disclosed to Mr. Myers, he consented, a month ago, to effect a conference between the Secretary of War or his assistant, Colonel Goff, he, and myself to secure, if possible, some plan of mutual cooperation with the War Department in our work. Later, he said Colonel Goff would be away about a week and after his return the conference would be arranged. Nothing further has developed.

83. I have personally brought enough "live" cases into the department to keep several investigators and attorneys employed for many months. If properly handled, these cases will yield a return of large sums of money which truly belonged to the Government.

84. Furthermore, I am of the firm conviction that the heavy hand of the law should fall upon the conspirators, official and private, who have mulcted the Government out of many millions of dollars, when an overburdened Government is struggling to conserve its resources and its citizens are crying in despair for relief and justice. The Spanish-American war scandals pale into insignificance in comparison to these gigantic frauds.

85. Why, then, can we not proceed in the course of our plain and public duty in an expeditious and effectual manner? I have labored long and earnestly in the pursuit of what I have deemed proper to choose as my duty. The record of achievement registers some accomplishment.

86. I now feel that sinister obstacles impede the path of our progress and that the ends of justice are being subverted.

87. Notwithstanding the fact that my convictions are strong in these premises, I yet have faith that conditions will be set aright, to the end that "justice," a word universally reverenced, but now of doubtful import in the minds of many, will again become the symbol of what the word implies.

BACKGROUND OF MY WORK.

88. It may be advisable before concluding this report to give you a brief background of my services and efforts in behalf of my Government.

89. My services for the flag began in 1898, when I served throughout the Spanish-American war as an enlisted man with the First Tennessee Regiment of Volunteers, in its Philippine campaign.

90. At my request I was discharged in the islands with an "excellent" discharge. I served there for a time in the insular treasury and subsequently in the Quartermaster Corps as a civilian clerk and chief clerk. On the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese (1904) war I was ordered to duty in Japan, where I served until 1911, when ordered, at my request, to the United States for duty. I resigned the service in 1912 to enter business for myself.

91. When it became apparent in 1916 that the United States would become involved in the World War, I secured reappointment in a civilian capacity and qualified for a commission as captain, Quartermaster Reserve Corps. I received my commission in May, 1917, and in August of that year was assigned to duty at Camp Pike, Ark. My duties there comprised purchasing and inspection of supplies, executive officer, etc.

92. I was promoted to major June 4, 1918, for efficiency. At my request I was ordered to France in July, 1918, where I was selected out of a large number of officers as executive officer to organize the personnel and establish quartermaster depot No. 3 at Montierchaume, one of the two largest depots in the American Expeditionary Forces, under plans to provide for the needs of 1,000,000 men. I remained in command of this depot until succeeded by a colonel, and thereafter as deputy depot quartermaster and executive officer until June 28, 1919, when the work was virtually wound up.

93. Upon my return to the United States I was assigned to duty August 1, 1919, as executive officer in the surplus property division, Office of the Quartermaster General.

94. I found conditions in the surplus property division in a chaotic condition and was able to affect some improvements.

95. Later on I discovered conclusive irregularities, involving the chief of the division, Col. L. M. Purcell, and other officials.

96. I made prompt report of these and attempted to apply remedial measures. I met with strong opposition of Col. A. W. Yates, the new chief of the division, and other officers and civilians involved.

97. Colonel Yates relieved me as executive officer with Col. L. E. Hanson on May 20, 1920, and ordered me not to disclose to him the irregularities complained of by me to my successor or to his new assistant, Lieutenant Colonel Barry. I ignored these instructions and advised Colonel Hanson of existing conditions.

98. Colonel Yates ordered me to request a 30-day leave of absence. I declined to do this, as the leave was not wanted.

99. I insisted upon a thorough investigation.

100. I was then imperatively directed to request a 15-day leave. I complied under protest. Colonel Yates then ordered me on June 2, 1920, to make a report in writing covering specific cases. I did this on June 22. These reports were later referred to Col. W. C. Jones, Quartermaster Corps, for investigation, where he undertook a "whitewash," but in the face of my forcible objections he gave up the job and had the quartermaster general refer the cases to the inspector general, a so-called independent branch of the service. The idea was to get a legalized "whitewash" from a legitimate inspector. They got what they wanted. I worked with the two inspectors from July until September 27—three days before my honorable discharge. I was offered a commission as major by Colonel Yates in June, 1920, provided I would turn in a "favorable" report after I had charged and established criminality. The report and findings of Col. E. O. Hunt, inspector general, are a travesty on justice. This voluminous report is defensive in every particular.

It constitutes an amazing record of falsehood and false and incomplete testimony, and unquestionably subjects him to criminal action in conspiracy to defraud the Government.

101. Colonels Yates and Hanson subsequently came under my charges and are now subject to indictment in the Harness case, and are both involved in other cases.

102. Colonel Hunt also "whitewashed" this Harness case.

103. Immediately after discharge from the Army I went to New York and published a series of some 20 articles with Mr. Alfred W. McCann in the Globe, exposing and attacking the War Department's abuses in the sale of surplus war materials and the adjustment of claims.

104. Secretary Baker replied to my charges on October 17 in a lengthy and false article, saying, in part:

"* * * The investigation by the Inspector General's office was continuous from August 1 to October 23, at which time a report was filed dealing specifically with each allegation, suspicion, or accusation made by Major Watts. The report goes with great detail into each accusation and finds each one unsupported, and concludes that 'no cause for criticism of the administration of the surplus property division has been developed by this investigation.' * * *".

105. I replied to Secretary Baker the same day in the Globe, saying:

"I did allege irregularities and favoritism. An investigation was undertaken. It resulted in a whitewash. The Secretary of War refused to discuss it. The irregularities continued. The War Department made no effort to bring them to an end. The accused officers continued unmolested.

"The War Department says the accusations now being made were not brought to its attention. The facts are that as rapidly as irregularities were exposed, the War Department found each one to be unsupported, with no cause for criticism. The War Department's own reports speak for themselves, and the congressional committee will find in them overwhelming refutation of the War Department's self-administered clean bill of health. A bureaucracy that commits offenses and is then commissioned to investigate itself is not likely to criticize its own conduct. In this case it did not tolerate criticism.

"If the War Department had really desired to put an end to the corrupt practices of which high officials were guilty, it manifested a curious kind of sincerity of purpose by refusing to call witnesses whose testimony it did not dare permit to get into the records.

"These witnesses who were not allowed to speak are available. There were two kinds of witnesses—those who were called and whose testimony was subsequently found to be unfavorable, whereupon they were not permitted to testify, and those whose testimony was known in advance to be unfavorable and who were, therefore, not called at all. That was the investigation.

"W. O. WATTS."

I could have made this reply much longer and stronger on the record of facts.

106. When Congress convened in early December I took these cases to the Hon. W. J. GRAHAM, chairman of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, House of Representatives, whose committee investigated the Harness case, the sale of Old Hickory plant, and briefly investigated several others. The committee expired, however, with the end of the Congress on March 4, and the investigations naturally ceased. Owing to the great sum involved in the Harness case, estimated at from twenty to one hundred and fifty million dollars, I especially urged upon Mr. GRAHAM the necessity for concluding that case first, so that the Government might be saved these millions by canceling the contract. The congressional committee sustained my charges.

107. The Department of Justice voided the harness contract for fraud in June, and the case is now pending trial. The department also sustained me in the Old Hickory case, and trial is now under way.

108. My charges in the H. Miller cases have been sustained by the department, and trial can be instituted almost immediately on the assignment of an attorney.

109. The War Department, I am now informed, has recently sustained my charges in two cases after previously whitewashing them, and denying my charges through Secretary Baker. I believe they will all be sustained by impartial and just investigation.

110. I have been threatened with court-martial, vilified, threatened with bodily harm, offered bribes, and received some commendations since I undertook the thankless task of attempting to prevent these criminal practices.

111. Before my employment with the Department of Justice, but while coming to the department daily to assist Mr. Brewer on the Harness case, one of these "key" thieves offered me a bribe so colossal, to use his own words, that I would "never have to work another day."

112. I was discharged without funds. I continued the fight without remuneration from September 30, 1920, until I was appointed in the Department of Justice July 6, 1921, depending upon the financial assistance of friends. I am now in debt; my family as well as myself have undergone considerable deprivations, solely for the reason that I deemed it my duty to my Government to defend it, to the best of my feeble ability, against a combination of masterful thieves, official and civilian.

CONCLUSION.

In view of the facts herein cited, I conclude that there is something wrong in the organization and direction of the so-called war fraud bureau.

RECOMMENDATION.

1. It is recommended that this report be given careful consideration and effective measures adopted to establish a loyal and efficient organization for the prosecution of war fraud cases.

2. That the H. Miller case prepared by me be withdrawn from Attorney J. L. Lenihan and assigned to an attorney of integrity and ability.

3. That neither Attorneys J. L. Lenihan nor A. F. Myers be permitted to handle any cases on which I am engaged.

Yours very truly,

W. O. WATTS, Special Agent.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (THROUGH COLONEL GOFF) FROM W. O. WATTS, SPECIAL AGENT, APRIL 1, 1922.

Re: War-fraud cases.

APRIL 1, 1922.

In compliance with memorandum of Mr. A. F. Myers, special assistant to the Attorney General, dated March 28, 1922, calling for certain specific information, the following report is submitted:

a. Special agent, Bureau of Investigation.
b. Salary, $7 per day.
c. Appointed, July 6, 1921.
d. Assigned to war-contract investigation, July 6, 1921.
e. The following cases have been developed by me while executive officer of the Surplus Property Division, or subsequently:

1. United States harness contract, dated September 24, 1920, covering the sale of all surplus War Department leather and harness equipment, variously estimated at from $20,000,000 to $150,000,000. I personally presented this fraudulent sale to the Hon. W. J. GRAHAM, chairman Select Committee on War Department Expenditures, House of Representatives, on December 6, 1920, together with a number of other fraudulent sales and adjustments of claims, for investigation. The congressional committee immediately opened an investigation (see vol. 67–68), the result of which is shown in the committee's report (1307, February 8, 1921) in which it was recommended—

"1. That the evidence set forth in serial No. 6, parts 67 and 68, and a copy of which report be transmitted to the Department of Justice for such action as the department may deem proper under the circumstances."

On February 16, 1921, the Hon. W. J. GRAHAM, chairman of the committee, speaking on the floor of the House of Representatives, bitterly denounced the harness contract as fraudulent and the officers involved therein and other cases presented by me for one hour (pp. 3478, 3479, 3480, 3481, 3482 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 16, 1921). Acting on the advice of the Attorney General, the President, on June 16, 1921, voided this contract, and the case is now in the course of final preparation for trial under the direction of Mr. Searle, with the assistance of Mr. Brewer and myself.

2. The sale of the Old Hickory powder plant at Nashville, Tenn., to the Nashville Industrial Corporation, under contract signed November 22, 1920, for $3,350,000 was caused by me to be investigated by the Graham committee. I have been informed that an incomplete audit of the cost of this plant was $143,000,000.

This case is in the hands of Attorney Rice and has already been presented to the grand jury in this city, before which body I have given testimony.

3. A large number of irregular sales and unlawful adjustments of claims made to H. Miller, New York City, and his associated concerns, comprising H. Miller & Co., Chatham Cotton Co., Delphi Mills, the Berkshire Trading Co., the Seneca Trading Co., the Universal Sales Co., and F. W. Jones (Inc.).

These were placed before the congressional committee, but owing to the expiration of that committee with the Sixty-sixth Congress they were not fully investigated by the committee. Briefly, eight of the sales and adjustments effected with H. Miller alone, of which I caused the War Department to undertake an investigation, show a loss to the Government of approximately $300,000.

On another of these sales to the Chatham Cotton Co., the Government sustained a loss of $222,268.97. The combined transactions of Miller and his associates aggregate approximately $15,000,000, and involve additional heavy losses to the Government through conspiracy of War Department officials.

A preliminary report relating to Miller and his associates was rendered by me on December 3, 1921, to Colonel Goff, for the attention of Mr. Myers, which was referred to Mr. J. L. Lenihan, attorney, who reviewed the report and proofs, and found cause for prosecutions.

4. Other irregular transactions which I caused to be investigated by the War Department and called attention of congressional committee include:

"a. The sale of all surplus mosquito bars on March 4, 1920, to the Berkshire Trading Co., amounting to sale price of $1,825,069—50 cents each for the reclaimed and $1 each for new.

"These bars cost $4.65 each, totaling $7,839,993. A 'phony' bond in the sum of $75,000 was accepted by the Surplus Property Division in the consummation of this conspiracy to defraud the Government. The president of the Berkshire Trading Co. was B. F. Falter, former captain in the Army, and in charge of the branch holding this commodity. Falter, after resigning, became associated with H. Miller in the Seneca Trading Co. and the Universal Sales Co. The War Department found that it could not enforce this fraudulent contract because it had accepted an invalid and fraudulent bond, as charged by me, and more than a year after the sale the contract was canceled. The Government sustained a loss of $1,446,586.10, as these bars were resold on May 12, 1921, to Charles Cohen, of New York, at 10 cents each for reclaimed bars and 17½ cents for new bars. The resale to Mr. Cohen was irregular, having been made without proper publicity or competitive bidding, as required by orders in force. Mr. Cohen was one of a number of favored buyers whose purchases amounted to large sums, involving a great loss to the Government, all of which should be gone into thoroughly with a view to recovery and prosecutions.

"(b) Irregular sale of 25,000 wagon covers at a fixed price of $7.50 each to favored purchasers, when bids received as high as $12.00 each, were rejected.

"(c) The preferential sale of approximately 15,000,000 pounds of surplus frozen beef at 10½ cents per pound less 1½ per cent discount, to favored packers, when higher prices were obtainable, some of which was exported contrary to resolution of Congress and orders in force.

"(d) The sale to Belgium of 15,000,000 pounds of fresh frozen beef at 15 cents per pound, on long-term credits, as a favor to the packers in getting this meat off of the domestic market where it should have been disposed of under resolution of Congress.

"(e) Irregular sales to the Universal Trading Co. (a blacklisted firm) amounting to more than $1,000,000.

"(f) Irregular sales to the Universal Sales Co., amounting in excess of $750,000, involving unauthorized transfers of former sales to the Universal Trading Co., and falsifying public documents to effect the same.

"In these transactions the Government was defrauded in that it received only from one-half to three-fourths of the value of its material.

"Other irregular transactions of these same people operating in the name of the Seneca Trading Co. involved the purchase by 'negotiation' of duck and candles, aggregating $1,000,000 at sale price, which were subsequently canceled, and the material resold, in some cases, to 'favored' purchasers at a fraction of the former sale caused a loss to the Government of about $700,000.

"As an illustration, on May 13, 1920, the Seneca Trading Co. purchased 263,633 yards of duck (olive drab) No. 1, 22½ inches, at $0.396, which had been offered to the public at 44 cents per yard, total sale price amounting to $104,398.67, at which time the actual cost price was correctly reported to Congress as $231,997.04. It appears that 918 yards of this material was delivered before the sale was canceled, a year later." This identical material was subsequently resold to Sigmund Eisner Co. under the same S. P. D. No. 13299, as recorded on page 763, July 6, 1921, "Serial list of sales," as 262,715 yards duck No. 1 olive drab, 22½ inches, at $0.101, total sale price, $26,534.22, the cost price of which was falsely reported to Congress as $60,424.45, whereas the latter figure was actually $231,634.51. On this one sale alone it will be noted that the Government lost $77,864.45, and that Congress was falsely advised that this material had cost $171,572.59 less than actual cost. In this connection it is pertinent to state here that I have undertaken an analysis of the War Department's reports to Congress, which are not yet concluded, but have developed far enough to show literally hundreds of cases of false entries similar to that cited above.

"In all of these instances, those false entries lead to irregular transactions and sales made to "inside" and "favored" individuals or firms, who have mulcted the Government, undoubtedly through conspiracy with War Department officials, out of incalculable millions of dollars.

"For a long time past, the War Department has flooded the country with false and misleading publicity statements through the press, that it had recovered, on the sale of surplus war material, from 65 per cent to 86 per cent return on its gross sales.

"The Secretary of War, in his report to Congress on the sale of surplus war materials for last year, stated that the percentage of recovery was 16 per cent for that year, and the percentage of recovery on all sales made up to that time amounted to 50 per cent. Based upon an extensive study of sales made, I am of the opinion that the Secretary of War has been grossly imposed upon by his subordinates in the preparation of those false reports.

"It is not believed that the actual percentage of recovery for last year will exceed one-half of the figures stated by the Secretary, i. e., 8 per cent.

"Furthermore, I do not believe that the percentage of recovery on all sales made on careful investigation, will exceed 20 per cent, as against the 50 per cent claimed to have been received. Deducting the cost of operation, the recovery will undoubtedly fall short of these figures.

"Irregular sale without competition of 2,383,445 yards of shirting flannel to Sigmund Eisner and associates, at $1.05 per yard, less 10 per cent discount.

"My complaint on this sale was whitewashed by the War Department, and upon a reinvestigation by an inspector of the War Department, at the request of the Attorney General, in which I have assisted, I have been informed by the inspector that my charges have been sustained. Mr. Eisner even obtained an 'adjustment' on this ridiculously fraudulent deal.

"This firm is one of the worst parasites, having an apparent strangle grip on the War Department. They have made purchases aggregating millions of dollars under most favored conditions, apparently without restraint, and their powers extend to the adjustment of claims on their own terms. They are represented in Washington by Attorney Frank Hogan, who also, it is alleged, exercises a dominating power over War Department officials, and who is counsel for the now notorious U. S. Harness Co. and the Kenyon cases.

"A lot of sales records have been gathered by me concerning this firm which warrant a thorough investigation of all transactions entered into with them, with a view to recovery of funds and criminal prosecutions.

"(h) Irregular sale of russet shoes, cover alls, blankets, etc., and 'adjustment' of false claims and cancellation of sales in favor of the Star Trading Co., of which I have gathered information, amount to several million dollars. These should be fully investigated.

"(i) Irregular sale of approximately 7,000,000 drawers and undershirts to John T. Hickey; original market value in excess of $3,000,000; cost price approximately $7,000,000 and subsequent reduction in price and partial cancellation and resale of material at about one-fourth its value.

"(j) Irregular sale of approximately 52,000,000 pounds of sugar (refined), at 8.79 cents per pound in 1919, at less than half its value, some of which was exported at a time of great scarcity, when the Nation was restricted to a limited sugar ration. At the time of this sale it appears that sugar was retailing throughout the country from 20 cents to 42 cents per pound.

"Within a few months after the War Department made these sales the Quartermaster General purchased 14,275,800 pounds of refined sugar at 15.8 cents per pound and 22,333,699 pounds of raw sugar at 14.4 cents per pound, making a total of purchases of 36,809,499 pounds, netting a loss on purchases alone of $2,162,291 on the sale price of its sugar previously sold, exclusive of the cost of refining the raw sugar.

"(k) Irregular sale of tobacco to the Berkshire Trading Co. amounting to more than $500,000; its subsequent cancellation to favor former Capt. B. F. Falter and associates and resale about a year later at a loss of about $330,000.

"(l) Irregular sale of 250,000 yards of gauze to H. Miller.

"(m) Some other firms of whom I complained to the War Department as receiving especial favoritism in the sale of surplus supplies were M. Silverman & Son, New York; Yankee Export & Trading Co., New York; Metropolitan Hospital Supply Co., New York; Classic Mills, New York; Max Stabins, Watertown, N. Y.; Thomas Roberts & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Swift & Co.; Armour & Co.; Morris & Co.; Libbey, McNeil & Libbey."

5. As a further illustration of the gross favoritism shown the "favored" purchasers, the Wool Products Co. (Max Stabins & Backrach Bros.) purchased approximately 1,200,000 pair of heavy woolen stockings, new, as shown on pages 299 and 300, "Serial List of Sales" November 6, 1920, at 23.5 cents per pair. Of this sale, it is shown that two items:

"(a) Eight hundred thousand six hundred and seventy-three pairs were then sold at 23½ cents, a total of $188,158.16, the cost of which was reported to Congress as $406,336.50.

"(b) Ninety-two thousand two hundred and thirty-four pairs at 23½ cents per pair, sale price $21,674.99; cost value reported to Congress as $46,177."

These sales were made under S. P. D. Nos. 10380 and 10398. The Wool Products Co., who were able to purchase many millions of dollars worth of surplus under favorable conditions, and at less than the value of the materials, and who had unquestionably profited enormously at the expense of the Government, was not forced by the Surplus Property Division to consummate this transaction, but were allowed to evade their obligations by cancellation of the sale on June 2, 1921. We find, then, that these identical lots of woolen stockings as to quantities and identifying numbers were resold as recorded on page 752, "Serial List of Sales," July 12, 1921, to Phelps & Quinn, Louisville, Ky., at 9 cents per pair. In this resale the 92,234 pairs netted the Government $8,301.06, against the former sale to Wool Products Co. of $21,674.99; the cost price was falsely reported to Congress as $23,980.84 as against the former cost price reported to Congress in the sale to the Wool Products Co. of $46,117. The lot of 800,673 in the latter sale, at 9 cents per pair, netted the Government $72,060.57, as against the former figure to the Wool Products Co. of $188,158.16, whereas the total cost price is falsely reported to Congress as $208,174.98, as against the total cost price reported when sale was made to the Wool Products Co. of $400,336.50.

This is only one of many similar deals in which this firm and its associates have participated, wherein the Government has sustained enormous losses. It is my purpose to fully investigate and report upon them all.

An unconscionable sale of all surplus canned meats was made to Thomas Roberts & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., on April 2, 1921. On April 28, 1921, Col. L. E. Hanson, Chief of the Surplus Property Division, directed a letter to "All control supply officers (6)," stating:

"A contract covering the sale of all canned meats surplus and to become surplus has been entered into under date of April 21, 1921, at the following prices:

	Per can.
Bacon, 12-pound can	$1.20
Corned beef, No. 1, 12 ounces	.04
Corned beef, No. 2, 24 ounces	.07½
Corned beef, 1 pound	.05
Corned beef, 2 pounds	.08
Corned beef, 6 pounds	.27½
Roast beef, No. 2, can	.03½
Roast beef, 1 pound	.03
Roast beef, 2 pounds	.03½
Roast beef, 6 pounds	.08
Corned-beef hash, 1 pound	.03
Corned-beef hash, 2 pounds	.05

It was provided that one-seventh of surplus should be taken and paid for each month; the contract to be completed by November. The control supply officers were informed that—

"original purchasers now holding canned meats unsold to be allowed to return all unsold meats at their own expense and to be refunded purchase price."

The Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Wainwright, appearing before the House Military Committee, April 21, 1921, informed that committee that sale of the War Department surplus supply of canned meats, approximating 81,000,000 pounds, was made to Thomas Roberts & Co. for $5,316,276; that the meat cost the Government 34 cents per pound and that the present market price averaged 24 cents; that the sale price was approximately 6½ cents per pound. The sale of this meat was reported to Congress on page 732, "Serial list of sales," July 1, 1921, as sale No. 38035, showing method of sale as by "fixed price, depot quartermaster, Chicago," as 129,719,722 pounds, at a sale price of $6,135,244.97, and cost price as $56,631,289.54. It will be noted that the sale price ranged from 1½ cents per pound to 10 cents per pound, and averaged $0.0472 per pound. The cost price averages 48 cents per pound.

One of the astounding features of this sale is the fact that a large number of previous sales were made after an expensive advertising campaign at prices far greater, which were subsequently canceled as a result of sale to Thomas Roberts & Co.

The exact loss involved in these cancellations and final resale have not yet been determined, but they are shown so far to reach into millions of dollars.

I have been informed that Thomas Roberts & Co. were acting for the packers, who are said to have got this meat, and am now investigating this.

Having observed an article in the Washington News of March 29 to the effect that Swift & Co. and other packers are now suing the Government for $7,909,335 28 "for goods never delivered," I made inquiry and found that Mr. Anderson and Mr. Jones, attorneys of the department, are handling this case, to whom I reported information and evidence in my possession, which it is believed will be of material value to the department in the successful defense of this case.

As an indication of the enormous losses involved in these transactions, as shown by some of the cancellations, the bacon 12-pound cans were sold at $2.50 per can, less 35 per cent, netting 13.541 cents per pound instead of 10 cents per pound received on final sale.

The corned beef No. 1 was sold at 18 cents per can, less 35 per cent, netting $0.1170 instead of $0.04 per pound received on final sale.

The corned beef No. 2 was sold at 27 cents per can, less 35 per cent, netting $0.1755 per pound instead of $0.08 received on final sale.

The corned beef No. 6 was sold at $1 per can, less 35 per cent, netting 65 cents per can instead of 27½ cents received on final sale.

The corned beef hash 1-pound can was sold at 15 cents per can, less 35 per cent, netting $0.0975 per pound instead of $0.03 received on final sale.

This meat was sold to the public through the Army retail stores at the following prices:

	Per can.
Bacon, 12-pound can	$2.75
Corned beef, 1-pound can	.23
Corned beef No. 2	.45
Corned beef No. 6	1.75
Roast beef No. 1	.29
Roast beef No. 2	.63
Roast beef, 6-pound can	1.90
Corned beef hash, 1-pound can	.22
Corned beef hash, 2-pound can	.37

Three hundred and eighteen (318) large lots of this surplus meat were withdrawn from sale by cancellation on January 9, 1920.

Later, on May 13, 1920, a small portion was again declared surplus with restrictions limiting sales to 3,111,867 pounds per month for a period of 12 months.

When this was done, it was known to War Department officials that this meat was rapidly deteriorating, while a market existed for its sale, but this was of no consequence when the packers' interests were involved.

I have arranged with these attorneys to obtain for them additional information of importance and render further assistance.

7. Coal: The Quartermaster General purchased in open market in 1920, 765,252 tons of bituminous coal, claimed to have averaged a cost of $7.12 per ton, and 170,000 tons of anthracite coal, claimed to have cost an average of $8.65 per ton, all f. o. b. mines. D. B. Wentz Co. were shown to have supplied 62,638 tons at $9.5956 and $10.25 per ton when coal was selling f. o. b. mines at $3, $4, and $5 per ton and when the Navy was paying $3.75 to $4.25 per ton for coal.

Ex-Col. Clyde Crusan, then a recent assistant to Quartermaster General Rogers, was an agent for D. B. Wentz Co., who were receiving a commission of "50 cents a ton and up" on top of the excessive price paid them.

I gathered evidence pertaining to these irregular transactions for the Graham committee, which could not be considered, for the reason that the committee was then expiring.

It is shown that even higher prices than claimed by the War Department officials were paid for this coal.

This case should be thoroughly investigated.

8. Lumber contract with Phillips & Stevens, dated February 26, 1919, covering approximately 188,000,000 feet of lumber.

I furnished the Graham committee information regarding this fraudulent contract.

An audit of the War Department furnished the department in September, 1921, shows that the Government has been defrauded out of $1,854,076.04.

This case has been in the hands of Attorney J. L. Lenihan since its receipt in the department.

This case is as criminal, but no worse, than scores of others which I have investigated and should be promptly prosecuted.

In addition to the foregoing cases, I have partially investigated sales and adjustment of claims of about 100 other firms and individuals whose transactions indicate fraud and the necessity for a thorough investigation of all such transactions.

The frauds perpetrated on the Government in the liquidation of surplus war materials are so astounding in magnitude and criminality as to almost challenge credibility.

Such frauds were not confined alone to the sale of surplus materials, but include the purchase of materials and fraudulent adjustment of claims in sums that stagger the imagination.

The congressional committee which conducted investigations for about two years, the result of whose labors are contained in some 20 printed volumes and a number of special reports, which show gigantic frauds, merely skim the surface, uncovered and recorded but a slight portion of the crimes committed.

The Finance Department of the War Department so far has been unable to audit but approximately 15,000 of the 100,000 contracts to be audited. By audits thus far made the Finance Department has determined overpayments, or fraudulent settlements, amounting to about $46,000,000, on which they have obtained recoveries of $3,000,000 by their own efforts alone.

That department has and is cooperating with the Department of Justice to the fullest possible extent. That department is now confronted with the possibility of a reduction in funds for the continuation of this most important work; therefore it is urgently recommended that the Attorney General carefully consider this vital matter and, if consistent to do so, that he call a conference with the heads of the Finance Department with a view to aiding that department in procuring the necessary funds, which would result not only to the mutual advantage of both departments but would afford the greatest assistance and advantage to the Department of Justice.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

It is recommended that a centralized bureau be organized and established within the Department of Justice with full authority, under the direction of a high-class attorney, and the necessary attorneys and personnel, to be carefully selected for ability and loyalty to the Government's interests, for the expeditious investigation and vigorous prosecution of all war-fraud cases, including purchases, sales of surplus materials, and the settlement of claims.

Such a bureau would become a revenue producer from its inception through recovery of enormous sums of money out of which the Government has been defrauded.

Furthermore, justice demands that officials and individuals guilty of perpetrating these heinous crimes on the Government be swiftly and adequately punished at the bar of justice.

Very respectfully,

W. O. WATTS, Special Agent.

ABSENTEEISM IN THE COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I will print a bulletin issued by the Woman's Clean Government Organization, as follows:

One of the most important and powerful committees of the House of Representatives is the Committee on Rules, consisting of 12 members and of which 7 constitute a quorum. The chairman of this committee is Representative PHILIP P. CAMPBELL, who was recently criticized in connection with the smothering of the Woodruff-Johnson resolution and parliamentary obstructions which prevented it from coming before the House for a vote.

The Committee on Rules is again under fire and this time by Members of both sides in Congress in regard to some other resolution concerning which the integrity of one of its reports has been questioned. On June 17 Chairman CAMPBELL presented to the House a report accompanied by a paper stating that a quorum of the committee was present when action was taken. Representative CRAMTON of Michigan gave the names of various members of the committee who were absent and showed that the alleged quorum could not have been present.

One of the Members of Congress declared that "if the Speaker in this instance is convinced, as a matter of fact, that there was not a quorum present at the reporting of a rule or a bill, the integrity of the House of Representatives is involved and the Speaker ought to say that the committee did not have a legal right to report the bill."

After the facts had been developed on the floor of the House, the Speaker, in sustaining the point of order made by Mr. CRAMTON, announced that the ruling of the Chair had been simplified by the frank admission of the chairman of the committee that there was no quorum present. In defense of his position in urging the House to accept the presumption that a quorum was present, when the disclosures made by Mr. CRAMTON showed such was not the case, Chairman CAMPBELL stated:

"It is very difficult to get a quorum of that committee. Very often a quorum of the committee is not in the city. I doubt if there is a quorum of the committee in the city at this moment, and yet here is an important matter up for consideration, and if the Speaker rules that the gentleman from Michigan properly raised the question as to the legality of the proceedings in the Committee on Rules at its last meeting, then the Committee on Rules should meet at once and agree to this resolution; but there is not a quorum of that committee in the city, and the public business can not be transacted."

The absenteeism of members of the Committee on Rules was severely scored by Mr. MANN, of Illinois, who stated that when the majority members were being selected he took the trouble to ask these men if they would attend, and those who had been absent in the past whether they would reform, and that he had received a pledge from each of them that when it was necessary to have a quorum of the Committee on Rules those members would be in Washington and present. He stated that he was inclined to believe that some of these members had better resign or else the House may be forced to elect other members in their places.

The disclosures in regard to the practices of this important committee show how a few Members of Congress have it in their power, if they so desire, to take advantage of indifferent or absent Members and kill or promote legislation according to their will or fancy, and it has been recently shown that whether or not a vote could be taken on a resolution introduced by Members of the House of Representatives depended on the will of the chairman of the Committee on Rules. In that instance the gentleman from Kansas pocketed a resolution which he himself had voted to favorably report and by parliamentary obstructions prevented a vote by the House. This has reference to the Woodruff-Johnson resolution which, after having been favorably reported, was engineered back to the Committee on Rules and killed.

The unlimited power which is exercised by the Committee on Rules is illustrated by the following remarks of Chairman CAMPBELL:

"I want to make a further statement, and then I yield. What I want to say further is this: If the Committee on Rules is to function, if the House expects the Committee on Rules to aid the House in the transaction of its business, the House must provide for a Committee on Rules that can secure a quorum of its members. [Applause.] During the period of the war, as a member of the Committee on Rules, I met with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and one or two others. Much of the most important legislation that has ever been acted upon in the history of this Republic was brought on the floor of the House from the Committee on Rules when sometimes there were not to exceed three of that committee present."

Notwithstanding its far-reaching powers, it was disclosed on the floor of the House that there is no roll call at the meetings of this committee and that there is no record kept as to who attends. These slipshod methods and the charge of absenteeism on the part of members of the Committee on Rules is a matter of serious concern for the taxpayers. It is to be hoped that for the public good the members of this committee will hereafter find time to stay in Washington and attend to their business, or that the delinquents will act on the suggestion of Mr. MANN and resign. Congress should immediately see that it is made mandatory on all of its committees to keep a record of attendance and that it be made available to public inspection.

What would you think if the Supreme Court of the United States should render a decision stating that the necessary number of justices were present and it should be discovered that the statement was untrue? This was in effect what the Committee on Rules did on June 17, and the full proceedings on the floor of the House relating thereto will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, pages 8925–8929.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, has not general permission been granted to do that?

The SPEAKER. It was granted for 10 calendar days.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If that is the fact I will withdraw my request.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate Joint Resolution 215.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on Senate Joint Resolution 215. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. What is that resolution?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Land surveys.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, this resolution (S. J. Res. 215) proposes an additional survey of the tri-county reclamation project for Gosper, Phelps, and Kearney Counties, Nebr., and would authorize an extension of the survey through Adams County, which joins Kearney on the east.

The preliminary survey, which was made in 1914, does not cover all the material points involved in this project. A considerable amount of practical information has been disclosed since the date of that test.

No special effort was made for the resurvey prior to this year. An allotment of $10,000 was made in 1914 by the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, then Secretary of the Interior, to cover the expenses incident thereto. It appears from the RECORD, however, that less than $3,400 of that amount was expended for that purpose, leaving $6,600 of the original allotment unexpended.

It also appears as a matter of record in the Treasury Department that there was an unexpended balance of the appropriation from which that allotment was made. It therefore appears quite reasonable to ask that this survey be completed at this time and that a sufficient amount of that unexpended balance be revived to cover the expenses incident to a resurvey and extension.

The principle underlying this plan has been tested quite thoroughly in Dawson County, Nebr., near Lexington. Within the present year crops have been very successful on the farms that were flooded last year, as proposed in this scheme, while adjacent farms that were not so treated have lost their crops almost completely. At this point, note the results outlined in Circular No. 72, of January, 1919, Agricultural Experiment Station, Kansas State Agricultural College, Garden City Branch Station. The results of winter irrigation for west Kansas have passed the period of theoretical conjecture and demonstrated the practicability of subsoil irrigation.

I regret that the House Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands did not find its way clear to recommend the passage of the Senate Joint Resolution 215 without amendment. Of course, I recognize the long standing policy of the House not to authorize special test surveys except through the regular reclamation appropriation set apart for that purpose and placed at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

When the Secretary of the Interior was asked to make an allotment from the proper appropriation to cover the expenses of this resurvey, he replied that the entire appropriation available for that purpose for the present fiscal year had been fully allotted to other projects, and therefore there was no unallotted fund upon which he could draw to meet this request. This question was brought to the attention of Congress in the closing days of the work of the House preceding the recess of the House from June 30 to August 15. The Senate, however, passed this resolution and sent it to the House on the 30th of June last.

The House Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, however, had completed its work for the session, and it was very difficult to secure a quorum for the consideration of bills. A quorum, however, was secured and the House resolution was reported exactly in accordance with the amendments now offered to the Senate resolution.

It was hoped, however, that the resolution would go to conference after it was reported back to the Senate and the conferees would find the way clear to revive a sufficient portion of appropriation previously lapsed to cover the expenses of the resurvey.

After thorough consideration of this resolution by the Senate and House conferees informally, it was decided that the Senate should concur in the House amendments and pass the resolution with full authorization to make the survey, but without an appropriation. It was deemed advisable to pursue this course to avoid further delay in securing the authorization, as it was very desirable to have the survey made at the earliest practicable date.

As the original survey cost less than $3,400, it is probable that the resurvey will not require that amount.

With the permission of the House, I insert the following letter from the Reclamation Bureau, as it contains valuable information relating to the original survey:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, September 15, 1922.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: In response to your telephone inquiry in regard to House Joint Resolution 354 and the letters of the Secretary of the Interior of June 28 reporting thereon, the following memorandum gives the principal facts relating to our previous investigation of the tri-county project in Nebraska.

From the fourteenth annual report of the Reclamation Service, page 170:

"Claim has been made by the people living along the Platte River in Nebraska that sufficient water was available in that stream during the winter and spring months for the irrigation by direct diversion into canals of a considerable area of land in Gosper, Phelps, and Kearney Counties, Nebr. The Secretary accordingly approved orders for a preliminary survey and investigation to determine the feasibility and approximate cost of the necessary irrigation works, and on February 28, 1914, the comptroller approved an expenditure of $10,000 or such part thereof as may be necessary for a preliminary investigation. Mr. Charles T. Pease, engineer, was assigned to this work and was in the field with a survey party during June, July, and August, 1914, making a reconnaissance to ascertain the probable amount of water available, the area of land to which it could be applied, and the approximate cost of construction of a flood-water canal for this purpose. A report was submitted on October 16, 1914, signed by R. F. Walter, supervising engineer, United States Reclamation Service; C. T. Pease, engineer, United States Reclamation Service; G. E. Condra, director Nebraska Water Supply Survey, who concurred in the conclusions of the report as affecting the tri-county project; and Donald D. Price, State engineer of Nebraska. The conclusions of this report are as follows:

"1. That there is during ordinary years flood water in the Platte River between March 1 and June 30 in excess of the present consumption amounting to approximately 340,000 acre-feet, and that there is as a rule no flood water in the river above present consumption after July 1.

"2. That the outstanding appropriations amount to more than the river discharge, but that only 1,000 second-feet of water are now being used below North Platte.

"3. That in order to secure a reliable water supply it will be necessary for the State of Nebraska to cancel all appropriations from the Platte River east of North Platte in excess of the 1,000 second-feet now used.

"4. That no steps should be taken toward the construction of this project until all excess appropriations have been canceled.

"5. That after all excess appropriations have been canceled about 140,000 acre-feet of water can under the plans submitted be delivered to the land embraced in this project between March 1 and June 30, and none after July 1.

"6. That the cost of constructing this project as outlined in the report will be between $30 and $35 per acre for 140,000 acres of irrigable land.

"7. That there are no public lands in this project, all being in private ownership."

While as noted above the sum of $10,000 was allotted for this work, the actual expenditure was less than $3,400. It is also to be noted that the cost estimate under conclusion 6 above is based upon 1914 prices.

The complete report of October 16, 1914, referred to in the above, is on file in this office and may be consulted at any time.

Yours very truly,

MORRIS BIEN, Acting Director.

SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

Herewith is returned, without approval, H. R. 10874, a bill "to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes."

With the avowed purpose of the bill to give expression of a nation's gratitude to those who served in its defense in the World War, I am in accord, but to its provisions I do not subscribe. The United States never will cease to be grateful; it can not and never will cease giving expression to that gratitude.

In legislating for what is called adjusted compensation Congress fails, first of all, to provide the revenue from which the bestowal is to be paid. Moreover, it establishes the very dangerous precedent of creating a Treasury covenant to pay which puts a burden variously estimated between four and five billions upon the American people, not to discharge an obligation which the Government always must pay but to bestow a bonus which the soldiers themselves while serving in the World War did not expect.

It is not to be denied that the Nation has certain very binding obligations to those of its defenders who made real sacrifices in the World War, and who left the armies injured, disabled, or diseased so that they could not resume their places in the normal activities of life. These obligations are being gladly and generously met. Perhaps there are here and there inefficiencies and injustices, and some distressing instances of neglect, but they are all unintentional and every energy is being directed to their earliest possible correction. In meeting this obligation there is no complaint about the heavy cost. In the current fiscal year we are expending $510,000,000 on hospitalization and care of sick and wounded, on compensation and vocational training for the disabled, and for insurance. The figures do not include the more than $35,000,000 in process of expenditure on hospital construction. The estimates for the year to follow are approximately $470,000,000, and the figures may need to be made larger. Though the peak in hospitalization may have passed, there is a growth in domicilization and the discharge in full of our obligations to the diseased, disabled, or dependent who have a right to the Government's care, with insurance liability added, will probably reach a total sum in excess of $25,000,000,000.

More than 99,000 veterans are now enrolled in some of the 445 different courses in vocational training. Fifty-four thousand of them are in schools or colleges, more than 38,000 are in industrial establishments, and a few more than 6,000 are being trained in schools operated by the Veterans' Bureau.

Approximately 19,000 have completed their courses and have employment in all cases where they desire it, and 53,000 have deferred for the present time their acceptance of training. The number eligible under the law may reach close to 400,000, and facilities will continue to be afforded, unmindful of the necessary cost, until every obligation is fulfilled.

Two hundred and seventy-six thousand patients have been hospitalized, more than a quarter of a million discharged, and 25,678 patients are in our hospitals to-day.

Four hundred and sixteen thousand awards of compensation have been made on account of death or disability, and $480,000,000 have been paid to disabled men or their dependent relatives. One hundred and seventy-five thousand disabled ex-service men are now receiving compensation along with medical or hospital care where needed, and a quarter of a million checks go out monthly in distributing the $8,000,000 payment on indisputable obligations.

I recite the figures to remind the Congress how generously and how properly it has opened the Treasury doors to discharge the obligations of the Nation to those to whom it indisputably owes compensation and care. Though undying gratitude is the meed of everyone who served, it is not to be said that a material bestowal is an obligation to those who emerged from the great conflict not only unharmed but physically, mentally, and spiritually richer for the great experience. If an obligation were to be admitted, it would be to charge the adjusted compensation bill with inadequacy and stinginess wholly unbecoming our Republic. Such a bestowal, to be worth while, must be generous and without apology. Clearly the bill returned herewith takes cognizance of the inability of the Government wisely to bestow, and says, in substance, "We do not have the cash; we do not believe in a tax levy to meet the situation, but here is our note; you may have our credit for half its worth." This is not compensation, but rather a pledge by the Congress, while the executive branch of the Government is left to provide for payments falling due in ever-increasing amounts.

When the bill was under consideration in the House I expressed the conviction that any grant of bonus ought to provide the means of paying it, and I was unable to suggest any plan other than that of a general sales tax. Such a plan was unacceptable to the Congress, and the bill has been enacted without even a suggested means of meeting the cost. Indeed, the cost is not definitely known, either for the immediate future or in the ultimate settlement. The Treasury estimates, based on what seems the most likely exercise of the options, figures the direct cost at approximately $145,000,000 for 1923, $225,000,000 for 1924, $114,000,000 for 1925, $312,000,000 for 1926, making a total of $795,000,000 for the first four years of its operation and a total cost in excess of $4,000,000,000. No estimate of the large indirect cost ever has been made. The certificate plan sets up no reserve against the ultimate liability. The plan avoids any considerable direct outlay by the Government during the earlier years of the bill's proposed operations, but the loans on the certificates would be floated on the credit of the Nation. This is borrowing on the Nation's credit just as truly as though the loans were made by direct Government borrowing, and involves a dangerous abuse of public credit. Moreover, the certificate plan of payment is little less than certified inability of the Government to pay, and invites a practice in sacrificial barter which I can not sanction.

It is worth remembering that the public credit is founded on the popular belief in the defensibility of public expenditure as well as the Government's ability to pay. Loans come from every rank in life, and our heavy tax burdens reach, directly or indirectly, every element in our citizenship. To add one-sixth of the total sum of our public debt for a distribution among less than 5,000,000 out of 110,000,000, whether inspired by grateful sentiment or political expediency, would undermine the confidence on which our credit is builded and establish the precedent of distributing public funds whenever the proposal and the numbers affected make it seem politically appealing to do so.

Congress clearly appraised the danger of borrowing directly to finance a bestowal which is without obligation, and manifestly recognized the financial problems with which the Nation is confronted. Our maturing promises to pay within the current fiscal year amount to approximately $4,000,000,000, most of which will have to be refunded. Within the next six years more than $10,000 000,000 of debt will mature and will have to be financed. These outstanding and maturing obligations are difficult enough to meet without the complication of added borrowings, every one of which threatens higher interest and delays the adjustment to stable Government financing and the diminution of Federal taxes to the defensible cost of Government.

It is sometimes thoughtlessly urged that it is a simple thing for the rich Republic to add four billions to its indebtedness. This impression comes from the readiness of the public response to the Government's appeal for funds amid the stress of war. It is to be remembered that in the war everybody was ready to give his all. Let us not recall the comparatively few exceptions. Citizens of every degree of competence loaned and sacrificed, precisely in the same spirit that our armed forces went out for service. The war spirit impelled. To a war necessity there was but one answer, but a peace bestowal on the ex-service men, as though the supreme offering could be paid for with cash, is a perversion of public funds, a reversal of the policy which exalted patriotic service in the past, and suggests that future defense is to be inspired by compensation rather than consciousness of duty to flag and country.

The pressing problem of the Government is that of diminishing our burdens rather than adding thereto. It is the problem of the world. War inflations and war expenditures have unbalanced budgets and added to indebtedness until the whole world is staggering under the load. We have been driving in every direction to curtail our expenditures and establish economies without impairing the essentials of governmental activities. It has been a difficult and unpopular task. It is vastly more applauded to expend than to deny. After nearly a year and a quarter of insistence and persuasion, with a concerted drive to reduce Government expenditure in every quarter possible, it would wipe out everything thus far accomplished to add now this proposed burden, and it would rend the commitment to economy and saving so essential to our future welfare.

The financial problems of the Government are too little heeded until we are face to face with a great emergency. The diminishing income of the Government, due to the receding tides of business and attending incomes, has been overlooked momentarily, but can not be long ignored. The latest budget figures for the current fiscal year show an estimated deficit of more than $650,000,000 and a further deficit for the year succeeding, even after counting upon all interest collections on foreign indebtedness which the Government is likely to receive. To add to our pledges to pay, except as necessity compels, must seem no less than governmental folly. Inevitably it means increased taxation, which Congress was unwilling to levy for the purposes of this bill, and will turn us from the course toward economy so essential to promote the activities which contribute to common welfare.

It is to be remembered that the United States played no self-seeking part in the World War, and pursued an unselfish policy after the cause was won. We demanded no reparations for the cost involved, no payments out of which obligations to our soldiers could be met. I have not magnified the willing outlay in behalf of those to whom we have a sacred obligation. It is essential to remember that a more than $4,000,000,000 pledge to the able-bodied ex-service men now will not diminish the later obligation which will have to be met when the younger veterans of to-day shall contribute to the rolls of the aged, indigent, and dependent. It is as inevitable as that the years will pass that pension provision for World War veterans will be made, as it has been made for those who served in previous wars. It will cost more billions than I venture to suggest. There will be justification when the need is apparent, and a rational financial policy to-day is necessary to make the Nation ready for the expenditure which is certain to be required in the coming years. The contemplation of such a policy is in accord with the established practice of the Nation, and puts the service men of the World War on the same plane as the millions of men who fought the previous battles of the Republic.

I confess a regret that I must sound a note of disappointment to the many ex-service men who have the impression that it is as simple a matter for the Government to bestow billions in peace as it was to expend billions in war. I regret to stand between them and the pitiably small compensation proposed. I dislike to be out of accord with the majority of Congress which has voted the bestowal. The simple truth is that this bill proposes a Government obligation of more than four billions without a provision of funds for the extraordinary expenditure, which the executive branch of the Government must finance in the face of difficult financial problems, and the complete defeat of our commitment to effect economies. I would rather appeal, therefore, to the candid reflections of Congress and the country, and to the ex-service men in particular, as to the course better suited to further the welfare of our country. These ex-soldiers who served so gallantly in war, and who are to be so conspicuous in the progress of the Republic in the half century before us, must know that nations can only survive where taxation is restrained from the limits of oppression, where the public Treasury is locked against class legislation, but ever open to public necessity and prepared to meet all essential obligations. Such a policy makes a better country for which to fight, or to have fought, and affords a surer abiding place in which to live and attain.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 19, 1922.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that further consideration of the President's message be had to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that further consideration of the President's message be had to-morrow immediately after reading of the Journal.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, but the motion, I presume, is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. MONDELL. I make this motion because I think the Members ought to have a little time at least in which to consider the President's message, and I think it is only fair that we shall give Members unavoidably absent an opportunity to return to the city.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not the slightest objection, Mr. Speaker, but I have some doubt about this being a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is privileged. Of course, the veto message is highly privileged, and the Chair thinks any motion in relation to it is privileged.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suppose, then, the gentleman will ask to have Calendar Wednesday set aside.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall do that. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will that shut off debate to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the motion for the previous question on the motion to postpone.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to.

DISPENSING WITH BUSINESS ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the message of the President of the United States returning without approval the bill (H. R. 10874) "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," be printed as a House document, and that 50,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House document room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this calls for 50,000 copies of the message, with none of the proceedings as to the disposal of the message. The message is short and the number otherwise printed would be less than 1,200, of which 400 would go to the House document room. It is thought that there will be considerable demand for copies of the President's message.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have never objected to a request from the majority to print a message of the President or to print an address of the President in the RECORD. This is a somewhat unpredecented request which the gentleman makes. The House will act to-morrow on the veto. What action the House will take, of course, I do not know. I know what action I shall take, and I suspect it will be different from the action that the gentleman from Washington is going to take. I do not see any necessity for the message being printed at this time. We can deal with that to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from Tennessee feels that way about it, I will ask to withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

FRANCES KELLY.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9275, for the relief of Frances Kelly, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

FEES OF EXAMINING SURGEONS—BUREAU OF PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3540) fixing the fees of the examining surgeons of the Bureau of Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter each duly designated examining surgeon, except expert and foreign surgeons, and each member of a board of examining surgeons, appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions for the examination of pensioners and claimants for pension or increased pension, shall receive the sum of $3 for each examination and satisfactory report thereof: Provided, however, That the fee for each examination made by an examining surgeon at a claimant's residence for use in a pension claim shall be $5, and in lieu of actual traveling expenses there shall be paid the sum of 20 cents per mile for the distance actually and necessarily traveled, not exceeding the distance by the usually traveled route from the surgeon's office to the claimant's home and return: Provided further, That no fee shall be paid to any member of an examining board unless he is personally present and assists in the examination of the claimant: And provided further, That the report shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the claimant and include a full description of every existing disability.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is very much desired by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill being on the Union Calendar, does not the gentleman ask to have it considered in the House in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, the only change from the present law concerning fees of examining surgeons is that they are now allowed $3 for each examination up to five, and after that $1. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior says that that makes a confusion of accounts. This bill provides that for each examination the surgeon shall receive $3, and if he goes to the residence of a man and makes an examination there and full report on the case he shall receive $5 and 20 cents a mile for travel. They have found that it is difficult to get surgeons to act promptly when they have to go to a man's home to make a thorough examination and report, for the fee heretofore allowed, which was $4 and 10 cents per mile for distance traveled——

Mr. STAFFORD. This doubles it and gives the mileage allowance where he goes to the home of the claimant?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; increases the fee to $5 and doubles the allowance for mileage.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. These same physicians make calls in a great many localities of the United States at the residence at a charge of $2 to $5. Some charge $2 and some charge $5.

Does the gentleman think it is necessary to complicate the matter by adding mileage of 20 cents a mile?

Mr. FULLER. I think so in this case. The examinations are very necessary and technical in those cases where the party is unable to go to the office of the examining board and the surgeon has to go any number of miles to see him. He has to make out a full and complete report and send that report to the Bureau of Pensions at Washington. There is a great deal of work to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to fix a certain fee without any mileage being attached to it at all?

Mr. FULLER. No; I do not think so. He may have to go 1 mile or he may have to go 20 miles.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the case where they have to examine an invalid claimant it would be the usual rule that there would be only one claimant at a time where they were entitled to mileage?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, TILTON, LAWRENCE COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 3620.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3620) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, at Tilton, Lawrence County, Miss.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Natchez, Columbia & Mobile Railroad Co. is hereby authorized to construct a bridge, connecting its timber holdings, across Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Tilton, Lawrence County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRI-COUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 215, that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 215, to insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 215, to provide for a reinvestigation of the tri-county irrigation project, Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, is that from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; from the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the minority member of the committee been consulted?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it is agreeable to him?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. SINNOTT, and Mr. HAYDEN.

MOTION TO ADJOURN.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana and Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will withhold his motion for a moment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LEA of California was granted temporary leave of absence on account of sickness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ANSORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a joint resolution introduced some time ago with reference to the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extensions of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ANSORGE. Mr. Speaker, the American public has never had a proper say in regard to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law.

Last spring I introduced in the House of Representatives two joint resolutions amending the eighteenth amendment and a bill to submit the question of light wines and beer to a national referendum of the people. These are now pending in the House.

The eighteenth amendment was adopted during war times, when the conservation of foodstuffs was a patriotic duty. It is also a fact that many of the State legislatures acted upon the proposed amendment without any intervening election having taken place. In other words, prohibition was not an issue when the members of the State legislatures were elected, and yet these very legislators voted away the personal rights and liberties of their constituents.

There is general dissatisfaction and discontent in the fact that so important an amendment, restricting the personal liberties of our citizens, was passed while many of our boys were overseas and when the mind of the public was occupied in winning the war. The bald fact is that public sentiment is not behind the amendment or the Volstead Act.

Without public sentiment behind an act limiting personal liberty there will be no real enforcement.

A great deal of the present-day unrest among laboring people is attributable to the anomaly and unfair discrimination in prohibition enforcement. The wealthy, who were able to put aside quantities of whiskies, gins, and wine, may indulge to their hearts' content. Those who can afford it can purchase from the bootleggers ad libitum. I say, let us have prohibition for all or let us have it for none. The laboring man, accustomed to a refreshing glass of beer after a hard day's work, is offered near beer as his lot. It has been said that the person who named near beer was a mighty poor judge of distance. Like the corpse, "the body is there, but the spirit hath departed."

Young men and women of to-day are developing a craving for strong drink. The bootlegger is plying his unlawful trade with a disgruntled public as his customers. The latter are imbibing rank poison purchased at exorbitant prices. There are stills in many homes, and persons who never drank before are becoming addicted to the habit. These things could never exist if public sentiment were behind the law. In the interest of law enforcement, of the health and well-being of the Nation, something should be done at once to end these conditions.

The bill and joint resolutions which I have introduced will put the question of a reasonable interpretation of the prohibition law squarely up to the people. The proposed amendments would permit light wines and beer, manufactured and sold under Government regulation and control. There is provision that there must be an intervening election at which the voters will select the members of the legislatures which will vote upon the amendments. The other bill which I have introduced calls for a national referendum on the question.

It is said that the eighteenth amendment was passed in accordance with the provisions of Article V of the Federal Constitution. The Supreme Court so held in Ruppert v. Caffey (151 U. S. 264) and in the National Prohibition cases (153 U. S. 350). But there is a feeling, whether rightly or wrongly, that a highly organized minority exercised too much influence over the State legislatures which ratified the amendment. Furthermore, the Volstead law went beyond the eighteenth amendment when it arbitrarily limited alcoholic beverages to one-half of 1 per cent.

The American people will stand for a clear-cut decision of the majority. That has been demonstrated time and time again. The people want an opportunity to express their wishes and desires in respect of liberal or strict interpretation and enforcement. Neither side to this question should run away from a decision by the public, and if the friends of prohibition believe that the country prefers bone-dry prohibition to a temperate use of mild beverages they should welcome the opportunity of getting public sentiment behind them.

There are undoubtedly some sections of our country where bone-dry prohibition may be desired. But other sections may prefer liberal interpretation under Government regulation and control. The proposed amendment would preserve to the States local option, but would not permit one section of the country to prescribe bone-dry prohibition to another section which may prefer pure light wine or properly brewed beer containing a few per cent of alcohol, manufactured and sold under Government regulations.

The Literary Digest, a private enterprise, has recently conducted a poll in regard to prohibition. The names of those voting were taken from the telephone books. But how about people without telephones? How about people in apartment houses, whose names are not listed? Why were they not asked to participate in the poll? Why were not voters' lists used in making the poll? Whenever a vote was taken in a factory, it was overwhelmingly in favor of modification or repeal. Even the vote of telephone subscribers was opposed to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law as now written.

A national referendum conducted by the Federal Government, or by the separate States, instead of by a private newspaper or magazine, would furnish positive information upon which the Congress could and would act. A national referendum has just been successfully tried in Sweden.

The bill for a national referendum is neither a wet nor a dry proposal. Rabid wets, as well as arid drys, can well join in leaving the question to the people where it rightfully belongs.

I desire to incorporate in my remarks the bill and joint resolutions introduced by me on May 2, 1922, the purpose of which is to leave the question of liberal interpretation of the eighteenth amendment to a vote of the people:

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 2, 1922.

Mr. ANSORGE introduced the following joint resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 320) proposing an amendment to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to Article XVIII of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

Add to Article XVIII of the Constitution the following sections, to be known and designated as sections 3 and 4:

"SEC. 3. That the words 'intoxicating liquors' in section 1 shall not include wines or vinous liquors containing less than ten per cent of alcohol by volume, or beers or other malt liquors containing less than two and three-fourths per cent of alcohol by volume, manufactured and sold under Government regulation and control.

"SEC. 4. That the Congress of the United States shall have no power, in the exercise of the concurrent power given to the Congress and the several States in section 2 hereof, to pass any act to enforce this amendment which shall reduce the percentages of alcoholic content provided in this amendment; but this shall not be construed as depriving any State of its concurrent power to pass an enforcement act which may reduce the percentages of alcoholic content of liquors manufactured, sold, or transported within the boundaries of said State."

SEC. 2. That this amendment shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution after, but not before, an intervening election of members of the State legislatures in the respective States and within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 2, 1922.

Mr. ANSORGE introduced the following joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 321) proposing an amendment to the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to Article XVIII of the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

Add to Article XVIII of the Constitution the following sections, to be known and designated as sections 3 and 4:

"SEC. 3. The words 'intoxicating liquors' in section 1 shall not include beers or other malt liquors containing less than 2¾ per cent of alcohol by volume, manufactured and sold under Government regulation and control.

"SEC. 4. The Congress of the United States shall have no power, in the exercise of the concurrent power given to the Congress and the several States in section 2 hereof, to pass any act to enforce this amendment which shall reduce the percentage of alcoholic content provided in this amendment; but this shall not be construed as depriving any State of its concurrent power to pass an enforcement act which may reduce the percentage of alcoholic content of liquors manufactured, sold, or transported within the boundaries of said State."

This amendment shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, after but not before an intervening election of members of the State legislatures in the respective States and within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 2, 1922.

Mr. ANSORGE introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 11510) proposing a national referendum on beers and light wines at the elections for Members of the House of Representatives to be held in the year 1922.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be submitted to the voters of the several States at the elections for Members of the House of Representatives, to be held in the year 1922, a national referendum on the following questions:

(a) Shall the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the national prohibition act be amended so that the words "intoxicating liquors" shall not include beers or other malt liquors containing less than 2¾ per cent of alcohol by volume, manufactured and sold under Government regulation and control?

(b) Shall the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the national prohibition act be amended so that the words "intoxicating liquors" shall not include wines or vinous liquors containing less than 10 per cent of alcohol by volume, or beers or other malt liquors containing less than 2¾ per cent of alcohol by volume, manufactured and sold under Government regulation and control?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of August 31, 1920, before the Liberty Defense League of Maryland, I discussed the eighteenth amendment and Volsteadism. The principles I then enunciated I have fought for consistently in and out of the present Congress. I shall continue to fight for them, and I believe that victory is in sight. In part, I then said:

The Liberty Defense League stands for individual freedom, the fundamental principle of Americanism. To secure the "blessings of liberty" the Nation was formed. For this purpose the State of Maryland became a member of the Federal Union. To-day the individual freedom of the Nation, the State, and the citizen are menaced. Regardless of party, at heart we all stand for the American Constitution of Washington, Jefferson, Cleveland, McKinley, and Roosevelt. These men were intensely American. Judged by their words and deeds they would to-day subscribe to your movement. Your more immediate consideration is the eighteenth amendment.

I abhor drunkenness because of its economic and individual blight, but prohibition does not secure temperance. With you I stand for the defense of American liberty, and, as a member of your league, I ask permission to discuss, in no partisan spirit, the larger aspects of the defense of that liberty against destructive encroachment upon the individual freedom of the Nation, the State, and the citizen.

The prohibition amendment takes away from the States their freedom of "self-determination" and from their people the right of individual freedom under local laws. There underlies the same pernicious tendency—destructive encroachment upon the individual freedom of the Nation, the State, and the citizen. We refer to this when we speak of "personal liberty" as the popular issue in American politics to-day; the personal liberty of Maryland and every other State to exercise its sovereign police power without dictation from the Federal Government and the personal liberty of its citizens themselves to decide what they shall drink or eat or wear. A majority of the voters of the United States have not given their approval to "half per cent beer." President Harding, then Senator Harding, while declaring the President's duty to enforce the laws of the United States as they stand, said of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act: "Modification or repeal is the right of a free people, whenever the deliberate and intelligent public sentiment commands. Congress enacts the laws and the executive branch of the Government is charged with enforcement."

The prohibition amendment was passed by the House December 17, 1917, in the dark days of the war, when no thought was in the minds of our people except hurrying our belated troops to the front. I was then with the Twenty-ninth Division. Had I been a Member of Congress I would have voted against the eighteenth amendment, a permanent, not a war measure. For the same reason I should have voted against the Volstead Act. My position to-day is the same as it was in 1907, when, as a candidate for the legislature, I answered the Anti-Saloon League that I "believed in home rule, and thought that every community within reasonable bounds should be permitted to settle such questions for itself." If the eighteenth amendment is to stand, I favor its interpretation and enforcement by the individual States. If the Volstead Act is to stand, I favor such modification as will permit the use of home brews, wines, beers, and other beverages whose temperate use is not intoxicating. For intemperance in this, as in other matters, I favor drastic penal action. Deal with intoxication from alcohol as you deal with intoxication from other causes. Take away from the person who abuses his privileges his license, just as you take away from the reckless automobilist his right to use what in temperate hands is a useful and beneficial agency. This is in accordance with the fundamental principles of American liberty which your league is organized to defend.

In the Sixty-seventh Congress I have stood for certain definite principles which I have applied to all proposed legislation. If I am a Member of the Sixty-eighth Congress I shall continue to follow these principles. I have stood for the fundamental American principle of more liberty and less taxes. They are associated because every restriction on liberty increases taxes. The prohibition spy restricts liberty and at the same time having him on the Government pay roll increases taxes. Beer, cider, and light wines, all reasonably taxed, mean lowered taxes on working men and on "business." This would mean also a decrease in the taxes we now have to pay to support the hordes of prohibition agents. The number of spies to be decreased would increase liberty and decrease taxes.

Some people want this prohibition business played "softly." To-day the drys know that they are hard hit. I say hit them again and keep on hitting them till the drys are not only "down" but "out." You can not lick the drys by giving them a chance to rest. You can not win a fight by "letting up." The drys need a rest. Are you going to give it to them and give the Anti-Saloon League an opportunity to get their wind and stage a "comeback"?

Behind those interests that back Volsteadism are all the forces of intolerance that are opposed to true Americanism. I have fought Volsteadism in all its varying forms and shall continue to do so. Volsteadism stands in all its aspects for medieval intolerance and is contrary to twentieth century civilization as well as to Maryland ideals of liberty.

To Americans who stand for law and value the liberty our fathers won by war the mental attitude of the prohibitionist is the best argument against prohibition. To the warped viewpoint of the prohibitionist law is important only as it affects his hobby, and the Constitution contains nothing but the eighteenth amendment. No better evidence of this is needed than a statement of Anti-Saloon League Attorney Wheeler issued to the press.

Personally, his statement did me unusual honor because, denounced by Wheeler as one "whose testimony should be discounted," he raised me to the ranks of such other discreditables as those great leaders of the Republican and Democratic Parties, Senator LODGE and Senator UNDERWOOD. This promotion came to me because, like LODGE and UNDERWOOD, I find prohibition un-American.

Advising the press as to what he proposed to say before the Judiciary Committee of the House, Attorney Wheeler uttered a mimeographed publication entitled "Drys Answer Objection to Supplemental Volstead Bill." In this broadside as to himself and me, Attorney Wheeler said:

Mr. Wheeler took issue with Congressman HILL, who opposed giving the Attorney General concurrent power to revoke the permits of law violators, but wanted to transfer all power relating to prosecutions and investigations to the Justice Department. Mr. Wheeler told the committee that, when a Congressman admits that he is against national prohibition, the enforcement code, and in favor of wine and beer, he fails to qualify as an expert on law enforcement, and his testimony should be discounted.

I appeared before my colleagues of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to urge that the Attorney General instead of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be charged with law enforcement under the Volstead Act. Attorney Wheeler objects to this. I know not why, except perhaps that he fears the Volstead Act might then be really enforced. He intimates to the American people through his press propaganda that when he objects he does so as an expert. More than that, he objects as an expert who is to be credited, but when I, a Representative in Congress, take the opposite side, I am not entitled to speak for law enforcement, and my testimony "should be discounted," for the sole reason that I am against prohibition.

Attorney Wheeler is a professional prohibitionist. He describes himself (Who's Who in America, vol. 11 p. 3034) as follows:

Began temperance work while at college; has successfully prosecuted over 2,000 saloon cases, some of them in the Supreme Court of the United States.

This hero of "2,000 saloon cases" confesses himself an expert in law enforcement and admits that his testimony is to be credited. This shows the baneful warp of fanaticism on the collegiate mind. He is an expert! I, however, must not dare to express a view. My mere opposition to prohibition disqualifies me.

Here is a remarkable state of mind, and to me it shows the typically oblique mentality of the professional prohibitionist. Attorney Wheeler tells my colleagues that—when a Congressman admits that he is against national prohibition, the enforcement code, and in favor of wine and beer, he fails to qualify as an expert on law enforcement and his testimony should be discounted.

I, years ago, lectured on American Government at Harvard University and at Johns Hopkins University, and the Houghton Mifflin Co. (Emerson's publishers) ventured their reputation by publishing for me a book on this subject. I was for five years United States attorney for the district of Maryland. I was division judge advocate of a combat division for nearly two years, and enforced the law in the Eighth Army Corps of the American Expeditionary Forces for five veteran combat divisions at one time. Yet, because I oppose prohibition and the Volstead Act and dare to favor wine and beer, I am considered by Attorney Wheeler to be an enemy of law enforcement, and my "testimony should be discounted."

My friends, this is the sort of thing that prohibition breeds, and it is one reason why, as a liberty-loving American, I am opposed to it. Senator LODGE, Republican, and Senator UNDERWOOD, Democrat, both predicted this sort of Anti-Saloon League Prussianism when they opposed the eighteenth amendment in the Senate in 1917. Senator LODGE said:

To enforce throughout this country the prohibition of the sale or manufacture or importation of any form of distilled or fermented liquors will require, at a moderate estimate, 500,000 men. Distilled liquors are easily made. You will have to search hundreds of houses to make sure that liquors are not distilled in the kitchen or fruit brandies made by some domestic appliance. Men who now drink quite harmlessly some beer or light wine will in a certain proportion turn to the consumption of distilled liquor, in most cases of the vilest and most poisonous kind. * * * I think it will have a very bad effect on the public morals by creating a widespread indifference to law. * * * This attempt to hand over to the National Government the police power which properly belongs to the States will in its operation in other directions lead many people in the future to rue the day when they gave their support to a proposition so injurious to State independence and to State power. * * * I believe the legislation attempted by this constitutional amendment will be in the highest degree damaging to the cause of real temperance. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 55, pt. 6, p. 5587.)

Senator UNDERWOOD said:

If the Federal Government is once called on to enter the field, apprehend, and punish the petty vices of the citizens of the States in respect to the matters authorized by this resolution, it will not be long before efforts will be made to further extend the police powers of the Federal Government, and result in destroying State boundaries and the abolition of State governments.

When that time comes we will have abandoned the great principle that enables 100,000,000 people of divergent views, dissimilar modes of life, different political, climatic, and industrial surroundings to live in harmony in one great Republic. * * * There are some who would have us believe that no one is concerned about this matter except the prohibitionist on the one hand and the people who make money out of the liquor trade on the other. Such an assumption is not only untrue but is so monstrously false that it is amazing that men can be found to discuss the question solely from that standpoint. * * * A free people will be no longer able to exist if their personal affairs must be governed by an army of Federal spies. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 55, pt. 6, pp. 5555 and 5556.)

Having failed to perform the impossible through the Volstead Act, Attorney Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, and his extremists advocated the application of lynch law to the bootleggers and a raid on the food of the babies of America. One of the chief allies of Attorney Wheeler recently said through their prohibition organ, "Both bootleggers leaped from the car with drawn revolvers. Nevertheless the officers took them alive. This is not good policy. Such incidents should be dealt with according to the code of the Texas Ranger. We would be the last to advocate the unwarranted use of weapons by officers, but a bootlegger is worth a lot more to the country dead than alive."

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, delivering the opinion of the majority of the Supreme Court in New Jersey v. Attorney General, held that Congress was acting constitutionally when it defined the alcoholic content of beverages usable under the eighteenth amendment. Mr. Chief Justice White, in the same case, spoke of—

The duty upon Congress to legislate to the end that by definition and sanction the amendment would become fully operative.

The Supreme Court has recognized the right of Congress to repeal the Volstead Act in its discretion, yet when I introduced a bill to that effect Attorney Wheeler and his tribe assailed me as being against law enforcement. The same people advocated the application of lynch law to violators of the Volstead Act. If their recent statement that they would seize all materials and appliances from which alcoholic beverages could be made is consistently followed, their next attack will be upon the food of the babies of America.

To show you the absurdity of their position, I will read to you a certificate which I received from Messrs. Penniman & Browne, analytical and consulting chemists, one of the most prominent firms in Maryland. I happened to be in my baby's nursery when I read a short time ago in the daily press that Commissioner Haynes, claiming authority under a section of the prohibition act, proposed to seize all bottling outfits and other materials which could be used in the making of home brew. I saw in my baby's nursery a bottle of Mellin's food and a box of imperial granum. I also saw two nursing bottles and a bottle heater and a rubber tube. From the baby's food I knew that an alcoholic mash could be made, and my experience in the chemical laboratory in college taught me that from two baby's milk bottles, the bottle warmer, and the rubber tube I could make a still. I thereupon submitted to Penniman & Browne samples of baby food, and this is the reply they made to me:

We have before us the following samples of baby food:
Mellin's food for infants and invalids.
Eskay's albumenized food (the ideal food for infants and invalids).
Imperial granum—food for nursing and expectant mothers, infants, children, dyspeptics, delicate, infirm, and aged persons, convalescents, and invalids.

In reply to your inquiry, we would say that any one of the three or all of the above foods, if treated with water to form a mash or gruel and then add yeast, active fermentation will take place with the production of ethyl alcohol (ordinary alcohol), and that from such fermented mash by a simple process of distillation alcohol may be separated and collected in any degree of concentration or without the complications of distillation mere filtration will yield what is known to us as beer.

October 28, 1919, Congress passed the Volstead Act over President Wilson's veto. In giving his objections to the Volstead Act, which is now regarded as sacred by the prohibitionists, President Wilson said:

In all matters having to do with the personal habits and customs of large numbers of our people we must be certain that the established processes of legal change are followed. In no other way can the salutary object sought to be accomplished by great reforms of this character be made satisfactory and permanent.

There is a large element of our people that believes that the immediate repeal of the Volstead Act and the enactment of legislation allowing to the States the right to say whether or not their people shall use wine and beer will best carry out the purpose of those who were sincerely behind what President Wilson refers to as a great reform. The Volstead Act is a breeder of law violation.

To-day the Anti-Saloon League, backed by Rockefeller and Coca-Cola millions and reinforced by the 5 and 10 cent Kresge vigilance committees, has become bigoted and intolerant. The Anti-Saloon League to-day stands for intemperance in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, whereas in 1907 it stood for temperance in the enforcement of liquor laws, and its cardinal foundation was local option. When on December 5 I introduced in the House of Representatives H. R. 9286, "A bill to reduce and equalize taxation and to create Federal local option districts," and providing for a vote next November in each congressional district for beer and light wines, the superintendent of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League said that this bill "would have been fine stuff 20 years ago," but that I was, "about that far behind the times."

You and I in our interpretation of the spirit of the American Constitution go back to 1787, not merely 20 years ago, and we do not change our views of fundamental Americanism as facilely as does the Anti-Saloon League.

I am fortunately able to prove this assertion. On October 29, 1907, William H. Anderson, then superintendent of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League and now occupying a similar position in New York, issued a "small pamphlet," in which were set forth the results of his attempt to discover the attitude of candidates for the Maryland Legislature "with regard to local-option legislation." In this pamphlet the Anti-Saloon League made the following recommendations: "As between candidates equally satisfactory the league is neutral. Where temperance interests are safeguarded the voters may properly express their party preferences."

In those days the Anti-Saloon League was temperate. They stated that in Baltimore City, with two exceptions, the candidates for the legislature declined to commit themselves on the local-option question. They stated that I was one of the two exceptions who were willing to state their position. I said then that I believed "in home rule and thought that every community within reasonable bounds should be permitted to settle such a question for itself." Superintendent Anderson then announced that the league was satisfied with my answer. To-day his successor claims that I am "20 years behind the times," and one of his allies classed me with "bootleggers, bums, and criminals," because as a Representative in Congress I dare to exercise my right under the first amendment to the Constitution to freedom of speech.

The attitude of the Anti-Saloon League to-day is bigoted and intemperate, and yet Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes in Boston at Ford Hall the first part of last December complained that "the apathy of many cultured and Christian citizens constitutes one force that prevents a better articulation of the prohibition amendment." The principle of local option which the Anti-Saloon League favored in 1907 and which they oppose to-day is still fundamentally American, and, in my opinion, will ultimately prevail in this country.

The Volstead Act is the most palpable and offensive type of class legislation. It violates the fundamental principle of fairness in its treatment of the residents of cities as compared with the residents of rural districts. That is one of the reasons why the Volstead Act is so offensive to all who believe in the fundamental principles of the American Constitution.

At the time of the adoption of the Volstead Act the farmers had for years been making their own cider, home-made wine, home-made apple brandy, and other alcoholic beverages. To them prohibition was not a question of any particular or vital interest; they were able in their own homes to supply their own needs for beverages. The problem of prohibition was one for the cities. The evils of the saloon were generally recognized, but in striking at the saloon question the rural prohibitionists struck out the personal liberty of the dwellers of cities. The demand for beer, made scientifically and under the most careful Government regulations by the large beer manufacturers, otherwise known as brewers, was almost entirely for city consumption.

The Volstead Act was fundamentally and intentionally unfair and un-American in that it applied a different standard to the beverages of the cities than it applied to the beverages of the counties.

The prohibitionist leaders to-day realize their mistake in this particular. They realize that there is no defense for permitting 3 per cent or more wine or cider to the farmer and forbidding 3 per cent or more beer to the man of the cities. But to-day, although realizing this fundamental unfairness of the Volstead Act, the professional prohibitionist dares not admit his mistake in the framing of the Volstead Act. He fears that if the Volstead Act is changed in one particular that the whole unfair fabric of that monstrosity will be swept away before a growing American opposition to the theory of prohibition.

I charge that the Volstead Act is deliberate and unfair class legislation in that it applies a different standard to the residents of cities than it does to the residents of rural districts. It is not necessary to go further for my authority as to this statement than the remarks of Representative VOLSTEAD before the House of Representatives Committee on Rules on Friday, June 10, 1921. A photostat copy of his remarks is in my possession. This copy shows the original statement made by Mr. VOLSTEAD before the committee and before the representatives of the press. It also shows the revision of these remarks made by Mr. VOLSTEAD upon more mature consideration. He had a perfect right to revise his remarks, and so we have in this paper his original statement and his more mature confirmation of what I charge to be deliberate unfairness to the residents of cities, as shown in the act which bears his name.

Mr. VOLSTEAD said in answer to a question: "In the conference between the two Houses we wrote into the act a provision to the effect that a person might make nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices." One of the Representatives then asked him whether the one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol beer test applied to cider and fruit juices. To this Mr. VOLSTEAD replied: "I do not think that is the test as to fruit juices or as to wine or cider. The test there is whether it is nonintoxicating in fact." Representative CANTRILL then put the following question to sum up this matter: "According to your construction, it was not the intent of Congress that it would be a violation of law if wine was made at home, containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol?" To this question Mr. VOLSTEAD replied in open session before the committee: "No; my contention is this, that it might contain 1 or 2 or possibly 3 per cent without being intoxicating." Upon revision Mr. VOLSTEAD substituted for the words "1 or 2 or possibly 3 per cent" the words "considerably more."

He thus made stronger his statement. So we have Mr. VOLSTEAD's authority for my statement that while beer may contain no more than one-half of 1 per cent that cider or homemade wine may contain "possibly 3 per cent" or "considerably more" than one-half of 1 per cent without being intoxicating. We have thus a legal absurdity as the fundamental basis of the Volstead Act. Cider or wine containing 3 per cent of alcohol is not intoxicating, but beer containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol is intoxicating. Why should this discrimination be made between the farmer and the resident of the city? No law based upon such patent unfairness can possibly last.

The Volstead Act is the expression of a theory of meddlesome bureaucratic intolerance which threatens to ultimately change the form of the American Government. Since the Volstead Act was passed the interests back of it have put over several other pieces of preposterous legislation and are contemplating further violations of the spirit of the American Constitution.

A leaflet recently issued by a superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, asking for liberal contributions, said:

> A number of Congressmen who hold the balance of power and pile up majorities in Congress come from the Southern and Western States where money for organization and educational purposes is scarce. They have always had to have help from the national league.

It then stated that from the office in Washington of Wayne B. Wheeler, campaign treasurer, legislative agent of the Anti-Saloon League, "needed legislation is initiated" and "a constant watch is kept on the actions of Congress."

Thus the Anti-Saloon League collects money from all over the United States for the purpose of electing Congressmen, maintains Wheeler in Washington as campaign treasurer to elect, and then, as legislative agent, to control Congressmen so elected. Wheeler and his organization initiate legislation. In this present Sixty-seventh Congress they have forced through the so-called medical beer bill, sometimes known as the Volstead Act junior, which hampers physicians in their battle with disease and allows the Anti-Saloon League to violate with impunity the safeguard of personal liberty provided in the fourth amendment to the Constitution.

The fundamental guaranty of liberties contained in the fourth amendment is as follows:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

The medical beer bill provides absolutely no protection to "persons, papers, and effects" of American citizens, and since the passage of this bill shots fired by prohibition agents to halt law-abiding automobilists on the public highway are matters of frequent occurrence.

The Anti-Saloon League passed in the House the alien deportation bill, which provides for the banishment of any nonnaturalized resident who in the slightest way violates the Volstead Act.

In the letter to his Congressmen, in which Wheeler ordered the passage of this alien banishment bill, he suggested what amounts to a bill of attainder for American citizens in the form of an amendment to take away citizenship from American citizens who violate in any way the Volstead Act.

On October 31, 1921, certain staunch supporters of the Anti-Saloon League openly advocated this application of lynch law to bootleggers and complained because Government agents had not shot bootleggers on sight.

One of the most outrageous outcrops from the Volstead Act occurs in the official newspaper bulletin given out on May 3 from the office of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner. Part of this bulletin reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 3.—"Juries are returning more convictions and courts are not only administering severe sentences," said Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, "but some judges are resorting to stern measures in their effort to stamp out bootlegging. For instance, after Charles Chaussard had plead guilty of liquor violation at Pittsburg, Kans., Judge A. J. Curran said to him: 'If any more violations are reported in your home, I will order the house burned.'"

To me this is one of the most outrageous things that has emanated from any Government in my experience. We here have the Federal Prohibition Commissioner of the United States, an officer sworn to uphold the Constitution, quoting with approval the statement of a judge that he will go outside of the law, will apply what is known as lynch law, and will order burned the home of a man simply because he has violated the Volstead Act. Such tyrannical and despotic acts are to be expected as a result of the power the Anti-Saloon League exercises over Congress.

The mass of American citizens do not realize the sinister purpose behind the group that controls the Anti-Saloon League and poses as upholders of law and order. How can any group of persons pose as upholders of law and order when they openly advocate the lynching of bootleggers and the burning of the homes of people who violate the Volstead Act?

Whenever any organization claiming to be based on the principle of honesty and moral uplift is driven to the use of willful misrepresentation in reference to a measure it is fighting, its opponents may feel sure that the end of such an organization is near at hand. The Anti-Saloon League in the beginning was based on honest principles. Its paid leaders to-day, however, are driven to using deliberate misrepresentation, and even among themselves are accusing each other of misrepresentation.

The American Issue, the Anti-Saloon League paper, in its New Jersey department publication of June 10, had an editorial entitled "The Silly Hill Bill." This editorial began with the statement that wet champions in Congress are very scarce, and then, commenting on my local option 2.75 per cent beer and cider bill, made a deliberate misstatement as to this bill. My bill provides specifically for a referendum vote on beer containing not more than "2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume." The Anti-Saloon League editorial makes the following deliberate misstatement:

The figures 2.75 are insincere. The basis is alcohol by weight, which, by volume (the usual method of measurement), is 3.30 per cent.

The same editorial contains a statement which should be of great interest to Prohibition Commissioner Haynes and to A. J. Williamson, assistant superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland. The Anti-Saloon League editorial says:

No honest court will hold that liquor containing 3.30 per cent alcohol is not "intoxicating liquor," forbidden by the Constitution.

The inclusion of wine and cider is manifestly insincere. It would be impossible to ferment any fruit juice to such an alcoholic content and preserve it; with less than 9 per cent alcohol the juices—without chemical treatment—would turn into vinegar.

Prohibition Commissioner Haynes is not enforcing the law against 2.75 per cent cider. Assistant Superintendent Williamson, in an open letter to the editor of the Baltimore American, recently said:

The present regulations, made in pursuance of the Volstead Act, permit the farmer to make cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating and allow him to drink it in his home or give it to his friends when they drop in.

Which of the two agents of the Anti-Saloon League is telling the truth—the editorial in the American Issue or the newspaper letter of Assistant Superintendent Williamson? According to the editorial, there is no such thing as 2.75 cider, and no honest court would hold that even 3.30 per cent of alcohol is not "intoxicating liquor," yet Mr. Williamson and his chief, Mr. Crabbe, claim permission to drink cider of unlimited alcoholic content.

Gentlemen, the time has come to page Prohibition Commissioner Haynes. When the Anti-Saloon League is driven to falsehood in fighting against 2.75 per cent beer, I think the time has almost come when we will be able to return to true temperance.

The Baltimore American says editorially:

CONGRESS HAS A PLACE FOR JOHN PHILIP HILL.

JOHN PHILIP HILL, Republican candidate for Congress in the third district, has been identified so emphatically with attacks on the Volstead law that there may be people who think he has no particular value in Congress except for work pertaining to the modification of that stringent bit of legislation. In this respect Mr. HILL has done himself injustice. As a matter of fact, he is a man with distinct gifts for public life. He has ability, industry, and enthusiasm. It is not merely by chance that he has become the leader of the group in Congress that represent those who believe the Volstead law should be modified. It is due to the fact that what HILL undertakes to do he sets about with whole-hearted zeal and determination.

Mr. HILL's opponent is "Tony" Dimarco, former member of the State legislature, whose record there has not been of a character that warrants expectation or hope that, if elected to Congress, he would be any particular credit to the State. He appeals for support on the ground that he is as "wet" if not "wetter" than HILL, though how that can be is not easy to understand. But, admitting that a great many voters in the third district will be influenced by their judgment as to the violence of the candidate's antipathy to the Volstead law, Mr. HILL should have all the best of it. He has a record in Congress on this issue that makes his services far more valuable than those of a new Member could possibly be.

It is on other grounds, however, that the American would like to see Mr. HILL chosen. It believes he has a future in the public service, aside from any influence he may have on the "wet" and "dry" fight, and it is certain he will make a more influential Member of Congress from the State than Mr. Dimarco. There must be a large number of voters who are thinking about something else than wine and beer and the prohibition amendment, and this vote should be cast solidly for Mr. HILL.

On Wednesday, December 7, 1921, the Baltimore Sun editorially expressed itself as follows in reference to the question of the eighteenth amendment and local option:

A DEMOCRATIC PROPOSITION.

Representative JOHN PHILIP HILL has put up to Congress a proposition on 100 per cent democracy and local self-government in his bill authorizing a vote by congressional districts on the legalizing of the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer. The Volsteaders will rage and the Anti-Saloon League scoff at the proposal, but inherently and logically it is an absolutely fair one. The Supreme Court has decided that Congress has a right to define what percentage of alcohol is intoxicating. The Volstead Act declared that more than one-half of 1 per cent is intoxicating, and though that was almost equivalent to saying that black is white, the Supreme Court upheld the power of Congress to ignore facts. Mr. HILL now proposes that Congress should raise the alcoholic limit to 4 per cent in the case of beer and 12 per cent in the case of wines, and to permit the voters of each congressional district to decide next fall for themselves in "local-option" fashion on the subject.

The prohibitionists are not likely to allow such a bill to go through, if they can prevent it. But, nevertheless, Mr. HILL raises an issue that will be reflected in the elections and which will put many Congressmen in an uncomfortable position. If they refuse to allow the people to vote on the question, it may be difficult for them to explain how they reconcile such an attitude with their professions of devotion to popular government. And if the prohibitionists are as sure of their hold on the country as they say they are, why should they be afraid to accept a challenge to a fight before the people?

On Wednesday, August 16, 1922, I reported to this House my efforts to obtain from the Federal Prohibition Commissioner an interpretation of section 29, Title II, of the Volstead Act. You will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my last letter to him of August 15, 1922, and I therefore report his final reply of August 31, 1922:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE, OFFICE OF FEDERAL PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER,
Washington, August 31, 1922.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: Replying to your letter of August 15, 1922, you are informed that such information as this office is able to furnish in regard to the manufacture of nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices for use in the home exclusively, under section 29 of Title II of the national prohibition act, is contained in the letter addressed you on May 2, 1922, as modified by the letters of June 20 and July 8, 1922.

As stated in the letter addressed you on June 20, 1922, inasmuch as neither the Federal Congress nor the courts have as yet decided what alcoholic content renders such fruit juices intoxicating this office does not deem it expedient to fix such limitation by regulations.

Sincerely yours,

R. A. HAYNES,
Prohibition Commissioner.

The Baltimore Sun editorially expressed itself on this matter on August 17, 1922, as follows:

MR. HILL'S QUESTIONNAIRE.

Representative HILL may have a political motive in demanding from Prohibition Commissioner Haynes a direct and explicit answer to the question as to the amount of alcoholic content permitted in cider, fruit juices, and other homemade beverages. But the question is legitimate, and the people of Maryland and all other States have a right to insist that it shall be answered.

It is quite evident from the correspondence between Representative HILL and the prohibition commissioner that the latter has been trying to dodge this question. For months Mr. HILL has been vainly trying to "smoke him out." In a letter of May 2 to Mr. HILL the commissioner wrote:

"As at present advised, this office is not disposed to take action against the manufacture for use in the home of the maker of cider or other fruit juices containing not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume."

This was rather noncommittal and did not lay down a fixed rule of action, but it seemed to indicate a leaning toward a liberal interpretation of the Volstead Act, so far as householders were concerned.

Subsequent statements from prohibition headquarters conflicted with this announcement, and Mr. HILL wrote another letter to Mr. Haynes asking him to clear up the matter. Driven into a corner by this persistent questioner, the commissioner in a letter under date of July 3 made this extraordinary explanation of his previous announcement:

"Relative to the declaration in letter of May 2, 1922, that this office would not proceed against persons manufacturing cider or other fruit juices containing as much as 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume, this statement was embodied by the draftsman under a misapprehension of the position of this office, as such is not its view, and no instructions to that effect have been promulgated."

The commissioner here attempted to put the alleged blunder on the "draftsman" in his office, though few persons will be able to understand how a mere "draftsman" could so "misapprehend" a presumably dictated communication on so important a subject. The probabilities would seem to be that Mr. Haynes wrote his reply of

May 2 to Mr. HILL's inquiry without consulting Mr. Wheeler and his bosses of the Anti-Saloon League. But while he disavows the liberality suggested in his letter of July 3, he is careful to sidestep the main question propounded to him by Mr. HILL, asking the meaning of section 29 of the Volstead Act. More than five weeks having elapsed since the commissioner's disavowal of his letter of May 2, the Maryland Representative from the third district once more requests a reply to the question originally propounded on April 26: "What are the regulations of your office in reference to section 29 of title 2 of the Volstead Act?"

To the ordinary man this would seem to be an inquiry that could be answered in a day; that it should not be left unanswered at the end of nearly four months. It is a fair question, and it is one in which millions of people throughout the country are interested. Has the prohibition commissioner's office no regulations on the subject, or does he desire to keep them secret for political reasons, with the view of holding the rural hard-cider vote in line for the prohibitionists at election time while leaving himself free to pounce upon unfriendly wets in the cities?

The Volstead Act in section 1 defines "intoxicating liquor" as any beverage, by whatever name called, "containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume." Section 29, to which Mr. HILL refers and which provides penalties of fine and imprisonment for violation of the act, declares that these penalties "shall not apply to a person for manufacturing nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices exclusively for use in his home." What is nonintoxicating cider and fruit juice? The first section defines an "intoxicating" beverage as one containing "one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol." Does this definition apply to the housekeeper and the home-brewer? If it does not, how much beyond one-half of 1 per cent can he or she go?

Unless Commissioner Haynes answers this questionnaire definitely and clearly before election, voters will have a right to believe he is playing a disingenuous and dishonest political game; that he is trying to deceive them as to this phase of prohibition enforcement; that because of political consequences he is afraid to stand up for all the rigid implications of the Volstead Act.

The prohibitionists never allow a political candidate to escape answering their questions. Mr. HILL should not allow Mr. Haynes to escape. He should fire his questionnaire at him every week and force him either to come into the open or compel him to take refuge in cowardly silence.

In my efforts to obtain information as to the meaning of the Volstead Act, which attempts to interpret the eighteenth amendment, on September 14, 1922, I wrote as follows:

Mr. A. J. WILLIAMSON,
Assistant Superintendent Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

SIR: While citizens of Maryland are being arrested for possessing 2.75 beer, the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, through you, advises my constituents that "the present regulations made in pursuance of the Volstead Act permit the farmer to have cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating, allows him to drink it in his home or give it to his friends when they drop in."

The Federal Prohibition Commissioner, in his letter to me of September 11, 1922, states: "Inasmuch as neither the Federal Congress nor the courts have as yet decided what alcoholic content renders such fruit juices" (including cider) "intoxicating, this office does not deem it expedient to fix such limitation by regulations."

In an open letter to a Baltimore paper, published June 17, 1922, you state: "So much has been published in the newspapers, especially in Baltimore, on the subject of the Volstead law, and so much of it is not only unfair but untruthful, that I am impelled, though reluctantly, to offer you the following." You then continue with the following statement:

"The present regulations made in pursuance of the Volstead Act permit the farmer to make cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating, allows him to drink it in his home or give it to his friends when they drop in; in fact, laying only one prohibition upon him, which is that he must not sell the same as a beverage after it becomes hard."

In view of the statement of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner, I can not understand how you can truthfully make the above statement. Will you kindly advise me your authority for your statement that "the present regulations," referred to by you above, permit any such thing as you state? I desire to reconcile the differences between your statements and those of the Federal Prohibition Commissioner. To what regulations do you refer?

Very truly yours,
JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

To-day I am following this up by the following request for information:

SEPTEMBER 19, 1922.

Mr. GEORGE W. CRABBE,
Superintendent Maryland Anti-Saloon League,
Equitable Building, Baltimore, Md.

SIR: On July 3, 1922, Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes officially advised me—

"Relative to the declaration in letter of May 2, 1922, that this office would not proceed against persons manufacturing cider or other fruit juices containing as much as 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume; this statement was embodied by the draftsman under a misapprehension of the position of this office, as such is not its view, and no instructions to that effect have been promulgated."

Within a few days after the publication of this letter, on July 10, 1922, you made the following statement in a Baltimore newspaper:

"Any man who owns an apple tree, whether it be in his back yard in the city or on an extensive farm, can use his apples for cider. Furthermore, he can let it stand and get hard, and should he desire he can give it to guests in his home."

I am advised that "hard cider" has an alcoholic content from 8 to 12 per cent. In view of the above statement of the Federal prohibition commissioner, will you kindly advise the public through me where you obtained the authority for your statement that "hard cider" may be given to guests in the home?

The Anti-Saloon League of Maryland made the above statement through you on July 10, 1922, following the statement on June 17, 1922, by Mr. A. J. Williamson, assistant superintendent of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League, as follows:

"The present regulations made in pursuance of the Volstead Act permit the farmer to make cider and let it ferment and become intoxicating, allows him to drink it in his home or give it to his friends when they drop in, in fact laying only one prohibition upon him, which is that he must not sell the same as a beverage after it becomes hard."

On September 14, 1922, I wrote to your assistant, Mr. A. J. Williamson, and asked him if he would advise me of his authority for the above-quoted statement, since I am attempting to reconcile the differences between his statements and those of the Federal prohibition commissioner.

Will you be good enough to give me also your authority for your above-quoted statement?

Yours very truly,
JOHN PHILIP HILL,
Member of Congress.

Unless I get an answer I will soon send the following further attempt to learn what the Volstead Act means:

MESSRS. CRABBE AND WILLIAMSON,
Superintendent and Assistant Superintendent,
The Anti-Saloon League of Maryland,
American Building, Baltimore, Md.

GENTLEMEN: Will you meet me at the Broadway Market Hall on Saturday evening, October 21, to defend your proposition that under the Volstead Act cider with an alcoholic content in excess of 2.75 per cent is nonintoxicating and permitted, while 2.75 per cent beer is intoxicating and prohibited?

If the time and place are not agreeable to you, I shall be glad to defer to your wishes.

If you accept my invitation, I shall invite Mr. Anthony Dimarco to join me in attacking your proposition. Mr. Dimarco and I helped in the last Maryland Legislature to beat your attempt to foist on the people of Maryland an act similar to the Volstead Act which I considered fundamentally unfair, unequal, and un-American.

Yours very truly,
JOHN PHILIP HILL, M. C.

And so the eighteenth amendment breeds law violations and public unrest. I hope that soon the American people will obtain the needed relief. At present nobody knows even what the Volstead Act means. I will keep after the Federal Prohibition Commissioner and his allies, the Anti-Saloon League, until I find out, or make it apparent that the Volstead Act is so fundamentally unfair and full of favoritism that its proponents are afraid to discuss it.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the condition of the country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to discuss particularly the financial condition of the country. An enormous public debt rests heavily upon the American people. The happy days of light taxation are gone. They disappeared during the Wilson administration.

When Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated the public debt was $965,706,610. When he left the Presidency the public debt was $23,820,073,464.45. During his administration more money was spent than during all the previous years of our history. He cost us more than all the 26 Presidents preceding.

In defense of the Wilson administration it has been urged that the war was responsible for the great cost. But the war would not have cost such an enormous sum if it had not been for the awful waste and extravagance of the Wilson administration. Never before was money squandered so recklessly.

I have not the time to go into a detailed statement of the waste and extravagance of the Wilson administration. It would take many volumes to cover that subject. I will, however, cite one example, namely, the construction of ships. The Wilson administration let contracts for, and had built, 2,261 ships. Upon these ships has been expended, in round numbers, three and a half billion dollars. To-day they are not worth over half a billion. Three billion dollars gone, and gone forever! Five hundred and eighty-nine of these ships were constructed of wood. These wooden ships were practically worthless when completed. No use could be made of them whatsoever. The only thing that could be done with them was to tie them up. Recently 226 of these ships were sold at public auction to the highest bidders and brought a total sum of $750,000. This was a little more than $3,000 a ship. However, these wooden ships, on an average, cost the Government more than $636,000 apiece. In other words, the wooden ships cost the Government more than two hundred times as much as they brought when sold. To appreciate fully the waste and extravagance in connection with the construction of the ships, you must bear in mind this remarkable and amazing fact: More than sixteen hundred ships were delivered to the Government in 1919 and 1920, long after the armistice had been signed. The Wilson administration had become so habituated to spending money that it kept right on in high gear, even after the war had closed. The Government had no possible excuse for constructing ships in 1919 and 1920. The only parties benefited by building ships at that time were the contractors. The story of shipbuilding well illustrates how the business of the country was conducted during the Wilson administration.

The whole system of financing the war was fundamentally wrong. When men were conscripted, wealth should have been conscripted also. Surely money is not more sacred than manhood. Profiteers should not have been permitted to coin the blood of their fellow citizens into dollars. The many thousands of millionaires created by the war is a sad commentary upon the Wilson administration.

But, no matter how recklessly and wastefully incurred, the public debt must be paid. Payment has been begun by the Republican Party. Almost a billion dollars has been paid off since the Republican Party came into power. At the same time the taxes imposed by the National Government have been reduced by Congress. The nuisance taxes, including the taxes on ice cream, soda water, cosmetics, millinery, shoes, wearing apparel, and many other items, have been wiped out. These taxes had the right name. They were a nuisance. No longer are taxes added to freight or express charges or to passenger fares. The Republican Party has given the man of moderate means a further exemption from the income tax. The head of a family having an income of less than $5,000 has had his exemption increased from $2,000 to $2,500, and for each dependent child under 18 years of age, and for every other dependent, the exemption has been increased from $200 to $400. Many other reductions have been made. The total reduction in taxes of the National Government will this year amount to over $800,000,000.

You may ask how could the Republican Party reduce taxes and yet, at the same time, reduce the public debt? The answer is, by economy. Many thousands of civil positions have been abolished. The Army has been reduced from 268,222 enlisted men to 125,000 enlisted men, and from 25,914 officers to 12,000 officers. The Navy has been reduced from 193,000 enlisted men to 86,000 enlisted men, and from 7,800 officers to 4,000 officers. There has been economy all along the line. The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, are a billion dollars less than the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1921, and nearly $3,000,000,000 less than the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1920. The record of the Republican Party for economy, compared with the record of the Democratic Party, stands out like a beacon light.

There are only two ways by which our public debt can be paid, namely, by taxation and by collecting the debts due us from foreign nations. As is well known, there is a strong movement on foot among the nations of Europe to bring about the cancellation of our foreign loans. Strange as it may seem, in view of the heavy burdens resting upon us, even some Americans are aiding and abetting this scheme. They seem to love other countries better than their own.

Why should we cancel the debts due us from foreign nations? We secured no loot in the war. We asked for nothing and got nothing. The nations that owe us the money divided the spoils of war without consulting us. By secret treaties they divided them even before the war closed.

There is now due us as principal from foreign countries, in round numbers, the enormous sum of $10,000,000,000. Counting interest from the time the loans were made, there is now due us approximately $12,000,000,000. Much of this money was lent to Europe after the war ended. The Wilson administration, being anxious at all times to give away the Treasury of the United States, lent more than a billion dollars of the aforesaid sum without any legal authority. Some of the very money that we lent to foreign nations has been used since the armistice to keep Europe bristling with bayonets. If we do not collect it, some of the money that should be paid to us will, no doubt, be devoted to the cause of militarism. By collecting what is due us we can, to some extent at least, keep down militarism in Europe.

Much propaganda to bring about the cancellation of our foreign loans has appeared in the past, and much similar propaganda will, no doubt, appear in the future. I do not believe, however, that the American people will be deceived by such propaganda. I do not believe that the American people intend to hold the sack. In spite of all propaganda, the fact remains that the money which was lent to foreign nations came from the American people and belongs to the American people. It would be well if the foreign Governments understood, once for all, that this money must be repaid.

Another surprising thing is the renewed effort that is being made to get America into the League of Nations. Woodrow Wilson himself heads the movement. Every Democratic victory this fall will be heralded as an indorsement of Woodrow Wilson and the League of Nations. The events that have transpired since the treaty of Versailles was signed have certainly confirmed and vindicated the judgment that the American people rendered in the campaign two years ago. We should always be grateful to the strong and brave Americans who first pointed out the dangers of the League of Nations and halted our permanent entrance into foreign entanglements. If we had gone into the League of Nations we would be asked to settle trouble in the making of which we had no part, and which resulted from foreign jealousies and intrigues. No one knows how much money and how many men it would cost us.

Our duty is clear. This it is: To collect the money that is due us from foreign nations, to exercise the most rigid economy in public affairs, to pay off the great national debt as rapidly as possible, and to resist every effort to get us into the League of Nations. Let us use all the resources at our command to put our own house in order.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the bureau and prospective soldier legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose at this time to make a statement relative to what has been done in a legislative way and otherwise for the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war.

About a year ago in some remarks that I made to the House I stated briefly what had been done in a financial way for the disabled soldiers up to the establishment of what is known as the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Later on in this discussion I shall refer to a statement of appropriations and trust funds of the United States Veterans' Bureau made as of August 9, 1921.

The United States Veterans' Bureau was created by an act of Congress on August 9, 1921, in order that all Government agencies dealing with the after-war problems of all ex-service men and women and their dependents might be charged to one administrative head, eliminating many duplications and placing definite responsibility upon one executive for prompt and efficient administration of the law. The United States Veterans' Bureau thus created is charged with the responsibility of carrying out the provisions of the war risk insurance act and the act providing for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes; also for the proper medical care and treatment phase of the veteran relief program formerly intrusted to the United States Public Health Service by the act of March 3, 1919.

This vast and far-reaching governmental enterprise had its inception with the passage of a bill on September 2, 1914, which provided for a minor bureau in the Treasury Department charged with the duty of insuring American vessels, their freight and cargoes against loss or damage from the risks of war. By further enactment of Congress legislation was passed greatly extending the scope of this bureau, so that on June 12, 1917, it was permitted by law to insure the crews of vessels against death or disability resulting from war. On October 6, 1917, there was passed an act which has proved one of the most beneficient pieces of legislation ever enacted either in this or any other country. On that day the President approved the act passed by Congress creating a division of military and naval insurance in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The selective service draft had become a realization, and a great Republic was training citizens into soldiers without discrimination as to class, caste, or creed, and the country on that day registered its wish to protect with humane and generous provisions the manhood of this great Republic which had been called into active service.

ALLOTMENT AND ALLOWANCE.

As the pay of the enlisted man had been increased about 100 per cent, Congress felt that the drafting into the military service of the country did not withdraw the legal and moral obligation of every man to contribute to the support of his family; therefore the provision was made for the payment of allotments with Government allowances to dependent relatives of enlisted men under certain stipulations.

COMPENSATION.

Congress had in mind undoubtedly the pension complication resulting from previous wars and wished, if possible, to lay the foundation of a structure which would avoid a repetition of this condition. It provided, therefore, not service pensions but compensation of a monetary nature for death or disability resulting from war service. This compensation scheme was in the main formulated on the basis of the workmen's compensation acts of the various States, with the fundamental difference that the compensation was based not upon the man's past earning power but upon his family status and his injury.

INSURANCE.

As insurance has been and still is a great factor in the family life of the American people, Congress was anxious that the men who were called into the service should not have their insurability thus destroyed and be rendered incapable of securing from a private insurance company such insurance as they might wish. In view of the war hazard, private companies, most of which, as a matter of fact, are mutual insurance companies, could not with propriety and with safety have granted insurance to the men called into service without asking them to pay a premium to cover the war risk involved. Congress undertook to grant insurance to soldiers and sailors at a premium rate which took account only of the peace-time risk, leaving the whole expenses of operation, the cost of disability benefits, the cost due to the war hazard to be borne by the country at large as a part of the cost of the war.

REHABILITATION.

As the war drew to a close and its results became apparent, as it affected the ability of disabled veterans to again take up their pre-war work, legislation was passed on June 27, 1918, providing for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled veterans, thus affording a means of helping disabled veterans to again take up peace-time pursuits.

Thus it is to be seen that all legislation regarding the agencies which now make up the United States Veterans' Bureau had at heart the welfare of the families and dependents of our fighting men as well as the men themselves, had at heart the sustaining of the fabric of the country and the maintenance of the morale not only of our fighting forces but also of the great civilian population which necessarily had to stay behind and support those who were fighting our battles.

Although the United States Veterans' Bureau is only a little over 1 year old, the director has successfully reorganized the activities of the consolidated organization, so that most of the administrative difficulties previously inherent in the three organizations, permitting divided responsibility, have been eliminated. Consolidation of compensation, rehabilitation, and medical activities, together with the decentralization of compensation claims and making payments in the field, have absorbed a large part of the energies of administrative officials during the year. Special thought and effort has been put forth in connection with the tremendous hospitalization problem involved in caring for those veterans still in need of hospital care.

In cooperation with the American Legion and other organizations interested in veteran relief, the United States Veterans' Bureau has endeavored to bring to the ex-service man and his dependents by means of personal contact that humanizing influence that is so essential to men whose lives have been changed by the horrors of war. With the exception of isolated cases it is sincerely believed that contact has been made with every beneficiary of the bureau needing attention and with every man who should have presented a claim to acquaint him with his rights and assist him in submitting proper data to establish a claim.

Fourteen district offices have been organized, with a district manager in charge, as listed below. With the exception of those cases in which the claimant has received a rating of permanent disability, death cases, cases of claimants residing in foreign countries or in any territorial or insular possession of the United States, and cases of men in training at United States Vocational School No. 1, Chillicothe, Ohio, all claims are handled in the district office of the district in which the claimant resides, and all inquiries on such claims should be addressed to the district manager of the district involved.

The number of the district, the manager of the district, the address of the manager of the district and the territory included in the district are as follows:

District No.	Manager.	Address.	Territory.
1	Dr. A. E. Brides..	Washington-Essex Building, 600 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.	Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts Rhode Island.
2	Maj. W. F. Lent..	Grand Central Palace Building, Forty-sixth Street and Lexington Avenue, New York, N. Y.	New York, Connecticut, New Jersey.
3	L. C. Vannan.....	Twentieth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.	Pennsylvania, Delaware.
4	Albert A. Haan...	Room 217, Arlington Building, Washington, D. C.	Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, District of Columbia.
5	M. Bryson.....	439 Peachtree Street, Atlanta, Ga..	North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida.
6	Col. Dallas B. Smith.	New Hibernia Bank Building, New Orleans, La.	Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana.

8	Chas. W. Spofford.	111 North Canal Street, Chicago, Ill.	Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois.
9	Middleton E. Head	6801 Delmar Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo.	Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri.
10	Carl D. Hibbard..	509 Keith-Plaza Building, Minneapolis, Minn.	Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana.
11	Durbin Van Law.	Tenth floor United States National Bank Building, Denver, Colo.	Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico.
12	Maj. Louis T. Grant.	883 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.	California, Arizona, Nevada.
13	Lewis C. Jesseph..	5100 Arcade Building, Seattle Wash.	Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Alaska.
14	Sherman C. Kile...	400 Akard Street, Dallas, Tex.....	Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas.

The foregoing observations are general, and I now wish to go more into detail as to the organization, operation, and expenditures made by the Government in carrying on this great enterprise.

The law which had to do with military and naval insurance and under which the United States Veterans' Bureau was originally organized was enacted on the 6th day of October, 1917, just six months to a day after war was declared against the Imperial Government of Germany. This law is divided into four parts: Title I relates to the organization of the bureau; Title II relates to allotments and family allowances; Title III relates to compensation to be paid in case of death or disability; Title IV relates to insurance payable in case of death or total disability.

This law established the bureau in the Treasury Department. At that time there was no particular building in which it could be located. The first offices were in the basement of the National Museum. At the close of the war, in November, 1918, the activities in connection with this bureau were located in 17 different buildings in various parts of the city. It became necessary to construct what is known as the Arlington Building, where all activities in connection with the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines could be carried on. The construction and equipment of this building cost the Government something over $3,000,000.

I am sure that the average citizen does not realize what it meant to organize this great undertaking; neither do the soldiers who were a part of the vast Army of over 4,000,000 men fully realize the stupendous task and the almost infinite details that were necessary in looking after their allotments and allowances, their claims for compensation, and the writing of their insurance policies and collecting the premiums thereon.

As heretofore stated, the law creating the bureau was enacted upon the 6th day of October, 1917. It did not begin operation until November 15, 1917. During the period between November 15, 1917, and the 11th day of November, 1918, applications for insurance were made by the young men of this country who entered the Army to the amount of almost forty billions, or on an average of about $9,000 insurance to every person who made application for insurance to protect the wives, children, the mothers and fathers, and those dependent upon them. This insurance was made payable in case of death or total disability.

All these applications had to be filed and passed upon by the bureau. It is safe to say that from three to four letters were written in connection with every application. This was a vast amount of mail, all of which must have special attention.

This bureau was also organized during the confusion which is always a part of every war. It was not possible at that time to get efficient and competent help. There was no opportunity to train them for the tasks which they must perform. The Government was being organized for war. The flower of our manhood was going into the Army; the business interests of the country were endeavoring to meet and adjust themselves to the demands of war.

Armies had to be raised, cantonments had to be constructed, ammunition had to be manufactured, ships had to be built, and the organization of the bureau was accomplished under unusual circumstances and at a time when the attention of the people of this country was centered upon the military operations and the winning of the war.

When the war was over the problem which confronted the bureau was to bring order out of chaos. As a consequence a bill was passed on December 24, 1919, increasing the rate of compensation in many respects. Under the act of October 6, 1917, a soldier rated as total and temporary and who had no dependents received $30 per month. Under this act it was increased to $80 per month. The compensation features of the law were also made retroactive and as a consequence, within the short period of 100 days after its passage, thirty-one millions were paid to the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of the country.

The insurance features of the law were liberalized and made more workable.

The bill also made provision for furnishing to the disabled ex-service men reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies, artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances as the director may determine.

As heretofore stated, the work of the bureau at Washington was brought together in one building known as the Arlington Building. It then became apparent that the various agencies of the Government which had to do with the disabled ex-service men should all be brought together under one head in one bureau. As a consequence, upon the recommendation of the American Legion and other soldier organizations, on August 9, 1921, a bill was passed which provided for the establishment of a United States Veterans' Bureau, bringing all these agencies together in one bureau.

The act also had for its purpose the curing of the delinquencies in the administration of former laws passed by Congress so that ex-service men would speedily receive the benefits to which Congress and the country believe they are justly entitled.

Under this bill provision was made for the establishment of 14 regional offices and such suboffices, not exceeding 140 in number, as may be deemed necessary by the director in the best interests of the work committed to the United States Veterans' Bureau and to carry out the purposes of the law.

This law has now been in operation for a little over a year, and the organization of the main office at Washington and the 14 regional offices throughout the United States and all the suboffices has been a stupendous task. In my judgment it has been accomplished expeditiously and conducted in a manner which will ultimately be for the best interests of the disabled soldiers of the country who are drawing compensation, who are being hospitalized, who are taking vocational training, and who have taken out Government insurance.

A little over a year ago Col. C. R. Forbes was appointed by the President under the law as Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau. He has shown unusual ability as an organizer and a director of this great enterprise. He has proven himself to be a man of good judgment and of the Rooseveltian type.

If my observations are correct, he cares more about results which will be beneficial to every disabled ex-service man than about advertising as to what he expects or intends to do for them. He is a man of action rather than of words.

It is not possible to please all persons. It is not possible as the head of such a mighty undertaking to dispense exact justice to all, for the work can not be done by him alone, but mainly through those who are a part of his great organization.

In my judgment he should receive the loyal support of Congress and the country in his honest endeavors to faithfully administer the laws for the benefit of the men who were disabled in their country's cause.

COMPENSATION.

As a sort of summary relative to compensation awards and expenditures in conection therewith, I insert as a part of this statement the following:

FOUR HUNDRED AND FIFTEEN THOUSAND EIGHT HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIX AWARDS OF COMPENSATION HAVE BEEN MADE ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OR DISABILITY OF VETERANS OF THE LATE WAR.

Fifty-nine thousand seven hundred and thirty-two awards have been made on account of death.

Three hundred and fifty-six thousand one hundred and fourteen awards have been made on account of disability.

Three hundred and seventy-nine million eight hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and ten dollars have been paid to disabled men or their dependent relatives.

Two hundred and fifty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-eight checks, amounting to $8,105,917, are now being sent monthly to disabled veterans or their dependent relatives.

One hundred and seventy-five thousand one hundred and thirty-seven disabled ex-service men are now receiving compensation and in addition medical and hospital care where needed.

Forty-four thousand of the total men now receiving compensation were wounded in action overseas.

Forty thousand men are receiving compensation as a result of diseases contracted while in service overseas.

Of those now receiving compensation for disability 11,524 are rated permanent total, 31,630 temporary total, 12,995 permanent partial, and 118,988 temporary partial.

INSURANCE.

Relative to insurance, I wish to insert the following in connection with my remarks:

Two hundred and seventy-four thousand four hundred and ninety-two war-risk term insurance policies are in force, representing insurance in the amount of $2,064,531,283.

Two hundred and eighty-six thousand three hundred and fifty-six United States Government life (converted) insurance policies are in force, representing insurance in the amount of $1,062,610,928.

One hundred and fifty-three thousand and twenty-four war-risk term insurance claims have been allowed, representing a total of $1,345,352,690.

Two thousand and ninety-one United States Government life (converted) insurance claims have been allowed, representing a total of $8,963,786.

One hundred and forty-three thousand and eighteen insurance claims are now being paid each month, a total monthly expenditure of $8,798,625.

Three hundred and fifty-four million two hundred and seventy-two thousand two hundred and twenty-two dollars has been paid out thus far for insurance claims.

HOSPITALIZATION.

I wish to insert as a part of these remarks the following, taken from a report issued by the director of the bureau:

HOSPITALIZATION OF UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU BENEFICIARIES.

The hospitalization of Veterans' Bureau beneficiaries commenced before we as a nation had attained our full military stride, for as early as the fall of 1917 a few particular cases were under the care of this bureau. By July, 1918, this number had become really appreciable, and from that time onward the hospitalization of patients of the Veterans' Bureau became a question of major importance.

To meet this demand for hospitalization there were initially available only the marine hospitals of the Public Health Service and a sanatorium at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., for the care and treatment of beneficiaries suffering from tuberculosis. There were also some scattered facilities in naval hospitals and in military hospitals, though the use of these facilities was not at that time coordinated. Because of the urgency of the demand it was necessary immediately to contract with the civil institutions throughout the country in order that facilities might immediately be made available for the care of the Veterans' Bureau beneficiaries, and some 1,500 civil hospitals were contracted with, representing an aggregate of approximately 22,000 beds. Realizing, however, the lack of hospital facilities, there was passed by Congress on March 3, 1919, Public Act No. 326, which provided for the transfer of War and Navy Department hospitals to the Public Health Service and further provided for the construction of certain prescribed facilities. At the close of the fiscal year 1919 the United States Public Health Service was operating 20 marine hospitals and a sanatorium at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., and 10 new hospitals, known as Public Health Service hospitals, which had been opened during the last three months of that fiscal year and were provided for by Public Act No. 326. These new hospitals included eight Army hospitals and two other locations, as follows: Palo Alto, Calif.; Greenville, S. C.; Alexandria, La.; Dansville, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Corpus Christi, Tex.; Jacksonville, Fla.; East Norfolk, Mass.; the United States Army quartermaster terminal at Norfolk, Va.; and a leased hospital at Washington, D. C.

In June, 1920, all these hospitals were in use with the exception of the hospital at Jacksonville, Fla. By September 15, 1922, five of these original hospitals had been discontinued.

During the fiscal year 1920 a number of additional Public Health Service hospitals were opened, until the total number of hospitals operated by that service, including marine hospitals, had increased to 50 hospitals, representing approximately 11,600 beds. Seven of these hospitals were available to neuropsychiatric patients, eight hospitals were available to tuberculosis patients, and the balance were available to general medical and surgical patients. By July 1, 1921, the number of hospitals operated by the Public Health Service had been further increased through the acts of March 3, 1919, and March 6, 1920, to 62 hospitals, representing a total of 18,700 available beds. In the meantime the Conjoint Board of Hospitalization, made up of the medical adviser of the then Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Surgeon Generals of the War Department, Navy Department, the Public Health Service, and the president of the Board of Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, had been convened to coordinate all governmental hospital facilities and to make available facilities of the War Department and the Navy Department and the National Soldiers' Homes for the hospitalization of Veterans' Bureau patients. While these facilities had to some extent been used before the formation of this board, no consistent coordinating policy had been adopted. Under the action of this board a definite quota of hospital beds in the hospitals operated by the several departments represented were made available to the United States Veterans' Bureau. On approximately September 7, 1922, the governmental hospital facilities available to the United States Veterans' Bureau, other than those operated directly by the United States Veterans' Bureau, were as follows: United States Public Health Service hospitals (including marine hospitals), 786 beds; military hospitals, 3,068 beds; naval hospitals, 1,624 beds; National Soldiers' Homes, 3,206 beds; and St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C., 871 beds.

Immediately prior to the establishment of the Veterans' Bureau the Public Health Service was operating a total of 65 hospitals available, completely or in part, to the United States Veterans' Bureau. These 65 hospitals included the marine hospitals of the Public Health Service and represented a total of 19,450 available beds. On August 9, 1921, there was passed the act establishing the Veterans' Bureau known as the Sweet bill, which amended the basic war risk insurance act and amendments thereto, and further directed the consolidation of all activities operated on behalf of veterans of the World War under the direction of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau. The Public Health Service hospitals, devoted entirely to the treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Bureau, were then designated as United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals, although the transfer of these hospitals to the immediate supervision of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau did not take place until May 1, 1922.

On March 4, 1921, there was passed the first of the hospital construction appropriations which specifically provided for the construction of hospital facilities for Veterans' Bureau beneficiaries. This bill, known as the first Langley bill, carrying with it an appropriation of $18,600,000, provided for a total of approximately 6,169 beds, classified as follows: Tuberculosis, 3,005; neuropsychiatric, 2,914; general medical and surgical, 250. To date, of the total number of beds provided for by this bill, 2,124 are actually available for the reception of patients.

The second hospital construction appropriation, passed on April 20, 1922, authorizing that an appropriation be made, was followed by the actual appropriation of $17,000,000 by the act of May 11, 1922. This appropriation provides for a total of 3,730 additional hospital beds, classified as follows: Tuberculosis, 1,150; neuropsychiatric, 2,380; and general, 200. One of these hospitals is already in operation, namely, United States Veterans' Hospital No. 88, Memphis, Tenn.

It is to be presumed that with the addition of permanent hospital facilities there will take place decommissioning of unsatisfactory Government-owned properties, namely, those of a temporary frame construction and the abandonment of certain leased facilities. There has been prepared and is attached hereto a statement of existing hospital facilities under the direct jurisdiction of the Veterans' Bureau as of approximately August 9, 1921, and September 15, 1922, and the additions to be made under proposed construction, the probable abandonment of facilities to be accomplished during the fiscal years 1923 and 1924, and the probable ultimate facilities to be abandoned. This statement, it is believed, is self-explanatory and shows the present probable development of permanent hospital facilities.

In addition to the first and second Langley bills there was provided for by the act of March 3, 1919, an amount of $1,500,000 for the construction of a hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky. This project was to provide 500 beds for tuberculous patients. This hospital, designated as the United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital No. 79, was formally opened for the reception of patients on February 22, 1922, and at the present date reports available a total of 405 beds, of which number 332 are occupied. While this hospital per se is modern in every way, because of its isolated and peculiar location it can not be considered to be entirely satisfactory until additional funds have been expended to provide adequate quarters and recreation facilities for commissioned and civil personnel.

Coincident with the increase in governmental hospital facilities there was a continuous rise in the total hospital population, which rose rapidly from approximately 8,000 patients in November, 1919, to approximately 30,900 patients in February, 1922. Since that date there has been recorded a steady decline in the hospital population, until on September 7, 1922, the number of patients in hospitals had fallen to 25,678. While it is probable that this number will increase, due to the approaching winter months and due to the progressive acquirement of modern, permanent hospital facilities, resulting in the greater acceptance of hospitalization by beneficiaries of the Veterans' Bureau, careful studies made of the hospital problem indicate that the peak in hospitalization was probably reached in February, 1922, and that it is doubtful if the hospital population will rise at any time above 31,000. It is further probable that the number of tuberculous and neuropsychiatric patients in hospitals will increase during the remainder of the fiscal year, but that there will be a diminution in the number of general patients being hospitalized at any one date.

There is attached hereto a statement of total beds, by type of hospital, available as of August 9, 1921, and September 15, 1922, and beds estimated to be available at the close of the fiscal year 1924 and also the next number of permanent beds ultimately to remain available. No consideration is given in this table to permanent beds operated under the jurisdiction of other governmental agencies, such as the Public Health Service, the national soldiers' homes, the United States Army and Navy. It will be seen from this table that at the close of 1924 approximately 21,693 beds will be available in Veterans' Bureau hospitals, although there is included in this total certain leased and certain Government temporary facilities, which eventually will have to be relinquished. In the preparation of these figures no anticipated or future appropriations were considered.

In the appropriation for medical and hospital services for the fiscal year 1924 there has been included an item for the construction of additional facilities at certain existing hospital sites, which if approved will furnish a certain number of additional beds, particularly at Perryville, Md.; Augusta, Ga.; Gulfport, Miss.; Fort McKenzie, Wyo.; and North Little Rock, Ark. Such proposed additions will be extensive and will be largely for neuropsychiatric patients.

As to the needs for additional neuropsychiatric beds other than those already provided for, while studies made indicate that up to an average of possibly 12,000 may have to be hospitalized at any one time, experience to date does not justify the immediate recommendation for further appropriations, other than mentioned in the foregoing paragraph for hospital construction until such a time arrives when the Veterans' Bureau can be reasonably assured of their definite and permanent need. In making this statement the fact is borne in mind that there are now available and will continue to be available beds for neuropsychiatric patients in other Government hospitals, particularly at St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C., and the national soldiers' home, Marion, Ind., and certain wards available to the less disturbed cases in general hospitals.

It is, however, probable that there will be additional needs for hospital construction for the treatment of the disturbed neuropsychiatric cases, although, as previously stated, the Veterans' Bureau is not as yet in a position to define such needs.

This is the situation under present legislation. Should, however, Congress broaden the scope of Veterans' Bureau activities to the end that the beneficiaries of the bureau would increase in number, it is undoubtedly true that there would result the necessity for further appropriations for hospital facilities, probably for tuberculous as well as neuropsychiatric conditions.

NOTE.—This statement includes capital expenditures such as construction and nonexpendable equipment and supplies, therefore showing gross expenditures at all hospitals. Actual per diem cost of operating hospitals, excluding capital expenditures, is but $4.74 per patient. Where per diem rate is shown as abnormally high, high rate due to fact that expenditures are total, including cost of equipping hospital prior to opening, and that hospital functioned only for a short period during this year.

As a part of these remarks I insert the following, taken from a report issued by the director of the bureau:

DISTRICT MEDICAL SERVICES, FISCAL YEAR 1922.

The medical organization of the 14 districts of the United States Veterans' Bureau has three major functions to perform. These are the rating of claims for dissabilities due to military service, the furnishing of medical relief to beneficiaries, and the inspection of personnel, space, equipment, and methods. Of these the district medical service section is directly concerned with relief, or, in other words, is responsible for every form of medical service within the districts. This embraces medical examinations to determine the validity of claims, the advisability of hospitalization, or the feasibility of vocational training; treatment in any specialty in medicine or surgery (including dentistry); the furnishing of prosthetic appliances to cripples; arranging for hospitalization and other special medical care and home visitation by nurses for follow-up observation and social service.

Prior to the establishment of subdistrict offices much of the examination work and considerable treatment had been provided through the use of individual physicians designated for the purpose. The success of the few dispensaries which had been established in connection with district offices in furnishing better service at great economy indicated the policy of extending the formation of such agencies throughout the country. Accordingly, with the passage of the Sweet Act August 9, 1921, which provided for the creation of the subdistrict offices at the important points in every district, the opportunity was presented, and it was determined to establish clinical facilities in every district and subdistrict office. The dispensaries of the United States Public Health Service, which had handled ex-service cases in excess of other beneficiaries, were transferred to the jurisdiction of the United States Veterans' Bureau and plans were formulated for the standardization of personnel, space, and equipment for a complete system of 140 dispensaries. Three types of dispensary were adopted, to be established according to the size and needs of the community to be served. These were as follows:

Type A: Consists of a complete unit, comprising clinics in internal medicine, general surgery, tuberculosis, neuropsychiatry, ophalmology, diseases of the ear, nose, and throat, urology, orthopedics, physiotherapy, dentistry, X-ray, clinical laboratory and pharmacy, with facilities for administration and social service, occupying approximately 8,500 square feet of floor space.

Type B: Consists of a similar unit in which the surgical clinic embraces urology and orthopedics, the dental clinic has two chairs instead of six, and the section of physiotherapy is omitted. The floor space occupied is 4,216 square feet.

Type C: Consists of clinics in medicine, surgery, and eye, ear, nose, and throat, with a small clinical laboratory, one dental chair, and an X-ray (if X-ray contracts justify its establishment), and occupies 2,352 square feet.

Dispensaries of the type of class A were designated for the 19 leading cities of the United States, including the 14 district headquarters; 17 dispensaries of the type of class B were planned for the remaining cities which exceed 200,000 population and 103 class C dispensaries for the remaining subdistrict offices. By such a system the procees of decentralization is made more perfect, all of the advantages of group diagnosis are furnished the claimant, and the responsibility for action is removed from an individual part-time examiner and shared by a group of full-time officers whose activities are under constant supervision.

The comprehensive program described above was completed and formally approved in January, 1922. It was then presented to each district manager with instructions to study the conditions of his district with the idea of its adoption or modification to suit local conditions. The district managers were then urged to acquire the necessary space, requisition the equipment, and nominate the personnel. It was estimated that, with the time necessarily consumed in the completion of leases and contracts, the shipping and installation of equipment, and the choice of qualified physicians and other technical personnel, it would be 18 months before the program would be complete. However, on July 1, 1922, all of the class A dispensaries were in operation and all but 4 of the class B dispensaries and 62 of the class C dispensaries, with every prospect of the entire system in operation by October 1.

The opening of the dental clinics in connection with the dispensaries referred to above has been an important factor in providing better service to beneficiaries, with marked economy to the Government. This makes for uniformity of standards in treatment by providing all of the modern facilities, with the advantage of consultation in the clinic; thus the expensive and unsatisfactory procedure of using scattered designated dental examiners on a fee basis is being discontinued. There are now 87 dental clinics in operation, of which 19 are class A, equipped with the most modern facilities, 8 class B, and 60 class C, the latter types furnished with equipment from the United States Army Dental Corps.

The authorization for dental equipment increased with the passage of the Sweet Act from 50 per cent on all claims to 70 per cent. During the past two months, however, there has been a notable decrease in the amount of dental treatment authorized by district managers.

In connection with the furnishing of prosthetic appliances to the districts, orthopedic shops have been opened in districts 3, 4, and 10, and the saving effected through their activities fully justifies the establishment of similar shops in the remaining districts. In addition to the economical factor, the improvement in the service was highly gratifying in affording beneficiaries complete satisfaction by having their appliances made to order and by keeping the same in repair with a minimum of inconvenience and delay.

Certain materials such as stump socks and elastic goods are purchased in quantity and distributed among the districts at a considerable reduction in cost. Claimants are allowed to select artificial limbs from an approved list of dealers in the districts in which they reside.

Nursing activities cover service in dispensaries and training centers and follow-up visitation in the homes of beneficiaries. The diversity of such work requires the choice of special personnel, experienced in public-health and social-service activities, with special reference to tuberculosis and neuropsychiatry. In the dispensaries and training centers the nurses are responsible for certain routine duties in connection with the examination and treatment of patients, the care of instruments and supplies, and response to emergencies. The follow-up work includes the preparation of patients for hospitalization or treatment, the observation of convalescents after discharge from hospital in order to prevent relapse, the response to emergencies in the home and the follow up of physicians' sick calls.

A tabulation of nursing activities throughout the 14 districts for the fiscal year follows:

Number of cases which received nursing care	141,696
Number visited at homes	76,687
Number of office, placement, and school interviews	502,333
Number of tuberculosis cases supervised	140,227
Number of neuropsychiatric cases supervised	75,865
Total under supervision (including present cases)	502,904
Number of follow-up reports made	192,128
Number of training reports made	4,859
Number treated in dispensaries	74,775
Number of social adjustments made	12,175

PERSONNEL.

Superintendent of nurses	1
Neuropsychiatric chief nurse	1
Chief nurses (district offices)	12
Follow-up nurses	321
Dispensary nurses	45
Total number of nurses on duty June 30, 1922	380
Number of appointments pending (oath of office) June 30, 1922	23

In the office of the section 2,000 proposals and 1,370 requisitions for drugs, medical supplies, surgical instruments, and office equipment have been acted upon. New forms were devised which indicate the quantity of material on hand as well as that desired, with classification of equipment by unit and item.

REHABILITATION.

I wish to insert in the RECORD as a part of these remarks the following:

VOCATIONAL TRAINING OF DISABLED EX-SERVICE MEN.

One hundred and fifty-six thousand five hundred and sixty-two men have entered vocational training.

Ninety-nine thousand and ninety men are now in training.

Twenty-five thousand nine hundred and sixty men have completed their training.

Two thousand seven hundred and sixty-one schools and colleges are training men in institutional training.

Thirty thousand and eighty business establishments are training men in placement training.

Four hundred and forty-five trades and professions are being taught.

Forty-seven Government vocational schools now provide training.

Eleven million three hundred thousand dollars per month are placed in the hands of trainees for the support and maintenance of themselves and their dependents.

One million three hundred thousand dollars per month is paid out for tuition, supplies, and other costs incidental to training.

I wish to insert as a part of my remarks the following:

[1] Includes allotments to United States Public Health Service, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, War Department and Navy Department.

The following amounts have been covered into the surplus fund:

Losses on war-risk insurance on American vessels, their cargo, etc., and premiums on marine and seamen's insurance	$67,000,000.00
Military and naval family allowance	14,500,000.00
Salaries and expenses, 1918	51,943.09
Salaries and expenses, 1919	565,115.61
National security and defense	18,862.98
National security and defense, 1919	60,929.02

I might say by way of explanation of the first two items of the above statement, which relate to "American vessels, their cargoes, etc.," and "Premiums on marine and seamen's insurance," that they have nothing whatever to do with the benefits provided by law under the head of "Military and naval insurance." The Bureau of War Risk Insurance was originally established by an act which passed Congress on September 2, 1914, and contained provisions for the insurance by the United States of American vessels, their freight, cargoes, and so forth, against loss or damage by the risks of war whenever it appeared to the Secretary of the Treasury that American vessels, shippers, and importers in American vessels were unable in any trade to secure adequate war-risk insurance on reasonable terms. Later this law was amended making provision for insurance by the United States of masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life or personal injury by the risk of war, and for compensation during detention following capture by enemies of the United States, whenever it appeared to the Secretary of the Treasury that in any trade the need for such insurance existed. The aforesaid classes of insurance were never burdensome to the Government, for out of premiums on marine and seamen's insurance sixty-seven millions have been covered into the surplus fund. The Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance will soon go out of existence and only appears in this statement in an incidental way as being a part of the work of the bureau.

As to the items in the statement which relate to premiums on term insurance, I might say that the amounts set forth were derived mainly from the premiums paid by the soldiers, sailors, and marines on their yearly renewable term insurance policies during the war. The Government's liability for insurance outstanding through the bureau at the close of the war was over thirty-nine billions.

It might be interesting to insert as a part of these remarks a statement showing the total expenditures for pensions and benefits by the Commissioner of Pensions, Department of Interior, for all our wars up to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Pensions to the Secretary of the Interior. The report shows, in part, as follows:

Amount paid to pensioners, 1790 to 1921, inclusive.

War of the Revolution	$70,000,000.00

[1] Expenses of medical examinations and special field examinations not included.

Col. R. U. Patterson, assistant director in charge of the medical division, United States Veterans' Bureau, has made a very comprehensive statement under the head of "The Veterans' Bureau—What it has done and what it is doing for the ex-service man," which I make a part of these remarks:

THE VETERANS' BUREAU—WHAT IT HAS DONE AND WHAT IT IS DOING FOR THE EX-SERVICE MAN.

Under the terms of the war risk insurance act there was created in the Treasury Department an institution for insurance, for the supervision of allotment and allowance for members of the military forces, for providing compensation for members of the military forces separated from service under honorable conditions suffering from disabilities in line of duty and not due to willful misconduct, and for providing medical care and treatment for these discharged members of the armed forces so disabled. This agency was the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

About the time of the signing of the armistice and for several months thereafter the number of persons discharged from the service suffering from disabilities was very large. They were released at such a rate that it was a physical impossibility to maintain the Bureau of War Risk Insurance on a current basis. The volume of mail coming daily to the bureau was of staggering proportions, yet the urgency of taking action on these cases was quite obvious, because many of the persons discharged from service were utterly unable to attempt a reentry into industrial civil life by reason of physical or mental disorder. There was immediate need for a great force of medical officers and for hospital facilities heretofore unheard of in this country. The United States Public Health Service, a well-established institution under the Treasury Department, enlisting in its ranks physicians of prominent attainments in medical work and medical research, was a very small group having in its service less than 225 commissioned officers; nevertheless, it was to this agency that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance turned for its medical staff. It was through a spirit of cooperation that the United States Public Health Service bent every energy toward the increasing of its commissioned personnel by offering commissions in the Reserve Corps to such physicians as might be found competent and qualified for duty in the medical service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Specialists in all the major branches of medicine and surgery, and particularly in the branches of neuropsychiatry and tuberculosis, were found with difficulty. There is at all times an insufficient number of qualified specialists in these particular branches, and yet the need for such services for the beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was most urgent.

In order to facilitate action, the country was divided into 14 districts, with headquarters in some large center of the district with good transportation facilities. These districts were purely medical in nature, and were under United States Public Health Service officers, district supervisors. All examinations in connection with claims for compensation, insurance, or medical treatment were obtained by the bureau through these district officers, who, through their intimate knowledge of the qualification and location of competent practitioners in the district, could assign claimants to the proper physicians for study or treatment. This means of obtaining examinations was immediately productive of great benefit to those who were seeking relief through the bureau, because it facilitated action and enabled the bureau to obtain a standardization of medical service and keep close contact with the medical officers in the field. In places where the number of cases was sufficiently large a physician was designated by the bureau as the bureau representative to make examinations and to render treatment, and these physicians were authorized to institute treatment in cases where immediate treatment was necessary, without waiting for final adjudication of the claim. It was seen that if the bureau was compelled to withhold treatment until the claimant's right to such treatment had been definitely determined in each case it would result in great delay, and in many instances this would injure the claimant and handicap his treatment or result in permanent physical disability. Accordingly a Treasury decision was promulgated authorizing the bureau to render treatment in case of any applicant where it was found that immediate treatment was necessary for the claimant's ultimate well-being pending final adjudication of his compensation claim.

Many persons discharged from service were in need of immediate hospital treatment. Especially in the field of tuberculosis and neuropsychiatry there was a total lack of available hospital facilities for the proper housing and treatment of those disabled from such disorders. It was hopeless and impracticable to delay and defer the hospitalization of these cases until the Government could procure land and build its own hospitals for these cases; accordingly institutions already established and in such physical state as to warrant their conversion into hospitals, and in some cases private hospitals, were purchased or leased by the Government and operated as United States Public Health Service hospitals. As rapidly as possible constructions of an unsatisfactory character or that were unnecessarily expensive of operation were closed as soon as more satisfactory places could be found and obtained. In addition to the establishment of these hospitals it was necessary to utilize hospitals already established upon a contract basis whereby the Government paid to such institution a per diem rate of treatment for bureau beneficiaries. In many instances treatment obtained through these contract hospitals was not of the most desirable character, and Government-operated hospitals created in the emergency to take care of the immediate situation would not be expected to be of entirely satisfactory utility.

It was soon obvious that the hospital burden of the Government for treatment of its war disabled would increase for several years and that there would be a large number of cases that would require an indefinite period of hospital care. Believing that the extensive program for hospital treatment could best be carried on through Government-owned and Government-operated facilities, Congress generously appropriated moneys for the acquirement and erection of institutions suitable for hospital purposes. This was under the terms of the so-called first Langley bill. The major portion of this fund was expended upon hospitals for treatment of tuberculosis, although arrangements were also made to establish a large number of neuropsychiatric beds by this appropriation. The funds awarded under the first Langley bill were given to the Treasury Department, and the allocation of the funds was placed in the hands of a committee known as the White Committee, the construction of facilities under this fund was in the charge of the Supervising Architect, also of the Treasury Department. Approximately 3,000 neuropsychiatric beds were made available by the use of this appropriation.

In the latter part of the year 1920 the bureau was still striving with all its might to keep abreast with the current of work with which it was deluged. There was a special difficulty in keeping the medical rating work approximately current. There was a growing feeling that the field medical service should become a part of the same agency as that handling the compensation and insurance questions of the ex-service man. Accordingly, the district supervisors' offices were ordered to be transferred to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the previous functions of the district offices were expanded to allow the addition of compensation representatives. However, the law was constructed in such a way that the bureau was unable to decentralize in such a manner as was desired. During the entire first half of the year 1921 every effort was being made by the bureau to carry its service to the field, and the director of the bureau did all in his power to carry to Congress such information as it might desire in framing legislation that would allow for decentralization of certain functions, which, under the original act, could not be decentralized. Pending the passage of such legislation, however, heroic effort was made within the bureau to bring its work up to date, and medical officers were called in from each district office in addition to the officers already in the medical division and extra hours were added to the workday of the medical division, and by this assiduous application to its task and by the increase in personnel the claims of medical work were practically placed on a current basis so that on July 5, 1921, there was no unfinished work and very few pending claims. The claims that were pending were not being held up because of lack of bureau action but because the evidence necessary for the completion of the claims had not been produced.

On August 9, 1921, the act establishing the United States Veterans' Bureau was passed, and under the terms of this act the agencies concerned in distributing relief to disabled ex-service men were consolidated into one bureau—the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the medical work of the United States Public Health Service concerned with the treatment of the disabled ex-soldier and sailor. The consolidation of these agencies was accomplished without disturbance of the functions of any of the bureaus concerned, and the decentralization of the functions of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was rapidly placed into effect and without difficulty, inasmuch as the bureau had for some months past made an effort to decentralize and had studied the problem of decentralization. Rating officers were sent to each district as a nucleus for rating boards, and as new cases were filed the collection of evidence and the rating and adjudication of claims was carried out in the district offices. The district supervisors who were concerned solely with medical field work were replaced by district managers, under whose jurisdiction all work incident to compensation, medical treatment, and vocational rehabilitation were concentrated. As rapidly as possible old claims were forwarded to the districts for further action. At first only the claims which had been allowed were decentralized, subsequently the disallowed claims were transmitted.

Under the United States Veterans' Bureau the expansion of Government-owned treatment facilities was rapidly put into effect. The dispensaries previously managed for the bureau by the United States Public Health Service were taken under the direct control of the bureau and additional dispensaries were established for the treatment and examination of bureau claimants. The extension of Government facilities for the purpose of examination and treatment are obviously of great benefit; it insures standardization of medical practice, inasmuch as these physicians are directly under the control of the bureau and saves a great deal of unnecessary travel by allowing special examinations, including X-ray and laboratory study to be made when the claimant visits a dispensary, while under the old scheme of things—examination by private practitioner—the claimant would be examined and possibly a few days later would be required to report to another station for examination by some specialist, and if further study was necessary additional travel was caused. This caused loss of time and a great inconvenience and delay both in the adjudication of the claim and in the beginning of treatment.

In addition to the 14 district offices, authority was given for the establishment of 140 subdistrict offices under the act establishing the United States Veterans' Bureau. Attached to each of these subdistrict offices there are now being installed dispensaries with regularly employed Government physicians, in some instances the dispensaries are already functioning, and in others they have not been completed. Space and equipment has been obtained in practically every case, and equipment has been sent and is being sent to all of these stations. In each of the large dispensaries there are well-equipped clinics in surgery (including orthopedic surgery), general medicine, tuberculosis, neuropsychiatry, eye, ear, nose, and throat diseases, urology and dentistry. In addition to these clinics, well-equipped X-ray and clinical laboratories are established and also clinics in physiotherapy, electrotherapy, and hydrotherapy. In the small dispensaries facilities are provided, but they are less complete than in the large centers.

It will be realized how extensively the bureau has utilized its own facilities for examination when it is understood that at the present time approximately 70 per cent of all examinations made are made in the district and subdistrict dispensaries; an additional 4 or 5 per cent are made at the United States Veterans' and United States Marine Hospital out-patient clinics. In the months of February, March, and April, 1922, a total of 287,000 examinations were made in the district and subdistrict dispensaries, 13,332 examinations were made in United States Veterans' and United States Marine Hospital out-patient departments, and 106,887 by authorized examiners outside of dispensaries. The total number of examinations during the period was 387,747. In the month of June, 1922, 110,700 examinations were made and in July 108,920. During this period 127,002 patients were treated at dispensaries and in July 128,730 treatments were given. It is anticipated that the operation of out-patient Government treatment and examination facilities for the ensuing year will cost approximately $14,000,000—about $400,000 for maintenance and repair, $1,000,000 for equipment, $600,000 for X ray and physiotherapy, $4,000,000 for X rays on a fee basis, and $7,000,000 for salaries of medical officers. At the present time there are, exclusive of death cases and permanent total disabilities, 175,070 claimants receiving compensation from the bureau.

In addition to authorizing decentralization, certain important provisions were incorporated in the act establishing the United States Veterans' Bureau. Under the terms of this act the bureau is required as far as practicable to utilize Government facilities for treatment and to discontinue the use of contract facilities wherever satisfactory Government beds are made available. In the summer of 1919 there were practically no Government beds available for the use of the Veterans' Bureau beneficiaries. In May, 1919, there was a total of 1,956 cases in hospitals and practically all were in contract institutions; by October 1, 1919, there was a total of 1,887 beds made available through the marine hospitals and United States Public Health Service hospitals. By October 1, 1920, the expansion of Government facilities had created a total of 14,385 beds. The following table shows the extension of Government facilities since October 1, 1920:

	Tubercular.	Neuropsychiatric.	General.	Total.	Per cent increase of total from Oct. 1, 1920.

The relative increase in the use of Government facilities in providing treatment to beneficiaries is indicated by the following table, which shows that on October 1, 1920, about 48 per cent were in Government beds, while at present there are almost 87 per cent in Government beds:

	Government.	Contract.	Total.	Per cent in Government.

Under the second Langley bill, the appropriation for which has been recently made available to the United States Veterans' Bureau, it being charged with the responsibility for constructing hospitals under this bill, has been rapidly taken care of, so that at the present time practically all hospitals to be constructed under this appropriation have been located and the plans are being prepared.

For special information of any persons interested in claimants in the State of Ohio there is attached hereto a table of Veterans' Bureau patients hospitalized in State and other civil institutions in the State of Ohio in August, 1922. There is a second table, showing Veterans' Bureau patients in Government institutions in the State of Ohio. It would appear to be impracticable to transfer the patients in contract hospitals in Ohio to Government institutions in adjacent States, for the reason that by the fall of this year there will become available at the soldiers' home, Dayton, Ohio, 500 additional beds for treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis and for the treatment of neuropsychiatric cases a 400-bed hospital is planned at Chillicothe, Ohio, and it is stated that this will be complete within nine months. These beds will take care of all bureau patients suffering from neuropsychiatric disease and pulmonary tuberculosis, and there is only a small number of persons hospitalized for other diseases in the State of Ohio. These general cases are scattered throughout the State, and are mostly in hospitals near their homes, and it is believed that a transfer would be undesirable.

Other changes of special importance to the disabled veterans were incorporated in the act of August 9, 1921, most notable the provisions of section 13 of that act, authorizing the extension of treatment, including hospital care, prosthetic appliances, medical, surgical, and dental care for any member of the military or naval forces of the United States separated therefrom under honorable conditions, disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted, or by reason of any aggravation of preexisting disease specifically noted at the examination for entrance into or employment in the active military or naval service while in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after April 6, 1917, provided that the wound or injury received or disease contracted was incurred in line of duty and not caused by his own willful misconduct and further provided that application for such care and treatment was made within one year from the date of separation from active service or from the date that the act became effective (which was August 9, 1921), whichever was the later. It is impossible to know at the present time just how many persons are receiving treatment under this section of the act. Prior to the passage of this act treatment could be given where disability of a compensable degree existed, but under the authority of this provision where treatment was requested within the time limit specified it can be given for disability of noncompensable degree where the disability is service connected and not due to willful misconduct. A statistical study is being carried on at the present time to determine the number of persons who are receiving treatment for noncompensable disability, but it will be some time before statistics are available upon this point.

The amendatory act of August 9 also provides that where an alien enemy who had volunteered or had been drafted into service and who was not discharged upon his solicitation or application by reason of being an alien enemy and whose service was honest and faithful shall receive the benefits provided in the war risk insurance act, and it was further provided that in case any person who was dishonorably discharged and under court-martial and it was subsequently established in the sight of the director that at the time of the commission of the offense resulting in such court-martial that such person was insane, he should be entitled to compensation and insurance benefits for disabilities incurred in or aggravated by service.

Probably the greatest change regarding the adjudication of claims of interest and benefit to a large number of beneficiaries was the so-called section 18, amending section 300 of the war risk insurance act. This provides in the case of ex-service men shown to have an active pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease of more than 10 per cent disability developing within two years after separation from active service would be considered to have acquired his disability in such service, or to have suffered an aggravation of a preexisting pulmonary tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric disease. Under the terms of this amendment many persons became entitled to compensation where the claim had been previously disallowed by reason of the fact that material evidence to indicate any probability of service origin for the disability could not be produced, although the previous policy of the bureau had been one of generosity, and it had been consistently the policy of the bureau as laid down by the director to give the claimant the benefit of every reasonable doubt in the rating of cases and the adjudication of awards.

Further action was taken in this bill to limit the time for which military service would entitle claimants to consideration under the war risk act and its amendments. Under this section no person enlisting in the military service or the naval forces after six months from the passage of the amendatory act of August 9, 1921, could be entitled to compensation or any of the benefits or privileges provided under the provision of article 3 of the war-risk insurance act as amended.

The United States Veterans' Bureau has made every effort to carry out every provision in the letter and spirit of the amendatory act. The standard of medical examinations and treatment has been raised by the establishment of dispensaries and out-patient clinics in charge of medical officers of the bureau. Government facilities have been expanded and at the same time undesirable hospitals have been closed; hospitals formerly under the control of the United States Public Health Service have been transferred to the immediate control of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau under the terms of the Executive order dated April 29, 1922; the entire hospital division of the Public Health Service concerned with the operation of hospitals for treatment of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau was transferred to the medical division, United States Veterans' Bureau. This was accomplished without interruption of the medical service and without inconvenience or discomfort to the patients of the bureau already in hospitals or those seeking admission. The bureau is consistently and as rapidly as possible following the injunction of the law to use Government beds and abandon contract facilities and to provide by new construction such additional beds as may be needed. The completion of hospitals authorized in the second Langley bill will be carried forward as rapidly as possible, and when completed the bureau will have under its control and immediate supervision in charge of Government medical officers adequate hospital facilities of the most thoroughly modern character where treatment of the very highest standard will be available for those suffering from disabilities due to wounds and disease traceable to military or naval service in the great World War.

The medical welfare of trainees is at all times provided for. In resident training institutions where the need is sufficient a full-time medical officer of the bureau is on duty, and where trainees are not in such centers they are visited from time to time, while in cases of neuropsychiatric disease and tuberculosis these visits are made at intervals of 30 to 60 days by a follow-up nurse, who is ever alert to discover any evidence of recurrence of the disability or the development of a new disease that might make immediate treatment desirable or necessary. Where a trainee is found to be in need of such treatment, he is sent to the nearest medical officer or, if his condition is serious, the officer is sent to the claimant's place of residence and suitable treatment is instituted.

The medical division, in accordance with the policy of the entire bureau, has always adopted an attitude of sympathy toward the patient and the desire to extend a helping hand. Where the evidence submitted in a case is insufficient to show service origin or aggravation for a disability the claimant is advised as to the nature of evidence which must be required. A special set of affidavits, which are arranged simply and upon which instructions for completion are plainly shown, have been prepared for the convenience of the claimant. In the final rating decision the rating officer is required to constantly bear in mind his obligation to consider the claimant's right to the benefit of every reasonable doubt.

Col. R. I. Rees, assistant director in charge of rehabilitation, United States Veterans' Bureau, has made a general statement relative to the work being done by the bureau and the problems which have confronted it, which I desire to make a part of these remarks:

With the creation of the Veterans' Bureau on August 9, 1921, its director accepted from the Federal Board for Vocational Education 238,271 veterans to be cared for. Each had been certified by some medical authority as disabled. They had been informed by our Government that they were entitled to a course of training, and subsequent experiences of the bureau indicate each of them had a different verbal promise as to what the Government would do for them. The bureau must ascertain and carry out these promises if our Government is to keep the faith with these veterans. Before this transfer to the bureau it was generally understood that at the start in 1918 it was extremely difficult to make the veterans see the value of this training; thereafter it was more difficult to meet their demands for immediate enrollment, but that both these stages would be trifles compared to the new responsibility of the bureau—getting those enrolled from the rolls. Thousands of disabled veterans and hundreds of millions of Government funds were involved, and the inference was that plans for accomplishing more good than harm were yet to be discovered. A sensing of that inference was one cause for the administration's creation of the Veterans' Bureau, and its corrective action already has removed the cause for past alarm.

THE PROBLEM.

Generally speaking, every World War service man or woman suffering from a 10 per cent or greater disability incurred, aggravated, or traceable to that service is entitled to a course of training at the expense of the bureau if such training is desired and feasible. Such of that general class as are also burdened with a vocational handicap as a result of the service connected disability get the training, a monthly maintenance allowance ranging from $80 to $170, and the bureau is further required to see that this special class is placed in suitable or gainful occupations. Those entitled to training only are referred to as section 3 persons, as that section of the vocational rehabilitation act provides for them. Those entitled to training, maintenance, and employment are, for the same reason, termed section 2 persons. There is one other group, those persons of the general group not yet discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine service, are classed as section 6 persons.

On June 30, 1922, 195,604 persons had been awarded section 2 training, 108,400 section 3, and 73 section 6, a total of 304,077. These figures represent both sexes, ages from 18 to over 50, and averaging 26, practically every nationality, practically every creed, every race or color, all are disabled, and there are large groups of major amputations, tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or mental cases, blind, deaf, and speech defects, and education ranges from illiterates to post graduates. Truly it is a cross section of American society.

To accomplish the work the bureau has about 3,000 persons exclusively on vocational-rehabilitation duties, all subject to the Government's methods as to selection, appointment, and dismissal. For the work the bureau must utilize colleges, universities, schools, offices, mills, factories, ships, and other industrial plants—thousands of them.

Everyone appreciates that all large groups contain the good, the indifferent, and the bad, even though the groups are carefully selected to perform only good works. It must, therefore, be acknowledged that the bureau's group of employees, as well as its group of training facilities and its larger group of beneficiaries, contain these elements. True, the elements are constantly changing and in the case of employees and facilities the indifferent and bad are constantly being discovered and eliminated. But for its beneficiaries the bureau must do the greatest possible good for the worst among them.

Probably the greatest single factor in the problem is that our generous public through its Congress has ruled that each section 2 trainee in each locality shall receive a like sum for board, lodging, and other maintenance needs, and also a like sum for a wife or other dependent, and in arriving at these amounts placed them below the prospective earning capacity of the disabled man who has always been active in improving his condition, but considerably above the fondest hopes of a great many of the others.

CAUSE FOR PAST ALARM.

Reviewing the problem, we have a vast group of beneficiaries to be given a course of training who must perform the application and study—which is at least 90 per cent of the job—if they are to complete their training. About 50 per cent of them know that if they apply themselves and complete their training their Government allowances will stop and they will receive less money as commencement pay in their new vocations. The cause for past alarm was that it was not reasonable to expect all of the elements of this group to voluntarily apply themselves to reduce their incomes, and a plan for insuring the necessary application was yet to be discovered.

THE BUREAU PLANS.

Without stopping the work under the old system, but always correcting faults as rapidly as possible, the bureau established its "training policies," which received the approval of acknowledged educators of the country, also of our cooperating veteran associations and representatives of the public, before its final adoption and issuance. These training policies require that for each beneficiary in training there shall be set an "employment objective" and a "training program" based upon that objective. To arrive at the items of the training program the "job" represented by the "employment objective" must be analyzed and the "training program" must be written up to include each and every educational and manipulative item necessary for such employment, also those items of actual application of the training process necessary to make the beneficiary employable in the "employment objective." The program must be written up so the training proceeds in logical sequence and an average time for completion is given for each item. It is an enormous job, but has been progressing for several weeks.

It is not a "cure all." There always will be room for improvement. However, it will lessen the load of useless work and gain time needed for these improvements. It will also accomplish the following, which were not possible under previous policies, viz:

"The training promises of the Government to each beneficiary will be in writing.

"The bureau will know when those promises are not being kept.

"Actual progress of the beneficiaries on their training programs will become the criterion of efficiency for continuance in service of employees and training facilities.

"The larger Government payment for training maintenance allowance than for eventual employment becomes of great use instead of being a menace. The beneficiary wants to retain it; to retain it he must make progress on his program to assure the bureau the expense is not a waste, continued progress on the program must result in its completion, such completion ends the allowance period, and the result is a completely trained beneficiary."

The "training policy" hits at the source of greatest possible waste to the Government and harm to the beneficiary. Other great sources of possible waste are faulty "advisement" and improper "employment." Advisement or the work of getting the beneficiary without false starts into the "employment objective" for which he is best fitted, is now being intensely followed by the bureau. A new employment service to obtain the greatest possible returns to the beneficiary from an honest application of his course of training recently has been organized, and is functioning throughout the country.

THE CONSOLIDATION.

The consolidation of the former three veteran activities into the Veterans' Bureau resulted in the bureau contacting with 228,803 new prospective training beneficiaries in 10½ months, whereas the Federal board, working alone, contacted 404,396 in 37½ months. Although it is not possible to show it so conclusively, it is believed that improvements quite as great as occurred in the contact work resulted in the finance work, the procurement of supplies, medical examinations, and claims work of the Federal board, all of which were transferred from the rehabilitation division to groups specializing on those subjects, with the consolidation in the bureau. The reorganization left to the rehabilitation division of the bureau:

1. The award of training;
2. Training; and
3. Employment of vocationally rehabilitated trainees.

That great progress has been made and is continuing in this division's part of the bureau's work is readily shown by considering the load, wholly in terms of the law, as follows:

	37½ months, Aug. 15, 1921.	10½ months later, June 30, 1922.	1 month later, July 31, 1922.
Pending cases	186,711	136,790	126,797
Partly completed cases	106,073	129,366	126,014
Completed cases	9,225	36,853	50,198

Whereas on August 15, 1921, much the greater part of the load was in the pending status; to-day it is in the partly completed and completed lines. Of the pending cases July 31, 1922, 86,905 are in that status for medical reasons or at their own request.

ADVISEMENT.

The law requires that a course be prescribed, that the claimant be offered the prescribed course, and if advantage is not taken of the offer within one year the privilege is forfeited. Vocational advisement, or prescribing the course, enters at this stage. It is the most important of the entire program. Ideal advisement would mean getting the beneficiary into the best employment objective for which he can be equipped. Ideal advisement would mean the greatest possible returns on the investment to both the Government and the beneficiary, and this with a resulting least requirement of effort on the part of the bureau. Fathers and mothers have been more or less successful since Adam with family advisement problems. Group advisement as a vocation is relatively new, and trained men in this field are in great demand in industry. With the Government's limitation on salaries the bureau can only select its most promising employees and train them for this important work. This training is in progress, and the results are improving conditions to such an extent that the experiences to date are being collected and studied with a view to obtaining the most practical "advisement policy" the conditions confronting the bureau permit. That the bureau has its special conditions to meet in this work is well described in the following statement of an experienced training officer:

"The majority of those suffering from tuberculosis are hopeful and optimistic and are excellent students who, if they live, will become courageous citizens, while many with light catarrh and bronchitis have neurasthenia and flunk their courses because of indefinite fears and pessimism. Some who were seriously wounded at the front and who have suffered major amputations are more easily managed and encouraged than some who had influenza on this side of the seas. Many paradoxes appear. The cultured invariably seem to want outdoor rough life. The illiterate and uncultured often want indoor work. The strong want light work as an objective. The weak disown their disability and often want to train for rigid work."

TRAINING.

Practically every disabled veteran awarded training who is prepared to take it is in training. To-day there are 99,090 in 445 different employment objectives; 54,754 in 2,761 schools or colleges; 38,313 in 30,080 industrial establishments; and 6,023 in 47 special schools operated and maintained by the bureau. The peak of the load was reached March 31, 1922, with 109,805 in training.

Every institution used by the bureau in its training program is investigated as to its equipment for thorough instruction, and each is required to enter into a contract with the bureau to cover the courses the bureau desires to use. The cost of such courses to the bureau must not exceed the cost to others of similar courses unless the bureau modifies the practice of the institution when the cost is modified accordingly. All institutions must agree to operate in conformity with the bureau's training policies. Where the number of trainees warrants, the institution and the bureau decide upon an individual of the institution's staff who is appointed a counselor and paid one to five hundred dollars annually to act as adviser to all attending trainees. Employees of the Bureau, termed coordinators or rehabilitation assistants are assigned to cover all institutions in sufficient numbers to permit them to personally contact each trainee and assure progress in his training. In turn, each district has expert supervisors who specialize on trade and industrial, commercial, agricultural, professions and the arts, and correspondence training methods, and these experts supervise the work of the coordinators and rehabilitation assistants.

Placement training, or training on the job, for a great many vocations is the best form of training. As these veterans are placed in offices, shops, garages, mills, factories, and on transportation lines and farms—in fact, throughout all industry—and as those employers who agree to assist the bureau in its training work are not required to pay the student veteran, it has been found almost impossible to prevent all exploitation of the trainees. However, the new training policies are expected to reduce the faults to a minimum.

About 10,000 veterans are taking correspondence courses, most of them being in placement training and getting in this manner the educational side of their employment objective.

It was the difficulties discovered in insuring proper training in the trades and agriculture through placement training that determined the commencement of the bureau's vocational school No. 1, at Chillicothe, Ohio. The site of old Camp Sherman, including over 4,000 acres, was obtained from the War Department on November 1, 1921, for this purpose. The work was opposed from all sides and mainly by the misinformed or others who thought the Government could not successfully conclude such a project. Before the first year will have passed this school will be giving as thorough trade and agricultural training as the Government obtains elsewhere, the beneficiaries there will be better cared for physically than elsewhere, and all at less cost per trainee than other institutions are averaging. The old Army cantonment buildings already have almost disappeared and next spring will see about 500 men training in agriculture there with their fattening cattle, dairy herds, and fully equipped dairy, a large part of the acreage in crops planted and cared for by trainees, with their orchards, bees, swine, and poultry for related training subjects. At the entrance to the school grounds are the shops for training 500 men in 18 different trades. Before next Christmas all but one of the objections to this school will have disappeared; the remaining one, that it takes the men away from their homes, can not be serious, as we have 58,240 men at other institutions of their own selection and nearly all of them are away from their homes. The fact to be remembered about this school is that several thousand men who without the school would be open to probable exploitation in placement training establishments will be given thorough training under sound conditions. It has been charged the bureau maintains a military discipline at its schools. The lack of evidence of such discipline at his school undoubtedly was the reason why a trainee in automotive work during the absence of his class wrote the following on the class blackboard:

"Nobody had to send a truant officer for Abraham Lincoln. When we eliminate the word 'discipline' from our school vocabulary we take off our chains on a rainy day. Discipline has been the dominant factor in every worth-while individual. Discipline is low gear on the human engine; a last resort but a reserve power by which we make the hill. We have pretty generally discarded it, and so the hollows of life are filled with stalled people."

Other school facilities the bureau has found it necessary to establish and maintain are those used for advisement purposes, equipped with vocational instruction equipment and instructors, and the veterans are required to attend while they themselves are being studied to discover their most suitable employment objective. Such schools also are used for special instruction in related subjects or rudimentary education for men in placement training. Then there are the bureau schools that have perfected methods for successfully rehabilitating the large group of tuberculous veterans facing the bureau. Further, there are thousands of neuropsychiatric or mentally disabled veterans in the training load, and no expense or effort is being spared in the solution of this large part of the problem. Our most successful school for this purpose is equipped for initial instruction in a great many of the vocations; it makes no effort at complete vocational rehabilitation within the school; the beneficiaries are required to reside at the institution; they are accepted direct from hospitals and other institutions after all possible has been done for them there. The school gains their confidence while at the same time allowing them to discover their vocational bent on the premises, and this school is averaging a graduation period of three months, the men leaving to immediately commence vocational courses with few recurrences of their disability.

The bureau's success in rehabilitating the blind, deaf, and speech-defect groups is especially gratifying. Six hundred and forty-six blind, 602 deaf, and 346 speech-defect veterans were registered for training June 30, 1922, compared to 524 blind, 506 deaf, and 279 speech defects August 15, 1921. The successful rehabilitations were 31 blind, 27 deaf, and 15 speech defects June 30, 1922, compared to 12 blind, 13 deaf, and 2 speech defects August 15, 1921. To cover this work the bureau has a special organization working solely on this problem, and its field workers have visited every part of the United States, from the slums of New York City to remote mining villages in the mountains of northern California, in their endeavors to bring new hope and cheer to these veterans. That they are accomplishing the bureau's aim is proven by the stories of the rehabilitated cases, blind men managing their own stores or farms, carrying on successfully in poultry raising, as masseurs in hospitals, some even in factories, and one, totally blind and without hands, is managing a successful drug business. They have all been taught to be blind, the instruction including vocal and instrumental music to give them a means of filling their leisure moments as well as to develop their sense of hearing and touch and give them confidence in their ability to accomplish things in spite of their blindness. The most successful deaf rehabilitation was that of a naval veteran, now a copartner in a school for the deaf, and the best speech-defect case a trainee who for a time seemed most interested in the amount of money he could get from the Government, who after only three months in training reported at his district office: "Just forget about that compensation. I am going out to get a job. I can talk now."

The bureau and these disabled veterans have been criticized because the public believes the trainees are constantly changing their training from employment objective to another. The records show 65 per cent are in their first employment objective, 23 per cent in second, and only 12 per cent with more than two. Also the charge is made they are constantly changing without reason from one place to another, whereas the records show 51 per cent at their first institution or placement facility, 25 per cent have made one change, 12 per cent two changes, and 12 per cent more than two changes.

All the work of bureau, school, and industrial personnel, if it were 100 per cent efficient in all respects, could at most accomplish but 10 per cent of the work on hand. The remaining 90 per cent of the effort, the application, and study must come from the beneficiary, and we have thousands delivering their full 90 per cent. They deserve the highest praise this country is able to bestow for the manner in which they are meeting that country's wishes to have them as quickly as possible restored as near as practicable to their pre-war or better than pre-war economic status. However, it is a true concern of the bureau that the interests of those beneficiaries are being harmed by a relatively few of the comrades, who give only enough of their application and study to be a constant question before the bureau as to how to avoid a waste of Government funds and at the same time meet the wishes of the country for the least of these veterans. The situation demands plain words, for these misguided men know it is impossible for the bureau to hand them a completed course of vocational training, followed immediately by steady and gainful employment in industry, just as a child hands a squirrel a nut, yet their actions indicate they and their friends understand that to be the law and the bureau's problem. A solid front and the help of all America truly is needed to enlighten this minority in its own interest and to insure their deserving comrades against unwarranted damages in the way of public criticism, which often ends in a condemnation of the entire group.

Rehabilitation and completed.

The country already has every reason to be proud of this rapidly increasing army of disabled veterans, who before the war had the prospects of other normal persons, during the war were deprived of those prospects, and now, during peace, largely through their own efforts but with the assistance of their Government, are reentering industry with new hope and cheer and prospects above their pre-war expectations. A graduation certificate is supplied each one rehabilitated. Everyone is furnished employment as desired through the bureau's employment service. Their expressions of thanks to their Government are full of human philosophy, Americanism, and determination to do. The following from a rehabilitated Army nurse is illustrative of the before and after feelings of these veterans:

"Let an ex-service woman and ex-trainee say a few words of appreciation for benefits derived from the rehabilitation plan of the United States Government.

"When I was in the Army I did my share of grouching and cursed it frequently in such terms as a woman may use. I longed with the intensity of despair to be free from the imposition of military rules and regulations, yet knew in my heart that I would fight, tooth and nail, to stay. Such is human nature.

"When, however, I finally found myself again an individual privileged to act as impulse or reason dictated I was resolved to avenge myself for the indignities heaped upon me. I berated the Army well, and the Government, too. In no measured terms did I score its weaknesses and its administration. For a time, I blush to say, I was a member of that unhappy band that is 'agin the Government.'

"Then came a sorry day, when the real cause of my spleen evinced itself. The small but powerful enemy which I had fought through long heart-breaking days and nights of horror with fiendish strategy set up a base in my very own chest. This was a new problem to face. The fight was up to me, but without help I must have been vanquished. Where to look for it? The Government, that same weak, ill-administered Government rallied to my colors. It fought and set me again upon the throne of my inheritance—good health. To keep me there it placed at my disposal all of the educational wealth of this great country—laid it at my feet and said, 'Choose.' When I had chosen still more it lavished its gifts upon me without stint—books and books and books, more than I could encompass—all of the best of everything I needed was mine for the taking, and favors and consideration. And each two weeks that certain check.

"Can any poor words of mine express my gratitude? As in the days of splenetic woe I spoke loudly and vehemently, so now, in these days of chastened understanding, let me speak with no less strength but with reverence and love for the same power which has conferred eternal blessings upon my unworthy head.

"God save our Government."

Col. C. R. Forbes, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, on September 18, 1922, at the district managers' conference recently held in Washington, delivered an address which was, in part, as follows:

ADDRESS OF COL. C. R. FORBES AT DISTRICT MANAGERS' CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER 18, 1922.

Gentlemen, I welcome you to the second annual conference of district managers and officers having charge of the medical and rehabilitation work of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

I have observed your work very closely since our last conference. I have been mindful of my promises to you and I have remembered your promises to me. I can not say that in every instance you have fulfilled your part of our agreement, and it may be that all I hoped to do has not been possible. I do not, however, attribute to you any neglect of duty, nor charge you with any negligence toward the program, and I do sense your confidence that anything I may not have been able to accomplish did not materialize for a good and sufficient reason. Such failures as have occurred, I believe, are to have been expected in the normal process of development.

Decentralization has taken place since our last conference. You have had at least six months to put into effect those policies which have been promulgated and transmitted to you in part at the last conference, and in part subsequently by letter or by formal orders, regulations, or bulletins.

It has, no doubt, occurred to you on numerous occasions, and has been brought also to your attention by many who are interested in this big problem, that with decentralization the importance of our task in the field has increased proportionately. Many have been the obstacles arising in the practical application of central-office working instructions to field conditions, and numerous have been the criticisms fired at you from all sides for what was apparently a failure to get your organization into effective working shape and produce results immediately. Most of the problems you have approached in a satisfactory way. Some of the criticisms have been met by an enlightening explanation and some still remain to be answered. These conditions, however, are a part of the job, and while they necessarily entail concern and worry your director assures you of his willingness that you share this official grief in proportion to your increased responsibilities. Your reward will be that comfort which comes from a job well done—your budget precludes the sordid one you may have in mind. When I reflect on the worries that attend the administration of this work I often recall the inspiration that came to me when I read the following little squib by a homely corn-fed philosopher whose name has gone but whose words remain:

"Any work of importance carries with it a certain amount of worry. The man who has lived his life with a single purpose of avoiding all worry has lived a shirker's existence; it is because we are men and are doing worth-while things that we feel concern, and the man who has nothing to worry about is of little importance in this scheme of things—and usually realizes it."

And so one measure of relief which you can afford yourself will be to follow strictly the principles laid down by the central office, and to see to it that you do not modify the progress, alter a procedure, or deviate from instructions without appropriate authority from the director.

A rigid adherence to this policy will at least obviate certain additional worries sure to come if central office instructions are not observed, and there will be no reward for this worry.

You must keep before you at all times the fact that the director will be held responsible by the President for the successful operation of the manifold functions of the bureau and for the proper administration of all institutions having to do with the care, treatment, or training of the disabled ex-service man.

It is your duty to inform the director wherein your opinion may differ with the principles of any rules or regulations promulgated. I believe you appreciate that your director seeks such suggestions and criticisms and also that he is grateful for the advancement of any ideas which give promise of being potential incentives to sounder principles or better methods. The bureau has been markedly helped by suggestions offered from the field and developed into rules of action for general observation through the organization.

There are some things about which I know no more than I do concerning the Jewish alphabet, but I am conscious of a firm conviction of one thing, that the degree to which the Veterans' Bureau can operate profitably and successfully will be in direct proportion to the extent that a harmonious and helpful exchange of ideas is developed and maintained among those employees having charge of the various activities. There can not be one set of rules for one district and another set for another district. Uniformity of action in all coordinate field agencies is vital to the ultimate success of this organization. This principle is axiomatic.

Sound organization and economical systems of operations are elemental principles observed by all successful industries. In the large businesses of the country the home office sends to the field agencies through strikingly uniform means rules and regulations for the guidance of field activities. Such instructions invariably emanate from the home office only after careful study and mature consideration, and field agencies are held strictly accountable for a rigid adherence to such instructions. Were this not true, the field offices would soon develop individual practices, which could never be tolerated in an organization whose scope of activity is nation wide. It would naturally follow that any lenience shown by one field office would become known in another section of the country and the patrons of the organization not receiving the favored consideration would become dissatisfied at the discrimination. And so it is with our work—absolutely uniform treatment of beneficiaries of this bureau must be practiced from Maine to California and from Florida to Washington.

And I do not propose that my active and intense interest in this work shall cease until the entire organization has become a successful and smoothly operated machine and this great institution of the Government is so functioning that irregularities and mistakes shall have reached the proverbial irreducible minimum.

Now for a word about the great rank and file who are handling the infinitude of detail involved in creating and maintaining the millions of records of the United States Veterans' Bureau. I try to think of all of us as constituting a big family which has the interest of the ex-service man at heart and the interest of each other member of the family before him at all times. We can not be successful if we disregard the interest of those with whom we are daily in association. We can not be calloused to the needs of those for whose service the family was created. We can not be an organization of big business if the principles which actuate our motives are not founded on sincerity, truth, energy, and personal forcefulness, or if we are either openly or covertly disloyal, or if we have disloyalty within our ranks, or if we harbor hatred or malice. I am sorry to say, gentlemen, that our district and subdistrict offices are not entirely free from evidences of these weaknesses.

It is right that every man should seek advancement, and it is, indeed, a credit to a man if his ambition and desires lead him to look beyond his present responsibility. But let me warn you against attempting the gratification of such ambition or desires if their accomplishment must be at the expense of a deserving fellow workman. It is, indeed, uncharitable and unmanly to further one's own personal ends by taking or permitting others to take unfair advantages.

Within this bureau there are many opportunities for the recognition of loyal and competent service, and district managers and chiefs of sections should see to it that promotions are made for efficiency and that increases are recommended purely on the basis of loyalty, devotion to duty, and productive accomplishment. If you will study the problem from a business point of view entirely, you will never treat superficially the earnest eagerness of the employees within whom the great evolutionary force may be working, and you will, in so far as it is humanly possible, take into account the loyal interest so evidenced.

Have no hesitancy in seeking advice and suggestions of your coworkers. Do not become imbued with the fancy that your personal qualities, your personal thoughts, or your personal convictions alone are an adequate basis for the determination of a solution to an important problem. Remember that sound judgment and genius, too, if you please, are not confined entirely to those who have the advantage of position, and further that some of the most remarkable advancements the world has seen have come from the ranks of the industries of the North, of the South, of the East, and of the West. It matters not whether a man or a woman comes from the lowlands or from the highlands, whether from rich or poor antecedents, from the halls of the great universities, from the stuffed classroom of the night school, or from the little red schoolhouse on the hill, each may have potentialities of inestimable value, and each individual should be given his opportunity.

In reporting to this office district managers must not charge an error to a subordinate; they alone are responsible to me for the proper management and strict discipline of their offices and of the fulfillment to disabled men of the Government's obligation, as prescribed by legislation, as I in turn am to the President.

I feel strongly on these matters which I have just mentioned, for I have seen in several of the districts instances of merit unrecognized and of the retention in positions of trust of men of questionable ability—both I am sorry to say to the detriment of the work. It is paramount duty that we owe to our fellow creatures, and more especially to those with whom we labor side by side, to recognize loyal and effective industry, and it is almost of equal importance that we weed out the incompetents and the otherwise unfit. Political and selfish purposes are not to be served at the expense of deserving employees of this bureau.

For some time I have been turning over in my mind two questions of probable value in promoting the operation of the district offices. I desire that you consider each one carefully and offer your thought as to their practicability, and in the event of your concurrence with the general suggestions that you outline in each instance both the scope and the limits which should be applied.

First, it has been suggested that while such conferences as the one in which we are now engaged are productive of excellent results, and while the exhaustive inquiry of the traveling committee likewise has much to do with bettering methods, yet neither of these gives the district manager that personal, intimate conception of what is being done in other districts that I think might prove to be another factor of intensive instruction that would be helpful to those in charge of field work.

I am, therefore, considering the proposition of arranging some type of rotating supervision between district managers, or of periodical visits by district managers to other offices, by which they will have an opportunity to exhaustively study the actual working detail and methods of other field offices and to indulge in an exchange of ideas with each other in the field. I have withheld presenting this to you before for the reason that previously I have not felt that the district offices were provided to a sufficiently desirable extent with chiefs of administration qualified in all respects to carry the load of responsibility during such absences of the district managers, but I believe now that this objection has been removed and that the question is at least feasible of consideration.

The other matter is the question of amplifying the responsibility placed upon the chief of administration by the present organization field chart. In cases which have been brought to my attention I find that chiefs of divisions often resent observation made by others of but coordinate responsibility and with some propriety question the authority of the chief of administration to exercise any interest in their particular field. I would like the candid thought of the district managers as to the desirability of fixing on the chief of administration, in addition to his prescribed duties, those of executive officer. It is important that this weakness be overcome at once and thus remove a source of all to common discord. In many districts I know that your concurrence in this suggestion will but put the stamp of general approval on what has been already informally delegated by a number of district managers.

CLAIMS.

Since our last conference I have visited almost all the district offices, many of the subdistrict offices, most of the hospitals, and a large number of the schools and training centers. I find that there is an extremely zealous disposition on the part of those in authority to render the service expected of them and to honestly administer the ex-service men the best treatment that can be afforded within the limitations imposed by law. I am delighted to commend you on this. I have told you from time to time that the ex-service men must have the benefit of the doubt, that you can not always settle a case by pure "affidatism." Wherever it is found that a claimant is physically unable to appear before an examining board, the bureau must go to him. Put yourself in the man's place, were you unable to travel any distance to a district or subdistrict office. If you were incapacitated to the extent that to travel would aggravate your disability, and this aggravation did occur, would you consider yourself responsible for the aggravated condition, or would you feel, quite properly, that the burden of proof was against the Government? And would you not charge the Government with neglect and responsibility in the event of an aggravation or death? Keep in mind that many thousands of men have been ordered for examination. And consider also the Government's responsibility in cases that may not have resulted from military service, but on which we have ordered men up for examination. With these things in mind, exercise the most careful judgment in ordering men for examination as opposed to sending the examining officer to the man.

I am opposed to the correspondence method of adjudicating claims. "Insufficient evidence" and "no service connection" mean little to thousands of men. "Additional affidavits" is just about as nebulous to thousands of others. Many most worthy cases have been neglected and delayed, or have died a premature death because of the long tortuous channel of correspondence resulting from stereotyped phrases not understood by the average claimant. This is particularly unfortunate where beneficiaries are involved whose education handicaps them in understanding carelessly written letters and in preparing such written evidence as is called for.

There is such a thing as becoming "hard boiled." There is such a thing as being influenced unduly by a previous rating, but it is essential to fair treatment that each and every case be regarded in a fresh light, no matter how often reviewed. A peculiarly trying and exacting duty develops upon your board of appeals and your board of review, and the members of these bodies must constantly be inspired to the most earnest and sympathetic consideration of cases brought to their attention.

INSURANCE.

There is another phase of the bureau's duties to ex-service and service men and women that I must bring to your attention—that is, the duty of the Veterans' Bureau to see that every ex-service man and woman is fully advised as to his or her insurance rights and privileges under the war risk insurance act as amended, so that the real good intended by the passage of the war risk insurance act and amendments can be accomplished.

I purposely do not mention those now in the service for the reason that the rights and privileges of the act are being ably explained by the War Department, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, but when we realize that upward of 4,500,000 individuals applied for yearly renewable term insurance and that there are approximately only 600,000 now continuing their insurance, it seems reasonably certain that after making allowance for claims awarded, that a large proportion of the remaining 3,500,000 who have allowed their insurance to lapse either do not know their rights and privileges, or if they do they are not aware of its real advantages; therefore, gentlemen, in order to pay the debt the Veterans' Bureau owes to the ex-service men and women it is important that we take steps to advise these individuals, to the fullest extent permissible under the law, of their rights and privileges and to explain the advantages to be obtained by reinstating and continuing their insurance.

This is one of the bureau's problems. Therefore it is my problem and equally your problem, and the bureau is open to suggestions as to better methods for distributing literature and the complete dissemination of information so that the most isolated case will receive proper attention.

FINANCE.

You will all be interested to know that action has been taken to accomplish prompter payments of bills submitted by the field offices to Washington; and steps are being taken looking toward the ultimate decentralization of compensation disability award payments. Decentralization of payment of training allowance pay has been authorized, but some delay will be experienced due to the fact that the manufacture of special equipment can not be made before September 15. It is probable, however, that the training allowance payments after October will be made through the district offices. With these facilities at your command, it is expected that further complaints about delayed payments will be practically eliminated.

LEGAL.

Though legal advisers have been designated in the various districts, the officers of the various districts should appreciate the fact that the general counsel is legal adviser for the whole bureau and not merely for the central office. Consequently legal problems on which there is any doubt in the minds of administrative officers of the various districts may be and should be submitted to the general counsel for opinion.

The general counsel and his associates give careful consideration to problems submitted to them, and their decisions are rendered in the belief that they are correct. Nevertheless, both the general counsel and his associates are men of open minds, and if it is honestly believed by the district managers that the opinions expressed by the general counsel are in any respect erroneous the general counsel is perfectly willing to give the matter reconsideration. Requests for reconsideration should not be made in a controversial spirit but wholly for the purpose of getting at the correct solution of the problem.

PERSONNEL.

For the benefit of members of this conference who were not present on the previous occasion or who, due to some oversight, may not have had the fact emphasized to them, I want to reiterate forcibly that in the selection of personnel and their treatment during the period of employment chiefs of divisions must always bear in mind that ex-service men and women invariably have the preference, other conditions being equal. Bear in mind, however, that this general rule should never operate to retain in the employ of the bureau an ex-service person who has manifested an incompetency that can not be overcome or has otherwise evidenced his unfitness. It is, however, intended to favor those men and women who by their military service have earned the right to this consideration. Political pressure is a matter which should not be permitted to affect the handling of personnel questions. Oftentimes Senators and Members of Congress plead the cause of undeserving employees without a real knowledge of all the circumstances, but when informed as to the true facts promptly withdraw their recommendations. You will also find that in many instances when you explain to the Members of Congress that the salary appropriations, as reflected to you in the Budget, do not admit the taking of the action which they request, their insistence will change to commendation.

MEDICAL.

One might estimate the task of the Veterans' Bureau as service to an ex-soldier who could qualify at one time or another for all the benefits provided by law multiplied by the number of applicants.

All benefits being based on physical disability means, as I have so often emphasized, that almost every act of the bureau is based on a medical opinion; our mistakes and our successes depend primarily on the quality of our medical service, and 95 per cent of the work of the bureau and its huge expenditures are undertaken on the advice of our doctors.

There are about 11,700 medical and dental men engaged in our work, 2,200 of them giving full time, 900 in hospitals, and 10,700 in district work, of which 8,260 are dental and designated examiners and attending specialists on fee basis. Each man has devoted from 6 to 30 years to his profession, and 97 per cent of them saw service in the World War. These men understand and are understood by the disabled ex-service men far better than any other class of men who come in contact with them.

The mistakes of the past were largely due to failure to appreciate the fundamental medical importance of our problems and also to a tendency to overrule or even ignore the doctor's honest opinions by assumption of an authority which the law never contemplated. Some of these acts were errors of the heart and may be forgiven, but enormous abuses in this respect, not only of the letter but of the spirit of the law, occurred in the beginning and occur now to some extent, for which there is no excuse and which, perhaps, cause irreparable harm to the character of thousands of young men by helping to destroy their self-reliance and their natural ambition to succeed through their own efforts.

In facing the future let us resolutely determine not to commit the errors of the past and to go forward in our improved programs guided by the light of our experience and the aid of all concerned in relief for our disabled veterans.

WHAT IS THE REAL BUSINESS OF A VETERANS' HOSPITAL?

It is to produce a certain output in health for each man plus a decision, whenever possible, on his employment objective and his need for training before he leaves the hospital.

This means a radical change in the organization of our hospitals, including programs for educating specialists for the medical and other personnel, all of which have been approved; standardization of all elements that make up our concept of a hospital, namely, human energy, brains, and harmony of action, toward which the American College of Surgeons has offered without cost all the facilities of that great organization. This will make possible the success of my plan for the dehospitalization of certain patients.

As I have already mentioned, I have been deeply impressed with the fact that the great majority of our chronic hospital cases are ambulant, that many of them would be happier and more content at home, and that by strengthening the vocational facilities of the hospitals in order that each man can have his need for training promptly determined and then by as many changes in trade and other tests as necessary have his employment objective settled, all while in the hospital and under careful medical supervision, that his problem can be solved. This will permit of a final decision in each case as to the best place outside of the hospital—perhaps the home—in which to continue treatment and training until rehabilitated, and without loss of compensation. This should be a great saving in time to the man and money to the Government. It may be found that some hospitals can be actually converted into special training schools.

RATING IN THE FIELD.

Another matter that has come to my attention in connection with rehabilitation is that the subdistrict office is usually also the best place in which to determine in one operation a man's employment and need of training. One good, sensible, and even average doctor in each suboffice—and many already have such—working in harmony with the training section, as they all now do in the field, can secure a far better picture of a man's needs, with the records and the man himself before them, and near his own home town, than the district office can ever hope to do. This suboffice opinion can be made legal simply by approval of the district manager. Another short cut to efficiency in this part of the work might be, after all the legal questions have been cleared, to route such cases direct from the claims section to the suboffices. This statement to the suboffice should also include an opinion as to percentage of compensability, if not a training case, whether hospitalization or outtreatment is needed, and whether the assistance of outside agencies is required.

Such procedure should prevent the too frequent conflicts aroused in a man's mind by he being told one thing by one doctor and another thing by another, and obviate much of the just criticism of our work in this respect. This, it seems to me, leads us to the real, the actual, decentralization in its truest sense.

DEHOSPITALIZATION.

I have in mind, gentlemen, a matter which I have discussed with the President and to which I have given long hours of study, and that is the dehospitalization of men who have proceeded to their homes and are receiving out-patient treatment and during their period of disability be not reduced in compensation. Between 65 and 70 per cent of our cases are ambulant. About 40 per cent of these ambulant cases could be discharged from hospitals and returned to their homes, provided, however, that the environment of their homes will be conducive to a recovery.

Too much institutionalism to my mind is harmful. The man loses courage, his morale is destroyed, and he entertains an unwholesome fear of going out into the world and attempting the great struggle. The man's courage must be strengthened, his mind occupied by helpful inspiration, and he must be stimulated to a determination to recover and return to active work. Hospitalization when unnecessary is an insidious and dangerous treatment, often robbing a man of that most valuable of human traits, self-reliance. It will deteriorate ideals and deaden ambition. A man should mingle with normal fellow beings and absorb from them strength and courage and an outlook on life which well and happy men possess. As soon as possible get the disabled out in the sunshine, near to nature or industry, as the individual disability may suggest as being most helpful, but in all events take them away from those surroundings which will inevitably sap real manhood. Industrial history has never been made by men who are content to accept anything approaching the domiciliary treatment to which many of our ex-service men are, I fear, rapidly becoming subjected.

REHABILITATION.

I have been much interested in our rehabilitation work, and I have been following closely the number of men who have gone from our schools to be welded again into the fabric of the industrial personnel of our Nation. I have watched their progress, and I have sought the best advice obtainable on an employment program.

You are to-day operating an employment unit within your district the purpose of which is to provide employment for all rehabilitated ex-service men and women. That this division of our work will be a success goes without comment. The great industrial centers of the country have responded most generously and are absorbing into their activities many men who have been trained under Government supervision.

No one knows better than you gentlemen the high proportion of ex-service men of foreign birth who speak our language feebly and are utterly innocent of any knowledge of English. It is my earnest desire that all ex-service people so handicapped be carefully instructed to correct this fundamental weakness, and I look to see the time fast approaching when men rehabilitated by the United States Government will be not only skillful workmen in their respective trades, or persons of real accomplishment in those vocations for which they have prepared, but will be creditable monuments to the instruction in English which is being given.

I conceive it to be an obligation of the Government that while in employment we should maintain an observation of the rehabilitated man's progress, not only to stimulate him in his chosen field or work, but to advise him in all matters which have to do with his health. Their passing from training back into industry must not mean that the Government has discharged its entire responsibility. It must be remembered that a man received training because of a disability and a vocational handicap incurred in the line of his military duty, and until a rehabilitated man has safely embarked upon his new endeavor with surroundings that are apparently conducive to his happiness and welfare, and not until then, has the Government discharged its debt.

CORRESPONDENCE.

One of the features of the work of the bureau which can and must be improved is correspondence. I do not like to cite to you elementary principles of a subject with which your forces should be thoroughly informed, but such numerous and repeated instances of gross failure to treat letters with care and thought are brought to me that I am constrained to discuss somewhat the treatment of mail. I recall one instance of a correspondence clerk who said in his letter to a prominent man, "Of course, to a man of your intelligence." I have on numerous occasions been severely criticized by the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives because of letters from bureau officials utterly ignoring specific questions asked and replying to a serious communication with a stereotyped phraseology or even with a form letter. Such gross mistreatment of mail may not have resulted from any vicious intention, but it was certainly an evidence of the grossest indifference or culpable ignorance.

I want you to take back to your people some thoughts that must be observed with a fidelity to both the letter and the spirit of instruction. Every person dictating a letter must always remember, first, that there is nothing personal in his work, that he is representing the United States Government, and the tone of his letter should be quiet and factive; never conveying the impression of impatience or contain the slightest possible ground for inference of discourtesy. The receipt of a caustic or quarrelsome letter under no circumstances justifies a reply in like tenor. There is much truth in the old saying that "A man who reads his letter when his feelings have grown cool would like to have a kicker come and kick him—as a rule." Do not give reasons or explanations unless they are requested. To do so gives rise to a purposeless correspondence in addition to reflecting on the intelligence of the addressee. Do not hesitate to say no if that is the answer, and having said no do not attempt to suggest an alternative aimed to circumvent your own no.

It is highly important that correspondence be kept moving. It is almost equally important that all letters and textual matter be prepared in a workmanlike manner. An irregular, ununiform, botched appearance generally indicates an indifferent consideration of the subject being handled and gives rise, with justification, to a question as to the accuracy of statements contained. It is my belief that some thought by this conference might well be spent on making suggestions that will obviate these weaknesses mentioned and be conducive of improvement in the quality of letters emanating from the various offices of the bureau.

BUDGET REPORTS.

I want to emphasize the importance of keeping within the Budget allotment for the administrative expenses of each district. This can be done only by budgeting the district as a whole—the district office and every suboffice and school within the district. Allotments must be made quarterly, with a current check of expenditures against allotments. After an allotment is received there should be set aside a surplus which will amount to a reserve to meet emergencies. The district manager who operates under a budget and can not allocate his funds in such a manner that they are elastic enough to cover any reasonable emergency without calling upon the central office for a fresh allotment is not on top of his job and fails to appreciate the advantages of a budget. I want a personal report from each of you as to savings which you will make on your allotment. I will look forward to these reports because I am a firm believer that efficiency and economy go hand in hand.

Of scarcely less importance is the matter of consolidated monthly progress reports. The purpose of a progress report, especially in an organization like the Veterans' Bureau, with offices scattered over the country, is to enable each executive, from bottom to top, to tell his superior what he accomplished, and, if there be arrearages, what steps are taken to wipe them out. If the district manager does his full duty in requiring reports from his subdistrict managers and subordinates, he knows exactly the size and distribution of the training, hospital, dispensary, compensation, and insurance load which he must administer within his district. The parts of his program which are showing progress are known, as well as who deserves the credit. Also he knows where the district's program is falling down and where to center his energies. The mild and indifferent manner in which certain executives of this bureau in the past countenanced wrong conditions can be stopped by intelligent use of progress reports and going after every wrong condition as soon as it is brought to light. More results and less excuses are demanded from every district manager, and he in turn must demand no less from each subdistrict manager and executive.

There has been serious complaint about the work involved in submitting reports of progress to the central office. While suggestions as to the improvement of that form of report are always welcome and nonessentials must be cut out, the essential facts must be reported. No effort has ever been made to ask for all the important facts regarding the operation of a district, but good administration demands that the director know and follow the trend, progress, and success of the fundamental duties for which he is made responsible by act of Congress.

The fact that this bureau will disburse more money this year and next year than any other department of the Government means that it receives more careful scrutiny by the appropriating committees of Congress and on the floor of both Houses than any other department.

The administration is demanding efficiency and economy in government. One-fifth of the total outlay of the Government, exclusive of that of the public debt, will be made through this bureau next year. Responsibility, therefore, for one-fifth of the cost of government, its efficiency or inefficiency in the administration of funds, rests in the hands of you who are attending this conference. I charge you now with knowing and measuring the services rendered from day to day and month to month and seeing to it that each dollar counts.

As I stated above, I can keep in personal touch with essential facts only. Much information which the district managers must have, vital to the bureau's success, can not reach the director's office. The periodic survey of the district and subdistricts to make sure that there is full use of educational facilities afforded by schools and factories in the community and those which the bureau provides, full utilization of Government hospitals in the district which have empty beds available and maintained at a high overhead cost, contracts with the best private hospitals, prompt and satisfactory employment of rehabilitated trainees, complete cooperation with the civic, social, and veterans' organizations of each community, all interested in the welfare of ex-service men, illustrate my point.

It is safe to say that in a project so large as ours the success or failure of each district depends upon the ability of its executive to keep before himself the fundamental facts as a basis for decision and action.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion I want this conference to mean much to you all and I want each of you to write me personally, setting forth your impression of the conference and particularly as to the discussions which have been the most interesting to you. I want you to have ever in mind that you are representing your Government in the greatest undertaking of its kind which history has known. Be careful in your deliberations, be strong in your well-considered and well-founded convictions, be honest with your fellow man, and above all do not turn a disabled man or woman from your door until his story has been heard and sympathetically and intelligently treated.

Do not discharge your duties in a perfunctory manner nor cease your day's labor without the inner conviction that you have started some man or men on the road to contentment, success, or happiness, and do not ease up on your endeavors to bring back the great opportunity to those whose wounds and ills resulted from the service given that our Nation might live on forever.

As to future legislation for the disabled ex-service men I might say that on April 6, 1922, I introduced H. R. 11195, to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

Some of the principal objects sought to be accomplished by the bill are as follows:

1. The enactment into law of what is known as Order 57, which permits the Veterans' Bureau to rate men who have been, are, or shall be inmates of hospitals or asylums during a continuous period of one year or more as totally and permanently disabled.

2. That in no case shall the compensation of a disabled man be reduced unless a physical examination shall have been made subsequent to his last rating, nor until he shall have been given at least three months' notice of the proposed reduction.

3. That psychosis, neurosis, psychoneurosis, active tuberculosis, or chronic empyema, developing within three years after separation from the service. shall be considered to have been acquired while in the service. (The present law limits the period to two years.)

4. That in the event of death before or after discharge or resignation from the service the Veterans' Bureau shall pay not more than $200 toward the funeral expenses and shall provide a flag to cost $5 to drape the coffin of the deceased, the flag to become the property of the next of kin.

5. That the Veterans' Bureau shall furnish each patient on discharge from a hospital with a statement of medical findings as to his condition.

6. The bill also provides more liberal terms than the present law for the reinstatement of lapsed insurance policies and for the investment by the Veterans' Bureau of insurance premiums in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in bonds of the Federal farm loan bank.

Hearings on this measure will probably be held during the regular session commencing on the first Monday in December. I am sure that it is the purpose of Congress to do everything possible for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men. I believe that I can state without fear of successful contradiction that the United States Government has handled thus far the question of the disabled ex-service men in a broad, comprehensive and humanitarian way. No other Government engaged in the World War has equaled the United States, during the war or since, in the enactment of legislation for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men and their dependents. But this does not mean that they have done their full duty. Europe is on the verge of bankruptcy. The credit of our Nation is practically unimpaired.

Money alone can not compensate them for the sacrifices they made, the hardships they endured, and the dangers they encountered. Money can not restore an arm, an eye, or a leg; but we can do our best to make the lives of these men as comfortable and happy as possible.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on shipping matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution of the Newport News Chamber of Commerce indorsing Navy day, and advocating the maintenance of the Navy to full strength under the naval treaty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to burden the RECORD with copies of resolutions, and therefore I feel constrained to object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the deficiencies existing under present appropriations at the National Military Home and complaints of the conditions at the home.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on deficiencies at the National Home. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on conditions in Europe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted by the House I here insert an interview given by me and printed in the Washington Post on Friday, September 15, 1922. It is as follows:

Representative JOHN Q. TILSON, of the New Haven (Conn.) district, who recently returned from a trip of observation and study in Belgium, France, Germany, and Austria, yesterday described the progress being made in rehabilitating the devastated portions of France and Belgium.

"Belgium," he said, "is making more rapid progress in this direction than France. True, the problem is much greater in France than in Belgium, taking into account the relative size and population of the two countries. Belgium was quickly overwhelmed by the Germans in 1914. The bulk of her man power was left behind and remained there during the war. Though a very brave it was a comparatively small Belgian force that held the remaining fragment of their country.

SPIRIT OF WAITING IN FRANCE.

"The men of France, on the other hand, faced the enemy for more than four years, and a staggering number of them were killed while defending their country against invasion. Then, too, it must be remembered the war was fought largely on French soil, so that while Belgium suffered in spots France suffered much more severely. A very great number of buildings in Belgium have been rebuilt, while in France the eyes grow weary viewing the carefully piled heaps of stone or other material, once a habitation, but now marking only the spot where it is hoped a house will again arise.

"A spirit of waiting seems to hover over much of the country, and that which is awaited, it was said, are the reparations which, under the treaty, Germany is called upon to pay.

CHAOTIC CONDITIONS IN AUSTRIA.

"In Austria," continued Mr. TILSON, "the condition of the currency would seem to be enough to make the situation hopeless. The artisans, and all the workers for that matter, receive pay in the currency of the country, of such uncertain value that there is little incentive to work, beyond obtaining the bare necessities of life.

"There can be no saving, which is so essential for the upbuilding of business, because the depreciation of the kronen overnight may sweep away, and in countless instances has done so, the savings of years. The tillers of the soil are far better off. The earth, if properly cultivated, produces regardless of industrial or financial disturbance. The peasants raise their food and eat it.

"True, they do not receive as much for their surplus as they should, but there is no danger of their going hungry. Unfortunately for Austria, by the edict of the Versailles conference, the food producing area of Austria is all too small.

GERMANY BEST OF ALL.

"While still in great uncertainty as to what is to be the outcome of her governmental financial situation, Germany in a sense is the best off of any of the countries I visited. The man power is there, the fertile soil is there, the facilities for industry are there, the latter having been increased rather than diminished by the war.

"Moreover, the people have gone to work, so that the soil yields its abundant increase and mechanical industry its manufactured products. The artisan receives a wage grotesquely small when compared with what the same class of workers receive in the United States, but when he turns his wages into a living it secures for him far more than the money exchange value would indicate.

"The tiller of the soil eats and has to spare, and although he receives a small price for his surplus, he at least is something ahead. The lack of incentive to save is a disturbing factor. It is futile to save marks, for their value to-day may largely disappear to-morrow.

REGARD AMERICA AS FRIEND.

"The feeling of the German people toward America and Americans is gratifying and testifies to the high character of the service our representatives there have rendered and are now rendering. It is apparent the German people have reached the conclusion that America is, after all, about the best friend they have left. At any rate, they see that we have no ax to grind, desire no European territory, and are sincerely in earnest in our desire for real and lasting peace.

"The choice of our first ambassador to Germany since the war could not be excelled in all the country. Ambassador Houghton is preeminently the right man in the right place at the right time.

VALUE OF UNITED STATES TROOPS.

"Another tremendous influence for good in bringing order out of the postwar chaos and reestablishing proper relations with Germany is our military representation, which since the war has been and now is occupying the key position of the Rhineland at Coblenz. Gen. Henry T. Allen, now commanding the small American force on the Rhine, is one of the most efficient and useful diplomats in all Europe to-day. The number of officers and men under him is small, but their influence is great—out of all proportion to their numbers.

"They are in no real sense a military force, on account of their numbers, but they hold the balance of power in a very real sense and use it for the best interest of world peace.

DOING IMPORTANT WORK.

"In connection with the interallied Rhineland high commission, representing France, Great Britain, and Belgium, they are the real deciding and governing force of the entire occupied area. And the German population fully trust the American representatives there, so that American influence is in most instances decisive.

"I have said this about our military representation still on the Rhine because I had occasion to become thoroughly acquainted with their work, and because, too, few people in our own country understand the nature or the importance of the work they are doing there."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

690. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy transmitting request that in the provision for an appropriation of $5,000,000 under the head of "Scrapping of naval vessels" in the third deficiency act, fiscal year 1922, "the word 'subcontractors' shall be construed to include persons furnishing materials under direct contract with the Navy Department for use in vessels under construction in Navy Yards" (H. Doc. No. 391), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committees on Appropriations and Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LEATHERWOOD: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 5639. A bill for the relief of Walter Runke; with amendments (Rept. No. 1244). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 12717) increasing the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Yonkers, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 12718) to further regulate Interstate Commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GORMAN: A bill (H. R. 12719) providing for an appropriation for eradication of mosquitoes in the Des Plaines River Valley in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12720) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same in the military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 381) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONDON: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 69) calling upon the President to offer to mediate in the Near East conflict; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KINDRED: A resolution (H. Res. 434) providing that the President be requested to express to the Government of Turkey the moral protest of the United States against the outrages on Armenians, Jews, and Christian peoples; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WINSLOW: A resolution (H. Res. 435) to pay expenses of Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in holding certain hearings in the city of Chicago; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, a resolution (H. Res. 436) to authorize the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, to hold hearings in the city of Chicago and during any recess of Congress; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANSORGE: A bill (H. R. 12721) for the relief of Charles R. Tice; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HOCH: A bill (H. R. 12722) granting an increase of pension to Anna C. Walquist; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12723) granting a pension to Lewis Maple; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 12724) granting a pension to Julia Metzger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS: A bill (H. R. 12725) granting an increase of pension to Martin V. Stanton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 12726) for the relief of the Union Oil Co. of California; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PORTER: A bill (H. R. 12727) granting an increase of pension to Peter Guibert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 12728) granting a pension to William E. Gilreath; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WYANT: A bill (H. R. 12729) granting a pension to Sarah Ashbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6370. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Post Office Clerks' Association of Dayton, Ohio, favoring the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 200 and House Joint Resolution 327, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will prohibit the employment of young children; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6371. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Broadway Association, New York City, favoring additional postal facilities in New York; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

6372. By Mr. KINDRED: Petition of the Broadway Association, New York City, favoring additional postal facilities in New York City; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

6373. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Central Trades & Labor Council, New York City, N. Y., relative to the injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty against the striking railroad shopmen; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6374. By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska: Petition of sundry citizens of Davenport, Nebr., urging the establishment of a minimum price on wheat; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6375. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring modification of the Volstead Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6376. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Dr. S. H. Rantz, Charles Schaeppi, and L. J. Anderson, of Placerville, Calif., relative to the transportation situation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6377. Also, resolution adopted by Santa Clara Division (Calif.) Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, urging appropriation to prevent the introduction of pests that now threaten the fruit industry of California; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6378. By Mr. SIEGEL: Petition of Broadway Association, of New York, protesting against the leasing of any building for the Post Office Department in New York City, but asking that the Government acquire its own buildings; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 20, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, all our blessings come from Thee, and the opportunities of service are so abundant. We thank Thee for life and the privilege of doing Thy will. Accept of us this morning. May the day be fraught with good, not only here but throughout the world, and may great blessings be had by the peoples of the earth. We ask through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday, September 16, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	McKellar	Robinson
Ball	Fletcher	McLean	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gerry	McNary	Shields
Bursum	Glass	Moses	Shortridge
Calder	Hale	Myers	Smith
Cameron	Harreld	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	New	Stanfield
Colt	Heflin	Newberry	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Norbeck	Townsend
Curtis	Keyes	Oddie	Trammell
Dial	King	Owen	Underwood
Dillingham	La Follette	Pepper	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lodge	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	McCormick	Rawson	Warren
Ernst	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is absent by reason of serious illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment Senate bills of the following titles:

S. 3540. An act fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions; and

S. 3620. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at or near Tilton, Lawrence County, Miss.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9275) for the relief of Frances Kelly.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the Senate to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches, agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DALE, Mr. KING, and Mr. WINGO were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER (for Mr. LADD) presented 36 petitions of sundry citizens in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXTERMINATION OF BEAN BEETLES.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exterminate bean beetles in the State of New Mexico, and authorizing expenditures therefor, reported it with amendments.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 19, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 4011) granting an increase of pension to Belle A. Elder (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4012) to control the possession, sale, and use of pistols and revolvers in the District of Columbia, to provide penalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4013) to regulate the promotion of certain officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4014) to amend section 6 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and to further amend the War Risk Insurance Act," approved August 9, 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 4015) providing one German cannon or fieldpiece for the borough of Keansburg, N. J.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. McLEAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 353), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Joseph S. McCoy the sum of $2,000 for extra services as expert actuary and statistician rendered to the Senate Committee on Finance during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

AMENDMENT OF FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL, 1923.

Mr. CUMMINS (Mr. STERLING in the chair) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $170,100 for salaries, per diem in lieu of subsistence, transportation, and allowances of 35 additional inspectors whose employment is authorized for nine months at the rate of $3,000 per annum each, to carry out the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," as amended, intended to be proposed by him to House bill No. 12704, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1923, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RAVAGES OF THE BOLL WEEVIL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to have printed in the RECORD certain letters which I hold in my hand. I do not desire to make a speech, but merely to ask that a letter from Mrs. F. C. Fox, of Karnack, Tex., upon the general subject of the boll weevil and her experiences as a planter in that connection, may be printed in the RECORD; also a letter from Dr. W. H. Harrison, of Tutwiler, Miss., upon the same subject, in connection with some remarks which I made a few days ago.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. F. H. Cooper, of Jacksonville, Fla., upon the boll weevil question in connection with the use of calcium arsenate as a poison. Also a letter from Mr. C. Becvar, of Corpus Christi, Tex., upon the same subject, and a letter from Mr. William Hill, of Alexandria, La., addressed to me and a copy of a letter which he incloses written by him to the Secretary of Agriculture. In this connection I wish to say that I am not vouching for the assertions in the letter which he writes to the Secretary of Agriculture, nor for the scientific accuracy of his conclusions; but I am so thoroughly convinced that the boll weevil question is not only national but international in its scope and concerns the entire world that I want every possible germ of solution suggested by anybody to go into the RECORD. So I ask that the letters to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the communications referred to will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The communications referred to are as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I just read the inclosed clipping. Please say to these paper farmers in Washington for me that the cessation of cotton raising for any period of time will have no effect on the boll weevil; he is here and here to stay, cotton or no cotton. Of course, cotton is his choice home, but he inhabits all kinds of plants when cotton is not at hand. He also pesters all kinds of nuts and fruits, and in the spring you will find the weeds, dead stalks, etc., have afforded him a winter home ideal; but he does not only make his winter home in these, he is in every place that will house him properly. We can use Paris green and kill him. Calcium arsenate will also, so the Government agents say; but cotton is so cheap these remedies are prohibitive. I paid 14 cents per pound for the latter; but it must be kept constantly on the plant, and it requires much labor to do this. We get nothing for our labor when we have so much expense to keep the insects off. I thought I would make 50 bales of cotton at least the 1st of August; by the 15th I thought if I made 25 I would be doing well. We had the weevil then. Next came the worms, and with them the little sprinkles and hot sun, which simply cooked it. All things shed not only their fruit but leaves. My fig trees are leafless, and here again Mr. Weevil showed up; he tested my figs and they rotted and fell. I tell you he is here to stay. Science must find a cheap remedy. We have to pay $8 for a handgun to use calcium arsenate with and 14 cents per pound, three or four pounds to the acre. This spring I had to use it after each rain, no matter if they came daily. Now, count the labor at 75 cents or $1 per day, and then add your other expenses to cotton raising and sell your cotton at 19 and 19½ cents. It cost 30 and 35 cents per 100 pounds to gin; then bagging and ties and hauling, etc. Now, count your profit. And the gun must be bought each season; they only last one, so the maker says. I have only used it this spring.

You do not remember me, but I do you, having met you at two or three United Daughters of the Confederacy gatherings in Washington. I farm grandfather's old plantations and raise cotton, I am sorry to say. I have planted a pecan orchard, which is bearing some, and I hope to quit cotton; but here again is the weevil pest. He bores into the young nuts and they, like cotton squares, fall to the ground.

Very respectfully,

MRS. F. C. FOX,
Route No. 1, Karnack, Tex.

TUTWILER, MISS., September 17, 1922.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS.

DEAR SIR: I recently made a trip from here to Eldorado, Ark. Anyone with one gram of common sense who will make this trip will learn that the so-called "boll-weevil experts" have not only fallen down, but they have fallen down with a "dull thud," and they have pulled down many a poor farmer who would have been far better off if there had never been any Government experts. There are thousands of acres of fine land where the cotton is higher than a "man on a mule," where the fields are still white with poison, that will not pay to put a sack in the field.

The time and efforts taken to put out the poison would have resulted in far more benefit had it been used in cultivation and a simple machine to catch the weevil as the cultivation was done.

You are right, as you usually are, but you are wrong in quitting the United States Senate.

Respectfully,

DR. W. H. HARRISON.

TOCOMO CHEMICAL CO.,
Jacksonville, Fla., September 16, 1922.

Hon. SENATOR.

DEAR SIR: Having just read in our daily paper of your attitude regarding boll-weevil condition, in all truth I certainly believe you are right.

Four years ago I began experimenting on boll weevils, as I found that calcium arsenate was not entirely satisfactory, and in the last two years I have brought out a cheap and reliable remedy that positively guarantees the cotton crop to the planters. Upon advice of several cotton growers who have tried out this poison I have tried to get Government officials to try it, but I can not get any of them to give this remedy a try out. The very Government official who has charge of this cotton situation will not allow it to be brought out, as to-day they are behind a great, gigantic trust of calcium arsenate and are even spending large sums of money in special advertising the sale of that particular poison. Their jurisdiction now reaches to even the dusting machines, as it does not pay to make or try to sell such machines unless you have made arrangements for its approval by this faction, and when you have gained such your machine will be tested with them and you get free advertising. This board claims that this is done to protect the farmers from fraud, but it also prohibits anyone from getting a square deal or treatment.

Let me illustrate: If you place in a daily paper a small advertisement stating facts about your poison, in a few days out will come a great big writeup of calcium arsenate poison, sometimes whole pages being used on such big papers as the Atlanta Constitution or Atlanta Journal. Then again, I have found that in several places where I have demonstrated that such big concerns as the American Cotton Seed Oil Co. will go into that same section and furnish everything free, giving big barbecues, and make it so that no one can buck up against them.

Last year, November 2, I was referred to Senator DIAL, of South Carolina, who sent my letters to Clemson College, and I received a letter from them stating they were not interested, as they had a policy of their own and no money to try it out. Yet I had offered it free for 100 acres against 100 of their own treatment; yet this summer they had thousands of large posters printed and men sent out all over the State of South Carolina putting them up in all railroad stations and all public places under the heading of a warning to cotton planters, "Don't use anything but calcium arsenate," and that others are frauds; also, that Clemson College will be only too glad to try any remedy for the planters' benefit; yet they will not give this remedy a try out.

The cost of this poison is 15 cents per acre each treatment, against 8 pounds of calcium arsenate costing at 11 cents per pound, 88 cents per treatment. Again, calcium arsenate should be put on only when the dew is heavy enough, which means night work, and at that time all blooms are closed, making it impossible to reach such weevils that are inside. My remedy is put on in the daytime, and is very simple and positively effective.

I am willing to give this remedy to the planters free, and with some help such as Congress is giving to cotton troubles a whole State at a time could be worked. Should you know of anyone that would try this remedy next year in your State, I will be only too glad to cooperate with you in any way to prove the merits of this poison.

This I will state, that all over the country in the South are boll weevils, and they are getting worse. This is evidence to convince anyone that something is wrong or that the money spent for such work that has been done is not a creditable showing and should be stopped.

I hope to have the pleasure of cooperating with you in any way in this great work.

Yours very truly, F. H. COOPER.

Just before mailing I received this page of calcium-arsenate work that was carried on this year, it is this style of writeup that has everybody guessing who pays for it.

I can cite you many farmers that are entirely disgusted with what is going on, yet can not help the situation.

This year alone over $100,000 has been spent in this paper talk, so that you almost believe the work is true.

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX., September 16, 1922.

Senator WILLIAMS, of Mississippi.

HONORABLE SIR: Just read your article and assertions on the boll-weevil situation. I want you to read this, and if you are interested I will place before you my entire correspondence regarding a systematic and most successful system of application of calcium arsenate, results as I placed them before Professor Coad and Doctor Howard, of the Department of Entomology. I placed this information before this department in April, 1922, but it seems they are not in favor of exterminating the boll weevil. In my mind it is either gross incompetence or willful negligence on their part. It looks like a nigger in the bush to me. Professor Coad and Doctor Howard are both mistaken in their contentions, which I can prove by their own correspondence and works. Finally I took it up with the Texas State agricultural department and received better treatment, but too late for the 1922 crop.

Professor Coad is four years behind by his own correspondence, and admitted so by himself. I can not see why this state of affairs should exist—why the department does not clutch at every bit of results that are placed before it. I certainly wish I could write you a long letter and place the entire thing before you. The South needs a man in this matter, and you surely hit the nail on the head when you came out flat-footed and told the truth. There is no room for chair warmers, and that's just what you have in that department. I don't say that they lack technical knowledge, but I know that they lack practical knowledge.

I do not care to have this placed before the Department of Entomology again, as I am through with them; but I want some one that will through some means place this information before the poor cotton raiser, the poor fellow that has cotton near the brush and can not succeed through improper and misleading information as given out by above parties. This may sound rather strong to you, but I can prove it by their own correspondence.

I shall be glad to give you all information as to mode of application and results, as I have made these experiments and observations in person. I will further say that I represent no manufacturing company, nor have I any strings tied to me in this matter. I was just a plain, far-seeing, and observing farmer, and know what I am writing about.

Yours truly, C. BECVAR,
Box 921, Corpus Christi, Tex.

My 1920 results on 14 acres, on which I experimented:

Plot No. 1 (18 light treatments): One-fourth acre; 960 pounds cotton in the seed; planted the 24th of February, 1920; still blooming December 1.

Plot No. 2 (15 treatments): Four acres; poor one-half stand; 1½ bales per acre; exact.

Plot No. 3: Four acres; planted March 1, 1922; 4 bales; exact; 6,000 pounds.

Plot No. 4 (5 treatments): Two and three-fourths acres; not treated until September 15, 1920; early cotton, but badly infested with both weevils and worms; treated September 20, 23, 26, October 1 and 4; one-half bale to acre; treated after heavy rain on September 12–13, 1920.

Plot No. 5 (12 treatments): Two acres; early cotton; sandy land; cotton 1 foot tall; 1 bale per acre.

It is possible for a cotton raiser, under ordinary circumstances, to make a bale per acre, weevil or no weevil.

C. H. BECVAR.

These experiments took place next to 45 acres of early cotton, field 6 feet away, on which party made 3 bales on 45 acres.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., September 16, 1922.

To the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senator from Mississippi, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: The attached newspaper clipping is my excuse for addressing this letter to you and for inclosing a letter written to the Secretary of Agriculture.

This latter is self-explanatory, except extreme verbosity, which I deemed necessary for the reason that the Secretary is a new man in the position and could not have learned much of this question during his short occupancy.

I sincerely hope that you will find the time and the inclination to wade through the document.

You will find the object of the letter to the Secretary is pleading for a little experiment which I feel sure would settle a controversy between many experienced farmers and so-called Government experts, who, as you have correctly stated in the clipping attached, the scientists "have fallen down" in fighting the weevil.

Of course, no cotton planting and not allowing volunteer plants to grow for one year would settle the question until new weevils are imported, but, as you say, this plan is impractical; therefore, since nothing can be done for another year, it certainly can do no harm, and may actually be of untold benefit, to have the farmers try a later date for planting. This would make the experiment that I suggested unnecessary, and I do not think it would require anything except the insistence of the Agricultural Department—since its other measures had failed—to give it a trial.

The whole theory is based on the life of the weevil after emerging from winter quarters. Nature has provided a means of natural reproduction for the pest, but if this means is disturbed by abnormal conditions it may die without leaving progeny.

All experiments have proven beyond question that the weevil can not reproduce except by depositing its egg in the bud of the cotton square, where the larvæ feeds until it becomes a new weevil. On this subject I particularly call your attention to the table in the inclosed letter, showing the life of the weevil after coming out of hibernation. It shows cotton producing squares in May will be subject to the ravages of the insect, but if no squares are produced until about June 10 so nearly all the old weevils would die without leaving progeny as to make the balance negligible in effect.

Cotton planted about May 1 will not produce squares large enough to support the larvæ before June 10.

I think I am safe in saying that the most intelligent element of planters are in favor of the later date of planting but take the position that it must be universal. The less intelligent are blindly following the "experts" who have proven their ruin.

We have had this season in this section, due to weather conditions, an abnormally late season, only a few crops producing squares in May, and we had less infestation than for many years—absolutely proving my theory.

Pressure on the Agricultural Department for a trial, I firmly believe, would settle the question.

With sincere respect, I am, truly yours, WM. HILL.

JULY 29, 1922.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This letter, while addressed to you under personal cover, is really in the nature of an appeal. It is so addressed, personally, that you may, after reading the first few lines, take the time, notwithstanding your multitudinous duties, to read it carefully, for I assure you that, while I have not a cent of personal interest in the subject, I am convinced your careful consideration will result in supreme benefit to the cotton-producing section of the country.

Many years before you became Secretary these sections became infested with the boll weevil, which has destroyed during the past 18 years more than 20,000,000 bales of cotton, worth not less than $1,700,000,000.

The Government placed large sums of money at the disposal of "experts" for the purpose of finding a way to eradicate the pest, but this has resulted in practically no benefit. After a series of experiments it was announced that the weevil hibernated during the winter months and emerged in the later winter and spring by degrees, extending over a period of two months or more, and that a large majority of those emerging did not live until cotton was sufficiently advanced for reproduction. They also discovered the weevil could not reproduce except by depositing its egg in the heart of the bud which precedes the bloom and which is called a square. This convinced them that if these squares, which had been impregnated by the hibernated weevil, could be destroyed, it would prevent succeeding broods of new weevils.

When there are young squares early in the season and are punctured by the weevil, they flare open and fall off, and this is why the advice was given to pick them up. This would have been a perfectly efficient method if the punctured squares could have been found, but the wind blows many to a distance, where they are hidden in the grass and, as the plants get stronger and the squares larger only a part of them would fall off, but remain on the parent plant and produce weevils without any sign of being diseased. Therefore the farmers who tried this method abandoned it as practically useless.

The next advice given by the "experts," led by "Doctor" (?) W. D. Hunter and "Doctor" (?) L. D. Howard, the former boss field "expert" and the latter at the head of the Bureau of Entomology, was, "Plant early to get ahead of the weevil." This advice has cost the South hundreds of millions, because a certain large class of farmers followed, and still follow, this advice, while a large class of the most intelligent have no confidence in it, still they say, "I can not afford to defer planting if my neighbor across a fence grows weevils to infest me."

The idea of the advice was an endeavor to make the crop before succeeding newly hatched broods could multiply sufficiently to destroy it. This method was partially successful in saving the small bottom crop, but was fatal to the great middle and top crops, which normally produce 75 per cent of the total crop, for it is estimated that a single pair of weevils, undisturbed during a cotton season in the process of reproduction, will ultimately bring a brood of 12,500,000. Thus it is obvious that the real damage is done in the latter stage of the growth, and must clearly show to a reasonable thinker the fallacy of "Plant early to get ahead of the weevil."

The next and last is poisoning with calcium arsenate. This, no doubt, would be the best method proposed by the "experts" if it could be universally and intelligently used, but it should be borne in mind that a large majority of the crop is grown in the uplands, and a majority of that by small farmers. The method is very expensive and never will come into general use on this account. It has been tried in this section in a small way and abandoned as inefficient.

So much for the preventive measures of the Government "experts." There are others who for many years have contended that if the planting season be delayed from an early date to a medium one, the hibernated weevil would die without progeny. In order to reenforce this opinion, I desire to refer you to the results of an experiment made to establish the life tenure of the weevil after leaving winter quarters. For this purpose I make use of the experiment made in 1909 by the Louisiana State Crop Post Commission under the auspices of Prof. Wilmon Newell. This was the most extensive and intelligent experiment ever made and it confirmed previous experiments made by the Government. The figures used are drawn from memory, but they are so nearly correct that any differences between them and the actual are negligible.

Suffice to say Mr. Newell provided two or more large screened-in hibernating places. These were supplied with different things, so as to make hibernating as natural therein as on the outside. They were, I think, 12 by 16 feet. In these cages, during September, October, and November, he placed weevils which he had gathered from the fields—some 3,000 to the cage, I think—where they went into natural hibernation. He also prepared a large number of small cages—about 2 feet square, I believe—in which to place the weevils after they came from winter quarters. Some of these cages were provided with no food except volunteer vegetation, while the others had growing cotton in them by April 18.

These were provided in order to keep an accurate record of the time of emergence, lifetime thereafter, as well as to show whether the cotton plant was necessary as food for subsistence. The hibernated weevils emerged as follows:

Nine per cent in February and March. These lived to 65 days.
Thirty-three per cent in April. These lived to 50 days.
Fifty-three per cent in May. These lived to 30 days.
Five per cent in June. These lived to 7 days.
Average of 100 per cent emerging 10.85 days.

The 100 per cent which emerged from winter quarters lived on an average of about 10.85 days. Those with cotton to feed on about two points less, and those without it about two points more, showing there was practically no difference; but the experiment indubitably proved that those weevils emerging late in the season have but a short time to live. Besides, some personal experiments which were carefully made the next year corroborated it beyond doubt.

Now, from the above, let us see the effects of early and medium planting:

Normal seasons in this latitude, cotton planted in the latter days of March and early April will by the 15th of May produce squares abundantly. Under some conditions cotton planted on May 1, an early medium date, will not produce squares sufficiently large to sustain the young weevil before June 10. Obviously, squares commencing May 15 afford hatching places for a large part of the 53 per cent emerging in May, while if no squares come until June 10 all of them and a large part of the June contingent will die without leaving progeny.

Mr. Newell's experiment showed that about 9 or 10 per cent of those put in hibernating cages emerged, but this was a larger per cent than former experiments showed, therefore if the whole 5 per cent emerging in June had lived to depredate the effect on the crop would have been negligible, because they could not have produced a sufficient brood to materially injure the crop before September 10 or 20, and by September 1 the crop is practically matured in this section.

Now, I wish to call your particular attention to the experiments made under "Doctor" Hunter's direction to prove that "late planting would be ruinous."

In Texas and Louisiana two experiments were made by planting from June 7 to 10 in 1907, I think. These patches were planted (see Farmers' Bulletin 1262, pp. 25 and 26) from 9 to 15 miles from other growing cotton. In a correspondence through the press with "Doctor" Hunter I charged that these very late planted patches were destroyed by migrating weevils. In these early days migration commenced about August 1, and was due to their having devastated the fields where they had multiplied from the hibernating weevils. These were supposed to travel 40 miles a season. Now, it is known that they will move 160 miles or until they have found new fields. Now, cotton planted as late as was these experimental patches would just be in a high stage of squaring time by August 1 to 10. When the charge was made that these patches were destroyed by migrating weevils "Doctor" Hunter's preposterous reply was that they were destroyed by old hibernating weevils. Just to show how preposterous this claim was I desire to mention that from all the experiments made there has never been known but one single weevil to live that long. Hence "Doctor" Hunter's statement remains very much in the nature of the proverbial "dilemma with two horns on which to hang." These I name verdant ignorance or stupid duplicity, and the learned "Doctor" may hang on the one which suits better his own ideas.

I desire to call your attention to another glaring inconsistency: On pages 19 and 20 of Farmers' Bulletin No. 1262, you will find where these "experts," under the head of "Sprout and volunteer cotton," urged that these plants be destroyed, and used this language: "The weevils seek out these large plants in the early spring and produce progeny much earlier than they otherwise could, and these progeny infest the cotton planted at an abnormally early date." Of course they do; and the progeny from the "early planted cotton," urged by the experts, will have just the same effect, and that is the cause of a ruinous effect.

The lamented Dr. S. A. Knapp, former head of the Bureau of Plant Industry in 1910, had an acquaintance here, Mr. J. W. Vogler, who was, and is, an ardent supporter of the medium planting theory. In a letter to Mr. Vogler, Doctor Knapp said: "I have not made up my mind fully on this subject; but I will be in Louisiana soon and will discuss it with you."

When the doctor came to Louisiana he met "Doctor" E. W. D. Hunter from Texas, who rather convinced the doctor in favor of early planting which, as I shall show, was only temporary. When he came to Alexandria he declined to discuss the matter at all, but in a public address in Atlanta, Ga., in November of that year (the last speech he ever delivered, I believe), he said in part: "If the farmers will first prepare their land fully and wait for the ground to get warm, thus delaying planting a little later, many of the hibernating weevils would die, and without breeding, and the weevil question would be solved."

I have been told, but can not vouch for the accuracy of the statement, that the above speech was embodied in a farmers' bulletin, but was suppressed before many copies were circulated. Doctor Knapp unfortunately passed away a month or two after making this address.

Now, Mr. Secretary, if you have read the foregoing I beg to assure you that all of it has been written for the sole purpose of showing the necessity of an experiment which will settle this controversy for all time, and it seems to me that in justice to the cotton planter it should be made.

The experiment I suggest to you now I suggested to Doctor Howard, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, five or six years ago. A long correspondence ensued; the letters from both I intended to publish in leaflet form for public distribution, but, unfortunately, in moving my office they were lost. The publication would have been interesting, as the "doctor" made some glaring misstatements—unconsciously, of course—one of which I called to his attention with the actual proof, and in reply he acknowledged his error and said that the correspondence was taking up too much of his time and declined to continue it.

The experiment is as follows: In late September or early October have measured off a plot of ground, not less than an acre, in the heart of a cotton field, which is thoroughly infested with weevil. Screen this ground in with wire high enough to admit cultivation with a horse. Before the screen is placed, have a lot of logs with loose bark, Spanish moss, cornstalks, etc., placed all around the area close up to the screen so as to cover as little ground as possible. In the winter have this ground thoroughly prepared for planting and then run a screen partition through the center, made weevil proof. If located in this latitude, plant one half about March 25 to April 1 and the other half from May 5 to 10—this latter date is amply early to make a full crop. By the first dates, March 25 to April 1, usually is planted about one-third of the crop here, to "get ahead of the weevil." If the experiment is made in the extreme South the dates could be advanced 10 days, or in the northern belt belated 10 days.

In this experiment the native weevils would hibernate in naturally prepared hibernating quarters. They would emerge normally and, therefore, breed normally.

I feel certain the result would show that the early planted would be severely, if not totally, destroyed. I do not believe the late planted would be damaged materially, if at all. Such an experiment would probably cost six to seven thousand dollars. If it proves my theory it will save the cotton farmers hundreds of millions, for all you would have to do would be to explain the test to the public and insist that planting time be delayed about 40 days from early planting dates.

I frankly state to you that if this is submitted to Dr. L. D. Howard or Dr. W. D. Hunter they will advise against it. They are "sot" in their ways, and I doubt if the one alleged to have been born of immaculate conception could change them.

However, I feel sure that a careful study of the data contained herein will convince you that the experiment is worth a trial.

I regret to have inflicted upon you this long document, but I again appeal for its consideration, and I refer you to both of our Senators and the Representative from this district, who know me personally.

I beg to remain, sir, very respectfully yours,

———— ————.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report back favorably House Concurrent Resolution 67, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. MOSES. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 67), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to strike out "coconuts," appearing in paragraph 1626 of the bill, as agreed to in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to know whether the committee is going to permit any amendments to be made to the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McCUMBER. The chairman of the committee, of course, would vote against any amendment and would permit none to go on with his consent. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], however, has informed me that he will propose an amendment, but that there will be no argument of any length upon his amendment, and he will immediately submit it to a vote of the Senate. That being the case, as there will be merely a vote upon that amendment, I hope the Senator from Alabama will not object to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are no amendments coming from the Senator's side of the Chamber?

Mr. McCUMBER. None.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to say a few words with reference to the concurrent resolution before it is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. KING. With the assurance given by the chairman of the committee that from his side of the Chamber there will be no amendments tendered to the concurrent resolution, I do not object.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to propose an amendment to House Concurrent Resolution No. 67 which is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The READING CLERK. Add the following:

That on and after the date on which the tariff act of 1922 becomes effective there shall not for a period of three months thereafter be imported into the United States or into any of its possessions any cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, any provision in said tariff act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, was correct when he said that I did not wish to discuss the amendment; but it is necessary that Senators should understand what the amendment is, and I shall take two or three minutes to explain it. My speeches are broad, but never long. The House concurrent resolution now before us is simply to authorize the enrolling clerks to add certain words to the tariff bill. I have offered the amendment, and I now extend an opportunity, and a last opportunity, to Senators not to restore the Senate amendment which laid the import duty on Egyptian cotton, but to grant a period of three months within which the cotton crop of 1922 may in a measure be absorbed, and that those in Arizona and California who, in 1922 relying upon the promises of Republican Senate leaders, planted long-staple cotton, may have an opportunity to liquidate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the concurrent resolution, on which the yeas and nays were demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am unable on this vote to obtain a transfer of the pair which I have with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]; so I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I find since voting that my general pair, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], has not voted. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] are detained from the Senate on official business.

I also wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Ashurst	du Pont	Oddie	Sutherland
Bursum	Harreld	Rawson
Cameron	McNary	Shortridge

So Mr. ASHURST's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the resolution now pending. I rose for another purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has not as yet passed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the resolution is passed I wish to speak to it. I do not care to interfere with the Senator from Mississippi, but I do not want the question put before an opportunity is afforded me of saying a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will have an opportunity to discuss the resolution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I am sending to the desk, to the pending concurrent resolution, as an additional paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment to the concurrent resolution, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the concurrent resolution the following:

And further, That in the enrollment of the said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to insert the following paragraph at the proper place in Title I:

"Cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, 6 cents per pound."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

When that particular subject was pending when we were considering the tariff bill, I supported a duty of 10 cents a pound upon sea-island or long-staple cotton because I felt that if it was the policy of the Government to protect agricultural industries as well as following out the old policy of the protection of manufacturing industries, certainly the American farmer who produced the Egyptian or sea-island cotton was entitled to have a tariff placed upon the Egyptian cotton which comes in competition with his cotton produced in this country. At that time the Senate adopted a rate of 7 cents a pound on Egyptian cotton. Very much to the astonishment and the disappointment of many of us who had felt that this rate should be placed upon Egyptian cotton, the conferees struck that provision from the bill, leaving the producers of the Egyptian or long-staple cotton in America without any protection whatever, in a measure which has carried out a policy of protection to all manufacturing industries, and in many instances a policy of protection to the farmer.

This question has been discussed very ably by the Senators from Arizona, in whose State a considerable quantity of this cotton is produced. We produce a considerable quantity of it in my State, and it is impossible for our growers to compete with the cotton growers of Egypt with their pauper labor, you might say, and the low cost of production in that country.

There is no reason why this provision should have been stricken by the conferees from the original bill, except that, as I understand, the manufacturers claimed that there was not sufficient compensatory duty. I do not agree with the idea that Congress in writing a tariff bill should bow down before and be controlled and dominated by the manufacturers of this country. That has been one of the troubles all the way through with the party which holds to the idea of a protective tariff.

It is governed and controlled almost entirely by the directions and the suggestions of the manufacturing interests of the country. I noticed time and time again, when we were discussing certain rates prescribed in the tariff bill, that the testimony developed the fact that the rate had been fixed identically as that proposed by the manufacturers. I suppose the committee made some little investigation of it, but it seemed that the manufacturers were always able to convince them that they should have the rates that they had suggested.

I think that it is a travesty upon justice, that it is a great wrong and an injury to the farmers of this country engaged in the production of sea-island and long-staple cotton, to permit the manufacturers to have a duty upon goods manufactured from this product and at the same time not permit the producer of the cotton to have any tariff whatever placed upon the product of his toil and of his labor. I have proposed a rate of 6 cents a pound. I do not think this is really sufficient. I think the rate should be as much as 10 cents a pound, but I have offered this amendment in the hope that there will be a little spirit of compromise that will persuade at least a majority of the Senators to do justice by the farmers who are engaged in the production of Egyptian and long-staple cotton. I hope this wrong may be remedied in this way and justice done by this class of growers of our country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary restated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent because of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], but if he were present he would vote as I have voted, and I therefore will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Ashurst	Harreld	Oddie	Stanfield
Bursum	Heflin	Ransdell	Trammell
Cameron	McNary	Sheppard

So Mr. TRAMMELL'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have not risen to take up the time of the Senate to any great extent, but there is pending in the Senate a concurrent resolution to have the enrolling clerks correct an error in the tariff bill we passed on yesterday, and I think we should not let the bill go through without extending our congratulations to our friends on the other side of the aisle.

Of course, there was not opportunity for very long consideration of the tariff bill. It was before the Congress only 15 months in one form or another before it passed the two Houses. We were advised before it passed that there were a good many errors in the bill in the way of adjustments of rates. But now we find that there are a good many errors in the actual construction and writing of the bill.

This great tariff bill lay before the Congress for 15 months, being taken up by the Senate last April and passed finally by the Senate yesterday. The ink was not dry on the record of the vote when the chairman of the Finance Committee, in charge of the bill, laid before the Senate yesterday afternoon a concurrent resolution to correct an error in one of the great schedules of the bill. It seems that in writing the paragraphs relating to sugar, one of the important revenue features of the bill, a serious error had been made, the language not reflecting the viewpoint of the majority party, which has the responsibility of passing the bill, and the error was corrected, and properly corrected.

A day has not rolled by since the Senate passed the bill, and this morning the Finance Committee asks us to make another correction in the bill, and a proper correction, one to which no one can object so far as making the correction is concerned. We may differ as to the rates, but we find one item which was placed in the bill by mistake.

No one charges those in charge of the bill with having made the mistake intentionally, but we find that one item in the bill is on the free list, so that the article can be imported into the United States free of duty, but when we turn to the tax list of the bill we find that a tax is placed on that very article. So if the bill became a law as it came from the hands of the conferees there would be an item in it in regard to which the customs authorities would be in doubt as to whether it was taxed or untaxed when the importer sought to bring the goods into America.

In other words, as the bill now stands, the item of coconuts is on the free list and on the tax list. We may have to correct this error in order to let the customs officials know that the party in power intends to tax coconuts and not leave them on the free list; but, so far as the bill is concerned, there will be no doubt in the minds of the American people as to whether they are taxed or not when this bill becomes a law. As soon as the President signs the bill and its drastic features go into operation the man who buys sugar will know he is taxed; the man who has to buy woolen goods to protect him from the winter storms will know he is taxed.

I think it is wise, however, to make these corrections. I admire the candor and courage of the majority party in coming in, within 24 hours after they pass a great tax bill, and ask Congress to correct their errors. Of course, if we find two errors in the bill in 24 hours, the Lord Himself only knows how many errors we shall find in it in the next 24 months.

Speaking of it seriously, these corrections only demonstrate what we have all known from the beginning—that the bill has been badly constructed. It has been thrown together instead of builded. The rates are high on some basic materials and comparatively low on the finished products made from those basic materials. They are very low on some basic materials but high on the finished products. It discriminates in favor of one class of citizens by letting them receive their goods at comparatively low rates, and it mulcts another class of citizens, not because the proponents of the bill have anything against the citizenship of the United States, but because there is some special interest knocking at the door which desires to lay tribute against the American people, and in the making up of the bill they have been given the privilege, the high privilege from the king of tariff to go into the pockets of American citizens and take out their money in order that the industries of special privilege may profit.

I do not intend to delay the passage of this resolution of correction. Possibly before we adjourn, in the next day or two, there may be other resolutions of correction presented. Although I am not in favor of taxing coconuts, I see no reason why those in charge of the bill should not be given an opportunity to correct so apparent an error as writing a tax on an article in the bill and then putting the article on the free list.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is not surprising, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has suggested, that the committee proposes to correct, change, or modify this bill, even after it has been passed. We know what an extraordinary performance was indulged in during the six months or such a matter the bill was under discussion in the Senate, after it was reported from the committee. The committee would meet every morning while the bill was under discussion and conclude to offer amendments which they had found advisable to their own bill as reported and after the report had been submitted. It should not be at all unexpected that it is discovered some other corrections should be made. But we have spent enough time discussing the bill, I take it. The country is pretty well advised as to its meaning.

Bringing the subject down to a practical, everyday consideration by the plain, ordinary consumers of the country, an article appeared in the New York Evening Post recently which is rather impressive, it seems to me. It is along lines we have heard before, but perhaps it ought to be considered again by those who pay the taxes under the bill as it finally stands. I read:

The new tariff bill, says the New York Evening Post "makes the free breakfast table a mockery," and in this paper William Q. Scroggs, the economist, recently recounted "the short and simple but somewhat intimate annals of a morning hour in the life of a plain middle-class American consumer," to "see how the tariff penetrates into the inner temple of his existence." To quote from this story as amended by Mr. Scroggs to fit the final form of the Senate bill:

"His day begins when he is aroused by an alarm clock, and the new tariff bill raises the duty on this article 67 per cent. His first act is to throw off the bedcovering, on which the duty is advanced 133 per cent. He jumps from his bed, on which the duty is advanced 133 per cent, and dons a summer bath robe with the duty up 60 per cent, and slippers with the duty increased 33 per cent.

"He walks over a Brussels carpet (duty up 100 per cent) to close the window, the duty on the pane of which has been raised 33 per cent, and adjusts the shade (duty up 20 per cent) and curtains (up 50 per cent). Then he enters the bathroom, stands before a mirror, on which the duty has been raised 100 per cent, sets out his shaving-stick, subject to an increase in duty of 67 per cent, his shaving-brush (duty up 30 per cent), and razor (up 100 per cent), and begins his tonsorial operations. This over, he devotes his attention to the bathtub, on which the duty has been raised 100 per cent. Towels (with the duty up 60 per cent), soap (up 67 per cent), toothbrush and hairbrush (up 30 per cent each), and comb (up 67 per cent) are next in demand.

"As our consumer dresses, it may be noted that the new bill increases the duty 60 per cent on his underwear, 33 per cent on his hose, 15 per cent on his shirt and collar, 20 per cent or more on his necktie, and 60 per cent on his suit of clothes.

"Our consumer decides to discard his waistcoat and transfers fountain pen (up 100 per cent), penknife (up 200 per cent), and lead pencil (up 80 per cent), from waistcoat to coat pockets, picks up a fresh linen handkerchief (up 30 per cent) from the dresser (up 133 per cent), polishes his eyeglasses (up 15 per cent), and after giving his clothes a touch with a brush (up 57 per cent), is ready for breakfast.

"At the breakfast table our consumer spreads a napkin (duty up 15 per cent) on his knees, and turns on the current for his electric toaster, on which the duty has been advanced 160 per cent. He drinks water from a glass, on which the duty is 45 per cent higher, and begins his breakfast with an apple (duty up 200 per cent) baked with sugar (duty up 84 per cent) in an aluminum dish (up 150 per cent), on a cast-iron stove (duty up 100 per cent).

"The duty is also advanced 27 per cent on his chinaware, 20 per cent on his table silverware, 200 per cent on his oatmeal, and 255 per cent on his butter. The cream for his coffee has been removed from the free list and subjected to a duty of 22½ cents a gallon, and his eggs also have been taken from the free list and made dutiable at 8 cents per dozen. The salt for his eggs likewise comes off the free list, and so does his bacon and the flour that goes into his bread. Even the duty on the salt shaker gets a boost of 45 per cent.

"The only things on his table that have not been subjected to a higher tariff duty are his coffee and his drinking water."

No one should be deceived. It might as well be understood that this tariff act will jack up the cost of living and depress our foreign trade; it will increase the burdens of consumers and close markets for our surplus products; it will operate as a license to plunder, issued to profiteering beneficiaries. For every dollar the Government takes, protected interests will take two.

I also ask to have included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from this morning's New York World entitled "Worst tariff and longest time."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORST TARIFF AND LONGEST TIME.

The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, as it was voted through the Senate yesterday and as it now goes to the President for his signature, is the worst measure of the kind ever passed by Congress, and it has taken Congress the longest time of record to make it up.

Preparatory hearings were begun by the Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress on January 6, 1921, before the inauguration of President Harding. The bill passed the House on July 21 of that year and then went to the Senate Committee on Finance, which worked over it 8 months and 21 days, or until April 11 of this year. It has been five months under debate and patching over in the Senate and a conference committee of the two Houses. It has thus been a total of 20 months and 14 days in the making.

Forward steps in public policy are commonly harder to achieve than backward steps. But with the most reactionary of American tariff bills the rule is reversed. The reasons are clear. The backward march in this case has had to be executed through formidable obstacles all the way. Public sentiment as a whole has been openly hostile. Republican sentiment in unprecedented measure has been hostile. The change of the country from a debtor to a creditor Nation has put a new face on the whole tariff situation. Its much larger interest is now, if not before, to be found on the side of expanding trade intercourse with the outside world. It had been put by the war in a position to take and hold the commercial and manufacturing leadership of the world, and the people of the United States had come to realize the fact and to be eager for the great opportunity.

But this tariff bill snatches away the opportunity and reverts to an outgrown policy of trade isolation. It again sets up in worse degree than ever the profiteering interests of a few favored producing classes above the general interests of all. At a time when the people bend as never before under the burden of high taxes and cost of living, this bill will impose some $4,000,000,000 in new taxes to be added to their cost of living.

What the country thinks of this jobbery with highest material interests remains to be formally expressed, nor is the time of waiting long.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, something was said here this morning about class legislation. I desire for a few minutes to call attention to the President's veto of the bonus bill, which, I think, has some relation to the tariff bill now under consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment that I may suggest to him that if the concurrent resolution is to be effective at all it must be passed before the bill is enrolled. The House has not only been waiting yesterday but all night and this morning, and I am fearful I can not get them to suspend the enrolling further unless we can adopt the concurrent resolution. I ask the Senator if he will not allow us to vote on the resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I only want 10 minutes.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can then make his speech.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I shall not take very much time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator if he will not let us vote?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then I am afraid the Senator in charge of the resolution will not be here when I speak on the veto message.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give the Senator my word of honor that I shall hear him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; I yield to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I dislike very much to criticize any document prepared by the President of the United States or under his direction, but I can not refrain from calling attention to the President's very remarkable veto of the bonus bill. I affirm first that a fair reading of the veto message will convince any man that it is the fixed purpose of the administration to kill every bonus bill which may be devised. As we read through the document and encounter the various arguments, verbal subterfuges, and special pleadings the conviction is forced home that the reason assigned for the veto, namely, that there is no provision made in the bill for funds with which to pay the bonus, is, after all, only a plausible excuse back of which there is no merit, and that it is thrust forward for the purpose of covering the real intent of the administration, which is to deny the bonus in toto and as a finality. I think I can make that clear as I proceed.

I call attention to this language, that the bonus—is not to discharge an obligation, which the Government always must pay, but to bestow a bonus which the soldiers themselves while serving in the war did not expect.

A little later the same instrument declares:

Though undying gratitude is the meed of everyone who served, it is not to be said that material bestowal is an obligation to those who emerged from the great conflict.

And a moment later the same instrument insists that—

Those who emerged from the great conflict came out not only unharmed but came forth physically, mentally, and spiritually richer for the great experience.

And then follows the statement:

If an obligation were to be admitted, it would be to charge the adjusted compensation bill with inadequacy and stinginess.

Now, let us give a moment's attention to that language. First, the declaration is that those who came out of the war were benefited by the war; in other words, they made no sacrifices to be recompensed. That is the plain inference, and accordingly one might expect a special tax to be levied upon those young men to compel them to pay to the Government something for the benefits which were conferred upon them and the blessings which were handed to them when they were given an opportunity to go out and be shot at or be poisoned with gas.

All through the document runs the idea that there is no obligation, that there is no duty upon Congress, but that what we are giving to the soldiers and sailors of the war is in the nature of a gift, and a gift unjustifiable and unwarranted. If that is true, what is the use of longer spending our time discussing the question? If that is the position taken by the administration, then the administration is taking it not only for to-day, not because the bill does not carry a revenue provision in it out of which to compensate the soldiers, but it is a finality. If the arguments be true, the bonus never should be paid, and that is the position taken by the administration.

Mr. President, if the administration is right when it states that every man who entered the war and came out without being maimed or crippled received a physical development and was "mentally and spiritually richer for the great experience," then war, instead of being a curse is, after all, a blessing and we ought to take the figure of Justice from above the Capitol of the Nation and put up a brass figure of the god Mars. What say the boys who went into the struggle? Do they think it was a spiritual and physical and mental uplift which conferred benefits upon all the millions and offset any sacrifice they may have made, and therefore they shall be paid nothing on account of financial loss?

A little later in the instrument the President declares that when the war was being waged all classes of people rallied to support the Government. That is true. I apprehend, then, if they all rallied to support the Government they all got the same spiritual and mental uplift that the soldier did who went to the front. Yet when we are presented with this proposition, what is the position of the administration? The proposition is that the soldier who went to the front and suffered financial loss peculiar to his having gone to the front and springing directly from his having been taken away from his home and his business, shall not receive any money because he enjoyed a spiritual and mental uplift. But a war contractor, whom the President declares in common with all the other people of the country—for he includes him with all the other people—who stayed at home to make great profits from munitions or shoes or some other article and enjoyed a consequent mental and spiritual uplift, and also the uplift of his bank account, is to be relieved from any obligation of dividing any part of his profits for the purpose of recompensing the absolute losses which the soldier suffered.

I utterly repudiate the idea that the bill provides a gift or that it is a bonus. The idea has been repudiated throughout by the sponsor of the bill on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. It is calculated only to equalize as far as practicable the financial loss the soldier sustained through going into the war with what he would have received if he had not gone into the war. It is not intended to be a gift. It is based upon a principle which can well be illustrated. Two men are working at the same bench, each of them earning $5 a day. One of them is demanded by the draft and sent to the front, where he receives nothing except his mere living, for that is all he did receive. The other remained at home and found his wages doubled. They were both the same age; they were both equally liable to military service; but one of them was drawn in the draft and the other was not. Now, in a slight measure to equalize those differences this bill was passed, and upon that idea the whole bill is bottomed and not upon the idea of a gift, of a bonus.

Now, let us see how we treated the contractor in comparison with the soldier. The soldier who sustained a financial loss, according to the President, is to receive nothing. But the contractor who made contracts during the World War and found himself confronted with the fact that now the war was over he would sustain losses found the Government ready to relieve him from the obligation of his contract. In instance after instance, to the amount of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, we have taken off the hands of contractors their property and we have recompensed them for actual losses which they sustained. Such awards have aggregated $3,000,000,000. But to the man who went to the front, who faced the firing line, who risked his life, and who jeopardized his health, though he sustained actual financial loss peculiar to his service, we refuse to give anything. That is the position in which the President places himself by his veto.

Moreover, the President's excuse is that no revenue is provided. When did it happen that in time of war the Government never incurred an obligation until the revenue was provided? I class this as a war measure, for it springs out of the war; it is the last, the final payment, perhaps, of the war. We settled our other obligations after the war was over, and we settled them out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds. More than that; in order to enable foreign countries to meet their obligations and to satisfy the contracts they had made, we gave to them $3,000,000,000 after the armistice was declared and the last shot had been fired. They were recouped for their losses. Not only the American contractor but the foreign contractor was recouped out of money taken out of the United States Treasury to the amount of $3,000,000,000, and nobody uttered a single .protest against it, I believe, except myself. I protested somewhat and stated that the money was being paid out illegally.

The President, however, says that this obligation which springs out of the war can not be incurred because the money is not in sight. If it is an obligation springing out of the war, and it is incurred by this Congress, and is not met by the ordinary revenues of the Government, then it would undoubtedly have to be met ultimately by the issue of the necessary amount of bonds. So far as I am concerned, so long as we can issue bonds to pay for the goods we obtained in the war—and that was proper—I contend that we ought not to refuse to issue bonds, if necessary, to pay a compensation to the soldiers of the war which is morally due to them.

But, Mr. President, let us see why we have not the revenue. We do not have the revenue because the administration issued the command in advance and cut off one of the chief sources of revenue. It proposed to reduce the tax upon the incomes of 12,000 American millionaires by $90,000,000 a year, although the greater percentage of those millionaires had accumulated a large part of their fortunes as the result of this war. The Democrats defeated that proposition in part, but still the Republicans reduced the surtaxes so that no surtax runs above 50 per cent, whereas such taxes had formerly run to 65 cents on enormously high incomes. That attempted reduction amounted, as I have stated, to $90,000,000 a year.

The Republican majority then took the tax off excess profits. That tax was estimated to be $450,000,000 this year. Somebody has stated that that estimate is wrong, but a moment ago I talked with the expert in the Treasury who made the estimates on which the Finance Committee acted, and he stated that, so far as experience has shown, he had been mistaken in his total estimates less than one-thirtieth of 1 per cent. So we have the right to assume that the $450,000,000 which was taken off excess profits would have been realized by the United States Treasury had the Republicans permitted it to remain.

Now, in a word, what is the excess-profit tax? A corporation that makes 10 per cent net profit and no more does not pay a penny of excess-profit tax. The excess-profit tax is levied only upon profits made by corporations in excess of 10 per cent. Therefore it is levied upon corporations which enjoy unusual profits, and nearly all of them are enjoying those profits because of prices which still oppress this country as the result of the war. While they are enjoying those profits and those benefits which came to them because of the service of our soldiers upon the field of battle we relieve them of the tax on those profits and we refuse to give compensation to the soldiers for the losses they actually sustained.

Oh, of course I know it will be said that nobody can figure the actual losses. That, unfortunately, is true; we can not go into each State; but the committee, after full consideration, struck a minimum which they thought, in a general way, would be an equitable average, and they proposed to give that, but instead of giving that, the tax is taken off the exceedingly prosperous and profiteering concerns of this country, and then we are told the Treasury has no money.

Again, Mr. President, after having declared that this is a mere gift—and if it is a mere gift, then, of course, no one need complain of its smallness, for nobody has any right to look a gift horse in the mouth—the President later in his message referred to it in this wise:

> I regret to stand between them (the soldiers) and the pitiably small compensation proposed.

In one word it is a "gift"; in the other it is a "compensation." "Compensation" means something that is paid to make up for a loss sustained or for property or something that has been parted with. When he comes to that the President says that it is "pitiably small." What kind of an excuse is it for a moral debtor to say that he refuses to pay at all because he can not pay all that he ought to pay? If a man owes me in justice and equity $10,000 and can only pay $1,000, is it just for him, if I may use a slang expression in this body, to "welsh" on the whole obligation because he can not pay the $10,000; to make his inability to pay in full an excuse for not paying any part? I only call attention to it because of its utter inconsistency.

Finally we get to the humor of this message—and the President is always a humorist; perhaps an unconscious one, but a humorist just the same—when he says:

> These ex-soldiers who served so gallantly in war, and who are to be so conspicuous in the progress of the Republic in a half century before us, must know that nations can only survive where taxation is restrained from the limits of oppression, where the public treasury is locked against class legislation.

And yet, as his veto message has been delivered to this Chamber while I have been speaking, there is being carried to the other end of the Capitol the final amendment to a tariff bill which is nothing but class legislation from the first line to the last word; legislation in favor of the great manufacturing class; legislation in favor of the great moneyed class; legislation that was intended to put the hand of the manufacturer and profiteer into the pocket of every American citizen; legislation that is designed to build a tariff wall so high that behind it the trust magnates may get together and rob the American people to their hearts' content, and do it without paying any excess-profits tax, for that they have already had repealed. The duties secured by this tariff will levy a tax in the aggregate of five or six billions of dollars upon American consumers.

Class legislation! This morning we have levied a tax upon every man and woman who drinks a cup of coffee with a little sugar in it, and we have levied that for a class of citizens dealing in sugar.

Class legislation! We have levied a tax upon wool, so that every man, woman, and child in this country who wears a woolen garment shall pay a tax to the classes that are interested in the production of wool and its manufacture.

Class legislation harrows up the tender soul of the President, but we have levied a tax upon the glass which every human being puts to his lips, and we have done it for the benefit of a concern that is now under indictment and about to go to trial for having indulged in trust practices—cornering the markets of the United States, throttling competition, and increasing its profits to huge and indecent amounts. This combination is not the only trust under indictment to secure benefits from this legislation. The Cast Iron Pipe Trust, the Cement Trust, the Clay, Tile, and Terra Cotta Trust have all been indicted in Federal courts, yet all of them have been rewarded by the tariff bill we have just passed. I cite these only as a few examples; the list could be extended.

Class legislation! We have levied a tax upon the socks that the poor man wears, and we have done it for the benefit of a few cotton manufacturers in the United States.

Class legislation! We have levied a tax upon every yard of gingham, and put that burden on every woman who works in her kitchen, on every farm wife, on all the vast mass of our people who use that class of goods, and we have done it for the benefit of a small and numerically insignificant class.

Class legislation! We have levied a tax upon the swaddling clothes in which the babe is wrapped at his birth; we have levied a tax upon the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away; and we have done it for the benefit of a very limited class.

Class legislation! Let us have a little legislation in favor of that class who stood on the red line of battle, who looked into the mouth of hell, whose brothers went to their death with cheers upon their lips; that class of boys whose hearts beat strong and whose eyes were clear when they floated in the air 10,000 feet above the earth—class legislation for the men that saved the United States of America. Let us not hear the words "class legislation" from those whose hands are polluted by the robbery of the American people which you have just perpetrated. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi will suspend just a moment. Is there any further morning business? The morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the unfinished business, House Joint Resolution 270, be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives (William Tyler Page) appeared and delivered the following message:

> The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, with his objections thereto, the bill of the House No. 10874, commonly known as the adjusted compensation bill, the House of Representatives proceeded to reconsider the same, and
> Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if it were true—and it is not—that the bonus bill was for the benefit of those who looked into the mouths of the cannon and who walked up the steeps against the German artillery and infantry, there would be some reason in the attempt at eloquence made during the last five minutes of the speech of the Senator from Missouri; but it is not true. This is a bill to give a bonus to something like 4,000,000 men, over one-half of whom never faced a shot, over one-half of whom never went across the seas, about one-fourth of whom never served outside of a military camp, about one-tenth of whom, men and women, were serving with shoulder straps in Washington departments, and never got anywhere to illustrate their courage.

For the man who marches forward facing the cannon's mouth, whether for glory or for self-respect or for his country's welfare, everybody has high respect. Why did they not confine this bonus bill to the men who faced fire, the men who, upon Flanders' fields or France's fields, offered their breasts to gunshots? Why did they take in all the clerks around Washington, and all the men in the encampments who never did anything except subject themselves to a new process of being washed every morning and living a more sanitary life than they were accustomed to? Why did you put them all in? Why, you put them all in because you knew you could not carry off the steal without putting them all in. You knew that if you confined it to the one million of men who went to France, and a little bit over a million, you would not have gotten much consideration from the politicians of America; but you wanted to take in the 4,000,000 serving at the training camps, some of them in the departments at Washington wearing spurs, as old JOE CANNON said, for fear that their heels might slip off the desks. You put them all in, even the women, and they were not supposed to face any firing. They never presented their beautiful breasts to the cannon shot of the enemy, and ought not to have done it. I would be ashamed of myself if American men would have permitted them to do it; but they are in it, even.

Let us get rid of the pretense of eloquence and oratory and heroism about this bill. If you will confine it to the men who actually entered action in France or in Belgium in American uniforms, you will get my approbation; but if you dare do that, you know you can not pass the bill. That is where you are.

What is the use of any idle pretense of oratory or eloquence about it? What is the use of ringing the changes upon heroism about it? The fellow that served at Camp Meade or down here at Petersburg never incurred any very great danger that I know of, unless he was under the command of a negro sergeant who did not know how to order the trench guns to be fired. I did hear of one case where a fellow was accidentally killed in that way, but I never heard of but one.

Mr. President, the last address we heard was from a Senator who, a few days ago, referred to sentiment contemptuously. There is no poetry in the soul of a man who can refer to human sentiment contemptuously. To say that a man is sentimental is to pay him the highest compliment that one man can pay another or that a pure woman can pay a brave man. The other day I referred to the fact that the only thing that was not rotten, and could not rot, was human sentiment.

I belong to a breed of men who for 400 years have been dying on the wrong side. Some of them fought like fools for the Stuarts in England. Some of them died under Tyrone's Roman Catholic insurrection in Ireland. Some of them followed the Stars and Bars until they fell in gloom, although not in disgrace, at Appomattox. We do not recognize that sentiment is to be referred to contemptuously. If it were to be so referred to the man who died for the Stuarts was simply an infernal fool, and the man who followed Robert E. Lee to Appomattox did not have much sense; but, all the same, he had heroism, he had courage, and he had communion with the immortal gods, because they were in his heart, and the very spirit of Jesus Christ was working before him, because Jesus Christ fought for the greatest lost cause that the world ever witnessed.

I have no sort of sentiment to waste upon the man who refers to sentiment contemptuously. He will make his own peace somehow, the man who can do that, and he will come out on top, somehow; but the man who does not come out on top and who goes to his destruction voluntarily in the name of God and humanity is the man worthy of other men's adoration. It is not the fellow who refers to sentiment contemptuously and who wants to find pounds, shillings, pence in every proposition that he can present to the public.

Then, Mr. President, the Senator draws what he imagines to be an unfavorable contrast between my boys and my nephews who did go to France and the fellow who stayed at home and got, I think he said, $5 a day pay—$5 a day pay—and he wants us to put our boys upon the same rank or in the same class as those who got the $5 a day, and he wants us to equalize things between the profiteer and the hero.

How can you equalize things between the profiteer and the hero? By making a profiteer out of the hero. That is the only way you can do it. That is the Senator's proposition—to make a profiteer out of the hero. Here is a worthless son-of-a-gun who made money out of the war. I come back from France, and I say to the Federal Government: "Let me make money out of the war, too, and put me on an equality with him." Put me on an equality with him? God Almighty would have to raise him 5,000 feet before he could get on an equality with me. If it is a question of altitude, then you had better raise the profiteer, if you know how. Maybe God does. I do not. I doubt if you do; but do not lower the man who undertook to do his best in the hour of trouble, without vaunting and without self-praise and without bragging, and went forward and faced whatever was necessary to be faced. Do not bring about equalization by lowering him. Bring about the equalization, if you know how—I do not know how—by putting the infernal scoundrel in jail, if you can find out how to indict him under ordinary common law procedure or under the statute law of any State. He ought to be in jail.

Every honest man hopes that the profiteer may be there some day, because a man who deliberately makes money out of his country's misfortunes in time of war is a scoundrel who ought to be in jail, or have his throat cut, one of the two. But this appeal to the Senate of the United States to put the boys who marched through the Argonne, who charged at St. Mihiel, who threw back the German advance at the Marne, is not an effort to raise humanity, but an effort to lower it and to lower it infinitely.

Oh, yes; there were profiteers, and there were a good many of them. I remember boys in my office and boys in other Senators' offices who invested in Liberty bonds to help their country, and then later on had to sell their bonds, but found that the market price was only $89. Yet if any of them hold their bonds they will be referred to as bloated bondholders by demagogues in less than a half a dozen years from now. I bought from four to six thousand dollars of their bonds, because, I said, "It will be no loss to me; I will not want to sell the bonds as long as I get the interest on them; the market value of the bond does not make any difference to me, but it makes a lot of difference to you, and you shall not sell them at $89; you shall sell them to me at par"; and I bought them. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and I sat upon the committee here one day and granted a request of some people upon condition that they paid for their bonds at par.

Mr. President, who wants to be equalized with the profiteers? No gentleman does. He can have his special class equalities if he chooses, but by the name and the fame of the Savior, he can not make me one of his class and can not make me equalize things between him and me. His god may be money—and it was money—but my god is something else, and that something else is the inner voice which appeals to every gentleman and every man of honor to do his duty, and to do it well if he knows how, or can find out how, and will try to find out how.

This appeal to put the soldier upon a footing with the profiteer does not appeal to me. If the Senator from Missouri or anybody else believes that he is raising the soldier by that appeal, I say to him that he is lowering him to the depths of degradation and contempt. Even during the Civil War, in the section of the country which went down under the Stars and Bars in behalf of the lost cause, there were in Mississippi and all over the South men who managed somehow to make money out of the war. By the special inspiration of the devil, perhaps, they knew how to make money out of it. There were men in the South who came out of that struggle rich. Most gentlemen died, some of them were wounded, and others were left poor. Would we ever have appealed to the men who fought with Jackson or Lee to put themselves on an equality with the dogs who were disloyal to the South and made money out of the war by running the blockade with cotton or other things? I do not think they would have done it.

Mr. President, I am a Democrat, a plain, ordinary, blamefool Mississippi Democrat, without any embroideries and without any frills, and without any special designation, but I am going to stand behind the Republican President of this country in this veto message because he is right, and the only thing that is bothering me is my wonder how a Republican like him could have gotten so right. Whenever I find a Republican, the Chief of the party, right upon a proposition my wonderment grows. As Oliver Goldsmith said about the old schoolmaster:

> * * * Still the wonder grew,
> That one small head could carry all he knew.

As far as this particular veto message is concerned, of course it is like everything coming from a Republican head; it is a bit inconsistent. But it is all right, and the Senator from Missouri was about right when he said the President was inconsistent when he went on to dwell upon the smallness of the appropriation, when the right fight against the appropriation was upon the ground that it was wrong in principle and had nothing to do with the amount of it at all. I would not care if it were twenty million; I would be opposed to it. I would not care if it were only a hundred thousand; I would still be opposed to it, because the principle is wrong, and the wrong principle that runs through it all is the idea that you can put heroism and manhood and honor upon an equal footing with profiteering and money-making. You can not do it, and whenever you try to do it you sap the life of the Republic. You are gradually traveling on to the old Roman idea of bread and circuses, traveling, as they used to say, ad panem et circences.

Then the Senator used that queer old English word "goods." He said the profiteer had got his "goods," and he wanted the soldier to have his goods. A man who is willing to bare his breast and offer to die for "goods" is so contemptible that he is not worthy of mention in the arena of any respectable society. The profiteer got his "goods," and the Senator tells us that there were two brothers, one of whom stayed here and got $5 a day and the other went to France and got nothing, as he said, or would have us infer. The brother who went to France got immortal glory, and if that is not worth $5 a day, then God is a humbug, and all poesy is humbuggery, and all dreams and visions, if God is running the world through the instrumentality of humanity, are humbugs.

"Goods!" Two brothers; one stayed at home and got "goods," $5 a day, while the other went to France, and, if he did his duty, got immortal glory for himself; and the Senator, instead of proposing to compensate the poor ass who stayed here for $5 a day, proposes to compensate the hero who went to France.

What would you have to add to that boy's $5 a day to put him upon the same footing with the boy who charged through the Argonne Forest or went through the St. Mihiel fight? Could you express it in money? I do not think you could. But if you could express it in money, it would be many, many multiples of $5 a day.

I suggest that, in accordance with the oratory and the eloquence of the Senator from Missouri—and he is oratorical and he is eloquent, everybody recognizes that—he offer an amendment that nobody shall receive any benefit under this act unless he was actually under fire during the war. I will bet three plantations to two ginger cakes that he dare not offer the amendment, and I will deliver the plantations if I lose, in absolute hopelessness of ever collecting the ginger cakes if I win.

Do not indulge in oratory and eloquence and that sort of folly. Just tell somebody the plain truth about it. Do not give the fellow who performed his military service at Camp Meade or down at Petersburg the same pay you give the boy who charged at St. Mihiel and went through the Argonne luckily without being shot.

Another thing, do not in your oratory all the time mix up talk about the men who were wounded and disabled and diseased or died leaving dependent wives and children. But you do that. You never say a word in behalf of this bill without somehow bringing in the disabled, who are being taken care of as well as we can take care of them right now, and who will be taken care of to the bitter end with not only a liberality and a justice but with a generosity that will plant the American people forever upon a height as a monument to themselves.

Why put all that nonsense into it? Nobody is opposing giving liberally for the relief of any disabled or crippled boy, or any boy who even suffered with shell shock; and, by the way, some of the men who suffered shell shock really suffered with fright. Still, we are taking care of them the best we know how, and we are going to take care of them better and better every day.

The Senator spoke of the high cost of living. How did the high cost of living affect my boy in the Argonne or at St. Mihiel? It did not affect him at all. It might have affected a laborer here at home, but my boy, or yours, or yours, if you had boys there, was getting his food and he was getting his clothing. They were getting small pay, but enough to send their mothers provision if they died and to subscribe to a $10,000 life policy for their mothers or their wives or their sisters, whichever they chose. The man who was getting his $5 a day perhaps needed the increase, but my boy or yours at St. Mihiel and the Argonne did not need it. That was not all. We were over here standing behind them. We were not forgetting the boy. We were not deserting him. We knew he was there. We knew he was doing his duty and he knew that we knew that we were going to take care of him.

I have not much respect for the idea that anybody, whether he served in the Army or anywhere else, ought to become an incubus upon the Government which he serves or upon the people whom he serves. I believe with St. Paul that every man ought to be able to look every other man in the face and say, "I owe nobody anything," and next to that to look everybody in the face and say, "Nobody owes me anything, either. I am here upon my two legs." I believe with Bobby Burns that he ought to—

Gather gear by ev'ry wile
That's justified by honor—
Not for to hide it in a hedge,
Nor for a train attendant,
But for the glorious privilege
Of being independent.

I have very little respect for the man who does not want to be independent, independent of other men, independent of his Government, stand on his own two legs and face the world.

Now, Mr. President, I am a Democrat, and a Democrat of the old type, but I thank God that we had a President who had the backbone to veto the bill, just as I thank God that old Ulysses Grant, although he was a Republican, too, had the backbone to veto the unlimited greenback issue which was offered mainly by Democrats and by a good many western Republicans during his administration. Mr. President, every man has occasion every hour in the day and every minute in the hour to thank God for many things, but there is nothing for which man has greater cause to thank the Deity than the fact that there is somebody in authority who has courage.

Of course, the veto is an unpopular thing. That is the reason why the Republicans shoved it off on the President, because they knew it was unpopular. That is the reason why a good many Democrats joined in shoving it off on the President, because they had a better reason—they hated the President and wanted him hurt. Republicans did not have that reason and did not want him hurt, but all the same they joined in shoving it off on him. I knew the President when he was a Member of this body, and I confess that until the veto message came in I had my doubts about whether he would ever have backbone enough to sign it, but he did sign it, and I am behind him for once. I hope to God that future Presidents of the United States, whether Democrat or Republican, will have backbone and be willing to do the right thing, whether popular or unpopular, and especially if unpopular, because there is not much merit in doing the right thing when it is popular.

Now, Mr. President, I like that phrase "the goods." The profiteers here at home "got the goods," the Senator from Missouri said, and now he wants to equalize it so the boys who did not stay at home and profiteer shall get some goods, too. Is that the object of existence? Is that the object of human thought and human sentiment and feeling, to get the goods? Why, I never heard the phrase used except in connection with some scoundrel and money-maker. "Get the goods." "If you have not got the goods already, get the goods." "Put money in thy purse," as the villain in Othello would say. "If honestly, put it in thy purse honestly. If dishonestly, still put it in thy purse." Go out and do brave things and true things and honorable things and glorious things, and then come back with a bill made out for so much and say to your country and to the goddess who presides over the destinies of your country, "Here is my bill for so many dollars and so many cents, so many pounds and so many shillings and so many pence. Pay me. Reduce me to the level of the infernal scoundrel who made money out of it. If you reduce me to his level, I will thank you always as if you had given me a reward." Nobody really means all that; not even when he says it. No honest man really means it. No honest man can look another honest man in the eye, just the two of them by themselves, and say he really means that proposition. He does not really mean it. When a man, whether he is in public life or is in private life, is seeking a high plane upon which to think and talk, he ought not to reduce heroism to the level of "profiteeringism." He ought, upon the contrary, try to raise "profiteeringism" to the level of heroism if he can. Of course, he can not do it. Nobody but God can do that, and God has never thought it really worth while. But if it could be done, that ought to be the object of his ambition.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] decried any elaborate oratory being employed on this occasion. He said "instead of oratory"—not referring to me, of course—"let us have the facts." I intend to give a few facts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I always yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. A parliamentary inquiry. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Liberian loan bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH. I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bonus bill if he proposes to place the veto message before the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] desired it to be held until he returned, and whatever is done by the Senator from Iowa when he returns I shall abide by. Unless some one else moves to take it up, it will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It has not yet been handed down by the Presiding Officer.

Mr. BORAH. Why is it not handed down?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he request or move that the veto message be handed down, and in that way we will get it before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present Presiding Officer was requested not to hand the message down until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is here. That is the only reason why the present Presiding Officer has not placed it before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Iowa will be here in a moment, and I hope Senators will be patient until he returns.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall try to relieve the tedium until he does return.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Chair intends to lay the veto message before the Senate at this time, I would like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will not call for a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought the Senator from Arizona had yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I speak now of a change of mind on the part of the President of the United States. I have no criticism to make of any man, whether he be President, Senator, or judge, who changes his mind. It is a right upon which I shall insist for myself and which I freely grant to all others. But when one speaks as a nominee of a great party for President of the United States we must assume that he spoke only after mature reflection and consideration. The fact that he is a presidential nominee and that the election is only six or seven days away does not and should not sweep him off his feet and cause him to make wild statements. Surely it must be only the gravest reasons that would induce a man as a nominee to speak one way in a campaign and act the reverse as President. Speaking in Ohio on the 29th day of October, 1920, in answer to a question as to why the soldiers did not get their bonus, Senator Warren G. Harding is reported to have said:

I am very happy to say to you that the House passed the bonus bill and the Senate has it under consideration, and I have no doubt the Senate will pass it. I myself think it ought to pass it, if you want to know my views.

While we must accord to all persons the right to change their opinions and views, we are not estopped to examine and compare the weight of the two different opinions; we have a right to examine the evidence which induced the change of opinion.

Mr. President, 22 States through their legislatures have petitioned that this adjusted compensation legislation be enacted. The governors of 32 States have urged the Chief Executive to approve the legislation. The House of Representatives twice voted for the measure, the vote upon the last occasion being 333 yeas to 70 nays. Yet the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] stated over and over again that those who desired to pay this adjusted compensation were trying to make profiteers out of the soldiers.

The Senate Finance Committee approved this measure three times. The bill was passed by the Senate by a vote of 47 yeas to 22 nays, and the conference report was agreed to by a vote of 36 yeas to 17 nays. Yet the Senator from Mississippi says that all those who wish to pay this adjusted compensation desire to make a profiteer out of the soldier.

The Senator from Mississippi stated that those who served in the camps, and never had an opportunity to go abroad, should not be paid adjusted compensation; and yet the Senator omitted to remember that in the past four or five years we have paid $225,000,000 as a bonus to our civil service employees. How may we, as American Senators, say to the man in the civil service, indeed say to every man and woman in the employ of the Federal Government, in a civil capacity, "You may have a bonus," but that it is profiteering to give adjusted compensation to those who enlisted in the honorable service of their country as soldiers.

Moreover, Mr. President, I may state that this is the last of the Great War measures so far as concerns the liquidation of obligations which we impliedly or expressly incurred during the war.

We took over the railroads as a war measure, just as we drafted the soldiers as a war measure. We have paid to the railroads an adjusted compensation exceeding $764,000,000.

The war suddenly stopped; the armistice was signed; the guns fell silent; but contractors were able to show that they had sustained losses or in some instances would have made profits, and that we owed them as adjusted compensation the sum of $3,000,000,000. Appropriate legislation was passed paying or providing for the payment of this $3,000,000,000 on uncompleted contracts.

There was a tax which had been imposed on large incomes, and those paying that tax made an outcry and said, "Relieve us from the payment of this tax." So Congress passed legislation relieving the possessors of large fortunes of the payment of $90,000,000 annually on their taxes.

Congress then repealed the excess-profits tax, and thus relieved owners of large fortunes from an additional $450,000,000 annually. Yet because the esteemed Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, brings in a bill to adjust in some measure the compensation of our ex-service men he is stigmatized as a demagogue.

Mr. President, I have never been free in my eulogies of Republican Senators, but I think it is appropriate for me to say that the Senator from North Dakota when he finishes his term will have served in the Senate for 24 years, and so far from being a demagogue he is very nearly a reactionary.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I notice in reading the President's veto message this expression by him:

> I confess that I regret to stand between them and the pitiably small compensation proposed.

I should like to know how many veterans in Arizona look upon sums ranging from $100 to $500 as pitiably small compensation. I know some of the mill workers of Massachusetts would consider $100 a very large sum of money to have at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Let us examine the features of this compensation bill and see whether the amount is pitiably small.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona will please suspend. The Chair lays before the Senate at this time the message from the House of Representatives relating to House bill 10874, together with the message of the President of the United States relating to the same bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will pause in my remarks——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Secretary to read the message from the House, as well as the message from the President?

Mr. ASHURST. The Chair desires to have the message read. I yield for any purpose to facilitate the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say that I think if the message from the President carrying the veto of the bill comes before the Senate, and is once laid before them, it is before the Senate for consideration and appropriate action. If the Senator yields for that purpose, it then places the matter before the Senate for disposition. Of course, the Senator could be rerecognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One reason for the action of the Chair is that the Senator from Arizona is addressing himself now to the very question which will arise when the message of the House is read.

Mr. ASHURST. My position is this: I am willing to suspend. I want to do the appropriate thing. This is a message from the President, and while I do not happen to agree with him, all messages from the President should be treated with the greatest respect and consideration. If it be my duty, or if it be the usual procedure, to suspend at this moment while it may be read, I cheerfully do so. I would not under any circumstances allow any procedure on my part to be construed as any disrespect to the message, although I do not agree with it. If it is proper now, or if any Senator desires it, I will suspend until the message is read. The Chair must decide that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has laid it before the Senate because it is a matter of privilege. The message will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
September 20, 1922.

The House having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill (H. R. 10874) entitled "An act to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," returned to the House by the President of the United States, with his objections thereto, with the message of the President returning the bill; and

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the message of the President of the United States relating to the bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	McNary	Shortridge
Borah	Fernald	Moses	Smith
Brandegee	Fletcher	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Gooding	New	Stanfield
Bursum	Hale	Newberry	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Trammell
Colt	Kellogg	Pepper	Underwood
Culberson	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Cummins	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Dial	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
du Pont	McKellar	Sheppard
Edge	McLean	Shields

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the message of the President of the United States relating to the bill just referred to.

The reading clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

Herewith is returned, without approval, H. R. 10874, a bill "to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes."

With the avowed purpose of the bill to give expression of a nation's gratitude to those who served in its defense in the World War I am in accord, but to its provisions I do not subscribe. The United States never will cease to be grateful; it can not and never will cease giving expression to that gratitude.

In legislating for what is called adjusted compensation Congress fails, first of all, to provide the revenue from which the bestowal is to be paid. Moreover, it establishes the very dangerous precedent of creating a Treasury covenant to pay which puts a burden variously estimated between four and five billions upon the American people, not to discharge an obligation which the Government always must pay, but to bestow a bonus which the soldiers themselves while serving in the World War did not expect.

It is not to be denied that the Nation has certain very binding obligations to those of its defenders who made real sacrifices in the World War, and who left the armies injured, disabled, or diseased so that they could not resume their places in the normal activities of life. These obligations are being gladly and generously met. Perhaps there are here and there inefficiencies and injustices, and some distressing instances of neglect, but they are all unintentional and every energy is being directed to their earliest possible correction. In meeting this obligation there is no complaint about the heavy cost. In the current fiscal year we are expending $510,000,000 on hospitalization and care of sick and wounded, on compensation and vocational training for the disabled, and for insurance. The figures do not include the more than $35,000,000 in process of expenditure on hospital construction. The estimates for the year to follow are approximately $470,000,000, and the figures may need to be made larger. Though the peak in hospitalization may have passed, there is a growth in domicilization, and the discharge in full of our obligations to the diseased, disabled, or dependent who have a right to the Government's care, with insurance liability added, will probably reach a total sum in excess of $25,000,000,000.

More than 99,000 veterans are now enrolled in some of the 445 different courses in vocational training. Fifty-four thousand of them are in schools or colleges, more than 38,000 are in industrial establishments, and a few more than 6,000 are being trained in schools operated by the Veterans' Bureau.

Approximately 19,000 have completed their courses and have employment in all cases where they desire it, and 53,000 have deferred for the present time their acceptance of training. The number eligible under the law may reach close to 400,000, and facilities will continue to be afforded, unmindful of the necessary cost, until every obligation is fulfilled.

Two hundred and seventy-six thousand patients have been hospitalized, more than a quarter of a million discharged, and 25,678 patients are in our hospitals to-day.

Four hundred and sixteen thousand awards of compensation have been made on account of death or disability, and $480,000,000 have been paid to disabled men or their dependent relatives. One hundred and seventy-five thousand disabled ex-service men are now receiving compensation along with medical or hospital care where needed, and a quarter of a million checks go out monthly in distributing the $8,000,000 payment on indisputable obligations.

I recite the figures to remind the Congress how generously and how properly it has opened the Treasury doors to discharge the obligations of the Nation to those to whom it indisputably owes compensation and care. Though undying gratitude is the meed of everyone who served, it is not to be said that a material bestowal is an obligation to those who emerged from the great conflict not only unharmed but physically, mentally, and spiritually richer for the great experience. If an obligation were to be admitted, it would be to charge the adjusted compensation bill with inadequacy and stinginess wholly unbecoming our Republic. Such a bestowal, to be worth while, must be generous and without apology. Clearly the bill returned herewith takes cognizance of the inability of the Government wisely to bestow, and says, in substance, "We do not have the cash; we do not believe in a tax levy to meet the situation, but here is our note; you may have our credit for half its worth." This is not compensation, but rather a pledge by the Congress, while the executive branch of the Government is left to provide for payments falling due in ever-increasing amounts.

When the bill was under consideration in the House I expressed the conviction that any grant of bonus ought to provide the means of paying it, and I was unable to suggest any plan other than that of a general sales tax. Such a plan was unacceptable to the Congress, and the bill has been enacted without even a suggested means of meeting the cost. Indeed, the cost is not definitely known, either for the immediate future or in the ultimate settlement. The Treasury estimates, based on what seems the most likely exercise of the options, figures the direct cost at approximately $145,000,000 for 1923, $225,000,000 for 1924, $114,000,000 for 1925, $312,000,000 for 1926, making a total of $795,000,000 for the first four years of its operation and a total cost in excess of $4,000,000,000. No estimate of the large indirect cost ever has been made. The certificate plan sets up no reserve against the ultimate liability. The plan avoids any considerable direct outlay by the Government during the earlier years of the bill's proposed operations, but the loans on the certificates would be floated on the credit of the Nation. This is borrowing on the Nation's credit just as truly as though the loans were made by direct Government borrowing, and involves a dangerous abuse of public credit. Moreover, the certificate plan of payment is little less than certified inability of the Government to pay, and invites a practice in sacrificial barter which I can not sanction.

It is worth remembering that the public credit is founded on the popular belief in the defensibility of public expenditure as well as the Government's ability to pay. Loans come from every rank in life, and our heavy tax burdens reach, directly or indirectly, every element in our citizenship. To add one-sixth of the total sum of our public debt for a distribution among less than 5,000,000 out of 110,000,000, whether inspired by grateful sentiment or political expediency, would undermine the confidence on which our credit is builded and establish the precedent of distributing public funds whenever the proposal and the numbers affected make it seem politically appealing to do so.

Congress clearly appraised the danger of borrowing directly to finance a bestowal which is without obligation, and manifestly recognized the financial problems with which the Nation is confronted. Our maturing promises to pay within the current fiscal year amount to approximately $4,000,000,000, most of which will have to be refunded. Within the next six years more than $10,000,000,000 of debt will mature and will have to be financed. These outstanding and maturing obligations are difficult enough to meet without the complication of added borrowings, every one of which threatens higher interest and delays the adjustment to stable Government financing and the diminution of Federal taxes to the defensible cost of Government.

It is sometimes thoughtlessly urged that it is a simple thing for the rich Republic to add four billions to its indebtedness. This impression comes from the readiness of the public response to the Government's appeal for funds amid the stress of war. It is to be remembered that in the war everybody was ready to give his all. Let us not recall the comparatively few exceptions. Citizens of every degree of competence loaned and sacrificed, precisely in the same spirit that our armed forces went out for service. The war spirit impelled. To a war necessity there was but one answer, but a peace bestowal on the ex-service men, as though the supreme offering could be paid for with cash, is a perversion of public funds, a reversal of the policy which exalted patriotic service in the past, and suggests that future defense is to be inspired by compensation rather than consciousness of duty to flag and country.

The pressing problem of the Government is that of diminishing our burdens rather than adding thereto. It is the problem of the world. War inflations and war expenditures have unbalanced budgets and added to indebtedness until the whole world is staggering under the load. We have been driving in every direction to curtail our expenditures and establish economies without impairing the essentials of governmental activities. It has been a difficult and unpopular task. It is vastly more applauded to expend than to deny. After nearly a year and a quarter of insistence and persuasion, with a concerted drive to reduce Government expenditure in every quarter possible, it would wipe out everything thus far accomplished to add now this proposed burden, and it would rend the commitment to economy and saving so essential to our future welfare.

The financial problems of the Government are too little heeded until we are face to face with a great emergency. The diminishing income of the Government, due to the receding tides of business and attending incomes, has been overlooked momentarily, but can not be long ignored. The latest Budget figures for the current fiscal year show an estimated deficit of more than $650,000,000 and a further deficit for the year succeeding, even after counting upon all interest collections on foreign indebtedness which the Government is likely to receive. To add to our pledges to pay, except as necessity compels, must seem no less than governmental folly. Inevitably it means increased taxation, which Congress was unwilling to levy for the purposes of this bill, and will turn us from the course toward economy so essential to promote the activities which contribute to common welfare.

It is to be remembered that the United States played no self-seeking part in the World War, and pursued an unselfish policy after the cause was won. We demanded no reparations for the cost involved, no payments out of which obligations to our soldiers could be met. I have not magnified the willing outlay in behalf of those to whom we have a sacred obligation. It is essential to remember that a more than $4,000,000,000 pledge to the able-bodied ex-service men now will not diminish the later obligation which will have to be met when the younger veterans of to-day shall contribute to the rolls of the aged, indigent, and dependent. It is as inevitable as that the years will pass that pension provision for World War veterans will be made, as it has been made for those who served in previous wars. It will cost more billions than I venture to suggest. There will be justification when the need is apparent, and a rational financial policy to-day is necessary to make the Nation ready for the expenditure which is certain to be required in the coming years. The contemplation of such a policy is in accord with the established practice of the Nation, and puts the service men of the World War on the same plane as the millions of men who fought the previous battles of the Republic.

I confess a regret that I must sound a note of disappointment to the many ex-service men who have the impression that it is as simple a matter for the Government to bestow billions in peace as it was to expend billions in war. I regret to stand between them and the pitiably small compensation proposed. I dislike to be out of accord with the majority of Congress which has voted the bestowal. The simple truth is that this bill proposes a Government obligation of more than four billions without a provision of funds for the extraordinary expenditure, which the executive branch of the Government must finance in the face of difficult financial problems, and the complete defeat of our commitment to effect economies. I would rather appeal, therefore, to the candid reflections of Congress and the country, and to the ex-service men in particular, as to the course better suited to further the welfare of our country. These ex-soldiers who served so gallantly in war, and who are to be so conspicuous in the progress of the Republic in the half century before us, must know that nations can only survive where taxation is restrained from the limits of oppression, where the Public Treasury is locked against class legislation, but ever open to public necessity and prepared to meet all essential obligations. Such a policy makes a better country for which to fight, or to have fought, and affords a surer abiding place in which to live and attain.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 19, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield; but I want to finish my remarks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly the Senator would not want to yield for my motion. I was going to move that the consideration of the message and the bill be postponed until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. Will not the Senator permit me to finish my remarks? They will be brief.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will await the conclusion of the Senator's remarks before making my motion.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to be heard?

Mr. CURTIS. If a motion is to be made, I want to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside while the motion is being considered.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has called my attention to a paragraph in the President's veto message referring to the compensation as a meager sum.

It is true that the individual amount to be paid to the soldiers is comparatively small; but let me give to the Senate what this comparatively small sum would do and how it would aid the ex-service men. It would enable many veterans outside of Washington to escape the rent profiteers. There is no hope of anybody escaping the rent profiteer in Washington any more than there is hope of escaping a gang of gray wolves when they pursue a helpless man.

It will enable the veterans in many places to construct or to begin to construct small homes or houses on small farms. It will enable others to learn or commence trades or professions. The loan feature will enable others to avert disaster of foreclosure. It will enable them to marry, and thus insure to future generations that American ideals shall be perpetuated.

I read in the commencement of my remarks a statement from a speech of then Senator Harding, now President Harding, in Ohio on the 29th or 30th day of October, 1920, wherein, according to what I read, he was reported to have said that he was in favor of adjusted compensation. With that scrupulosity which should characterize the remarks of a Senator, and especially when he is attempting to quote others, I have not relied on my mere memory of what he said or the mere memory of other people as to what he said. That would be unfair to him. I am going to read what the Cincinnati Enquirer says he said.

I read from the Cincinnati Enquirer, from the issue of Saturday morning, October 30, 1920, omitting the headlines because sometimes in journalism the text does not support the headlines.

It seems that in the course of his speech Mr. Harding was interrupted, and some of his friends objected to the interruption, but with that courtesy which has always characterized Warren G. Harding, he said, referring to his questioner, "Do not put him out. Let him ask his question." That is just such a statement as I would have expected from the presidential nominee. I now read what the Ohio paper said, referring thereto:

> Mr. Harding then declared that the House of Representatives did pass the bill, and said the Senate will, but that the American service men themselves did not want such a bill passed at a time when Government bonds were below par. He further declared that the bonus system can not be established until the means can be provided and that "that called for Republican control."

Bonds are at par, so that particular objection has vanished and evaporated. "The method of the financing the bonus will be taken care of by Republican control." It can not be denied that there is Republican control. There is a Republican in the White House and a Republican majority in both Houses of Congress.

I thought it nothing but fair in the debate on the subject that I should not confine myself to my memory. I was not present. So I have caused a publication, friendly to the nominee and to the President, to be brought into the Chamber that I might read what was written by the reporter respecting the observation then made on this subject by the nominee.

War leaves in its train not only death and wounds and disease. Obligations of various kinds are incurred. To bury the dead soldier, to pension his mother or his widow, to bind up the wounds of the wounded soldier, to hospitalize the disabled soldier is a part of what is a duty toward the soldier. Moreover, so far as we may do so, to equalize his compensation is a duty.

As for the statement of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that those who did not go abroad should not have a bonus, I ought to pass that by and ignore it. Many thousands called into the service of their country wanted to go, were anxious to go, and said to their commanders, "Lead me to the battle line." I regret that any Senator, even in ill humor or otherwise, should have made a reflection upon those who did not, by the legerdemain of doom or a turn of the wheel of fortune or chance, or whatever you may call it, have the opportunity to go. I honor those who at home prepared themselves in spirit and in physique to go, just as I honor those who did go.

It is said as another argument that our death rate, our percentage of killed in the American forces, did not amount to as much as in other countries. Be that as it may, let us reflect on the figures; some 80,000 American men in manhood's rosy morn were killed. When I further reflect on the figures, I ascertain that while our mortality rate in battle and in hospitals, on sea and in sky, was not as great as that of some other countries, we had at least three men killed for every millionaire we made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I heard the Senator from Arizona correctly, he said he wanted to measure the soldier by the same yardstick by which everybody else was measured. Is that correct?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know what other rule of life to set up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know, but is that what the Senator said?

Mr. ASHURST. I said that when it comes to discharging moral obligations or legal obligations which the Government owes I want you to consider the soldiers' claims like you consider the claim of the banker behind the counter, like you measure the railroad builder or the contractor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I have understood the Senator, he has not denied the accuracy of my quotation. He said he wanted the soldier measured by the same yardstick that we would use to measure other people. The objection to that yardstick theory is that the soldier served upon a different theory. He bared his breast to the storm of artillery and wounds if he went to France. Of course, there were 2,000,000 of those people for whom the Senator is contending who never left the United States, and I object to the idea that we can measure them with the same yardstick by which the miserable, cowardly cur who remained in America measured himself.

Mr. ASHURST. I said during the Senator's absence that if a soldier tried to escape the draft, if a soldier proved a slacker——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about that.

Mr. ASHURST. I am talking about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I am not.

Mr. ASHURST. But that the soldier who went to war and the soldier who remained at home and who prepared himself physically and spiritually to go and was willing to go and ready to go and anxious to go should be considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I can not yield at this point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Talking about a man who was called in the draft as being spiritually and physically anxious to go is a hyperbole of rhetoric——

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will not consider me offensive if I decline to yield at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will not cut me off in the middle of a sentence. That is a hyperbole of rhetoric. I was contending a few minutes ago that the Senator from Missouri would not dare to introduce an amendment cutting out of the benefits of this proposed act all men who were never under fire. Now I ask the Senator from Arizona if he will offer an amendment cutting out from the benefits of this proposed act all men who were never under fire?

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President; I will not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought not.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Mississippi talked here once about sentiment. He has forgotten almost as much as he has learned, and he has learned a great deal in his life.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have forgotten how much?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has forgotten almost as much as he has learned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, have I? I have forgotten a great deal.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator speaks about being "under fire." I have no doubt that many of the young men whom the mysterious finger of duty touched and called to their country's colors were "under fire." There are intangible fires which burn as brightly and as fiercely as those that are lighted elsewhere. The soldier who saw the justness of his country's cause, but who was unable to march with his brethren to the field to assist them in turning back the foe, endured fire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——
Mr. ASHURST. I have concluded my remarks.
Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.
Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from North Dakota.
Mr. McCUMBER. I move that further consideration of the bill and the President's veto message be deferred until to-morrow at the opening of the daily session of the Senate.
Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I desire to be heard.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to make a point of order.
Mr. CURTIS. Before the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is put I desire to ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until the pending question shall have been acted upon.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. HEFLIN. What is the unfinished business?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the Liberian loan bill.
Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to that being laid aside.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the pending matter may be acted upon without laying aside the unfinished business.
Mr. CURTIS. If that is the opinion of the Chair, very well, but, in my opinion, after having looked up the authorities, I think the unfinished business should be laid aside. I therefore had rather have it laid aside temporarily. No harm can come from such action.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has raised a point of order. The Senator will state his point of order.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of order I desire to make is that the pending question is a question of high privilege. The veto message has been laid before the Senate by the President of the Senate for consideration. The Senate, of course, can vote on it now, with or without debate; it can refer it to a committee, or it might postpone action; but it can not fix a time for voting without a special order of the Senate. I therefore make the point of order that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is not in order. If he desires a special order of the Senate, which will require a two-thirds vote, that the bill and veto message shall be voted on to-morrow at 12 o'clock, I think that would be in order, but I make the point of order against his motion as it has been put.
Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me correct the Senator. I did not ask that the bill and veto message be voted upon; I simply moved that the consideration of the matter be postponed until to-morrow at the hour when the Senate shall convene; that has nothing to do with a vote.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is identically the same proposition as fixing a time for the consideration of the matter. We can not go into to-morrow and foreclose the time of to-morrow by a motion of that kind; it can only be done by a special order of the Senate, which requires a two-thirds vote. A motion to postpone further consideration until to-morrow is the same thing as moving that on to-morrow at 12 o'clock the veto message shall be taken up for consideration notwithstanding what business may be then before the Senate. So that I make the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order, for, whatever vote might be required to agree to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, the motion is in order.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. President, in order that we may know what the vote is I ask for the yeas and nays.
Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to be heard on the motion.
Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the veto message is before the Senate. If addresses are to be made upon it, they may be made during the course of the present session. So I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota what particular good can be accomplished by formally withholding action until 12 o'clock to-morrow? As I understand, every Senator, with possibly one exception, is either paired or covered on this question, and why should we not at least proceed to the consideration of the veto message?
Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there has been a general understanding—and that understanding was based upon inquiry—that in all probability the bill and veto message would not be sent over from the House of Representatives to the Senate until about 4 o'clock to-day. They were messaged over two or three hours before that time because of the expedition with which the House under its rules may act. But a number of Senators have asked me whether, in my opinion, of course, there would be a vote to-day, and my opinion has been that we would not vote on the question to-day. I think one Senator spoke to me this morning and stated that he had to leave to-day but would be back to-morrow, and wanted to be here when the vote was taken. He also asked my opinion, and again I stated that I thought the question would not be voted upon to-day. I think that undoubtedly we can vote to-morrow, but I hope, under all the circumstances, even though a single vote may not be changed, that the matter may be deferred until to-morrow.
There are absent, somewhere on the face of the globe, 16 Senators who voted in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill; there are absent two, and only two, Senators who voted against it. I do not know where all the absent Senators are, but I know it is impossible for 16 absent Senators in favor of the measure to pair themselves with two absent Senators who are opposed to it, and therefore someone has got to be left out. It may be that some of those present may have paired with some of the absentees, but I am quite certain that that can not be true as to the entire list. I wish that every Senator of the United States, instead of being in Hongkong or on the Pacific Ocean, would be in the Chamber this afternoon. I should like at least to have the moral influence of those Senators who have the courage of their own convictions. While it may be, Mr. President, that there are those who would change their position because of a veto, I am not prepared to believe that until the change has actually been registered, and I should like to hear directly, if possible, from any Senator who voted in favor of the adjusted compensation bill as to whether he had changed his attitude.
Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?
Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.
Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am interested to know if the Senator from North Dakota can inform the Senate whether any of the Senators who are now absent are expected to be present to-morrow. I ask the question, with the Senator's permission, for the reason that some Senators on this side of the Chamber who voted for the bill and who will vote the same way upon the reconsideration of the matter, notwithstanding the objections of the President, expect to leave the city to-night. We are constantly confronted with the condition that some Senators are returning, while others are leaving. One or two Senators have just stated that it is almost imperative that they leave here to-night. I should make no objection to postponing the reconsideration of the bill until to-morrow if the Senator, upon a canvass of the matter, is satisfied that it is best to take that course.
I agree with the Senator that however the debate may be prolonged it will not result in changing the vote of any Senator. This subject matter has been before the Senate and before the country so long that every Senator now knows his mind. There are some Senators who have announced that, having voted for the bill, if the President vetoed it they would vote to sustain his veto. That attitude is as incomprehensible to me as it is to the Senator from North Dakota—the announcement by a Senator, in advance of action by the Executive, that he proposes to be controlled by the opinion of the Executive in a matter of this character.
[At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives which appears elsewhere under its appropriate heading. Among other things, the message announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the final adjournment of Congress on the 22d instant, at 2 o'clock p. m.]
Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the further indulgence of the Senator from North Dakota, I was just about to suggest to him that an adjournment of the Congress is in all probability close at hand. The House of Representatives has just this instant sent to the Senate a concurrent resolution providing for adjournment on the 22d instant; and if we wait until to-morrow to begin the formal consideration of this veto message and the reconsideration of the bill, we may be driven to the alternative of either extending the session beyond the time provided for in the concurrent resolution which has just come to the Senate or of seeing the session expire with the question of reconsideration of the adjusted compensation bill undisposed of. I think the time has arrived when the Congress ought to settle this matter. I think it would be a mistake to carry it over beyond the present session.
Mr. NEW. Mr. President——
Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from North Dakota has not suggested on the floor that the final decision of the issues involved in the President's veto and in the question of reconsideration should go beyond the end of the present session; but any one can see that with unlimited debate in the Senate, if this message goes over until to-morrow and we adjourn the day following, this subject more than likely will be debated until the end of the session, and still the question as to whether or not the Congress is going to pass an adjusted compensation bill will be undetermined.

Whatever may be the viewpoint of Senators as to whether there should be adjusted-compensation legislation or whether that legislation should be defeated, we ought to pass upon the question promptly and decisively. Three years, almost four years have come and gone since the armistice was signed; and the men who are to be the beneficiaries of this legislation are entitled to know soon whether the American Congress is going to comply with their request or to deny it. It is better for the country, better for Congress, better for the soldiers themselves that this issue be settled as speedily as possible. For that reason I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not insist on this matter being laid aside until to-morrow, but that we may proceed to the consideration of this important subject now, with the view of voting on it some time to-morrow, if possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. NEW, and Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I have examined the list with great care. With a single exception, every Senator on both sides is either present or covered by a pair. Owing to making double pairs, there is one odd vote that can not be covered unless it is covered voluntarily here by Senators present. With that single exception, every Senator is here or his vote is covered with a pair, and I can not find out that any change is likely to occur now.

I do not wish to interrupt the Senator to make a speech, but it seems to me we ought to dispose of the matter at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further suggestion?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the statement just made by the Senator from Massachusetts is confirmed in the opinion of the Senator from North Dakota, and all Senators are covered by pairs, why can we not proceed now to the discussion of this subject, and vote this evening, provided the debate terminates this evening?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I rose to state what the Senator from Massachusetts has just said. To that I would now add the further statement that I personally know of Senators who came to Washington yesterday to be present in this Chamber for the purpose of voting, and with the understanding that the vote was to be had yesterday. They have remained over, expecting the vote to-day. They are very anxious to get away from Washington. In one or two instances they have the best of reasons for that anxiety—the question of personal health. They are here not only at inconvenience but in one or two instances rather against the judgment of their physicians. I know of Senators who came here, and were here yesterday, expecting to vote on the matter, who were compelled to go away, and are therefore absent to-day, and have to be accounted for by the arrangement of pairs. That situation will exist in the case of other Senators if this matter goes over until to-morrow, and I am quite sure that it will not change a single vote. The result of this vote is, I think, predetermined. I think 95 of the Senators will be accounted for in this vote, whether it is taken to-day or to-morrow, and I can see no possible object in delaying it for another day.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think if we were all to be governed by our health, and if we felt a little under the weather if we should absent ourselves from the Senate, there would hardly have been a quorum here any day during the last several months; but some Senators have been willing to sacrifice health to be here and attend to their duties, and the vast majority of those who are absent to-day are not absent on account of their health and they ought to be here in the Senate.

I do not know that a postponement until to-morrow will change a vote, Mr. President. I simply feel that there is a bare possibility that between now and to-morrow some Senators who have weakened a little upon this vote might be induced to have a little more courage pumped into their souls and to vote the same way to-morrow, if we should vote to-morrow, that they voted when the bill was before the Senate.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. NEW. If that were to result from the delay, I think the Senator's majority would sadly dwindle.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator thinks more of them would weaken than would stay by their convictions. I hate to think that, but the Senator may be correct.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator apparently is laboring under the apprehension that they originally voted their convictions.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am laboring under that impression, that their votes were honest votes. I accuse no Senator of casting a vote that was against his convictions, and I think they were candid.

I want to say, in answer to one suggestion that was made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that under the circumstances I should like to see this matter made an issue in the November 7 campaign throughout this country. I should like to have it up to every Senator who is running whether he believes he ought to sustain this veto or whether he ought not.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. In the present situation, and with our absentees, I am afraid that we have not the two-thirds majority. If all were present that belonged here, I am doubtful if every one of those would be willing to double up and pair, two of them against one, in a matter in which the House passed the bill by about five to one, and the Senate by more than two-thirds majority upon a direct vote. I never would be willing to say that I would allow myself to be paired with some one else against one vote against that. If we had those Senators present, I think a few of them might feel somewhat as I do in this matter, and would refuse to pair on the basis of two to one under those conditions. I admit that the other side could adopt a rule of that character as well.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator does not contend that those Senators will be here to-morrow. What the Senator really is arguing for is a postponement until December.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; I ask for a postponement until to-morrow. I think the matter probably will be postponed until to-morrow, anyway. I doubt if we will get a vote on it this afternoon.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator willing to let us vote on his motion to postpone?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I am willing to have a vote, but not before I have had my say. Then it can be voted down, if Senators so desire.

I have nothing more to say with reference to the motion. If the Senate prefers to go on this afternoon and discuss it a while and then adjourn without action, they can vote against the motion. My purpose was to allow those Senators who have weak knees to be strengthened up a little between now and to-morrow noon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an announcement. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order made by the Senator from Alabama, so far as the vote required to make the motion of the Senator from North Dakota the special order, which, in the judgment of the Chair, the motion of the Senator from North Dakota would be, is well taken, and the Chair will hold that it will require a two-thirds vote to adopt this motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. To postpone the consideration of the message and bill until to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that that is a special order. The motion is that the consideration of the bill be postponed until the convening of the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if that is the holding of the Chair at this time, I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled on the matter as yet, but desires to say that that will be its ruling, and that, therefore, the roll must be called upon the motion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am very anxious that all Senators who want to get home shall have an opportunity to go. A great many of them are coming in now whom I have not seen for so long that I feel like having them sworn in again. Those of us who have stayed here every day and attended the sessions since Congress convened are entitled to have something to say about the plan of procedure in this body, and the question that is now up for consideration is the most important question that will come before the Senate, and we ought to keep it constantly before the Senate until it is acted on.

What is the use of setting it aside temporarily? I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I am heartily with him if he thinks it is necessary for it to go over. If he thinks that we can get some of our absent friends here by to-morrow, we will discuss until then if necessary. We are not going to hurry with this thing. We did hurry when we called these boys to the battle line; we are not going to hurry now when it looks as though they have the votes to deny them justice.

If the Senator from North Dakota thinks that Senators will come in to-night and be here to-morrow so that we can do away with this double-up pair arrangement by which two men favoring the soldiers' bonus have to be paired with one man who is against it, if he has any assurance that those men will be here to-morrow, I am willing to cooperate with him, and, whether this motion prevails or not, we will keep this measure before the Senate until to-morrow, and maybe the next day, if necessary. I would not do anything that would even look as if we were slighting the soldier in this instance or hurrying this thing through.

I want to do what is best for the soldier.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting his remarks—and I will take only a moment—I want to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that it seems to me that nothing would be gained by postponing the consideration of this matter officially until to-morrow. It is perfectly evident it is going to be considered all the afternoon, and is being considered now, and I agree with him, I think it will make no difference. I do not think any weak-kneed Senator will have the pregnant hinges of his knees stiffened overnight, and I do not think any strong-kneed Senator will weaken. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw his motion, in the interest of expediting a vote, and to let the discussion proceed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Chair has announced, and I want to be allowed to say I do not agree with him, that he would hold that it requires a two-thirds vote in order to postpone the consideration of a bill for one day, practically holding that the postponement of the consideration of a bill for one day is equivalent to a special order; and we could not settle the question until that had been determined. Then, if there was a lack of a two-thirds vote, the question might again arise, and it might take half a day's discussion. That being the case, to avoid unnecessary delay, and upon the assurance of the Senator from Alabama that we probably will have no vote to-day, I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn, and the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator proceeds with his speech, will he allow me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolutions of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 70. Concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 80,000 copies of the tariff law of 1922; and

H. Con. Res. 71. Concurrent resolution providing for adjourning the present session of Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3938. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county courts of Lafayette and Ray Counties, in the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

S. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution providing for the consent of the Congress of the United States of America to a compact and agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri respecting the erection, maintenance, and operation of the waterworks plants of the cities of Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., the taxation thereof and exercise of eminent domain in connection therewith by each State;

H. R. 7456. An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8475. An act to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith;

H. R. 9275. An act for the relief of Frances Kelly;

H. R. 10196. An act to provide for the applicability of the pension laws to certain classes of persons in the military and naval services not entitled to the benefits of article 3 of the war risk insurance act, as amended;

H. R. 11173. An act to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended; and

H. R. 11347. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale.

SPEECH BY SENATOR POMERENE.

Mr. HARRISON. On yesterday in the House of Representatives there was granted a request to print in the RECORD the speech of Representative FESS, of Ohio, who is a candidate for the United States Senate in that State, delivered before the Republican State convention of Ohio, and that speech appears in the RECORD this morning. I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD the speech of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the Democratic State convention of Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMICK. A good many speeches of this character have been inserted in the RECORD by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON. Not as good as the one I propose to have printed.

Mr. McCORMICK. I was about to say a word on that point. It may be that to-morrow I shall have occasion to offer something which purports to be a reply to some of the speeches introduced in this fashion by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is the Senator's speech, we will be delighted to have it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I assume, of course, that the Senator will assure me that no objection will be made to-morrow to the incorporation of matter of that sort.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not object to the Senator's speech.

Mr. HEFLIN. If it is the Senator's speech, of course not.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I shall object to both, and I object now.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah does not object to the insertion of the speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. After there has been incorporated in the RECORD at Government expense a speech by Representative FESS, of Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. If the House wants to incorporate that speech in the RECORD, well and good. I gave notice, when the speeches were balanced up the other day, that no more political speeches should go into the RECORD with my consent.

Mr. HARRISON. But they are unbalanced now.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be put in in the House.

Mr. HARRISON. It will be put in in the Senate by being read to the Senate if I can not get unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right. I have no objection to a Senator reading the speech.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I hope the Senator will sit here and listen to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for the purpose of making a report?

Mr. HEFLIN. In just a moment. I want to say that just two or three days ago the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] got unanimous consent to print a speech in the RECORD delivered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the eagle-eyed Senator from Utah was not here objecting then.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there was a request made from the Democratic side for the insertion of a Democratic speech in the RECORD, and at that time I gave notice that I would not object to the Democratic speech going into the RECORD, but that hereafter I would object to either a Republican or a Democratic speech going into the RECORD, and that is what I have done to-day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me a moment while I ask to have the conference report on the coal commission bill laid before the Senate. I think it will take but a moment or two to agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho has the right to present the conference report.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BORAH submitted the following report:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal and all questions and problems arising out of and connected with the coal industry, there is hereby established a governmental agency to be known and designated as the United States coal commission, to be composed of not more than seven members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No Member of the United States Senate or of the House of Representatives shall be eligible to serve on said commission. Said commission shall elect a chairman by majority vote of its members, shall maintain central offices in the District of Columbia, but may, whenever it deems it necessary, meet at such other places as it may determine. A member of the commission may be removed by the President for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office but for no other cause. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $7,500 a year. Any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Said commission shall cease to exist one year after the taking effect of this act.

"The term 'person' as used in this act means any individual, partnership, corporation, or association; the term 'coal' means anthracite, bituminous, and other coal, lignite, coke, and culm whether in place, extracted, or banked.

"It shall be the duty of said commission to investigate and ascertain fully the facts and conditions and study the problems and questions relative to the coal industry, with a view to and for the purpose of aiding, assisting, and advising Congress in matters of legislation which will insure a supply of this commodity to the industries and the people generally throughout the country and maintain the uninterrupted flow of commerce among the States, or any legislation which Congress may after said investigation deem wise and which under the Constitution Congress has the power to enact.

"To this end said commission shall ascertain and report to the President and Congress: As to the ownership and titles of the mines; prices of coal; the organizations and persons connected with the coal industry; cost of production; profits realized by the operators or owners of said mines during the last 10 years; profits of other persons or corporations having to do with production, distribution, or sale of coal; labor costs; wages paid; wage contracts; irregular production; waste of coal; and suggestions as to the remedy for the same; the conditions generally under which coal is produced; distribution; the causes which from time to time induce strikes, thereby depriving interstate carriers of their fuel supply and otherwise interrupting the flow of interstate commerce; and all facts, circumstances, or conditions which would be deemed helpful in determining and establishing a wise and efficient policy by the Government relative to said industry.

"Said commission shall, under the provisions of this act, make a separate investigation and report for the anthracite industry, which investigation and report shall cover all of the matters specified in the last preceding paragraph, and shall cover also every other phase of the anthracite industry, including the production, transportation, and distribution of anthracite, and the organized or other relationships, if any, among the mine operators or the mine workers, or among any persons engaged in the production, transportation, or distribution of coal.

"Said commission shall also submit recommendations relative to:

"(a) Standardizing the mines upon the basis of their economic productive capacity and regarding the closing down of mines which, by reason of their natural limitations, or other conditions, fall below the standard.

"(b) Ascertaining and standardizing the cost of living for mine workers and the living conditions which must be supplied or afforded in order to surround the workmen with reasonable comforts, and standardizing also as far as practicable the amount of work a man shall perform for a reasonable wage, recognizing the value and effect of such surroundings in respect to their efficiency.

"(c) Standardizing a basis of arriving at the overhead cost of producing and distributing the coal, including delivery at the door of the consumer, recognizing in this compilation that the standardized cost of living to the miners should be the first and irreducible item of expense.

"(d) The advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation, or control in the coal industry.

"Said commission shall render its first report and recommendations to the Congress and to the President not later than January 15, 1923. Said commission shall render its separate report on the anthracite industry on or before July 1, 1923, and shall endeavor, in said separate report and in the recommendations contained therein regarding wages in the anthracite industry, to take into consideration the conditions obtaining up to the time when said report is made.

"That any officer or employee of the commission who shall make public any information obtained by the commission without its authority, unless directed by a court, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

"That any member of said commission shall have power to administer oaths, to subpœna and examine witnesses, and to compel the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and to take or authorize the taking of the deposition of any person before any person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction and be subscribed to by the deponent. The same fees and mileage as are paid in the courts of the United States shall be paid in the case of witnesses subpœnaed or depositions taken under this act.

"No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying and deposing, or from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may be compelled to testify or produce in evidence; except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"Any member of the commission, officer or employee thereof, duly authorized in writing by the commission, shall, at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination, have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized by this act to investigate.

"That every officer or employee of the United States whenever requested by the commission shall supply it with any data or information pertaining to any investigation by the commission which may be contained in the records of the office of such officer or employee.

"That any person who shall willfully neglect or refuse to attend and testify or depose, or to produce or permit access to any book, account, record, document, correspondence, or paper, as herein provided for, shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"That the commission may appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents; and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses, including salaries, traveling expenses of its members, secretary, officers, employees, and agents, and witness fees as are necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in the commission by this act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time, and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the efficient administration of this act. All of the expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission. No salary or compensation of any employee shall exceed $7,500 per year.

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available until expended, for carrying out the provisions of this act.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'To establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"To establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. E. BORAH,
THOMAS STERLING,
DAVID I. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
HOMER HOCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report just submitted.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not object, if it will take but a moment.

Mr. BORAH. I think it will take but a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report upon the coal commission bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DIAL. I want to examine that bill, and I object, for the present at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina objects to the present consideration of the report. It will lie on the table and be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WHITE HOUSE POLICE (S. DOC. NO. 261).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1923, for salaries, uniforms, and equipment, White House Police, in amount $53,870, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, CHINA TRADE ACT (S. DOC. NO. 262).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, fiscal year 1923, for salaries and expenses "China Trade Act, 1922," in amount $35,000, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF TARIFF ACT, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 70), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of Congress 80,000 copies of the tariff law of 1922 in pamphlet form, indexed, to be apportioned as follows:

Thirty-five thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House document room, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and that the Public Printer be authorized to print for sale such copies of said law as in his discretion may be necessary.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate concur in the resolution sent from the House of Representatives.

The resolution was concurred in.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 71), which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of September, 1922, at 2 o'clock p. m.

FEDERAL AID IN DOMESTIC DISTURBANCES.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Printing a resolution with reference to a matter which was discussed upon the floor the other day, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 354) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Document 209, entitled "Federal Aid in Domestic Disturbances," together with additional data from War Department, bringing subject matter up to 1922, be printed as a Senate document.

WENATCHEE NATIONAL FOREST LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LENROOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, and the amendment to the title, and agree to the same.

I. L. LENROOT,
R. N. STANFIELD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following order:

Ordered, That the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is hereby relieved from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs and assigned to membership on the Committee on Naval Affairs and that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is hereby relieved from further service upon the Committee on Naval Affairs and assigned to membership on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wish to state that this order is submitted at the request of the two Senators from Pennsylvania.

The order was agreed to.

TRICOUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on yesterday upon my motion the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for a reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska, and requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House be reconsidered, and that the House be requested to return the message of the Senate with the accompanying papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the message announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for the reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska, and asking a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, together with the accompanying papers.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW FUNDS.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a statement relating to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian funds.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATUS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW FUNDS.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., July 3, 1922.

The honorable COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

SIR: Your office letter of June 24 received advising of judgment in the amount of $175,000 being rendered against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. As requested, I am giving you herein a financial statement as to the status of the Choctaw and Chickasaw assets and liabilities, which is made as of June 30, 1922:

Reserve for judgment Mansfield-McMurray case, estimated	[2] 262,500.00	[2] 87,500.00
	1,106,294.86	348,355.84

[2] Mansfield-McMurray have no judgment against Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations.

You ask for a list of the individual accounts of the Mississippi Choctaws. It is impossible at the present time to furnish you this as everyone is busy with the closing of the quarter and the fiscal year. As this work will require a few weeks, the checking of the individual accounts of the Mississippi Choctaws will be commenced as soon as possible and report will then be made to you.

The outstanding unpaid shares of the per capita and equalization payments as of June 30, 1922, are given as follows:

Year.	Choctaw.		Chickasaw
1904	$40	$78,560.00	$40	$14,680.00
1906	35	13,965.00	35	2,275.00

Total	.....	562,386.62	.....	80,866.51
Unpaid equalization payment	.....	8,158.24	.....	239.33
Total	.....	570,544.86	.....	81,105.84

Under the liabilities I have given the amounts and purposes for which the funds should be reserved. The outstanding installments from the sale of tribal lands and property aggregate $1,362,342.50.

The disbursing agent has to his credit for the purpose of continuing to pay the per capita payments, $33,820.27 of Chickasaw funds on hand and $24,426.82 of Choctaw funds.

Respectfully,

CLARK WASSON,
Acting Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS—VETO MESSAGE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, returned by the President with his objections thereto.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it has been suggested here that probably there will be an effort made to postpone action upon the veto message until the Congress adjourns. I shall not contribute to any such program. I think the minds of Senators are made up, so I expect to speak only a little while.

I have advocated adjusted compensation from the beginning. I intend to vote now to pass the bill over the veto of the President. I want to comment briefly upon some of the language used by the President. He said:

> I was unable to suggest any plan other than that of a general sales tax.

I want to say to the Republican Party in Congress that it is responsible for the failure to have a distinct and workable plan in the bill. Under the leadership of the little giant from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], a Democrat, the Senate put into the adjusted compensation bill a provision by which the adjusted compensation could be paid in money without taxing the American people 5 cents. I wonder how the Republicans will explain to their constituents back home the action that plucked that provision out of the bill? What influence, pray tell me, caused that provision to be taken out? There we had provided a way to pay the adjusted compensation, to settle this indebtedness to the soldier. But a Republican Congress struck it out. It is now out. The bill went to the President with it stricken out by those on the hill who voted for adjusted compensation in a form, but who took out the provision that would have collected the money from the people across the sea who owe us, without taxing the American people, as I said, one 5-cent piece. No Republican in the House or Senate protested against striking it out. It was said further by the President:

> The diminishing income of the Government, due to the receding tides of business and attendant incomes, has been overlooked momentarily, but it can not be long ignored.

I suggest to the Senate and to the country that the time to pay particular attention to that subject was when the big income-tax payers, principally in Wall Street, New York, came down here and had stricken from our law a provision which collected from them $90,000,000 a year. That was the time to have objected to taking money needlessly out of the Treasury; again, when profiteers came and took $450,000,000 out, as I have said heretofore, and the remnants of those who had not yet collected on questionable war contracts, many of them, took out $700,000,000. That is a good big item. Five hundred and forty million dollars! If we had collected that from the time it was struck out last year, we would have had that money now and in another year we would have had that much more, and we could have used it to meet all these payments.

Yet the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] tells us that we are trying to equalize the profiteer and the soldier. Why, Mr. President, there is no equalization or equality about it. The profiteer has been brought up and put on the front seat. They have put a ring on his finger and a robe on his back and they have made him first. They put him on top. The men who stayed at home and took advantage of the condition of their Government, of its distress and misfortune, and made millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, came and demanded that the little part which the Government was getting from their swollen fortunes be cut off for them, and the Republican Congress did it—$90,000,000 to the big income-tax payers, $450,000,000 to the profiteers, seven hundred and odd million dollars to the war contractors, and then Senators stand up here and talk lightly and sneeringly about the soldier wanting adjusted compensation, simply what is due him.

Mr. President, they talk about these boys like they were trying to hold up the Government. They are not trying to do that. They are human beings. They have appetites, desires, and tastes. They want to be cared for and have something to keep the wolf from the door, and being unable to find employment they simply asked the Government that they served and saved to grant them adjusted compensation. They have been through trying times since they came home, Senators. I said here yesterday, and I am going to repeat it, that there are counties in the South and counties in the West where the local governments and State governments are postponing the payment of taxes because the people are not able to pay them. This is the fruit of deflation. Here was an opportunity to pay the adjusted compensation without collecting a dollar from the American people, and the Republicans refused to do it. Yet the President comes back and says, "You have not any way provided for me to collect the necessary funds." We provided a way in the Senate, but it was stricken out in conference, and the House without a murmur accepted it.

The President said:

> The Public Treasury is locked against class legislation but ever open to public necessity and prepared to meet all essential obligations.

Public necessity? Where is there a greater public necessity than that which provides something to eat for a starving soldier who saved the life of his Government? Where is there a public necessity more pressing upon the whole people, upon the Government itself, than to be just to the man who offered to die for his country?

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] a while ago in his very able speech called attention to the fact that we have just passed a tariff bill which taxes the American people on nearly everything from the cradle to the grave. I rose to interrupt the Senator just as he was concluding to read into his speech what the New York Herald, a Republican paper, said, and it was that this tariff bill will cost the American people $3,000,000,000 a year. Does that look like we are lifting the burden of taxation? Who is going to get that money?

The tariff barons and the trust magnates, 5,000 in number in the United States. This money will go into their pockets, and the American people are being taxed to enrich this particular class. That is class legislation gone mad. Yet when we come here and ask to be just to 4,000,000 soldiers we are told that we have class legislation up our sleeves and that the bill must not be passed.

Mr. President, the soldier has rendered the highest service that it was possible for mortal man to render to his country. He did not stop to count the cost; he never said anything about what he was leaving behind; he never complained about the job he was giving up or about the danger into which he was going. He went. He knew that the Government for which he was fighting was big enough and brave enough and generous enough to be just to him and to those with whom he fought. That was the thought which was uppermost in his mind; that he was fighting for a great and a good Government, the greatest in all the world. That is the idea he had; but, Mr. President, when he came home and his employment was gone and hard times were here he said, "I have got to live." Men all around him told him how much money they made while he was away. There were men in the employment of the Government who were getting big pay, fat salaries, while he was drawing only a dollar a day, and had then been discharged without a nickel in his pocket by the Government he had saved. Naturally he appealed for justice to the Government that he had saved. Was it not quite natural that he should turn to somebody seeking something with which to satisfy his appetite, seeking something to put on his back in the way of raiment, seeking shelter from the storm? Was not that quite natural, I ask Senators who oppose adjusted compensation?

Mr. President, as I have said here before, the soldier saw these big income-tax payers being relieved of their part of the burden; he saw the profiteers relieved and the contractors relieved, and he said, "Surely my Government will be just to me; I ask this little compensation—$1.25 a day. I ask to have it passed upon; I ask to have it adjudicated, in order to determine whether or not the Government owes it."

A great many of our highbrow friends stand up here and talk about those of us who are in favor of this bill simply being so for political purposes. Mr. President, I should dislike to think that a man who desired to be just to a soldier who had offered his life for him and his country was playing politics. I hope and I know that there is enough innate love of justice in this Government and a due appreciation and gratitude to its soldiers entertained by Senators who do not obey the mandate of any special interest in this Government to stand here and fight for a fair deal for these boys. I am not impugning the motives of the Senators who are voting to deny these boys adjusted compensation, but I do not propose that they shall come on this floor and talk about "cheapening heroism" and "capitalizing patriotism" without having something said to them in reply.

If I were disposed to do so, I might say that Wall Street is bitterly against adjusted compensation; that Wall Street has fought it since it was first suggested; that Wall Street has carried on a propaganda in the country to defeat it outright. I am voting against Wall Street and I am voting on the side of the soldier, and Senators who oppose this proposition are voting on the side on which Wall Street is voting. If you, Mr. President, had to pass on the matter, on which side would you say the demagogues were voting? I voted to call these boys to the colors and to send them across the sea to do something which this Government had never before done; and then when they came back and beat at my door and told me that they were in such distress that people were collecting old clothes around the country to give them; that they had to have something on which to live, I said, "Boys, I am for you; God bless every one of you who offered to die for me and our country, and I am willing to do everything I can to get justice for you."

I submit to the impartial judgment of a justice-loving and God-fearing people to say who is on the just and humane side of this question, myself and those with me, or those who see these boys in need but draw themselves up in a shell and say, "You can not compensate the boys with money." Of course, you can not pay them with dollars and dimes, but the soldier has got to have something to eat, a place to sleep, and something to wear; and when you deny him those things, in a great Government like ours, you break his morale, you knock the spirit out of him, you humiliate him. You have no right to do that. He was the finest type of humanity the world ever saw, and you cow him, you hamper him, and humiliate him, and have him go about begging somebody for $1 or for $5, or whatever amount of money he can get; and many a one of them has had to do that.

A great number of these boys have killed themselves; our brave boys have said the strain was too great, the future was too black, that they did not care to face it any further; that they had nothing on which to live, no job in sight, and they blew out their brains. Then men stand up and talk about those of us who plead for justice to boys like those. I do not care where they class me. I have been battling with them for 18 years; and so long as I am in public life I am going to continue to battle with them for what I think is right in this matter and in other matters too.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two further. I hold in my hand the report sent to this body by Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, in response to a deflation resolution passed here at the instance of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. Governor Harding goes out of his way in that report, which was submitted in May, 1920, to say something against the bonus. I shall read what his report says; it will take but a moment:

> These—
> Referring to a number of suggestions which were made—
> would of necessity preclude unwise appropriations, such as the proposed soldiers' bonus,

What business was that of his? Who set him up to send messages to the Congress of the United States? Think of this man, who maladministered his office, perverted it from the ends of its institution, and played the servant of Wall Street, writing to the Congress in a message signed by him advising against being just to the soldiers who saved the country. In contrast with that I wish to read these lines in the same report:

> A striking necessity exists which can only be relieved through the upbuilding of the credit of the railroads. This must come through adequate and prompt increase in freight rates.

I am in favor of being just and fair to the railroads. I want them to prosper, but think of this man advising Congress on these matters.

Here is this man recommending to the Congress legislation with which he has nothing to do and at the same time he is advising against the enactment of a law that seeks to do justice to the soldiers. He goes out of his way to ask Congress to pass a bill which would increase freight rates and burden the American people by higher freight rates than they have ever before been burdened with. We have that condition now, for you passed a law increasing freight rates and those burdens are on the people, and every State of the Union is crying out against them. Yet here is that man recommending to Congress that the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill be not passed but that a bill be passed which will permit an increase in freight rates. He got so that he meddled with everything.

Mr. President, let me say before I close that I understand a poll of the Senate is being taken on the Republican side to-day to ascertain whether or not Governor Harding could be confirmed in case he should be reappointed. I am not going to give the name of the Senator who is taking the poll on the other side of the Chamber, but his financial connection is, indeed, close to the Secretary of the Treasury. If, however, the name of Governor Harding is sent in, I will give all the details. Is this blow to fall upon the American people, Mr. President? Are the soldiers to be stricken down, humiliated, and driven away without appropriate action by the Congress of their country; and, following that, is the President further to humiliate all the people of the South, the Middle West, the West, and the Northwest by the reappointment of a man whom they loathe, detest, and distrust?

A Senator in this body stated to me a day or two ago that the bankers who were afraid to speak out for a while are now openly condemning Governor Harding since they know he is gone. And he is gone, Mr. President; he will never be reappointed. I have a reason for saying that, and I will give that reason if his name should come to the Senate; but it will not come.

The Senator to whom I referred said since he is out and gone the bankers are coming out of their shells; they are willing and not afraid to condemn him now. He said, further, "I hope you all will keep Governor Harding from being reappointed; I am glad he is out."

Mr. President, I have stated here a number of times that I had letters, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and others have had—and Senators will remember what they said in the debate here some time ago—from bankers protesting against the appointment of W. P. G. Harding, but telling the recipients of the letters not to use their names, to keep them out of it. So we find honest bankers in the country are afraid of this man; they are intimidated, coerced, and humiliated by him.

Mr. President, the American Bankers' Association is soon to hold its sessions, and agents of the Federal Reserve Board have been going all over the country helping to hand-pick delegates to go to the meeting of the American Bankers' Association to indorse Governor Harding. If the Secretary of the Treasury, himself a millionaire many times over, is for him, and Governor Harding is, as he claims to be, a cousin of the President, what chance have the American people got if kinship and financial friendship are going to govern in this matter?

If the Secretary of the Treasury, with the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board sitting at the head of that great system for six years, playing politics all the time to perpetuate himself in office, can not bring about an indorsement of him by picking delegates here and yonder from men who have to go to them for money, you would think it rather strange, would you not? But will the President permit such a thing as that to be worked upon him? I do not think he will.

Mr. President, because of that little polling that has been going on here to-day I want to say this much more: If the President postpones this appointment a little longer, if there is any doubt about it, I will give him some other matters that I have not given yet; but I want to say now that the President can not afford to reappoint a man who permitted the 12 Federal reserve banks of America under his control to increase their current expenses over those of 1918, which were $12,000,000, to $36,000,000 for 1922. I challenge them to deny that, any one of them. He can not afford to reappoint a man who has permitted these 12 banks to increase their own salaries—not current expenses, now, if you please, as I said the other day; I was in error in that—from $4,500,000 in 1918, when they did more business than they ever did before or since, to $19,500,000 in 1922, an increase of $15,000,000. The President can not afford to reappoint a man who engineered through Congress personally an amendment which permitted them to take away from the Government all of its franchise tax, amounting to one hundred and eighty-odd million dollars, and the Government has not gotten a dime of it, and it is now in the hands of these banks, charging it off for one thing and another—depreciation, and profit and loss, and value of buildings under construction—$180,000,000. The President can not afford to reappoint a man who by his sanction permitted four banks in four big cities to set aside $49,500,000 to build four bank buildings.

Why, Mr. President, those four banks cost two and a half times as much as this Capitol, both House and Senate Office Buildings, made of marble, and the State, War, and Navy Building—four bank buildings in four big cities. I want to show you a picture of one of them. Here is the one they have in New York [exhibiting picture]. Is it not a beauty? It cost the Government between eighteen and twenty million dollars, and the annex with it will make these two buildings cost about twenty-four to twenty-six million dollars. This building is about 350 feet long or something like that, 15 stories high. The Equitable Building in New York, a bigger building, 35 stories high, cost between ten and twelve million dollars. They are asking you to confirm this man if the President reappoints him, and yet he sanctioned in New York City alone an expenditure of between twenty-five and thirty million dollars of money, 90 per cent of which would have gone to the Government after the running expenses were paid and dividends met; $49,500,000 for the four banks, 90 per cent of which, forty and odd millions, would have gone to the Federal Treasury to help take care of this adjusted compensation for the soldiers, and one hundred and eighty and odd million dollars franchise tax that they sidetracked under Governor Harding's suggestion, 90 per cent of which would have gone to the Government. We would have had that to help take care of adjusted compensation for our soldiers, but it is gone, gone. The President can not afford to reappoint a man—it will all come out in the battle on confirmation—who declined even to investigate a big bank speculating in New York in 1920 when he applied the progressive interest rate to the South and West. That bank up there borrowed at 6 per cent, wildly speculating, but he would not even investigate it. He did not apply the progressive interest rate up there. He permitted them to go on with their plans, but he applied the progressive interest rate to the South and West and broke our people, practically bankrupted them, and ruined them in a business way. It will take 10 years to recover from the ruin wrought under deflation directed by this man.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate longer, because, as I said in the outset, I do not think any votes can be changed now upon this other proposition; but I do want to submit this in conclusion to the President:

The shock of the veto, if it is sustained, will be enough at one time for our soldiers and for the American people. I pray God that that blow will not come. Coupled with it ought not to come the blow of the reappointment of this man. The Manufacturers' Record said in an editorial the other day, written by a Republican, that the President could not now afford to reappoint this man when Wall Street interests were demanding his reappointment. The editorial said that since Wall Street interests were saying that they would not contribute to the Republican campaign fund unless the President reappointed him, if the President did reappoint him it would create a political revolution in the country.

Mr. President, I am hoping and praying that the President will not reappoint him, but I do not know; I hear so many conflicting rumors about here. I am going to communicate with the President again this afternoon and tell him something that I have not communicated to him before. I do not know what will be his ultimate judgment in this matter, but if this man should be reappointed it will be a great shock to me. I have studied this question as I never studied a public question in my life before. I know it from A to Z. I know every trail in this deflation drive. I have shown that it was born in Wall Street. I have shown that the clouds of deflation rose in the East. I have shown that we heard the muttering thunders of currency contraction and curtailed credit coming from over there, and the storm that broke in all its fury came from the East.

I have shown that it swept away the profits that our people had made; that the people who had been induced under the Federal Reserve Board to buy bonds, and were aided in purchasing them by getting money cheaply, with easy arrangements, were clubbed into insensibility after they had bought them and obligated themselves, and the bonds were taken away. Then Wall Street bought them at 80 cents on the dollar, $80 on the hundred, and after Wall Street got them all and the storm was over and ruin was everywhere the bonds went back up to par and above, and these men have been coming down to the Treasury clipping their coupons regularly, while ruin trailed through the South and West and distress was everywhere amongst our people.

I have pointed out in this body, and I will point it out as long as I am a Senator, because this thing has to go home to every American in the country, that this thing is a crime. I have called to the attention of the Senate that an able, clever, wealthy Republican Senator told me that they sent word to him that deflation was coming before it broke, and told him to get in out of the weather, and he said, "Why, I can not; if deflation comes now"—and he is from the West—"it will cost me a lot of money; of, course, I will be able to get over it in some way"; and he said it did cost him thousands and thousands of dollars. I have called this matter to the attention of the Senate, and I am going to call it to the attention of the American people in 30 speeches that I am booked to make in the West if this man's appointment does come, and there are enough men who are going to help me out in the expenses to see to it that copies of my remarks shall be given to every newspaper, and I am going to keep a list of every newspaper to which I give copies of those speeches, and when Congress reconvenes I am going to stand on this floor and tell Congress and the country what papers refused to give those facts and figures to the country. That is one way to fight these interests, and I am in earnest about this thing.

What did Lincoln say? He said, "Any effort to change the currency and credit plan under which you get people to go in debt before the debt can be paid is a crime." That is my position. What did Governor Harding do? He permitted the people in the South, East, North, and West to go into business in the spring of 1920. He never told them what they were going to do; and after they got tied up, and could not get out, deflation struck like a cyclone in midsummer, and nobody could escape except the big rich, to whom they had whispered that there would be deflation. My God! Was there ever a more miserable and contemptible picture flashed before the mind of an honest man or woman? I likened it once before, and I am going to do it again, to a case of this kind:

Suppose the case of a theater filled with people, 5,000 of them, and over in the boxes there sit, in royal parties, men of wealth, and somebody comes slipping down the aisle, tiptoeing, and whispers in the boxes, "A bomb is being planted under this building, and it is going to blow up in a few minutes. You people get out now, but don't say anything"; and then you see these people walking out of the boxes, retiring, and the others sitting there, looking at the play on the stage, happy, not dreaming of danger or trouble, and all of a sudden a mighty roar is heard, the foundations of the building give way, the building falls, and these people are murdered.

That is what happened with this man. He did not give any notice to the people that I represent. He did not give any notice to the people of the South, West, Northwest, and Middle West. Only the big rich got notice, and the others fell victims to the fell scheme of a deflation holdup. Now, efforts are being made to have him reappointed; and I am saying, I have been saying, that some of the northern Senators will vote for him, in my judgment, none of the western Senators will, and no southern Senator except about three. I doubt whether even those three will vote for him when the fight is over in the executive session, if we have an executive session. I do not want any executive session. I want this thing held in the open, if it comes. I am still relying on something I know which makes me think that the President is not going to reappoint this man, but I am saying these things in order that the President may know just what the facts are.

Senators, what I am stating to you here about this extravagance and this scheming is the truth, told by their own records, dug out and brought to light. These things are facts.

I am not fighting to cripple this system. Every now and then you see a newspaper article saying: "Senator HEFLIN attacked the Federal reserve system again." I have never attacked it. I have praised it. I helped to create it. I am trying to save it from those who would wreck it.

Why, Mr. President, a national banker told me yesterday that if Governor Harding should be reappointed hundreds of national bankers would withdraw from the system and go into the State banking systems. He said: "They will not stand it to live under this fellow. They are not saying anything now; they do not want to get mixed up in this fight; they do not know whether he is going to be reappointed or not, and if he is they had better not say anything, but many of them are going to withdraw." That is the situation you have.

What influence is it that keeps on nagging at the President to reappoint this man? What influence is it that demands that he be kept at the head of this great banking system?

I made a speech here the other day and closed it by saying, "Will the President indorse and approve what this man has done and reward him by reappointment, or will he respect the deep feelings and heartfelt wishes of patriotic Americans who protest against the reappointment of the man whose name will be forever associated with the most cruel, the most despicable and criminal deflation holdup ever perpetrated against the American people?" Can the President reappoint a man like that? I do not believe he can, and I do not believe he will.

I want to say this word, and I will be through. I trust that there will be enough votes here to-day to override the veto of the President. I think it would have a splendid effect upon the country. I do not know of anything which would do more good generally toward stimulating the people and heartening the people and restoring confidence in the Government in the minds and hearts of the people than for us to pass this bill over the veto and permit it to become a law.

There is nothing that would do more to bring prosperity to the country than putting into circulation now a billion dollars. If you want to raise this money, issue Federal reserve notes and pay the money to these boys and let them buy clothes and buy food and provide shelter, and that money will go into the channels of business, circulate amongst the masses, and do more to bring prosperity to our country than any other one thing we can do. That is a fact.

I am willing for a vote to be had. We had enough votes the other day to pass the bill over the President's veto. We passed this bill by a vote of two to one, with two to spare; but I do not know what will happen to-day. Some of those who voted with us are unavoidably absent, and I do not know what the result is going to be.

I understand that the opposition claim they have the votes to sustain the veto. But whatever may be the vote on this measure, my conscience is clear in regard to it, and I am willing to meet anybody in my State who wants to challenge my position on the matter of demanding justice to the soldier who offered his all for his country. I am going to use this office, which the people have given to me, to their very best advantage. I am going to use it in espousing righteous causes as long as I have the honor of representing in part the people of my State.

I want to vote for measures which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number. I want to vote for measures which will bring prosperity to the masses of the people. I want to vote for measures which will lift my country higher and higher in the scale of being, and I want to vote for measures which will do justice by the soldier who made all of these things possible.

There is no vote I could cast which would come nearer to reaching the climax and crowning glory of honorable service to the country than voting for just and fair treatment to the soldier, who stood in the red glare of battle and offered his all for the flag.

They tell us we have never paid adjusted compensation before. We never sent our soldiers 3,000 miles from home before. We never before went on a foreign battle field across the sea to fight in a world war. This is something new under the sun, and having paid a bonus to the people at home, removed from danger, and paid all these lavish sums to the other interests I have mentioned, and these boys returned to their country, many of them in distress, needing aid, I say there is no higher obligation upon the country than being fair and just to them.

Mr. President, whatever fate befalls them, not one of these boys in poverty, ill health, or otherwise can ever point his finger at me and say, "You voted to send me to the war and then voted to deny me the compensation to which I was entitled." I shall vote to pass this bill over the President's veto.

SPEECH BY SENATOR POMERENE.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in his seat. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speech of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] at the Ohio Democratic State Convention. I am sorry the Senator from Utah is not in his seat. I dislike very much to have the speech read to the Senate. I renew my request to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOSES. I dislike to see any advantage taken of the absence of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HARRISON. That is why I made the statement. I will ask that it be read from the Secretary's desk.

Mr. MOSES. I object to that. Let the Senator read it himself.

Mr. HARRISON. I dislike to take up the time of the Senate, but on yesterday there was placed in the RECORD a speech by Representative FESS, the nominee of the Republican Party for Senator in Ohio, delivered at the Republican State Convention in Ohio. I am asking consent to put in the RECORD a speech by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is likewise a candidate, not upon the part of the Republican Party but of the Democratic Party, a speech made to the Democratic State Convention. Before I shall permit such unfair tactics to be taken by the majority party in this body, I shall read the speech to the Senate myself.

Mr. MOSES. My objection was made solely because of the absence of the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Mississippi, it is true, was chivalrous enough to state that he is doing this in the absence of the Senator from Utah, which called my attention to the fact of the Senator's absence. If the speech is to be read, I would not deprive the Senate of the benefit of the elocution of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. No; we will have the Secretary's elocution tried out on the Senator from New Hampshire and others.

Mr. MOSES. That can not be done in the face of an objection.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator objects, then?

Mr. MOSES. If it is going to be read, I want the Senator's own elocution on it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will never stay in the Chamber when the Senator from Mississippi is trying out his elocution. He runs, like the balance of his colleagues.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President; when the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. HARRISON. Is there objection to my request, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, the Chair understands.

Mr. MOSES. I think the Senator should wait until the Senator from Utah is in the Chamber. Will the Senator not wait?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am going to take another tack. The Senator can take his seat and rest himself in patience.

In the Evening Star, published here in Washington, on Friday, September 15, there appeared in large type on the front page this heading:

President takes up reorganizing. Finds steps for greater Government efficiency facing less opposition. Also meets Cabinet.

I want to read part of this. It is as follows:

Reorganization of the Government departments so as to establish a greater efficiency by checking overlapping and by coordinating the various activities of the Government was the first business taken up by President Harding when he appeared at his desk in the Executive Office to-day for the first time since Mrs. Harding's illness reached serious proportions.

For more than half an hour he discussed the reorganization plan with Walter F. Brown, chairman of the joint congressional committee on reorganization, who personally directed the drafting of the plan to bring about reorganization. The President is known to have stated to his caller that during the months the tentative plan has reposed on his desk for his final approval he has many times given it study and has lost none of his original interest in the proposition.

EARLY ACCORD PREDICTED.

On numerous occasions he has gone over certain details of the plan with individual members of his Cabinet who had made known their objection to certain features calling for drastic changes in portions of their respective departments. According to Chairman Brown the President to-day strongly intimated that the objections which arose at first are gradually disappearing and that it is only a question of a short time before there will be complete accord regarding the plan. It will then be returned to the joint committee to put in the form of a bill to be presented to Congress for action during the short session in December.

Chairman Brown to-day reiterated the statement made by him when he last conferred with the President regarding the reorganization plan, that "it was by no means a dead issue."

I suppose that same article appeared in many papers throughout the country.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type the speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] before the Democratic State convention, delivered on August 22, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, Mr. POMERENE's speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

ADDRESS OF UNITED STATES SENATOR ATLEE POMERENE BEFORE OHIO DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION, AUGUST 22, 1922.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, first, let me congratulate you upon the nomination of Vic Donahey as your candidate for governor. Three royally good men entered the lists. All could not win. Before primary day there were Donahey Democrats, Johnson Democrats, and Duffy Democrats. Now there are only Donahey Democrats. It was an honorable fight, conducted in an honorable way, and the choice of the Democrats at the polls is the choice of all to-day. I salute Governor Donahey.

I congratulate the voters of Ohio on the splendid personnel of our entire State ticket. No man needs to make apology for any of these candidates, and when they are inducted into office, as they will be, they will make true and faithful servants of the people.

I congratulate the voters of Ohio and the Nation upon our splendid congressional ticket, every member of which is a man of ability and integrity and possesses the unlimited confidence of his constituency. Since March 4, 1921, I have been pretty lonesome politically in Washington, and I have been kept pretty busy watching the movements of 1 Republican Senator and 22 Republican Congressmen from the State of Ohio, but I promise you that after March 4 next there will still be one Democratic Senator in Washington from Ohio and more than half of the House delegation from Ohio will be Democratic.

PROMISES VERSUS PERFORMANCE.

Never did the Republicans go through a campaign with more promises to their credit than they did in 1920, and never did a political party go into a campaign with less performance of pledges to its credit than the Republican Party enters upon this campaign, whether we consider it from the standpoint of the State or the Nation.

The Republican Party in the State has to its credit—I beg pardon, discredit—one piece of legislation which is sufficient to condemn it for all time. I mean the ripper legislation, by which the governor sought to get control of the State government in defiance of the civil service and at the same time to take away from the people the referendum vote, which was accorded to them by the constitution of the State.

I remember also that Governor Davis became so heartily ashamed of his Republican general assembly that he prorogued it and sent it home—the first time this ever occurred in the history of Ohio. He and his party were to reform the tax laws of the State, but that task is left for Governor Donahey and his colleagues in the State government to perform. As auditor of State, Donahey redeemed every pledge he made to the people during the eight years that he administered that office, so Governor Donahey will prove faithful to the higher honors that are to be conferred upon him.

But it is not my purpose to discuss State issues this day.

A PERSONAL WORD TO VOTERS.

Neither am I going to ask your indulgence in the discussion of matters which are largely personal to myself. I promise you that during the coming campaign I shall give the voters of Ohio the opportunity to distinguish between false charges on the one hand and the facts on the other. I have no apology to make for what I have said or done at Washington. The people of Ohio will have the opportunity to learn what I have said and done and what the false prophets and Pharisees in the State charge that I have said and done.

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE.

To-day I shall devote my observations largely to the record which has been writ by the Republicans in the Halls of Congress. The paramount issue in this year's campaign is the lamentable failure of the Republicans in the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses to redeem their party pledges. The "wiggling and wobbling" which they charged against Democracy in 1920 have become the cornerstone in the temple of the Republican Congress. Democracy may have done some things which were wrong, but history does not record anything in the long and illustrious career of Democracy that equals the indecision and inaction of the present and the last Congress.

I can not take the time to consider some things which I would like to discuss to-day—the unparalleled program of constructive legislation inaugurated and carried out by the Democratic Party during the eight years of the Wilson administration, the extraordinary powers conferred upon the President by the pending tariff bill, which puts more government in business rather than less government in business; proposed legislation to curtail the excessive use of money in elections; Newberryism, and so forth. These and other kindred subjects will be given their proper place in the campaign later on. I shall, however, beg your indulgence while I discuss several matters which are of primary importance to every citizen of the Republic, and which affect materially our industrial activities and national welfare.

REPUBLICANS RESPONSIBLE FOR WASTE.

The great World War shook civilization to its very center. It involved nearly all of the great civilized nations and called to battle the greatest armies known to history. It could not be fought without serious consequences to all mankind. Speaking economically and financially, it demoralized industry, bankrupted many nations, financially embarrassed others, destroyed countless private fortunes on the one hand, and on the other hand furnished the opportunity to many to profiteer at the expense of their Government and fellow men. This result is not peculiar to the late war. It is the aftermath of all wars.

The American people under the leadership of our great Chief Executive, Woodrow Wilson, helped to fight and win the war. No nation ever prepared so quickly or so completely or so thoroughly as did the American people during the World War.

The War Department was directed by our able and distinguished fellow Democrat and Ohioan, Hon. Newton D. Baker.

The Navy Department was directed by that brilliant son of the South, Hon. Josephus Daniels.

Their task was so gigantic that it was beyond the human power of any man to perform it alone and unaided, and so these Cabinet officials called to their assistance committees of able and distinguished "dollar-a-year men." Three out of four, if not four out of five, of these men were Republicans, and if there was any undue waste or extravagance Republicans must bear their share of the responsibility. Charges of criminal misconduct have been made. If the confidence of the Democratic President and the Democratic Secretary of War and the Democratic Secretary of the Navy was abused by anyone, the Republicans have control, and let them bring the culprits to book. Up to date little, if anything, has been done in that behalf. Why the delay if the criminal charges are true?

OUR GREATEST PROBLEM AFTER THE ARMISTICE.

The greatest problem presented to the American Congress after armistice day, November 11, 1918, was the revision of our financial legislation.

The election of November, 1918, resulted in the Republicans carrying both branches of the Congress. The Senate, with the disputed seat of Mr. NEWBERRY, gave to the Republicans a majority of 2; the House a majority of 41. The result of the election had scarcely become known until Mr. FORDNEY, the ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee, who it was known would become the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, announced to the country that the Republicans would at once take up the task of framing the revenue and tariff bills so as to have them ready for presentation to the House when the new Congress would be called together after the 4th of March, 1919.

President Wilson in his annual address to Congress in December, 1918, called attention to the fact that the revenue legislation then on the statute books was temporary in character and only intended to fit war conditions, and that it must be revised. Among public men there seemed to be no difference of opinion upon this subject. Certainly it was intended by President Wilson that whatever was done toward relieving the American people from the burdens of war taxation should redound to the benefit of all. It was not intended to permit the lesser incomes to continue to pay war taxes, while the swollen incomes should be relieved from a large part of their war taxes.

When the Republican Congress was called in extraordinary session May 20, 1919, substantially the same message was delivered. The Congress has been in almost continuous session from that day until the present—more than three years and three months—and what is the result?

WHAT THE NEW REVENUE LAW DOES.

Under the revenue law of 1918 the surtaxes ran by graded brackets from 1 per cent on incomes between $5,000 and $6,000 to 32 per cent on incomes between $66,000 and $68,000, and thence upward to 65 per cent on incomes in excess of $1,000,000.

The Republican House removed all surtaxes above 32 per cent. The Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee made the same recommendation. The Democrats with the aid of a few Republicans raised these surtaxes to 50 per cent. The President urged a compromise by placing the limit at 40 per cent. The House refused to accept the President's advice and voted the 50 per cent limit proposed by the Senate.

The significant fact is that the Republican House and the Republican Finance Committee in the Senate recommended 32 per cent as the limit, and relieved the higher incomes of all surtaxes in excess of 32 per cent. In other words, the Republicans were willing so to revise the revenue laws that the man with an income of $5,000,000 paid no higher surtaxes than the man with an income of $68,000, this in face of their pledge to lower taxes, which the people had a right to believe meant an equitable reduction of taxes all along the line.

Now note, please. In the year 1920 there were 11,077 taxpayers each with incomes higher than $68,000. There were 5,321,683 taxpayers each with taxable incomes below $68,000. The average income of the 11,077 taxpayers was $150,000. The average income of the 5,321,683 taxpayers was $3,400. Except a slight increase in the exemption of those with incomes below $5,000, little or no relief was granted to the 5,321,683 taxpayers, but those with incomes above $68,000 were relieved of all of the surtaxes ranging under the then statute between 32 per cent and 65 per cent, which was the maximum surtax.

Why did the Old Guard give its maximum relief to those having larger incomes and the minimum relief to those having the smaller incomes? There should have been relief all along the line, and it should have been distributed equitably among all of the taxpayers, and not for the benefit of the few.

I have no prejudice for or against men either because they have or do not have great wealth, but it is one of the fundamental principles of taxation in every country of the world that the government always must take into consideration, when framing taxation legislation, the ability of the taxpayer to pay. Tax burdens are always heavy in our complicated civilization, but that is no reason why the burden should be disproportionately borne by those who have the more modest incomes.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX AND CORPORATION TAX.

Under the Finance Committee's bill they sought to abolish all excess-profits taxes and increase the normal corporation tax from 10 to 15 per cent. It finally was made 12½ per cent in conference. In other words, by the Finance Committee bill they increase the normal tax on the earnings of all corporations by 50 per cent, while abolishing the excess-profits tax.

In the year 1919 there were 317,000 corporations in the United States.

The Senate Finance Committee in its report on the pending bill gave certain statistics relating to the incomes of 115,056 representative corporations. According to these tables, during the year 1919 there were 55,242 of these corporations that earned net incomes of less than 15 per cent. By this report the taxes of all corporations earning less than 10 per cent were increased 50 per cent. Those earning between 10 and 15 per cent were increased also. During the same year 59,814 of these corporations earned net incomes from 15 per cent to 100 per cent and over. By the Finance Committee bill their taxes were decreased and they were relieved from all taxes in excess of 15 per cent.

What justification can be made for increasing the taxes on all corporations earning less than 15 per cent and decreasing the taxes on all corporate earnings from 15 per cent to 100 per cent and over? The American people are curious to know. The decreases should have been equitably distributed.

REPUBLICAN TARIFF HISTORY REVIEWED.

And what shall we say of the interminable delays in the tariff legislation?

Before answering this question, permit me to refer briefly to the history of the Republican Party upon the tariff.

In the platform of 1892 the Republican Party declared:

"That on all products coming into competition with the products of American labor there should be levied duties equal to the difference between wages abroad and at home."

Prior platforms of the Republican Party took substantially the same position. I shall not refer to them at this time.

In 1896 the Republican platform upon which President McKinley was elected declared its "allegiance to the policy of protection," and at the same time it insisted that in its application the tariff should be "just, fair, and impartial; equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism." The American people when they study the pending bill will find that it is neither "just" nor "fair" nor "impartial," and that it was dictated both by "sectional discrimination and individual favoritism."

Then followed the Dingley law. Tariff rates were higher than ever before. Prices were advanced to such an extent that Republicans and Democrats everywhere insisted upon a revision of the tariff duties downward.

Senator Sherman said if combination "is aided by our tariff laws they should be promptly changed, and, if necessary, equal competition with all the world should be invited in the monopolized article."

President Roosevelt never attempted a revision of the tariff.

Mr. Taft was elected President in 1908. In the campaign of that year he, too, declared that the tariff should be revised downward. At a meeting in Wisconsin on September 4, 1908, he said:

"The tariff is greater than the differential between the cost of production at home and abroad and it should therefore be reduced."

The Payne-Aldrich bill followed, and instead of the tariff being reduced many of its schedules were even higher than they were under the Dingley law. The fight over this subject resulted in a split between the two wings of the Republican Party, and Woodrow Wilson was elected President in 1912.

ADVANCED RATES IN STEEL SCHEDULE.

I do not have sufficient data before me to give even an approximate estimate as to the increased cost to the consumer by the advanced rates in the steel schedule. Many of these heavier products could well have remained on the free list, or certainly with a very much reduced rate, because of cheaper material, greater efficiency in production, due in part to better management and in large part to the greater skill and efficiency of our labor. But I shall content myself to-day by referring to one single item in the cost of steel.

In the manufacture of alloy steels this bill provides for heavy duties on such alloys as ferromanganese and tungsten. It was conceded upon the floor of the Senate that the increased duties on these alloys alone would add $10,000,000 annually to the consumers' cost. Scarcely an article of iron or steel manufacture can be mentioned whose cost will not be increased by these heavier rates.

CUTLERY AND EDGED TOOLS.

The Underwood rate on cutlery averages 40 per cent ad valorem. The rates under the Senate bill average 126 per cent ad valorem, or an increase of 86 per cent. The increase of these duties to the American consumers is estimated by these same experts at $6,829,371.

SUGAR CONSUMERS WILL PAY $25,000,000 MORE.

The duty on Cuban sugar is $1.60 a hundred pounds. Our imports come almost exclusively from that island. An effort was made to increase this duty to $2. The Senate compromised the rate at $1.83. The farmers who raise beets were not asking for an increase in the rate. They simply asked to have the present rates retained. This single increase from $1.60 to $1.83 will add $25,000,000 to the cost of the sugar consumers.

As indicating the methods which are resorted to in fixing the tariffs that affect the prices to the consumers of sugar it may be interesting to relate an incident that occurred in the Senate.

Senator PAT HARRISON learned that Senator REED SMOOT had written to Gen. Enoch Crowder, the President's personal representative in Cuba, asking him to take up with the Cuban Government the question of limiting the amount of production of sugar in Cuba. This letter was not produced at the time, but later on, August 7, Senator SMOOT read a copy of the letter in question. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 11011.) Senator SMOOT and his State are very much interested in beet-sugar production. Cuba ordinarily produces from 3,800,000 to 4,000,000 tons per year. Senator SMOOT wrote to General Crowder:

"I am sure that the limitation of the Cuban crop of sugar for the present year to 2,500,000 tons will be the solution of the problem, not only for Cuba but for the United States as well. So sure am I of this that I think that it would be wise to have incorporated into the pending tariff bill a rate of 1¾ cents per pound, which would make the duty on Cuban sugar 1.4 cents per pound."

In other words, the purpose was to reduce the duty on Cuban sugar two-tenths of 1 cent per pound if Cuba would cut her production from 4,000,000 to 2,500,000 tons. This would have given the Republicans the opportunity to say they reduced the duty on sugar, but at the same time if the supply was to be reduced about 1,500,000 tons, and we get nearly all of the sugar which we do not produce in this country or our island possessions from Cuba, it would have resulted in increasing the price of sugar to the American public.

I submit to the voters of Ohio, irrespective of party, this question: What right has any Senator or Congressman to suggest to other countries that they reduce their production in order to make sugar scarcer for the consumer and consequently more expensive? As well might we say to one another, let us urge the farmers not to raise so many hogs and cattle in order that we may make the price of meat higher to the consuming public.

EFFORT TO BUNKO FARMERS WITH TARIFF ON HIDES.

The Republican Finance Committee sought to place a duty of 2 cents per pound on green hides and 4 cents per pound on dried hides. Twelve million hides are produced in this country annually—weight, 600,000,000 pounds. This presumably would have added $12,000,000 to the value of the hides. Senators with very solemn faces defended it on the theory that it would be a benefit to the farmers. Senators who have great herds of cattle and sheep were very much interested in the soil farmer. Statistics show that at least 60 per cent of the hides in this country are produced by the packers. In other words, the packers would benefit to the amount of about $7,200,000. The other $4,800,000 would go to the small butcher and the farmer.

The debates in the Senate showed clearly that this duty on raw hides, by the time it was manufactured into shoes, would add a minimum of 12 cents per pair. Other estimates were 20 cents per pair, and still others 40 cents per pair. In round numbers there are 6,000,000 people in the State of Ohio. Each man, woman, and child wears out at least two pairs of shoes annually, so the increased cost in shoes to the people of Ohio annually at the estimated rate of 12 cents per pair would be $1,440,000, and at 20 cents per pair it would amount to $2,400,000.

One plain purpose of this duty was to deceive the farmer into the belief that he would be benefited thereby. The real purpose, however, in my judgment, was to deceive him into the belief that he was actually being benefited by this tariff bill, while increased duties were being added to practically everything he had to buy.

I do not think many of the farmers can be deceived by this kind of buncombe. They do not raise the steer for the hide. The hide is a mere by-product if the farmer does his own butchering.

In the course of my discussion on this subject in the Senate I was interrupted by Senator BORAH, who read a letter which he received from one of his clear-headed farmer constituents, who said in part as follows:

"It seems to us farmers who really farm that we are paying too much for the protection we are getting in the tariff bill you fellows are passing. I can explain by the tariff on hides. We did not think you folks would be ignorant of how that tariff would work. The real farmer will never get any benefit from that duty. The fellows at Chicago and Omaha either skin the steer or skin the fellow who does skin him. They are the ones who take off the hides, and they control the price of all other hides.

"I have been raising a few cattle for 30 years. I am not an expert, because I know the facts; but when it comes to the leather and shoes, then we will feel the effect of the duty. They will charge us more for shoes and tell us, whether it is true or not, that 'it is because you farmers would have a duty on hides'—a duty which does not help us. We would rather not give the shoe people an excuse for charging us more for our shoes, and leave off the duty on hides. It is all bunk. It does not help the farmer."

DEMOCRATS AND LIBERAL REPUBLICANS DEFEAT WOOD-PULP TARIFF.

An effort was made to put a heavy duty on all imported wood pulp which is used in the manufacture of newsprint and other paper. Had it succeeded it would have greatly increased the cost of all newsprint paper in the country and would have proven a substantial burden to many of the small newsprint plants.

Twenty-one pulp mills have asked Congress for this protective duty; 315 paper and board mills are dependent upon foreign pulp in whole or in part for their raw material; 55 of these mills are in Ohio. There are no pulp mills in Ohio, except one small soda pulp mill at Chillicothe. Ohio mills must have foreign-made pulp. Any duty on imported pulp would increase the burden of these 55 paper mills, to say nothing of other mills outside of Ohio, and these mills employ between thirty and forty thousand people.

This duty would have increased the cost of the newspapers, diminished the chances of Ohio laborers to get employment, and would have further encouraged the depletion of our forests, now too rapidly disappearing. Fortunately the Democrats, with the aid of the more liberal Republicans, were able to defeat this duty.

DYE INTERESTS WANT COMPLETE EMBARGO.

The dye interests of the country were not content to ask for higher duties. They insisted upon a complete embargo, shutting out all importations of foreign-made dyes. I am not unmindful of the fact that during the war, and partially as a war measure, we placed duties upon the importation of dyes which were written into the law from schedules prepared by the dye makers themselves. They were thought then to be sufficiently high to grant all needed protection. Of course, the present economic and financial state of Germany was not fully anticipated. The emergency tariff law placed an embargo on the importation of dyes. The dye people insisted upon its continuance.

In order that we may be able to determine more fully the wisdom or unwisdom of this course, let it be borne in mind that while German dyes could not come into this country we imported during the year 1920 something over $5,000,000 worth of dyes, but we exported over $30,000,000 worth, which were sold, in part at least, in competition with German-made dyes.

Dyes of different kinds and shades are discovered as a result of experimentation. In order to dispose of these colors, the merchants must guarantee them to be fast and permanent. During the war our manufacturers had serious difficulty in disposing of many of their goods because they could not guarantee these colors. They were dependent at that time upon American-made dyes.

European salesmen have been constantly charging that many of the American colors are not fast, and American goods are, therefore, handicapped in the world markets. The question for Congress to determine was, Shall we allow our manufacturers of woolen, cotton, silks, and paints to be handicapped because they can not get these fast colors?

Those in favor of an embargo wanted them thus handicapped. Those who were against the embargo did not believe that these interests should be thus crippled. The embargo was defeated, but later an amendment was presented which makes the duties on many of these dyes so excessively high that Senator SMOOT characterized them as "outrageous," and these high duties on many of these shades will work as an embargo, or make the importation of these dyes so high that it will be difficult for our manufacturers to obtain them, and add very considerably to the consumer's cost of their products.

REPUBLICAN TARIFF THEORY VERSUS REPUBLICAN TARIFF PRACTICE.

The American people are a unit in wanting labor to have not fair wages but good wages, not fair working conditions but good working conditions. We want labor in America to have better wages and better working conditions than anywhere else in the world. It must also be borne in mind that while wages in America have been higher than elsewhere it is true also that American labor has been more productive here than anywhere else in the world, because it is more intelligent and more efficient than anywhere else in the world. And whatever may be the claims of Republicans, the Republican tariff laws have not as a rule been framed so as to cover simply the difference between labor cost at home and abroad. It has often happened that the tariffs have been higher than the entire wage cost—sometimes twice or three times over.

In the discussion of a table relating to the cotton schedules of the Payne-Aldrich bill the Taft Tariff Board said:

"In general the table shows on these samples that with few exceptions the duty is far greater than the total domestic labor cost and in the majority of cases is greater than the total conversion cost, not including material. In a number of cases the duties are two or three times the total domestic conversion cost."

And this leads me to note the fundamental principles underlying the pending tariff legislation. The Republicans in Congress confessedly do not seek by this legislation to fix rates which would cover the difference in the labor cost in this country and abroad, but they go further than any Congress or any party in the past ever dreamed of going. They have fixed rates not only to cover the difference in labor at home and abroad, but to protect the producers' profits as well. I say this because the Republican members of the Finance Committee in the amendment known as section 315a said:

"To put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended whenever the President upon investigation of the differences in conditions of competition in trade in the markets of the United States" and articles of "competing foreign countries" shall find that the duties in this act shall not equalize the differences in competition, he shall investigate and ascertain these differences and raise or lower the tariff duties or change their form as he may see fit.

Differences in conditions of competition certainly embrace elements of wage and profits as well as other conditions. It is true that after a terrific battle fought by the Democrats and a few Republicans this language was changed so as to substitute for "differences in conditions of competition" the words "condition of production," but it will be borne in mind that nearly all of the rates which have been established in this legislation were voted into the bill before the change was made in the rule to guide the President in making investigations of differences in trade at home and abroad, and presumably the Republicans had in mind what they declared was the policy Congress intended by this act, namely, to cover the differences in conditions of competition in trade between other countries and the United States. So while the bill now authorizes changes based on differences of conditions in production most of the rates in the bill were based upon differences in condition of competition.

And now, ladies and gentlemen, what have we, or, rather, what will we have when this legislation is completed? There is scarcely a schedule in which the rates heretofore prevailing have not been substantially increased, and these increased duties mean increased prices to the consumers, and this at a time when there are declining prices and declining wages as well.

I can give but a brief survey of these conditions as applied to a few of the more important items of the bill.

WOOL SCHEDULES.

I may say preliminarily that I realize fully that at present world conditions must be considered in the enactment of any economic legislation, no matter from what point we approach it. For this reason I was prepared to vote for substantial increases in some duties. But, in my judgment, no justification can be found for the exorbitant rates contained in nearly every schedule of the tariff bill. Let us examine briefly the woolen schedule.

It places a duty on the clean content of 33 cents a pound. The compensatory duty on the finished fabric is 49 cents, because it takes 1½ pounds of wool to make 1 pound of cloth, owing to the waste in the processes of manufacture. The effect of this increase in tariff over the Underwood bill has been estimated by the Government experts to add, in round numbers, $200,000,000 to the consumers of wool and woolens. One expert fixes this increase at $195,300,000, another at $195,447,063.

We produce in this country 120,000,000 pounds of clean and scoured wool per annum on the average. We import 100,000,000 pounds of clean wool. Total, 220,000,000 pounds.

The domestic wool producers, if this tariff is wholly effective, will get 33 cents a pound on their 120,000,000 pounds, or $39,600,000, and there will go into the Treasury of the United States on the wool that is imported $33,000,000, so that it follows from this legislation—and I freely admit that these are estimates based upon the supposition that the tariff shall be wholly effective—we provide for the woolgrowers $39,600,000, and before it reaches the consumer in the shape of the finished product it is to add to his cost nearly $200,000,000. You ask how this is done?

The Tariff Commission was asked to give its opinion concerning the effect of this tariff duty. In a memorandum furnished to Senator CALDER on June 29, 1922, they made it clear that this duty of 33 cents a pound on the clean content of wool would, by the time it reaches the consumer, by the pyramiding which takes place in passing from one manufacturer or merchant to another, amounts to 93 cents a pound. Men who favor high duties but try to minimize the effect they will have upon the price to the consumer say that there is no excuse for the pyramiding, but the Tariff Commission in this same memorandum says that while the criticism is made that middlemen are not justified in adding their profits and overhead expenses, nevertheless the addition of this margin rests upon a firmer basis than the mere custom of adding a fixed percentage.

Without going into details, it is sufficient to say that in this same statement the Tariff Commission estimates that this duty will add from $2 to $2.85 to each suit of clothes, depending upon its weight, and that it will add from $3.20 in the ordinary style of overcoat to $5.70 in the heavy ulster; and the figures here furnished do not take into consideration the increased cost due to the advance in duties on buttons or trimmings or dyes or linings. These estimates made by Government experts are conservative.

HIGH DUTIES MEAN HIGH PRICES.

Some Senators and Congressmen may try to deceive themselves into the belief that these rates will not increase the cost of clothing and of blankets. Beneficiaries of the tariff may insist that they add little or nothing to the cost, but I want to say to you that my mail is full of letters and telegrams coming from the retail clothiers and merchants who are as familiar with costs and the effect of the tariff as the Senators who sometimes play politics with their constituents, and they are more candid with their customers than are the beneficiaries of the tariff. They have been appealing to Congress not to add these duties at this particular time, because they are firmly convinced that this tariff will add from $2 to $5 a suit and more for overcoats, and this comes at a time when there is a general effort among all merchants to reduce prices. Many of them have been made to suffer in the eyes of the public because of the high prices they have been charging. Some of them have been too high, but it must be borne in mind that many of them bought when prices charged by the manufacturers were exceptionally high. Reduction in price by the manufacturer had to come first before reduction by the retailers, and the retail merchant was put in a pretty embarrassing position when he had high-priced clothing on his shelves and there was a decline in the market and bankruptcy was staring him in the face. And now they appeal to Congress not to increase these tariff rates unduly, because it will compel them to advance their prices at the very time when they are doing their best to bring prices down within the reach of the buying public.

It ought to be a sufficient answer to those who minimize the effect of this tariff to say that within a few days after the Senate bill was reported to the Senate on April 11 the American Woolen Mills made an advance from 10 to 45 cents a yard to their customers, and within two or three months thereafter another advance of from 10 to 45 cents a yard.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

A word as to the cotton schedule. Bear in mind that the cotton schedule in the Dingley bill was severely condemned by President Taft's Tariff Board. In their report they declared that many of the duties on the manufactures of cotton were higher than the entire wage cost in this country, and in some paragraphs twice or three times the entire wage cost.

Many of the duties in the pending bill are higher even than the Dingley bill or the Payne-Aldrich bill. These same experts who served the Finance Committee estimate that the increase in these tariff duties will cost the consumers of the country not less than $108,074,470, over and above what they would cost under the Underwood bill; and no matter what may be said I think it must be conceded that the cotton mills of the country during the last few years, and even up to date, have been making extraordinary, if not excessive, profits.

PENDING TARIFF BILL HITS CONSUMER.

I would not presume to say what the total increased cost of this tariff bill will be to the consumers of the country. This is being very carefully studied by experts of the Government who are being consulted by the members of the Finance Committee. Special study has been given to some of the schedules. All will be carefully examined. Mr. Mills, the chairman of the Fair Tariff League, a Republican and protectionist, estimates that the increased cost will amount to $4,000,000,000 annually. Senator SIMMONS of North Carolina, the ranking Democratic member of the Finance Committee, who is always recognized by his fellow members as conservative in his statements, believes that this cost will reach $3,000,000,000 annually. These figures are subject to modification as the schedules are more carefully analyzed. I do not feel justified in giving any definite figures of my own, but of this much I am absolutely certain, it will tremendously increase the cost of nearly every article which goes upon the table, or upon the backs, or into the homes of the average American. Let those who doubt keep in mind the prices they pay for necessaries and supplies after the law becomes effective. In fact, prices are now on the increase in anticipation of the increased tariff rates. Of course these rates are intended by the Republican leaders to increase the prices of the products affected, otherwise they would not be adopted, and if they increase the price of production they necessarily increase the cost to the consumer.

At this critical time in our industrial development this is peculiarly unfortunate. Every fair-minded man must admit that there must be an adjustment of all prices. War prices can not continue. There is only one way by which they could be continued and that is to bring on another war, and who wants that? In the readjustment in many lines of industry employers and employees have agreed that there should be some reduction in wage as well as material costs. In other lines of activity the employees have refused to accept the reduction in wages because of the continued high cost of living. And now, the Congress of the United States, flying in the face of this situation, passes a tariff law increasing the rates higher than ever before in our history, which necessarily must add to the high cost of living which everyone now deplores. The Republican leaders by this legislative act are giving color at least if they do not support the claims made by many of the striking employees.

HOW THE BLOC SYSTEM WORKS.

The great Lincoln who is enshrined in the hearts of civilized men the world over, in his great Gettysburg speech spoke of a "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and so people generally think we are. But now we are fast becoming, if we have not already become, a Government of blocs, by blocs, and for blocs. To prove this charge you need not go further than to examine into the history of the pending tariff legislation. Exorbitant duties are demanded by one bloc which, if considered by one bloc for one section, would never have been granted by the other Members of the Senate. The citrus growers in California demand exorbitant rates for their fruits, which do not or can not meet the approval of the public at large, but they are supported in their demands by the manufacturers of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Jersey, who in turn demand excessive rates which do not appeal to the other sections of the country but they are supported by the citrus fruit people who insist on excessive rates because of the benefit they themselves get. Summing up the entire tariff schedule you will find that the manufacturers of iron and steel products, of sugar, of wool and woolens, of cotton, of silk, and of dyes, all combine together to get these excessively high rates. The consumer is, in every instance, the victim, as the consumer must pay the higher costs resulting from the higher tariff rates. If each one of these subjects could have been taken up separately and considered on its merits the present high rates never would have been adopted.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS IN HURRY FOR ONCE.

An effort was made to force this tariff legislation through the Senate without giving an opportunity for full discussion. The bill contains 4,000 items. The House added 200 amendments to the bill as it was reported by the Ways and Means Committee. The Senate Finance Committee added 2,086 amendments. The bill came to the Senate on April 11, and on April 20 the discussion began. Within 10 days the Republican leaders began to charge the Democrats with filibustering. Their purpose was to prevent discussion. Probably five or six weeks ago Senator WATSON stated on the floor of the Senate that the Finance Committee during the progress of the debate had voluntarily offered more than 80 amendments, and I dare say that since that time they have offered two or three times that many amendments to the bill. Rates are imposed upon the American people which were never dreamed of in the previous history of our country. What light would the American people have had as to the provisions of this bill if the Republicans had succeeded in bringing the debate to a close at the time they first began agitation for it? Does anyone anywhere know of any prominent Republican business man in the State of Ohio who is satisfied with this bill? The great Republican cosmopolitan papers of the country are, for the most part, against it, notably such papers as the New York Herald, the Chicago Tribune, Indianapolis News, and the Ohio State Journal, published in Ohio's capital city.

DAY OF RECKONING FOR HIGH TARIFF BENEFICIARIES COMING.

Real students of public questions all comprehend our relations as a creditor nation. All the world fully realizes what the effect of this tariff is going to be on our foreign commerce.

Bear in mind that in 1920 our foreign commerce, exports and imports, amounted to over $13,500,000,000. Then came the slowing up of industrial activities and the consequent inability of men as well as nations to buy as heretofore. Our foreign commerce during the calendar year 1920 fell down to about $7,000,000,000. The balance of trade was still about $2,000,000,000 in our favor.

And let me remind those who feel that they are beneficiaries of these high tariffs that a day of reckoning will come. By these duties we are placing around our country a tariff wall so high that for many products it can not be scaled. Europe owes to the United States and its nationals to-day over $18,000,000,000. She has no gold with which to pay. We will not accept her depreciated currency. There is only one way by which she can pay this great debt, and that is by some system which will permit a barter on reasonable and equitable terms. No class of our people are more interested in foreign markets than are the farmers of the country. They must find buyers for surplus wheat amounting to from two hundred to two hundred and fifty millions of bushels. They must find market for surplus cotton products and for their meat products.

EMERGENCY TARIFF ACT INSULTS FARMERS.

By the emergency tariff bill the Congress placed a duty of 35 cents a bushel on wheat, 15 cents on corn, and 15 cents on oats, and by the present bill the rate on wheat is made 30 cents per bushel and the rates on corn and oats the same as heretofore. This is claimed to be for the purpose of protecting the farmers' prices for these cereals. With wheat now at $1 a bushel, corn at 60 cents a bushel, and oats about 30 cents a bushel, what benefit is the farmer deriving from these protective duties? Remember, we produce more of these cereals than we consume. The surplus is sold in the world's markets. The high tariff protects prices where we consume more than we produce. It does not protect prices where we produce more than we consume. These duties, however, will prove a great disadvantage to the farmers when they try to sell our surplus to the markets of the world. Prices can only be kept up if we have markets. They can not be kept up if we can not sell our surplus. People are not going to buy from us if they can not sell to us. President McKinley, in his last speech, at Buffalo, said, "We can not forever expect to sell and never to buy." The same is true now to a greater degree than ever before, because while we were then a world power we are now the world power with the greatest productive capacity of any nation on the face of the globe.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS INVITING RETALIATION.

Those who favor this bill in the Senate sneeringly suggest that foreign nations will buy where they can buy best. Foreign nations do not have to come to the United States for their flour or for their meat; they can go to Argentina and Australia. And they will go where they can buy the cheapest, and if foreign nations can not sell to us with some profit to themselves they will go elsewhere to buy their goods which they would accept in exchange for their own.

To illustrate, just lately when some of the officials in the Department of Agriculture had attempted to place what they regarded as undue quarantine regulations upon the importation of their goods, they made the threat in Washington that while they did not object to proper quarantine measures, if they were to be too much restricted in the persons to whom they sell, they did not have to buy their wheat and their flour here, and they would go elsewhere to buy. They would be less than human if they did not insist upon fairly equitable opportunities.

PENDING TARIFF BILL STAR "PORK BARREL" LEGISLATION IN OUR HISTORY.

I do not want to speak harshly of public men or public measures, and I never do unless the facts seem to justify, but this has been a strange piece of legislation, brought about in a strange way. Heretofore we have spoken of public building and river and harbor bills as "pork barrel" measures, because oftentimes appropriations were made for public buildings or for river improvements in different localities when no reason could be urged for them except that a Senator or Congressman sought to be politically benefited by their passage in his State or district. In this tariff legislation we witnessed the spectable of one Senator who boasts that he is the largest producer of wool and mutton in the world; another Senator largely interested on behalf of himself and his friends in sugar; another one with large investments in the dye industry; and still other Senators actively championing the cause of highly protective manufacturing interests. All voting and speaking in behalf of these higher rates, none of which could prevail except by a combination of all of these special interests looking for particular benefits, but doing it all the while in the name of the American public.

After the American people shall have had time to study fully and appreciate the effect of this bill they will declare it to be the greatest piece of "pork barrel" legislation in the history of Congress. And yet it will be claimed by Republican speakers everywhere that all of this has been done to increase the wages of labor, while Congress is, in fact, increasing the cost of living.

Let us appeal to the voters of Ohio—men and women alike. I beg you to examine the Republican pledges contained in their platform of 1920. Few, if any, of them have been redeemed. They promised to relieve the people from the burdens of war taxation. They have done little except to relieve the very rich from the higher rates of taxation. They have done little or nothing for the smaller taxpayer. What defense can be made for relieving the swollen incomes from the higher tax rates and permitting the burdens of those with more modest incomes to remain substantially as they were?

Republican failure to redeem pledges will be Democracy's opportunity to serve the American people.

COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS—VETO MESSAGE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, returned by the President with his objections thereto.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, my remarks upon the veto will be exceedingly brief. The Constitution of the United States gives to the President a power greater than that accorded any monarch in the world in the matter of determining what may and what may not be enacted into law. It gives him the power by a single vote to override both branches of Congress, unless each branch separately shall have a vote at least 2 to 1 against his veto. In the House the vote on the conference report on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill was 333 for and 70 against. The vote in the Senate was 47 for and 22 against. The vote registered in the House to-day upon the question of sustaining the veto was in the same proportion against the veto, about 5 to 1.

Now, the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill was not the result of any hasty legislation. It has been before the two Houses of Congress more than two years and had a great amount of consideration by both Houses. During all of this time each one of the Houses and the country at large fully understood and took into consideration and gave great weight to the advice of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury. The objection has not met the judgment of a big majority of the House or of more than a 2 to 1 majority in the Senate. Thus we have the exercise of a judgment of a single man against the 333 Members of the House as against 70, and 47 Members of the Senate as against 22, Members elected to represent the American people.

But the President has acted within the scope of his unquestioned power. The Constitution provides that his judgment shall govern in all cases of legislation, unless there be a 2 to 1 vote in each branch of the Congress against him. Therefore, though the House pass a bill unanimously and the Senate be in favor of the same bill by 62 to 34, the President can override the unanimous judgment of the House and the nearly 2 to 1 judgment of the Senate.

Without question the President honestly thinks that he ought to exercise this power. I still think as a legislator that I am equally entitled to my judgment, that he ought not to have exercised that power against this heavy majority of both Houses in which there was no question of constitutionality involved.

I believe in cases in which the constitutionality of a measure is not questioned the President should defer to the judgment of such an overwhelming number of the legislators of both branches of Congress rather than to exercise his own judgment as to the propriety of the measure. Had this been a close question in which there was a bare majority in favor of the proposition, I can easily understand why the Executive might feel it his duty to cast his vote in the case of a veto against what was a fair majority.

I do not believe, notwithstanding the objection of the great metropolitan press, representing only a certain class of our American people, that there ever was a measure so popular among all classes of people as this particular measure. The legislatures of 22 States have petitioned Congress to enact the legislation. The legislatures of 18 States have acted favorably upon the question of State bonus legislation. The governors of 32 States have called upon the Chief Executive to approve the bill which is now before us. In addition to this, there have been presented to Congress petitions signed by more than 3,000,000 persons requesting the enactment of the law. With such a showing it clearly seems to me that the President should have allowed Congress to assume the responsibility for the measure.

For the most part the President's views do not seem to have changed during the last year and a half, even though the conditions of the country have most materially changed. Every cloud of doubt as to our ability to take care of our debts as they fall due has been this fact: The financial skies are clear. We would have no trouble in meeting the small obligation imposed by the bill without any additional means of taxation.

The President in his veto message stated:

> The Treasury estimates, based on what seems the most likely exercise of the options, figure the direct cost at approximately $145,000,000 for 1923, $225,000,000 for 1924, $114,000,000 for 1925, and $312,000,000 for 1926—

And that there would be a total cost in excess of $4,000,000,000 for the entire life of the law. In other words, the President estimates the cost each year at just about double what the actuary of the Treasury Department has given us. Such a condition could only prevail in case the administration of the law would cost the Government $1 for every dollar paid out to the soldier. I had supposed that we had passed the period of such reckless cost of administration. Without going into details, I can not possibly accept the figures given us as the true basis of cost, as the bill was formulated for the first four years of its operation.

The President in his message further called attention to the fact that the soldiers themselves while serving in the World War did not expect this bonus. I think it most pertinent to meet this declaration with the suggestion that the soldier while serving in the war did not expect the stay-at-homes would have their wages and their profits doubled and trebled and quadrupled while the soldiers were fighting for their country. Nor did they expect that a debt of $24,000,000,000, which debt represents waste, extravagance, and illegal profits, would be piled upon their shoulders and upon the shoulders of their children's children, while they themselves did not receive one penny of those profits or one penny of this excess extravagance.

I myself most earnestly repudiate the use of the word "bonus" in connection with the bill. For the reasons which I have expressed many times on the floor of the Senate, I regard the payment to be made under the bill to be a just and a moral obligation on the part of the American people. Upon that ground alone I have strenuously supported it, and upon that ground alone have the soldiers asked for the compensation.

But let us suppose that the entire cost would not be less than $4,000,000,000 and that this can only be predicated upon the assumption that from 75 to 80 per cent of all the soldiers entitled to privileges under the legislation would select the 20-year endowment clause. Outside of the payments which would be made because of deaths, none of the endowments would be payable until the expiration of 20 years, and as under the terms of the bill the soldiers would have 5 years in which to make claim, the great bulk of the endowments would be payable between 20 and 25 years from January 1, 1923. Under no system of computation, therefore, could it be claimed that more than $1,000,000,000 would be due and payable before 20 years, and this divided during the 20-year period. Therefore this would leave $1,000,000,000 for 20 years, which would be $50,000,000 a year to take care of, and it is nonsense to assume that we would have to take care of that by a special system of taxation. Mr. President, surely we must be a very pessimistic people if we feel that a country with a population of 110,000,000 to-day—and which will have probably 200,000,000 population when the bulk of this debt has to be paid—will not be able to take care of $3,000,000,000. Very few of us who are in the Senate to-day will be upon the face of the earth at that time, but I have faith enough in this mighty country, whose resources have not yet been half developed, to believe that, with its wealth and great population, which 25 years from now will probably be very close to 200,000,000, it can take care of $3,000,000,000.

I note that the President, not only in this but in previous messages, has referred to what the country is doing for the sick and wounded; but because I am taking care of the sick or the injured in my family am I thereby relieved from paying my just debts and obligations? And this is a just debt and obligation on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, there are absent of those Senators who have declared themselves to be in favor of this legislation 15 Members of the Senate. I think if we include the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY], the number of absent Senators who voted for the bill would be 16. Of those who are opposed there are absent only two—the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] and the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER]. The junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is sick and is in the country. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I think, is present.

There is no law on the face of the earth which compels me to pair with any other Senator. On the contrary, while we have customarily recognized pairs, we do so only through the indulgence of the Senate. If any Senator should decline to cast his vote on the ground of a pair and his request were challenged the Senate would have to say that that was sufficient cause for his not voting. I believe, under ordinary circumstances, that would be true; but I could not bring my conscience to the position where I could say that I would yield two votes for one when the country had expressed itself so earnestly and so overwhelmingly in favor of this adjusted compensation bill and similar bills whenever it has had an opportunity to express itself, and when the House of Representatives, representing the people of the States, have voted five to one in its favor. So, Mr. President, I am glad that my regular pair has arranged to pair himself with two other Senators.

If all the Senators who are absent were present it is probable that it would make no difference in the final result, because the vote would probably be about 62 to 34 or thereabouts, which would not be a two-thirds majority; but I have some faith in the persuasiveness of numbers, and I would rather have 16 live Senators on the floor casting their votes than have 16 Senators out in Hongkong or elsewhere allowing somebody else to cast their votes two to one. It might not change the result, but I should hope that it would change it.

Mr. President, a bill that has passed the House of Representatives with the majority recorded in favor of this bill, a bill that has passed the Senate with the majority recorded in favor of the bill here is not going to die. The principle is going to survive. No legislative question is settled until it is finally settled in accordance with the opinions of the vast majority of both branches of Congress, and while the power to destroy this proposition to-day may be in existence, that power will not continue in existence every day, in my opinion, for the next few years. I am very much inclined to say that this issue will live.

When the matter came before the Senate we knew that the President desired provision made for some system of taxation, but the Senate can not originate a tax bill; it was absolutely helpless; it had to do the best it could; and that was for the first few years so to cut down the expenses of this program of legislation for the benefit of the soldier that it would not be a heavy drain upon the country. There is nothing like having two years' time in which to turn around, but I think that after the election, even though taxation may be a little unpopular, it will not be so unpopular as the defeat of this measure. I think that the House will find it within its power to meet the conditions of the President and that the Senate will concur. I hope to God that that will be the case, because, believing with all my heart in the justice of this measure, I hope to see it enacted into law, even though I may not have a voice in its enactment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. CARAWAY's name was called). The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is necessarily absent. He and the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] are paired on this vote with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. If present, the junior Senator from Arkansas and the senior Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay," but a pair has been arranged in order that his absence will not make any difference in the result.

Mr. HEFLIN (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). On this question the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. If the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Montana were present they would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I understand that an arrangement has been made to pair my general pair with two other Senators, which leaves me at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. NORRIS's name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I understand that he and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], both of whom would vote "yea" on this question, are paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. If these two Senators were present, they would vote "yea," and if I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). On this question I stand paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Those two Senators, if present, would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER], if present, would vote "yea" on this question. I understand that a pair has been arranged for him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], if present, would vote "yea." They are paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], if present, would vote "yea." They are paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], who, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] are paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. Were they present they would vote "yea," and the Senator from Vermont would vote "nay."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is absent on account of serious illness in his family.

The roll call resulted—yeas 44, nays 28, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the Constitution, the roll call upon this question will be spread upon the Journal of the Senate. The yeas are 44, the nays are 28. Two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in the affirmative, the bill fails to pass.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 12377, the coal commission bill. I am quite sure, if I understand the situation correctly, that there will be no discussion of any moment.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to say that if the conference report is called up and considered I wish to make a few remarks on it. I shall not take over five minutes.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the coal commission bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the conference report which appears earlier in to-day's proceedings.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I thought perhaps I might state the form in which the bill comes from the conference committee, as distinguished from the form in which it passed the Senate, and save the reading of the entire report, unless Senators desire it read.

Mr. DIAL. I think that would be well. I think it would expedite matters.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill as it passed the Senate provided for five members of the commission. The House had provided for nine. The conference report calls for seven.

The bill as it passed the Senate provided that neither owners of mines nor workmen should be members of the commission. The House left the matter open to the President. The report leaves it as the Senate passed it. That is to say, there is no prohibition against anyone whom the President shall see fit to choose, except Members of Congress. The Senate put in a clause to the effect that no United States official should be a member of the commission. That was eliminated.

The balance of the bill, with the exception of the amount it appropriates, is practically the bill as it passed the Senate. The two clauses in the bill with reference to nationalization and with reference to regulation and control were rewritten, and I will read the clause as it now appears in the report, as contradistinguished from the clause as it passed the Senate:

> The commission shall make recommendations as to the advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation, or control in the coal industry.

That clause takes the place of subdivisions (d) and (e) in the bill as it passed the Senate relative to the regulation, control, and nationalization.

The House had appropriated $300,000, the Senate $100,000, and the conference report provides for an appropriation of $200,000.

I do not recall anything else of any moment. Some of the language in the provision for the general authority of the commission was changed, but largely to give the bill more clarity, and in some respects amplify the powers of the commission, but not in any respect to enlarge its powers as they were intended to be given, in my judgment, by the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, week before last, when this bill and a kindred bill, known as the Cummins bill, were before the Senate I made some remarks and offered some amendments. To the Cummins bill I offered an amendment providing that the Interstate Commerce Commission should furnish cars to take care of coal contracted for before the 25th of July this year at and under $2 per ton. It seemed to me that that was as little as Congress could do. I do not know that it has very much virtue in it, except that it took away from the operators the excuse of not furnishing coal.

I do not introduce many bills and I do not offer many amendments, but I try to see that those I do offer are fair, reasonable, honest, just, and equitable. I do not try to put up jobs on the Senate or on the country, and I must say that I have been disappointed that the conferees left that amendment out of the bill. I felt they ought to have insisted upon it.

This matter is one of the greatest importance to my constituents. We have several hundred mills in my State which use thousands and thousands of tons of coal. I have one constituent who uses eight carloads of coal a day, and the result of this agitation has been to put up the price of coal to my constituents from $1.90 to $3.05 a ton. That is, where the parties with whom they have contracts ship the coal. Where they have to fight the "bootlegger" crowd it costs from $6 to $7 and $8 a ton, and perhaps more. Therefore we are greatly interested in trying to stabilize the coal market and the production and distribution of coal and to have our contracts complied with. I feel that the Government interference in this matter has disarranged the price and has caused profiteering to be indulged in. I do not see any necessity for this bill.

There has been some strife and some disagreement between the operators and the miners, and the way to get production is to have those people get together and settle their own differences. I fear this bill encourages taking of testimony by a commission which will be composed, in part at least, of operators and miners who will combine on some visionary scheme to increase the price to the consumer, and the public will bear the burden and "be the goat," as usual.

In the first place I think the bill is uncalled for. In the next place we have the Federal Trade Commission, a body well equipped to make investigations, but the amendment I offered the other day to substitute the Federal Trade Commission for the commission provided by this bill was voted down. Instead of having a commission, five members at $7,500 a year each, the conferees agree to a commission of seven members. I offered an amendment the other day providing that those members should be distributed throughout the country as nearly as practicable, and that not more than three of them should belong to the same political party. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is so eminently fair that he saw the justice of that proposition and was willing to accept it, but some Senators on the other side had it voted down.

I do not want to be mean. I love to be agreeable to my colleagues, but I am reminded of an expression of my old friend Bill Childs, of South Carolina. Childs was president of a railroad. He was a good friend of mine, and was a noble character. He used to say to me, "DIAL, if a man does you wrong do not stump your toe running after him, but just get you some rocks and sit down by the roadside and you will get to pelt him sooner or later."

My time has come to pelt if I want to be mean, but I am not constituted that way. I am going to let this pass at this time, but I am going to let the Senate know that while I am a good-natured man I am not an angel, and I want my rights respected here along with those of others—a little reciprocity now and then.

This bill provides for the investigation of the titles to mines. There are some 11,000 mines in the United States.

That is to give employment to a lot of Republican lawyers for a long, long time to investigate the titles. I can not see why we want to investigate the title to another man's property. We have nothing to do with it, and I can not see any necessity of going to this expense to do that. It is simply throwing away the public money. I try to get Republicans to economize, but they will not do it; but I am going to keep on hammering at them and maybe I can get them to be a little reasonable after a while. It will take several thousand lawyers to examine those titles. Anybody who knows anything about the examination of the titles to real estate in this country will know what that means.

Some want to standardize the mines. That is simply a proposition to get the price of coal up. I tried to have the sections (c) and (d) stricken out. They left in section (d) providing:

The commission shall make recommendations as to the advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation, or control in the coal industry.

As I said the other day, this is just an attempt to encourage all the malcontents and the complaining crowd to come before the commissioners and air their impractical theories and their wild-eyed notions and visionary thoughts. I do not favor any such proposition as even an investigation.

Then the bill goes on to provide for the taking charge of the property of the mine owners—make them produce all their books, divulge all their secrets, and everything of that sort. Of course, I am opposed to profiteering.

We do not mine a ton of coal in my State, and we are not interested in mining. I only know one gentleman who mines coal, and I must say he is an honest, fair man. But the mines are located in other States, and the Senators from those States can do as they please. I do not think this conference report ought to be adopted, and if I were disposed to be a little bit meaner I would talk from now to the end of the session and not let it be agreed to. But I understand it is an administration measure, and they think there is some virtue in it, and I am willing to pay deference to their thinking and give away my knowing that there is no good in it whatever.

But I predict that we are planting the seeds of discontent right here in this Congress; and if we would stop legislating to have the Government interfere in private matters, and let people settle their differences outside, people would go to work and we would have a better country.

As I said before, the upshot of this whole business will be to increase the price of coal to the consumer.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I opposed this bill when it was before the Senate, and I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report. I do not think the bill as reported by the conferees is much less objectionable than it was as it passed the Senate.

I expressed at some length my views in opposition to the provisions of the bill when it was before the Senate, and I shall not speak longer about it now. I shall content myself with saying that I am still opposed to the bill and shall vote against the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 20, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, Thou alone art the safe anchorage on the sea of human life. Temper the waves and guard our course and be unto us a sun and a shield. According to the measure of Thy mercy, grant unto us the gifts of Thy grace and enable us to express them in the finest conscientiousness and in the greatest wisdom. Let every duty performed blend with intelligent understanding and with the steadfast traditions of our country. Be patient with us if we do the things which come from infirmities and limited knowledge. Blessed Lord take care of our Republic; guide our President and bless richly the inner circles of his home. O may divine love make fragrant and happy the gardens of our firesides. Let it touch and encircle the deepest devotions of our hearts and about every hearthstone may it be the pearl of greatest price. May no sorrow or peril come nigh us to blight the flower of earthly happiness. In the name of Jesus we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3890) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10196. An act to provide for the applicability of the pension laws to certain classes of persons in the military and naval services not entitled to the benefits of article 3 of the war risk insurance act as amended; and

H. R. 11173. An act to amend section 126 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 68.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the clerk is hereby authorized and directed to insert in paragraph 502 of the bill as amended, after the word "gallon" in the last line, the following: "testing above 52 and not above 56 per cent total sugars not imported to be commercially used for the extraction of sugar, or for human consumption, one-sixth of 1 cent additional for each per cent of total sugars and fractions of a per cent in proportion."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2716. An act to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign Governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen;

S. 2621. An act authorizing the President to dispose of certain arms and ammunition seized in pursuance of the act approved June 15, 1917, along the Mexican border;

S. 2799. An act to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890;

S. 2983. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant extensions of time under permits for the development of underground waters within the State of Nevada, and for other purposes;

S. 3111. An act to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes;

S. 3641. An act to grant and confirm to the State of Florida title in and to section 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, and for other purposes;

S. 3733. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Warren, in the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

S. 3793. An act to authorize the Gary Tube Co. to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the State of Indiana;

S. 3938. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county courts of Lafayette and Ray Counties, in the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

S. 2377. An act to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.; and

S. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution providing for the consent of the Congress of the United States of America to a compact and agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri respecting the erection, maintenance, and operation of the waterworks plants of the cities of Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., the taxation thereof, and exercise of eminent domain in connection therewith by each State.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 67.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to strike out "accounts" appearing in paragraph 1626 of the bill as agreed to in conference.

SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. By a special order of the House the consideration of the veto of the President will be taken up. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the questions involved in this measure have been considered by the House and by the country for a very considerable period of time. I think all Members are fully informed as to all of the arguments pro and con with respect to the legislation. Members have had an opportunity to consider the President's veto message. I doubt if any votes would be changed or anything would be gained by further discussion of the matter at this time.

I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, do I understand from what the gentleman from Wyoming has said that it is not agreeable to him to have any debate on this matter?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe nothing would be gained by extended debate. Members are anxious to conclude the session and get home. I do not think there is any general desire for debate. The matter has been thoroughly discussed and debated in the Congress and in the country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I occupy a somewhat peculiar attitude toward this matter. The gentleman from Wyoming, I assume, desires to override the President's veto. I shall stand by the President in this matter [applause], not because of the reasoning which the President used but because of the result which the veto attains.

There is a desire upon this side of the Chamber to have some discussion of the matter. So far as I know, the requests come entirely from those who will vote like the gentleman from Wyoming. If the matter is not discussed here, or even if it be discussed here, I presume it will be discussed elsewhere. This legislation has passed the House, every time it has passed, under suspension of the rules, without any opportunity for amendment and with very, very limited debate, considering the importance of the question, and it seems to me that the gentleman from Wyoming should be willing now to let us have at least an hour's debate on the subject.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have not read the Constitution for a good while, but my recollection is that the Constitution provides that we must proceed at once to vote upon the President's veto without any discussion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that is so, then the gentleman from Wyoming violated the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I know I did not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, as the Chair has already stated, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 54, not voting 115, as follows:

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the claims filed under the Dent bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in that request permission to extend in 8-point type some remarks I made on the same subject two or three years ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can insert anything he pleases if it is his own.

Mr. LITTLE. A former speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, on the 15th of June, 1921, the Scott bill to amend the La Follette Seamen's Act was before the House. Several amendments were offered to strike out features from the bill, which failed of passage, and the bill came to a vote that day, the vote being found on page 2646 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 61, of the Sixty-seventh Congress. The vote was yeas 190, nays 102, not voting 109. Among those who voted against the bill, the RECORD shows, were the following:

Little	Beck	Wyant	Speaks
London	Kleczka	Bland, Ind.	Tinkham
Nolan	Voigt	James	Aswell
Zihlman	Barkley	Hardy, Colo.	McLaughlin, Pa.
Cooper, Wis.	Collier	Leatherwood	Mudd
Frear	Hayden	Robsion	Oldfield
Lampert	Huddleston	Rosenbloom	Pou
Nelson, A. P.	Rankin	Scott, Tenn.	Steagall
Nelson, J. M.	Stedman	Sinclair

The Scott bill was drawn to make some changes in the La Follette bill. Friends of labor urged that it injured the rights of seamen on the Lake ships and tried to amend it but failed. Thereupon LITTLE, of Kansas, and these other gentlemen voted against the bill, including the almost entire Wisconsin delegation.

During the primary campaign in the second Kansas district a little, occasionally issued bulletin, attacked Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, stating he did not vote on that bill. He promptly called attention in the newspapers to the fact that he had voted, as shown on page 2646 of the RECORD, and that he not only voted but he voted against the bill just as the labor organizations desired him to, and as did these other gentlemen above mentioned. Thereupon the little bulletin at Kansas City, Kans., secured a telegram from William Johnston in which he called LITTLE all manner of names; said he could not read the RECORD, and that he did fail to vote on the bill. It then appeared that this little bulletin got its purported information from a circular issued and signed by this William Johnston, vice president of the Mount Vernon Bank, of Washington, and president of the International Association of Machinists. Of course, the first statement might have been a mistake, but as soon as Johnston repeated it LITTLE denounced it as a plain, ordinary lie. The RECORD, of course, verifies the statement of the gentleman from Kansas.

The matter was called to the attention of the national legislative representatives of the International Association of Machinists, of which William Johnston is president, and they promptly issued a written statement that LITTLE did vote against the bill, just as he stated, and stated further that after a careful examination of the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, and Sixty-seventh Congresses they had found "only two instances in which LITTLE voted contrary to the position favored by labor." I am inserting herewith the letter they wrote in order that this evidently deliberate falsehood may be corrected:

[Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. District Lodge No. 44, Government Employees. N. P. Alifas, room 303, Machinists' Building.]

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
OFFICE OF PRESIDENT AND BUSINESS REPRESENTATIVE,
Washington, D. C., September 23, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to our recent conversation in which you called our attention to a statement being circulated among the voters in your district to the effect that you failed to vote on the Scott bill to amend the seamen's act, we desire to say that the statement referred to appears to be correct only in so far as it applies to the Nolan amendment and the Gahn motion to recommit. However, a further study of the votes on the Scott bill discloses the fact that there were three roll-call votes taken; first, on the Nolan amendment relating to the hours of service; second, on the Gahn motion to recommit; and third, on the final passage of the bill.

We find that you are recorded as "not voting" on the first two but voted against the final passage of the bill. In our opinion, your vote against the final passage of the Scott bill is sufficient evidence of your favorable attitude toward labor in so far as that particular measure is concerned, in that you thereby voted against all of the remaining objectionable features of the bill.

We have carefully scrutinized the record showing your votes in the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, and Sixty-seventh Congresses on measures of interest to labor and find that in all that time there are only two instances in which you voted contrary to the position favored by labor.

We consider that from the viewpoint of organized labor your record is an exceptionally good one. In addition to your favorable attitude toward labor, as indicated by your recorded votes, I am pleased to say, in my capacity as legislative representative of the International Association of Machinists, that we have always found you ready to receive representatives of organized labor and to give sympathetic consideration to their views on matters of legislation affecting the workers. In this connection, we are not unmindful, as representatives of the International Association of Machinists, of the splendid support you have given this year in your capacity as a member of the Committee on Claims of the House to a bill (H. R. 10727) in which we are much interested.

This bill provides for the payment of wages due former employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co., in accordance with an award granting an increase in wages, handed down by the War Labor Board July 31, 1918.

The several thousand machinists who are favorably affected by this bill were highly pleased when you and our other friends on the Committee on Claims succeeded in having the bill reported to the House on August 24, 1922, with the recommendation that it be passed.

We have also noted that during the time in which you have been a member of the Committee on Claims that you not only have favored bills of this kind which are of advantage to the workers, but that you have also raised your voice in protest against war profiteers who are continually besieging your Claims Committee with alleged claims against the Government.

Your speech of January 9, 1919, in the House of Representatives, against the graft and profiteering possibilities of the Dent bill which then passed the House and against which you voted, is an indication, in our humble estimation, of your desire to protect the common people against these vicious profiteering practices.

Sincerely yours,

N. P. ALIFAS,
President District No. 44, International Association of Machinists.

In the campaign of 1920, in spite of the above record of Congressman LITTLE, the Federation of Labor for Kansas, run by some Democratic sympathizers, of course, indorsed a man for the nomination against Congressman LITTLE and then indorsed another man for the election against LITTLE. LITTLE was not under the slighest obligations to them, and there was no reason why he should vote for any bill they favored, except his own convictions, yet this fellow, Johnston, has the impudence to charge LITTLE with being an ingrate. Several leading labor men of the organizations in Washington have told me that Johnston is a "nut" and members of his own order have told me that he is crazy. I notice he is thrifty enough to be vice president of a big bank, as well as drawing a salary as president of a big international order. So, I guess, although he is a great friend of the I. W. W.'s and well identified with the Reds, there is something back of his work besides brains that jingle out of tune. He is evidently simply making a malicious and untruthful effort to help elect a Democratic Congress and restore the situation of the past administration when such men as he were drawing $10,000 a year out of the Federal Government for doing nothing.

Immediately after the armistice in 1918 there appeared a large number of claimants for unliquidated damages from the Government because of conditions that had arisen under some arrangements they had made with the War Department, under which they were acting. The Comptroller of the Treasury held that they had no contracts and that the Government owed them nothing and refused payment of every one of them. The Committee on Military Affairs then reported the Dent bill, and on January 8, 1919, the Committee on Rules reported a rule to vote on it that day. The bill passed, and under it a vast array of claimants arose who have been given without any judicial judgment many millions of dollars by the War Department. The Dent bill was passed in the Sixty-fifth Congress. Recently there have arisen a great many instances of enormous grafts put over under this bill. The Congress authorized the expenditure of half a million of dollars by the Department of Justice to prosecute these grafters, and those suits are now in progress. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] have been very active in pushing these matters.

William H. Johnston, vice president of the Mount Vernon Bank and president of the international machinists, has criticized me in this matter, and I desire to call the attention of the House to the facts. When this bill came before the House with the rule, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] raised the point of order on January 8, 1919, on page 1133 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, that the Military Committee had no authority to report such a bill, and that it should have gone to the Claims Committee, and presented an argument on that point, supported by precedents very much in point. The Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee] held the gentleman's point of order was not well taken. In the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Kansas raised the point again and was overruled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. CRISP, of Georgia]. That distinguished parliamentarian [Mr. CRISP, of Georgia], after holding that the point was not well taken, said, as you will see from the RECORD of January 8, 1919, page 1149:

The Chair would ask the indulgence of the House to permit him to revise and extend his ruling, if he sees fit to do so. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], that his only purpose is to answer the suggestion of the gentleman, which the Chair did not do, relative to the point of order being made in committee.

The gentleman from Georgia is so accurate a parliamentarian that the mere fact that he wished to revise and extend his ruling indicates that it must have been a pretty close shave. As indicating the part in that debate taken by the gentleman from Kansas, the Chairman, Mr. CRISP, said on page 1144 of the RECORD when the division of time for the debate was at issue:

LITTLE LED OPPOSITION TO BILL TO RELIEVE THE WAR CONTRACTORS.

If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who led the opposition to the bill, wants recognition the Chair would recognize him for an hour.

Thus you will see that although the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] opposed this biggest graft in the history of the country at its very inception nearly four years ago, and opposed it very vigorously, the charge is now made that he has not participated in the fight on these great grafts which is now being prosecuted in the courts. The fact is that the gentleman from Kansas was the first man to see the danger in this legislation and to antagonize the legislation, and if his views had been sustained then there would not be a lot of crooked grafts to investigate now and the country would have been saved many millions of dollars, including the $500,000 voted to prosecute these grafts. Just 29 Members of the House voted with the gentleman from Kansas and against this legislation, and I do not find among them anybody who is interested in the topic now.

While I am very sorry that my prophecy came true and would have much preferred that these highway robberies had not come to pass, I am thoroughly disgusted that there should be anybody in this country so ignorant and so untruthful as to not recognize the fact that if I had been successful in my fight all these grafts would have been avoided. This man who attacks me tries to convey the impression that there was a vote upon a certain resolution. As a matter of fact, the Speaker ruled it out of order, and the only vote was as to sustaining the Speaker, and I voted to sustain the Speaker's ruling because in my judgment it was the correct ruling. I voted to sustain the ruling because it was a proper ruling, and I voted to kill the Dent bill because it was a bad bill, and I hope to be able to continue to vote the way I think is right on everything that comes up, without regard to the consequences to me, but I shall not hesitate to denounce every willful liar who misrepresents my vote and my record.

The present agitation on this subject is so in accord with the arguments I advanced January 8 and 9, 1919, on the Dent bill that I am venturing to call the attention of the House to what the gentleman from Kansas said then, and which is to be found on pages 263–266 of the appendix to volume 57 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session:

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGE CLAIMS, $4,000,000,000.

SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD C. LITTLE, OF KANSAS, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1919.

The House had under consideration the resolution (H. Res. 487) providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand the amount of the bills for whose payment they are providing in the matter of the claims for damages to people who did obey the law in 1862 as to contracts. In the hearing before the committee the Comptroller of the Treasury said:

This bill will confer on the War Department the settlement of more equitable claims in amount, in my opinion, than Congress has settled since the beginning of the Government.

That is what you are arranging for. Can you not spend a day on that? He says again:

Probably the amount of money in equitable claims which will be covered by this bill is more than has been acted upon by Congress through its Committee on Claims since the beginning of the Government.

And you are taking 80 minutes to discuss it.

How fast are they going to settle it? Mr. Warwick, the Comptroller of the Treasury, says:

I understand the War Department, if this proposed legislation is enacted, could settle with the contractors within 30 days after the law is passed by Congress.

He testified that there are 6,669 of them.

Mr. GORDON. Six thousand.

Mr. LITTLE. Six thousand six hundred and sixty-nine claims already. And the gentleman from Ohio came up here and told us he had investigated them and that they were all right. An old lady came home from the drug store in great haste and she said to Mike, who was smoking by the stove, "They have got a complexion powder down at the drug store that will give me the complexion of a baby." He looked her old mug over kindly and he said, "It will be a dandy if it will do it." [Laughter.] And yet that is what you want to do. You want to authorize the War Department in 30 days to pay out $4,000,000,000 to 6,669 different claimants and more to follow. Great God, gentlemen, they will think you are crazy! Why, gentlemen, it is now four years since that was said on this floor and everybody thinks you are crazy now, except those who think you were helping grafters.

They tell us that these are contracts. There is not a contract here. The Comptroller of the Treasury has turned down every one of them as illegal.

The chairman of this committee says this bill is to provide for contracts that were not valid contracts. That is what is the matter with these alleged contracts. Mr. Dorr says in the hearings, "An agreement may not be a contract, and it was not a contract in this case, because the law prescribes that it shall not be a contract until it is signed in a certain way." You are here to protect the public. You are not here to only take care of the contractor. You represent the taxpayers and it is your business to interpret these laws for their benefit.

FIRST ARGUMENT FOR A BONUS.

Immediately following the passage of this bill the gentleman from Kansas reached the conclusion that if they were going to spend billions of dollars on a lot of grafters that ought to be put in the penitentiary it was high time some of the money be utilized as a bonus to compensate the soldiers, and he drew and indorsed the bonus bill. He felt that if we had billions to squander on a pack of thieves we could manage to raise some money to show some of our appreciation of the sacrifices of our soldiers.

You come here and tell me that they can not pay a wounded soldier. Has any rule been brought in here to fix a way by which the soldiers can get their money quickly? There are thousands of poor women who are not getting their allotments. Has anybody brought in a rule here to authorize a system to hurry up the payment of these allotments? Yet you come in here with a rule for the benefit of manufacturers, who have millions back of them. Why does not somebody appear here and ask for a rule for the benefit of the wounded soldiers and the widows and orphans? [A voice, "Whoo-ee!"]

Who says that? Some contractor? Some speculator? Some profiteer? Is there anyone here who would vote to pay the un liquidated damage claims of millionaire manufacturers and then jeer when some one speaks for the soldiers' wives who do not receive their allotments; for the orphans, the widow, and the unpaid wounded soldier? They tell us he who argues for the millionaire is a conservative statesman, and then turn around and declare the man a demagogue who says that the soldier who fights for his country should receive as much financial consideration as the contractor who profits from it. They lie.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I have not time. The gentleman from New York is the one who said to the department satraps in the hearings, "You think you are God's anointed and want to do it in your way." He was right. What is the matter; where is the Senegambian in the woodpile? In 1862 they made a law that every man down there who made a contract should make an affidavit that he was not interested in it. That is the mystery and that is the trouble. You talk about a contract. There is no affidavit in one of these pretended contracts in which the man says that he was not concerned in it. Some fellow with a major's epaulets on his shoulders probably made these agreements, or most of them, and then ran off and made no affidavit, because he was afraid that he would get into the penitentiary.

Yet he wants us to authorize him to settle up and pay the entire claims because he knows all about them. He certainly does. He knew too much to swear to them. I would not vote to pay anyone until the affidavits required by the law of 1862 are made. A commission of these nonaffidavit workers would be a farce. We put the "conscientious objectors" to military service in jail. We ought to put these "conscientious objectors" to making affidavits demanded by law in jail with them. The latter class is much more dangerous to the Nation. Yet they can get big business and little business and the press with them, while the first has only the War Department. A commission sufficiently large should be appointed with authority to take evidence and make a thorough examination. It should report to the Congress of the United States, which appropriates the money to pay these damage-suit claims.

Some of these contracts are probably just. I will vote for a commission to investigate them and report here, and will vote to pay them as fast as they are proven honest; but I will not vote to spend a nickel on one until the fellow with spurs on his heels will make an affidavit that he was not interested in it and then comply with the law of 1862, passed in the country's greatest emergency. [Applause.]

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Appendix to vol. 57, 65th Cong., 3d sess., p. 264.]

SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD C. LITTLE, OF KANSAS, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1919.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I want to call attention to the exact facts in this case. The gentleman asked, "Do you want to cheat any honest man out of his money?" I do not, and I do not want any grafter to "get his." Some of these claims are honest and some are not. I do not want the friends of the grafters to get behind the friends of the honest men and get anything that is not coming to them. I want to say this in behalf of the honest men and the honest claims: Every lawyer here, if he will be frank with himself, will concede to himself, if he will not in public, that this law is probably unconstitutional because it places judicial power in the hands of the Executive, and if an injunction is applied for the injunction will be granted. I am not sure that we are doing the honest man any favor by putting him in this position.

Now, I want to call attention to the elementary facts. The law provides, in Revised Statutes, section 3744, enacted in 1862, for this very purpose, that every contract shall be in writing on these matters and that an official should make an affidavit that he made the contract and that he in no way profits thereby. These alleged contracts are not in writing and were not verified by the affidavit, in my opinion often omitted by legal advice. Now, gentlemen, we hear much said about contracts. There is no contract at issue here because the law says it shall not be a contract until these things are done. That is not all. There is no legal contract, and there is no equity in it. Every man that comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands himself.

If A and B undertake to make a contract in writing, and A says he will do this if B will make an affidavit, and they do not execute any writing, but B turns around and undertakes to set up an equity and has not made the affidavit, he has no equity. He does not come with clean hands. If any man undertakes to get in under this law, where an affidavit is essential, and he in any way assists in getting away from that affidavit, he has no equity. There is no legal right and no equity because they can not come in with clean hands to avail themselves of it.

Instead of being contracts these are felonies, and this law ought to read at the beginning not to confirm informal contracts but for the relief of formal felonies. That is where you start, gentlemen, and that is all there is to it. A great many of these men are honest men and have no intention of violating the law. What is the result? They have been placed in a position where they may be brought up for a felony and prosecuted for a felony. If the felony is not there, why do you put in a provision by amendment that you reserve the right to arrest every one of them?

In the hearings December 9, 1918, the character of these unliquidated damage claims is fully developed. The evidence presented there shows that they are merely unliquidated damage claims. Mr. Warwick, Comptroller of the Treasury, says, page 30:

"There is no real liability on the Government for these claims. The Court of Claims and the Supreme Court would give judgment to the United States on any case that is intended to be covered by this bill."

He says, page 31:

"This bill does not cover cases where the material has been delivered."

And, page 31:

"I mean the contractor would get his money without this bill where he has delivered the articles and the Government has accepted and used them. He would get the fair value of the article."

Comptroller Warwick says, page 28:

"The Supreme Court of the United States holds that, so far as the man (p. 29) who has delivered under an informal contract is concerned, he is entitled to quantum meruit.

"The CHAIRMAN. Against the Government?

"Mr. WARWICK. Against the Government; oh, yes. But this bill does not cover that. This bill covers articles not delivered."

You can see that the claims this bill is calculated to pay are not intended to provide a fund to pay for anything the Government has received. The Supreme Court has provided the method for meeting that. These claims are for unliquidated damages somebody claims for nobody knows what. They will amount to over $4,000,000,000, and perhaps never cease. Here are our soldiers straggling home out of employment and men who advocate the expenditure of billions to meet demands that are nothing on earth but damage suits will absolutely refuse to make any serious preparation to reward the soldiers for their sacrifices and enable them to get a new start. What has John Smith to complain of when he talks about some contracts that were never made and never carried out when John Jones comes home with a wooden leg and no job?

Where the claims are just they will be met, but thousands of crooked grafts will sneak in here if this bill goes through, when the Government by the law of 1862 made such things impossible. On page 34 of the hearings before the Military Committee on December 9, 1918, a member of the committee, the gentleman from New York, says:

"When these contracts were made there was talk in the Halls of Congress and on the streets of our country to the effect that men formerly employed by these great contractors were the people who were giving the contractors all the contracts. Under this bill those men will be put on boards to pass on the question as to what their former bosses are going to get when the war is over. After we have won, there is no need of paying a tribute for winning the war.

"Mr. WARWICK. That is not a question directed at me, is it?

"(Thereupon the committee adjourned.)"

Well, I should think it would adjourn. There is not a man in the world who dare answer the question. Ah, you know, they sent employees here with majors' shoulder straps and jingling spurs to pose at a desk as "experts" and secure contracts for the men for whom they worked at home. Then they discovered the law of 1862 that required the fellow in these spurs and straps to make an affidavit that he was not concerned in the matter, and consulted their attorney. Of course, any intelligent attorney would instruct them not to make the affidavit, as it would take them to the penitentiary. They violated the law about the affidavit, and therefore violated the law that required them to make a contract in a certain way. Then the Comptroller of the Treasury refused to allow the pretended contracts to be paid, and they come here and ask Congress to enact legislation that will authorize the Department of War, to which these shoulder-strapped individuals are clerks and officers, to pass upon and settle the very contracts these felonists made. Why should they pass upon it after they were afraid to make an affidavit that they were not concerned in it. If they had obeyed the law, we would not need any more legislation. It must be obvious to any intelligent man that this is simply a law to compound a felony.

The bill presented by the Department of War could not get 20 votes here; the amendments only make it able to pass. What are they? Safeguards, they say. Why so many "safeguards"? Because we all know something is wrong; but the safeguards get nowhere.

What happened? The Comptroller of the Treasury refused to disobey the law made to protect taxpayers from profiteers, and declined to allow any of these claims to be paid. The very fellows who assisted them in committing this violation of the statutes come in here and say, "A felony has been committed; we committed it; let us straighten it out; we are the fellows who can do that; we know all about it." That is exactly what has happened, and you need not try to get away from it. I concede that does not alter the fact that a lot of honest men have honest claims, but there is not one of them coming here who is in a position to go into a court of equity and demand equity, because he can not show clean hands.

This is not a grant of equity. This is to grant mercy, and it should be granted. It droppeth like the gentle dew from heaven, and here is a good time for Congress to drop some, but it is not necessary to give it to any grafter. A year and a half ago I saw this Congress appropriate $640,000,000 for airships in two hours, and when somebody got up and said, "Who is to make them, and how much will they cost?" some man answered, with flamboyant oratory, that "You must not delay; you must trust the War Department," and we did, and where is your $640,000,000?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. We did not get a machine.

Mr. LITTLE. Not a thing to show for it. I do not want you to say "hurry" to me again. I made up my mind at the time there was something wrong then. I did not object, because of the phenomenal conditions. But I shall not be flimflammed again, if I know it. The emergency is gone and I am objecting now. There is no Hun at our throats to-day.

Mr. MCKENZIE. It is too late as to the machines.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; the gentleman from Illinois says that it is too late to object to the $640,000,000, but it is not too late to object to the $1,600,000,000. The statements already show in these hearings that it has run up over $4,000,000,000. Four billion dollars! Why, every grafter in the United States will be in on this thing. Every man who can think of some reason why he should come in will be in, and you gentlemen who wish to help the honest men should aid to establish some system by which they could differentiate between the honest man and the crook. I will help you do everything that I can toward that consummation. The law of the land is against all of these people. We must now devise some means by which real justice and equity can be done, although not one of them is in a position to demand it legally. A proper commission will do it.

Oh, I know these damage-suit people are yelling bloody murder because they do not get their money. They are crying, "Hurry, hurry, hurry," that business will be ruined and a panic will be precipitated if they do not get their money. Yes; the boys over in France who were not paid once in nine months sometimes were in a hurry, too, but you never did a thing about it. The soldiers' wives at home with big families in need cried "hurry, hurry, hurry," for their allotments, but you never raised a finger to put in a rule to bring up their bill and you never had a committee report any bill for them. Why is it that every eagle owned by a rich man "hollers" so much louder than the eagle owned by a poor man when they are both squeezed? Why is it that society hardly hears the wail of the hungry, the hoarse cry of the soldier, but has its ear attuned to catch the slightest whisper of distress from what we call the business interests?

These people are simply the agents of society to carry out certain economical features, and most of them make big money by doing it, but the people you have forgotten—the soldiers' wives and the wounded at the front—are the sacred charge of the Congress of the Republic, and I do not like to see men come in here with a rule to put through, almost without discussion, payments that are admitted to amount to $1,600,000,000—and will really be over $4,000,000,000—to men whose claims are described by the Comptroller of the Treasury in the terms I have quoted.

If they were in such a hurry, why did they not comply with the law of 1862? If the payment of this money was so important that a delay might ruin society's business interests, every man that failed to make an affidavit that the law required to expedite it ought to be in the penitentiary as a malefactor of the most dangerous kind. They should be held to the strict performance of that legal duty which was thrown upon them by the statutes for the protection of the Treasury against the raids of just such men as some of them evidently are. This country, as a result of this war, has become indebted in the sum of $30,000,000,000. Of this four billions, practically one-seventh, will be paid to the men who did not comply with the law, but sought to evade it by this very failure to make these affidavits. I suggested to a gentleman who is most ardent in favor of this legislation that we support a bill to pay the soldiers a bonus for their services according to a suggestion I made. He said, "My God, that would cost the country $500,000,000. Where do you think all that money is coming from?" It never occurred to him as to where this four billion was coming from to pay the manufacturers who had violated the law, yet his hair curled with indignation when I wanted to pay $500,000,000 unliquidated damages for their sacrifices to the gallant boys who left their jobs and salaries, who left their business, who gave up all their opportunities in life and went off and risked their lives for America.

Talented orators tell us that these big business men took these great risks on account of their loyalty to their country. Well, some of them did and some of them did not. That style of argument has been given full sway here. But we do know that the soldiers who fell on the fields of France, went down into the Argonne never to return, who sleep in Belleau Woods, who rest forever at Chateau-Thierry, and who made the breach at Cantigny heard no call but that of duty, no enticement but that of loyalty. They had nothing to gain and everything to lose, and they lost it; and every man that pleads for them with the word "loyalty" on his tongue will be denounced as a demagogue, and every man who comes here to upset the laws of his country to plead for profit makers and profiteers, with the argument that they sacrificed for loyalty, has forever estopped himself from saying demagogue to anybody who talks of the soldiers' sacrifices and a pecuniary award to them. The business men of this country have good lawyers, and they were told what the law was. They should accept the situation they created and get their money just as all the rest of us get ours when we fail to obey the law.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests that we appoint a board of Members of Congress to survey these claims. A gentleman sitting by me, who is an ardent supporter of this bill, remarked, "I would not be a member of that for $10,000 a year in addition to my salary." I said, "Why?" He said, "Because I do not know anything about these claims." He does not know anything about it, yet he wants to and will vote for allowing $4,000,000,000 of these claims. One member of the committee told me that he knew of a $1,000,000 steal that was to be presented under these claims, but he had secured an amendment under which he could head that off. How many more are there that ought to be headed off? If you do not think some of these are crooked, why have you made so many amendments to the bill first presented by the War Department? If you were so afraid of the bill presented by the War Department to the Military Committee that you had to add amendment after amendment, how do you know that it is all right now? If you could not trust the War Department to make the bill, how can you trust them to pay out the money without any supervision? These people are no better than the rest of the country, and injuries to them are no more dangerous to business than damages to other business men. They should be given an opportunity to secure their money by proving their claims, just as all the rest of us do when we get into trouble.

We do that by going through forms of litigation provided to do justice between men. There is no reason why these men should have any more privileges than the rest of us who try to obey the law. This House should provide some special proceeding, in the nature of a commission, with authority to take evidence and to do justice to all concerned, including the taxpayers, who will have to put up this $4,000,000,000. The rest of this country must adopt such a system as that to pursue its unliquidated damage claims. Of course, these people will complain that that is slow, but—

"No rogue e'er felt the halter draw,
"With good opinion of the law."

If you hold these men to the methods the rest of the country must follow hereafter, you will have no difficulty in protecting the taxpayers against improper contracts in the War Department. If you authorize the men who violated the law to have full charge of the settlement of their own illegal claims, you will make a precedent that will endure to plague the taxpayers for centuries to come. As for the honest man with just claims, they will be willing to get their justice from the law, as other men do, and we should make that provision for them.

I yield back half of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] and half to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

THE RED CIRCULAR.

This William Johnston in June, 1922, signed and issued this circular in which he attacks the entire Republican delegation from the State of Kansas, including Mr. LITTLE, and in which he claims the Kansas delegation voted for the war grafters. He said that the administration leaders of the House, particularly Speaker GILLETT, MONDELL, CAMPBELL, and WALSH of Massachusetts, were determined to prevent any congressional investigation of these war contracts or of the Attorney General. The Speaker ruled Mr. JOHNSON'S motion as being out of order. MONDELL moved to lay the Johnson appeal from the Speaker's decision on the table, which carried by 149 to 114. There was no question in it of the merits of the resolution. The House is governed by its own rules, and it was the duty of the Speaker to decide the point of order according to the rules, which, in our judgment, he did, and we voted to sustain him, which was what we should have done. Instead of preventing a thorough investigation, the House voted half a million dollars to assist the Department of Justice in prosecuting the grafters, and instead of favoring these grafts, Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, began to fight them on January 8, 1919, when they first appeared. A Democratic House put the bill through making all these grafts possible and a Democratic Senate passed it and a Democratic President signed it, and a large number of the men that the Republican Department of Justice is prosecuting became grafters only because a Democratic Congress passed this Dent law, which made it possible. Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, was the first man in the House to take the floor against this proposition, and you can see by the speeches he made January 8 and 9, 1919, as shown above, that he presented the subject in full. Every evil that has come to pass was foretold by him, and instead of being for the grafters he was the first man to attack them and fight them on this question. For that reason I herewith present to you what he said nearly four years ago, when he prophesied everything that has come to pass in this connection.

In this attack that this man, Johnston, makes on the Kansas delegation, he speaks of the bill of SCOTT of Michigan. Johnston says that that bill undertook to destroy the seamen's law on the Great Lakes by repealing the life-saving requirements and the safety provisions for the proper manning of vessels. He says that LITTLE, of Kansas, failed to vote on it. This statement of Johnston's is a deliberate lie, repeated by him after his attention had been directed to the fact that LITTLE voted against the Scott bill and against all the provisions which he says it contained. The vote on that bill is found on page 2646 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 15, 1922. The record shows that SCOTT voted for his bill and that LITTLE, LONDON, NOLAN, and 99 others voted against it. Johnston's attention has been directed to this vote in the permanent RECORD and to these facts. The legislative representatives in Washington of the international machinists, of whom Johnston is president, have come to my office and personally informed me that their record shows that LITTLE voted against the bill and with labor, and that the only record they preserved on that bill was the yea-and-nay vote for and against it. Johnston claims that the bill had a provision which was equivalent to setting up a 12-hour day. If there was any such provision in the bill, LITTLE voted against it, because he voted against the whole bill, just as did many other friends of labor in the House. This man, Johnston, not only circulated this deliberate falsehood when the records of his own office would have disproved it, but went ahead and repeated it out in Kansas. Such a man can make no statements that would be worthy of any consideration from any honest man.

In another place in his attempt to beat the Republican Congressman from Kansas he says that they voted for a provision in the Esch-Cummins bill to hog tie the railroad workers to their jobs. That statement is another deliberate falsehood. There is no such provision in the Esch-Cummins bill at all. LITTLE, of Kansas, voted for the Anderson amendment to that bill, which the House inserted, which was drawn by the leaders of the railroad brotherhoods and inserted at their request, but the Senate knocked it out and a provision for the Railroad Labor Board was inserted finally. That was not a provision that could hog tie anybody. There was no way by which the Railroad Labor Board could enforce its decrees. They could not hog tie a hog, because they had no power whatever. Instead of tieing men to their jobs, the biggest strike the world ever saw has been made since that Railroad Labor Board was created. It had no authority to compel anybody to do anything. If Johnston can read and write, he knew this when he made this statement.

Johnston's circular charges the Kansas Congressman with refusing to strike out a 6 per cent guarantee on the railroad investment from the Esch bill. There was no such guarantee. Under President Wilson's administration the railroads were promised a return on their investments the same as they had been getting for three years before the war. The bill continued that arrangement for six months in order that the railroads might have funds enough to pay their employees, who would have been out of a job if Congress had not done so. That provision expired September 1, 1920, and is not in effect at all. The Government has not paid them a cent under that since more than two years ago. This statement is pure fabrication. The Esch-Cummins bill authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow the railroads to make such rates as would give them a "fair return" on their investments. The Government did not agree to guarantee such return; it merely authorized the commission to permit them to charge enough to get that. The law provided that, until March 1 last, 6 per cent should be a fair return. Since then the Interstate Commerce Commission fixed 5½ per cent as a fair return. Congress further decreed that if one railroad got over 6 per cent and other railroads got less than a fair return, one-half the income of the successful roads over 6 per cent should be a trust fund to be loaned to weak roads; but Congress did not agree to pay any of it and never has. Indeed, for the first year after the establishment of the rate, the railroads earned less than 4 per cent of the value of their property as fixed by the commission, and never have gotten anything more than that for that time. The statement that the Government guarantees anything to them is without any foundation of truth. It is difficult to understand how men fabricate and continue to put forth such statements. No Kansas man voted for any such arrangement as Johnston claims.

This man Johnston sets up a noise about the surtax rates on incomes of millionaires, telling what he claims big money had done, and then he shows himself that every man in the House of Representatives from Kansas, the entire Republican delegation, voted for the 50 per cent surtax. His intention evidently was to make the casual reader think that we all voted against the surtax. As a matter of fact, LITTLE, of Kansas, was designated to open the debate for those who believed in a 50 per cent surtax, and did so; and instead of crediting him with it directly and saying he is entitled to the credit, he camouflages the matter so as to destroy that.

LABOR LAWS.

Johnston's essay against the Kansas delegation speaks of some five pieces of legislation. There was not a single, solitary one of them that was really labor legislation. The seamen's bill had some labor features in it, and LITTLE voted against it because labor was opposed to it, and he thought their view was right. The Esch-Cummins bill had a provision for a labor board to assist in adjusting the difficulties between labor and capital, but gave it no authority. Of all the rest of the legislation to which Johnston directs his fierce and vicious antagonism, not a single, solitary one had anything to do with labor any more than it did with any other citizen. He has made the appeal for labor to defeat the Kansas Congressmen on purely imaginary labor laws. He has not been able to find one law for the benefit of labor against which the Kansans voted. Who spent the thousands of dollars that was paid to circulate this attack upon the Republican Congressmen from Kansas? His circular claims that some kind of a committee met at Chicago for progressive political action, and its membership shows a number of the leading Socialists of the United States who, of course, want to beat all Republican candidates, and quite a number of $10,000 a year officials of the Democratic national administration, who saddled so many billions of debts upon this country. As for this William Johnston himself, he is the man who went to Russia after Bill Haywood, the I. W. W., and endeavored to strike hands with the Bolsheviks, but as a distinguished labor leader of the Federation of Labor said to me, they even would not have anything to do with Johnston. As vice president of the Mount Vernon Bank, he gives some idea of the success he has attained as a capitalist himself. He is for labor just as far as his salary takes him, but when he gets down to his own business, he is vice president of a bank. His circulars were paid for, of course, by the political partisans who wish to defeat eight Republican Congressmen, and under the pretense of being independent and desiring to assist the cause of labor, he has advised laboring men to vote against men who are the best friends of labor, to vote against the man who started and maintained the fight against the big grafts and the unliquidated damage claimants, against the men who voted to kill off the Scott seamen's law and the attacks on labor which he said it contained.

DOCUMENTS LOST IN THE DEPARTMENTS.

Every claim allowed by the War Department on which the Government is now suing for return of the money was allowed during the Wilson administration. Every grafter who stole a nickel from the Government under the Dent bill got it then. Every bit of evidence which accumulated in the department accumulated then. If you were a Government official or were a grafter who had a friend that was, what do you think you would have done with that evidence before you got out of office? Do you suppose that those grafters have left one scintilla of evidence in the War Department to send them to the penitentiary or to secure the return of any money they improperly paid out to grafter claimants? In discussing the prosecution of lawsuits, we must use common sense. Do you suppose there is really any serious evidence left on file against these thieves that are being prosecuted? You must take that fact into consideration in discussing these resolutions about investigating. That Dent bill was passed in January, 1919.

It was the 4th of March, 1921, before the Republican administration took over the Department of Justice and had any chance to investigate it. There is a trail now over three years cold. Where is the Attorney General going to get the evidence? Of course, every grafter would like to have his trial come off immediately before any evidence is found. This question is not only a question of whether the Republican administration will prosecute. That is not the principal question. The principal question is, How much graft was pulled off under the preceding administration, and how many of them were prosecuted? These men who attack the Kansas delegation because it very properly voted to sustain the Speaker's point of order simply want eight Democrats elected to take our places, eight members of the party under whose administration all these grafts were pulled off. This piece of Johnston's was issued by a bunch of assistant Democrat politicians who wanted to elect a Democratic Congress, and they are issuing thousands of circulars now through Kansas to put back in power the very men who enacted the Dent bill and made all this possible. Who is paying William Johnston for doing this? How does it happen that the political associates of men who put over every one of these grafts want to beat a Republican Congress and a Republican administration that is prosecuting them?

This circular of William Johnston's was signed by Frederic Howe as secretary. He is a well-known Socialist who had a job under the Wilson administration as an immigration official at New York City.

Pretty much all the graft now being prosecuted in the courts arose by reason of this bill of January, 1919, to authorize the relief of those who claimed these damages. The whole thing began right there, and practically everything else that follows really grew out of that beginning. This circular attempts to defeat the Republican Congressmen from Kansas because of these grafts. At that time not one single, solitary Democratic Congressman from Kansas voted against the bill or endeavored to stop that graft. At that time CAMPBELL of Kansas and LITTLE, of Kansas, both Republicans, did vote against the bill, and voted to head off these grafts before their inception. You can see at a glance how unfair and unjust was this circular. It now turns out that this man, Johnston, is one of those Reds who endeavored to follow Bill Haywood, the I. W. W., into Russia. He defeated and drove out of the presidency of the International Association of Machinists a much better man, and he has placed his own order in such a position that its national legislative representatives here have been compelled to send out scores of letters like this one with regard to Mr. LITTLE, correcting Johnston's misstatements in order not to injure those loyal and faithful friends of labor on whose fair and equitable treatment of labor they can always depend.

During the last session of Congress the Central Labor Union of Washington was behind the Fitzgerald bill to establish in the District of Columbia, under Government management, a workmen's compensation law, something they have never had here. A determined effort was made to injure its usefulness and the plans of the labor people of Washington by practically pushing the thing into the hands of the big insurance companies. The bill provided for about such a system as they have in Ohio, where the overhead expenses are about 3 per cent, while it was practically conceded on the floor of the House of Representatives that the substitution of the other system would run the overhead up to 35 per cent. Among those who supported the labor people of Washington in their effort was Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas. Accordingly the Central Labor Union of Washington wrote scores of the representative members of the American Federation of Labor in the second Kansas district calling attention to Mr. LITTLE's vigorous support given their favorite measure and begging those people to assist Mr. LITTLE, who had been such a loyal friend to labor in spite of the big fight against the bill. Their letter was as follows:

WASHINGTON CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 10, 1922.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: There are 100,000 wage earners in the District of Columbia unprotected by accident compensation insurance. The Washington Central Labor Union has tried for a good many years to have a compensation insurance law adopted by Congress for the protection of persons in private employment in this city, but each attempt has met with defeat. There is, however, now before Congress a bill (H. R. 10034) which if enacted into law will give us the benefit of this much-needed legislation.

One of the sincere champions of this bill is your able Representative, the Hon. EDWARD CAMPBELL LITTLE. We, the workers of Washington, D. C., are making bold to express to you our appreciation of the attitude he has taken and the efforts he has made and is still making in behalf of this bill, knowing as he does the sole purpose of the bill has to do with the relief of working men and women injured in their occupations.

President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, in a letter regarding the reelection of Mr. LITTLE says: "Permit me to assure you that I will leave nothing undone to place the truth before the wage earners of the second district." Chairman NOLAN, of the House Committee on Labor, who perhaps you already know is a member of the Iron Molders' Union, has often referred to Mr. LITTLE as being very helpful to him in his committee both as a member and later as chairman.

* * * * * * *

We feel we would be derelict in our obligations as citizens of this city if we did not inform you, as constituents of Mr. LITTLE, of the work he is doing for us, and it would indeed be regrettable if you folks of the second district should forget the good work he has done for us, as well as yourselves, and fail to reward him.

Therefore, we have no hesitancy in urging the voters of the second district to apply the motto of the nonpartisan political campaign committee of the American Federation of Labor, "Reward your friends and defeat your enemies."

Fraternally,

C. C. COLTER,
N. A. JAMES,
CHAS. FRAZIER,

JOHN G. SCHMIDT,
Executive committee, Washington Central Labor Union.

Of all the representatives of labor in the district who received that not one is known to have ever appeared and called the attention of the laboring people to this earnest request for help by their brothers here in Washington. Those folks who received this were evidently controlled by politicians of the Democratic Party who wanted to beat a Republican Congressman. That labor organizations in one part of the country should treat with contempt the urgent petition of their brothers here for help seems almost incredible, but it is true. Evidently the people who got these letters were better friends of Democracy than they were of labor. They did not care how many friends of labor they injured if they happened to be Republicans. If that is the way labor organization politicians treat the requests for help from their brothers elsewhere, it is most astonishing that they have any friends at all in the House of Representatives. It occurs to me that all organizations of every kind should endeavor to treat all men fairly no matter what party they belong to. In the long run justice and equity prevail, and seldom do men triumph by misrepresentation and falsehood and refusal to stand by their brothers.

We must not overlook the fact that Congress is responsible to all the people more than to any one particular class or organization. The Congressman's first duty is to see that the common good of all is protected and that will bring the best results for each class and organization. Most of the products of Kansas come from work done on Kansas farms by Kansas farmers, and one of the most noticeable features of the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress has been that it has endeavored to do more good for the farmers than any Congress ever did before. Among the bills looking carefully after the interests of the farmers which have been enacted by the present Congress are two future trading bills, one knocked out by the Supreme Court being succeeded by another; the reestablishing of the War Finance Corporation, under which over $500,000,000 have been loaned in agricultural States to assist in financing the marketing and exportation of agricultural products; the Clague bill to enable the joint-stock land banks to issue bonds, which resulted in their loaning over $50,000,000 to farmers and stockmen; the Curtis-Nelson bill providing capital for the Federal farm loan banks, and the bill extending the period of redemption of their bonds, making possible the issuance of $292,000,000 of bonds, so that they are now making farm loans at the rate of $1,000,000 a day at 5½ per cent interest. Never in the history of the Republic has such helpful assistance been given to the farmers of the West as by this Congress. In addition to these, there have been enacted the law authorizing cooperative marketing by farmers, repeal of the so-called daylight savings law, cancellation of the order taxing butter 10 cents a pound made from cream to which soda or limewater has been added to retard its acidity, the emergency tariff law. It must be remembered that between the close of the late war and the enactment of the emergency tariff law there was imported into the United States from Argentina 80,000,000 bushels of wheat, 135,000,000 bushels of corn, 135,000,000 pounds of frozen mutton and beef, and 525,000,000 pounds of wool, all vital competition for the American farmers and produced by the cheap labor of the Argentine so that it could force a reduction in the American farmers' incomes. In that same time butter imported from Denmark and Norway had reduced the price of American butter in New York to 30 cents; milk was reduced from $4 per hundred pounds to $1.90; wool selling in New York in the spring of 1920 at 95 cents per pound sold in 1921 at 25 cents per pound. When the tariff bill goes into effect this will not continue. Prior to the efforts Congress has been making to help the farmer delegation after delegation of them poured into Washington and pleaded for a tariff to prevent their ruin. They now have a tariff on wool that makes that a possible industry.

This Congress has accomplished wonders for the farmer and will continue to labor for his interests in the future if the Republican Party continues in power. Probably no delegation in Congress has done more to bring these laws to pass than that from Kansas, which has presented a united front always in support of these great laws and taken an active and continuous interest in the welfare of the Kansas farmers, with the cordial indorsement of all genuine farm organizations. Among the many letters of thanks I have received, just now I have at hand two that came recently, and which I reproduce herewith:

DEAR MR. LITTLE: It is my wish to express the appreciation of the American Farm Bureau Federation to you for your vote on referring back the conferees' report on the tariff bill and instructing them to remove the particularly objectionable tariff on potash and the embargo on dyes.

We had justified before the Senate Finance Committee our opposition to these matters and had also, by letter, called the attention of all the conferees to them. So it is very gratifying indeed that you and other good friends of the farmers set the conferees right in these matters, for which I now express our appreciation and tender you our thanks. I will advise the folks back home of this good service of yours.

With very best wishes, I am, very truly yours,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
GRAY SILVER, Washington Representative.

NATIONAL GRANGE, P. OF H.,
Washington, D. C., September 21, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I wish to thank you sincerely on behalf of the National Grange for your support of the effort made in Congress last week to amend the tariff bill as it was reported by the conferees so that the proposed tariff on potash should be eliminated and this material be placed, along with the other fertilizer materials which are so essential to farmers, on the free list, and also to eliminate from the bill the proposed embargo on dyestuffs which we have considered as wrong in principle and unnecessary in practice. I consider that American agriculture will receive much benefit from the success of this effort in which you participated.

I also wish to say that so far as your activities with regard to matters of legislation of interest and importance to agriculture have come to our attention, they have been such as to receive my approval.

Yours sincerely,

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington Representative.

The men who are opposed to a protective tariff to protect American farmers and industries would like to elect eight Democrats from Kansas.

The Republican Party is the only party that has succeeded in electing any President to succeed himself since 1832, except when Mr. Wilson kept us out of war in 1916. The reason is that the principles of the Republican Party when put into effect make it possible for a President to be reelected, while whenever the Democracy secures control of the administration and Congress and get a long enough rope, they immediately hang themselves. Their unsound political principles never stand fire, and for that reason it is best to keep a Republican Congress.

I have referred to the falsification of the Republican Congressmen's records by this man Johnston, representing the effort of Communists and Socialists and Democratic leaders to break up this Republican delegation which has done so much and fought so hard for the Kansas farmers. That circular draws the issue sharply of RED JOHNSTON VERSUS THE KANSAS DELEGATION.

Were your Representatives in Congress loyal to the farmers and the magnificent people of the State when they secured that wonderful financial assistance to which I have called attention in naming the above bills? Are you in favor of putting a stop to gambling in grain? Are you in favor of proper control of the big packers? Are you in favor of the development of Kansas farms? If so, why should you follow the lead of "Red" Johnston, Russian tourist to the Bolsheviks, the ally of the I. W. W., Haywood, in Russia, who made this vicious attack upon your delegates?

My duty as a Congressman is to all our citizens and not to any one particular society, traffic, or trade. We have in our district thousands of men who are unorganized laborers who should have the same consideration by the lawmakers given anybody else. The interests of all the people are paramount to those of any great corporation or any great organization. If reelected to Congress I shall continue to take into consideration what is best for all the people I represent and to listen to their views on the subjects involved. Of recent years the questions devolved upon Members of Congress have been of a very complicated and arduous nature, involving the analysis of legislation of the very highest importance and frequently of a character practically new. The Great War and the attitude of the Wilson administration and its Congress have placed tremendous burdens on the backs of our people. The principal question for the future is whether these taxes shall be paid by average men of small means or by very wealthy men who can afford to pay plenty of taxes. Congress has arranged an income tax that will put a 50 per cent surtax on the men with immense incomes. They will never know that they pay it unless their secretaries tell them. Three Kansas Congressmen, including Mr. LITTLE, voted to make it a 65 per cent surtax. Congress has also taken a firm stand in favor of heavy inheritance taxes so that when immense fortunes have passed on from generation to generation the Republic gets the benefit of the taxes paid. Personally I feel that in view of the terrific profiteering during the war the men with the big incomes should now give till it hurts in order to relieve the men of smaller means. In my address in the House May 14, 1917, I took the position that as long as the war lasted every man with a net income of over $100,000 a year should be called to pay everything above that amount into the Treasury to back the soldiers. The big income taxes paid now by great wealth simply takes that same burden off men of small incomes and medium incomes and enables them to put their funds into business. If a thousand men of small incomes can shove a thousand dollars each into business they have not only put a million dollars into business but they have made a thousand men take an active interest in business.

When you realize that there are hundreds of thousands of such men you can see how much better it is to take the tax pressure off from them and let them all get personally interested in pushing business than to take that tax pressure off of a few hundred great millionaires. In 1919 we had 500,600 people who paid taxes on incomes of from $6,000 to $100,000. When taxes are taken off of their incomes, business has received a tremendous assistance by letting them become active. At that time we had 284 men who paid taxes on incomes of more than $1,000,000 each. If you relieved them of all taxes you would only get 284 more men interested in business. I am in favor of lowering the taxes of the men who can least afford to pay them, but I do not know of any reason why men with hundreds of millions of dollars should ask to have their taxes lowered at all until the Government's burdens are disposed of. Thousands of men died on the battle field for their country. Why can not these fellows let a few of their dollars die? Of these great millionaires, statistics show that about two-thirds of them piled up their rotten profits during the war. Let them pay the debts made while the boys were dying. Of course, there will be lobbies here all the time carefully protecting the interests of the big taxpayers and fighting those of us who insist that they pay their share.

Last November a fight arose between those who wanted a 50 per cent surtax and those who opposed it. A half a dozen Congressmen met in my office and we made a lively and active campaign for a 50 per cent surtax, as did, of course, others. The November morning when the bill came before the House the leaders in charge of that fight requested Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, to open the debate for those who favored the 50 per cent surtax after Mr. FORDNEY opened for those who were against it. Within 10 days after that bill passed that day they were after LITTLE'S scalp, and it remains to be seen whether the big millionaires can beat a man because he is for a tax on big money. That issue will be one of the greatest before our country for years to come. How do the people of the second Kansas district stand? Are they in favor of putting the taxes on great wealth or not?

WHO PAYS FOR THESE LIES?

There have been more falsehoods circulated about me in the present campaign than in all my prior campaigns for Congress combined. There is some reason for this, and all this is not done without somebody paying for it. There is a piece being circulated through the district now as an advertisement full of vicious falsehoods about me. Who pays for these advertisements? One of the biggest fights labor put up was to defeat the Scott bill; I voted against it, and yet "Red" Johnston got up a circular in which he stated I did not vote at all. Who paid "Red" Johnston for that, and who paid for the publication of his great circular, with all its falsifications and misquotations of the record? They dare not attack any vote that I have cast, and the entire fight is one of total misrepresentation and falsehood. Fellow citizens, all this is not done without somebody financing it. It all occurred since I voted for a 50 per cent surtax last November. Do the expenses of this kind of a campaign come out of the bootleggers' fund or out of the Wall Street funds? No man of good judgment who gives the matter consideration will fail to see that there is some method in all this. Here is a man running for Congress for his fourth term and not a single one of my opponents has ever dared to criticize to the people any vote I have cast, and if they were all right I am entitled to reelection. What is the campaign against me? Just simply one of villification and misrepresentation, frequently about very small and petty things, and even then, as has been demonstrated, without any foundation. I ask from my constituents an examination of my record in the Congress of the United States, where for six years I have voted and fought without fear and without favor for the rights of average men. Some of these attacks are from disappointed office seekers. But such a steady fire of falsehoods proves some common source and paymaster, only explainable by the fact that I have fought for my constituents and average men and incurred the enmity of those who profit by plundering you.

You may say in your haste, as did the prophet, that all men are liars, but you must concede that very few of them will take time off and center their attacks for months on one man unless somebody has paid them to do it. Where is this money from and why spent?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by approximately 135 Members of the House, requesting the Committee on Military Affairs to report to the House the disabled emergency officers' bill (S. 1565). I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting that petition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the request of the Members to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very bad practice to incorporate in remarks the petitions of Members on any bill. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his remarks, but I do not think the petition and names to which he refers ought to be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not object to the extension of the gentleman's remarks, but I do object to the incorporating of the names of Members.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In this connection I think I should call attention to the fact that the chairman——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they are his own remarks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They will be my own remarks, considering the objection of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there is pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House Senate bill No. 1565, known as the Bursum bill, providing for the retirement of disabled emergency officers of the World War, as now provided for the retirement of Regular Army officers.

This bill passed the Senate on February 21, 1922, and is still pending in the House committee. In June, after the committee had disposed of the Muscle Shoals problem and the chairman [Mr. KAHN] had returned to California, hearings were held on this bill by the committee, with Mr. MCKENZIE, of Illinois, as acting chairman.

The House then recessed, and it was the understanding by the representatives of the disabled emergency officers that this bill should be taken up for action by the committee on resumption of work in Congress after the recess.

On August 29 Acting Chairman MCKENZIE, at the request of Representative HILL and others, called a meeting of the committee on two days' written notice to consider this measure and such other bills as were before the committee.

At this meeting a quorum of the committee did not appear and no bill under the rules of the House could be reported.

On the following Tuesday another meeting on notice was called and no quorum was present, and consequently no bills could be reported. In view of these facts it is fair to say that whatever the personal views of Mr. MCKENZIE may be as to the wisdom of this legislation it can not be said he is in any way responsible for the failure of its passage up to the present time. Mr. MCKENZIE has assured me that he desires this bill considered and finally disposed of at once, and now advocates that it be taken up when Congress convenes.

This will carry out the desires of 127 Members of the House who favor the bill and have signed a petition to the committee asking that the bill be reported.

I should include the names of those Members in these remarks had I been able to secure unanimous consent for that purpose, as I requested a few moments ago.

I believe in the justice of this bill, and believe, as shown by this petition, that the House favors it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD in 8-point type my remarks on the veto of the bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can extend his remarks in 8-point type, of course, if he extends them at all. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bonus bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, this message tells us that America will never cease to be grateful to the veteran of the World War, but it will never allow its gratitude to get past the door of the Treasury. Republican gratitude is a promissory note that will never be paid, for it is better to break a promise and violate a pledge than establish a precedent. We have paid three billions and a quarter of the people's money to World War contractors whose contracts were never fulfilled. We have paid millions to England for dubious claims and have failed to collect from her the billions that might meet the bonus. We have given millions to Liberia and other bankrupt Republics. We are squandering millions on a score of fake philanthropies and phony farm projects, but the promises made in the days of panic to the lads of America are written in water, and the hot high hearts of 1918 have been transformed into the cold feet of 1922. This may be statesmanship, prudence, and thrift, but the soldiers who served and the fathers and mothers who sacrificed will call it baseness, betrayal, and ingratitude. Today the White House hears only the applause of the international banker and bandit, the cheers of the slacker and the service-chair patriot.

In 1924 Mr. Harding will hear the voice of indignant America and of the repudiated veteran. The most vicious piece of legislative plunder framed in our history, the tariff bill, is to be signed and approved in a day or two, and the backs and the bellies of the people are to be looted for the benefit of those who grew fat in war and who prey in peace.

The infant industry must thrive, but the infant in the cradle, the hungry mother, the idle father, and the friendless soldier must pay the bill. The motto of the Republican Party appears to be "Millions for the manufacturer and millionaire, millions for the banker and the bootlegger, but for the penniless soldier only precedents and promises."

This veto constitutes the worst day's work the Republican Party has ever done and brands it as the party of broken promises, violated pledges, and pseudo patriotism.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, when this bill first came before the House on the 17th of last March I voted for it. In voting against it now, although I change my vote, I am not changing my position.

In campaign speeches made two years ago I stated that I would favor a soldier bonus if the revenue to pay it could be collected from the men who had piled up their massive fortunes on war contracts and grown rich from excess profits. At that time I expressed the fear that it would not be possible to frame and pass a law under the present administration which would provide for such revenue. It is difficult enough at any time to frame taxes which can not be shifted onto the average consumer, and it is certainly impossible for us to do so in this instance when we have active and formidable opposition in high places.

In a speech made on this floor last March I said:

> If the bonus can be collected from the profiteers who coined their millions out of the blood of a bleeding world, our soldier boys want it, and justly. But 85 per cent of our people have an income of less than $350 per year. If the money to pay the bonus is to come from a burdensome tax upon them, then I do not believe that any large proportion of the soldier boys themselves want it. It would be "robbing Peter to pay Paul," and at a time when neither Peter nor Paul can afford to be robbed.

In the six months which have passed since I expressed that view economic conditions have not improved. Strikes and embargoes have hindered production and marketing. Many necessities have actually increased in cost. It seems certain that our farming people especially are going to find themselves in the same hard straits that they have been in for two years past.

Again, in speaking directly on this bill last March, I said:

> The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] states that in his whole experience in Congress he has never before considered a bill upon which it was so hard for him to decide how he ought to vote. I fully agree with the sentiment. Like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], too, "I have no quarrel with the gentlemen who conscientiously believe it wrong." In the present condition of the Federal finances and the present serious economic conditions everywhere, I admit that there is very strong presumption against passing any bill which makes such large demands upon the Treasury.

But the situation and outlook as to Federal finance seems more uncertain to me now than it did then, for reasons which I shall touch on later.

I suggested then that "the reduction which the present revenue bill made in surtax and excess-profits tax, if put on again, would carry the expense of the bonus." These reductions, made for the relief of men of large wealth and income, amount to about $500,000,000 annually.

But the bonus bill has been rushed through the House on each occasion under gag rule, which gave no opportunity for adequate discussion or any amendment. Please excuse another quotation from my former speech. In closing it I voiced the sentiment, I am sure, of many Members, especially Members on this side of the House, when I said:

> I am far from satisfied with the bill. I think it ought to carry a plan for raising the revenue. As I recently said in a newspaper interview, I believe the revenue ought to be raised by tax on things that are pure luxuries and on large incomes, inheritances, and unearned increments generally.
> I vote for the bill hoping that this improvement will be made before it passes the Senate and is signed by the President. I at least hope that the Senate will not be gagged by an unscrupulous and mad majority that would prevent a free and fair discussion of one of the most important measures that could come before a postwar Congress.

And now, after being passed through the House under this gag rule, and after going its course through the Senate and the Executive Mansion, it comes back to us simply to be accepted or rejected. We do not have and had not had any opportunity to consider a plan for getting the revenue from that source whence every principle demands it should come. The large profiteers are protected, and the plain people, struggling along on less than a living income, must bear the burden. True, the taxation on them would be indirect, but none the less real. An English statesman once said that under the tariff system of taxation a man's coat might be taxed off his back without his knowing it.

Just at present the world situation seems more serious than it has been at any time since the signing of the armistice. War clouds lower in the East. The thought itself is terrible, but out of them may come another world war—at least a war which will engulf all Europe and the Orient. The last war was horrible beyond our capacity for conception, and has left an aftermath of debt, poverty, and starvation unequaled in a thousand years. It is useless now to discuss how this might have been prevented or America's responsibility. The situation confronts us, and we must deal with it as it is, not as we might have made it. With the present outlook we can not depend with certainty or even with reasonable probability on the collection of our foreign debts, or even the interest on them. It is not a question as to whether we want to collect these debts. It is a question of possibility. Our home people may have it all to carry, and that at a time when markets are cut off and products either unsalable or depressed in price.

Estimates are that the payment of the bonus as provided in this bill would mean a burden of $40 on every man, woman, and child in America.

The one thing that our people want now and are demanding above everything else is some relief from crushing taxation. Thousands of substantial citizens have this year had to borrow money to pay their taxes, and many have been unable to borrow and have let their taxes go delinquent.

I can not believe that we, the Representatives of the whole people, ought to vote a burden like this on them at a time like this. I can not believe that the ex-service men themselves, when they really comprehend the situation, want us to vote such a burden. They fought to save the country from foreign levies. Would they now vote an average levy of $40 for every man, woman, and child in their homes, their communities, and their States? That is what this bill in its present form means. I can not believe that they would.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on wool and woolens.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on wool and woolens. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. DREWRY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD on chemicals and Schedule A of the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on chemicals and Schedule A of the tariff. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to trespass to any great length upon the attention or the time of the House in discussing the supreme importance of that part of Schedule A of the tariff bill which concerns the synthetical laboratories of the United States. I have already done this in rather an elaborate way when the tariff bill was before the House July 9, 1921. My sole purpose at this time is to renew in a concise way the arguments I employed at that time, and, if possible, to impress upon the House a part of my solicitude for this great and indispensable national enterprise. I am not here to advocate any special interest, nor am I concerned with any specific industrial organization, but what I say I shall say in the fullness of my conviction that synthetical chemistry in its varied activities and its illimitable combinations has become the most serious question that can possibly be considered by a Federal Congress. I believe this to be true, so very true, indeed, that I wish to go upon record again so that whether living or dead others may look back hereafter and contemplate the action of the Federal Congress at this time, measure the responsibility of this hour, and view the great opportunity that is now presented for the encouragement of a scientific inquiry which has no equal in all the realm of scientific investigations, and so measure the accuracy of my thoughts upon this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced, and there are no doubts that hover even near the border line of my thought, that synthetical chemistry is the one paramount scientific line of national defense, exceeding all others of which at this time we possess any knowledge whatever. I regard the synthetical laboratory as exceeding in possibility in the future any that may come from magnetism, electricity, radium, or any known force in nature. In a comparatively few years it has already opened up an expanse of attainment, and such an illimitable expanse of possibilities as to almost dazzle the imagination of men who will trouble to inform themselves of what has already been accomplished. The scope of synthetical chemistry is unbounded. It has already demonstrated its practical value toward agriculture by new processes which furnish indispensable elements for fertilization; it enters into many phases of art and science; it is indispensable to practically every textile industry in the world; it furnishes alike the lady's boudoir and the airman's destructive missile as he flies through the air. It is acknowledged that already the actual products of the chemical laboratories have changed in many ways the science of war, especially war upon the water, where former dreadnoughts are no longer dreadful if a single bomb filled with a proper explosive falls upon it. There is no doubt even now in the crude early stages of their development that the products of the chemical laboratories are indispensable, both for offense as well as defense in time of war.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to a procedure which to say the least is remarkable, and which, without offense to the Members of the House, can only be properly characterized as astonishingly foolish. I refer to debate after debate upon the floor of the House appealing for its support, appealing for appropriations running into the millions for the purpose of constructing airplanes or aircraft in general, and that ultimately these appropriations have been granted amounting to the millions, and yet when the matter is sensibly considered it must be admitted that a million airplanes in the air are absolutely harmless, with no power for defense or attack, with no power for destruction of any sort unless they are equipped with the products that must come from the chemical laboratory. We grant millions of money for airplanes, and refuse the protection of a tariff which carries not a cent of appropriation for the protection of the chemical laboratory; protection for those who, in patriotic response to a national demand at a time when the blockade of Germany by the British fleet prevented the export of the products of the chemical laboratory, heeded the demand and started with their own money to establish synthetical chemistry in the United States. Already a half billion dollars has been expended in various portions of the country for this purpose. Already some 250 separate establishments have been founded for the purpose of producing the various products demanded in the various directions of requirement among our people. They have risked their own money; they are employing their own resources; they are only asking Congress to defend their enterprise against the invasion of the German product, which, if not prevented, will absolutely drive the chemical laboratory in the United States out of existence, as has already happened before. A wise Congress at one time along about the eighties gave protection to synthetical chemistry. While the protection remained synthetical chemistry made wonderful progress in the United States and was on a fair road to permanency and adequate production. Some time later a shallow-minded Congress lowered the rate, killed the enterprise, and the German chemist took charge of the market of the United States and continued to hold a monopoly in it until 1916. As long as the products of the synthetical chemical laboratories concerned only the production of dyes and other products and concerned only textile industries it was not a matter of supreme moment; but when synthetical chemistry began its wonderful evolution, affecting not only matters of national defense but matters concerning the first great enterprise of any nation, its agricultural pursuits, and then the very health of the people, developing remedies for suffering, cures of diseases, discovering medicaments of inestimable value for every man, woman, and child within the bounds of our Nation, who need these wonderful products for the preservation of life and the alleviation of pain and suffering, then the matter of protecting these sources of power and benefit became one of supreme importance. The synthetical chemical laboratory is the source to which the physicians and the surgeons of the whole country, or I might say of the world, are looking from which to obtain those wonderful advantages demanded in their profession. This alone ought to appeal to this House, if there were no other value attached to the synthetical chemical laboratory, for, after all, the greatest concern that comes to any human being is that concern which is aroused by pain, weakness, suffering, agony, and possibly death. A man will give anything for his life, and yet we are wasting time here and sitting in trembling seats fearing the bugaboo called an embargo. The situation is just as creditable to the intelligence of the Members of the House who are afraid of that word as that spectacle presented by the bull who shakes his head in rage and paws the earth at the mere sight of a bit of red cloth. In all this mix-up of opposition there is a contemptible mixture of cowardly self-interest, demagoguery, and pure indifference to the gravity involved in the proposition. The time will come, and is not far distant, when the most obtuse mind in this body will realize its great mistake if we permit again the chemical laboratory of America to go out of existence and the German to come back and monopolize our markets. I can not understand how men, especially those who call themselves Republicans, and who recognize the power of protection as a wise and proper form of national conservation for the protection of the Nation, can for a moment fail to surround the chemical laboratory of America with every form of protection that can be devised. I desire to make this declaration, and I make it unhesitatingly. I desire to make it boldly and clearly, that this matter is of such supreme importance to my mind that not only an embargo of three months but an embargo of years should be established if that be the only way to adequately protect such an industry which comprehends such embracing powers for national benefit. One parting word and I am through. This Nation will endure only so long as it has intelligent and fearless men to shape its policies and make its laws. If the present disregard of principles, evasion of duty, cowardly avoidance of obligation, and the manifest groveling for votes continues, we can all well despair for the national welfare.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the coal situation and with reference to a bill I have introduced to regulate interstate commerce. I ask that the extension be in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, it will require only a few minutes for me to explain the bill which I introduced yesterday respecting the distribution of coal through interstate commerce. The danger of a coal famine has not passed entirely; the coal reserves of our country are so low—perhaps only a supply for about two weeks over the country generally—that any interruptions in the transportation for any section or part of the country would result in great commercial and industrial losses and perhaps in very acute suffering to many people.

During the summer months we have gone along in the hope that the coal situation would adjust itself, and with this chloroforming optimism we have been eating away the coal reserves of the country until they are practically exhausted. But the russet tinge upon the leaves of the trees reminds us that in a very few short weeks snow will be flying. Surely we, as a nation of civilized people, can exhibit toward the indispensable and essential commodity of coal the same sort of intelligence and foresight that the common ants of the ground manifest with regard to their food supply. Almighty God long ago stored up in the bowels of the earth this vast quantity of coal for the use of his children during this industrial age. It is just as indispensable to our commercial and industrial life as a nation at this stage of civilization as water is to a city. Just as water must be kept flowing through all the pipes of a city at strong pressure in order to insure water for all purposes, so must the supply of coal be kept flowing constantly through the channels of transportation, which are chiefly our railroads, in order to keep the coal reserves for industry and for domestic use at a constant point. The people living in the cities and towns must pay for the water they use, but that city or town which permitted the price of water to rise above the costs of expenses and a fair average profit upon the capital invested in a water system would be regarded as not only criminal but suicidal.

A few years ago Charles W. Morse, the ice king of New York, brought down upon his head the execration and condemnation of all right-thinking people by cornering the market on ice during the summer time and by charging prices that denied ice to mothers and babies and thereby caused them indescribable suffering and in many cases death. So the righteous and intelligent sentiment of this Nation must arise and stamp with disapproval the man who profiteers upon coal and must brand him as a common enemy. The man who makes millions by taking advantage of any shortage in supply or difficulty in transportation to pyramid upon prices of coal is morally as culpable and criminal as the bootlegger who defies not only the written law of the land but the crystallized moral sentiment of our people. The man who would profiteer upon water or upon ice would now be a social outcast and might be "metaphorically lynched," but the man who preys upon the people's need for coal is equally debased and utterly void of a sense of social duty.

In the Saturday Evening Post of September 16 appears a thoughtful article, by Mr. Floyd W. Parsons, on the coal problem. One paragraph in his article so impressed me that I believe it worthy of reproduction here:

> It is a lack of cars and motive power that has caused so many periods of high coal prices. It is the same thing that has necessitated the payment of cash premiums for the use of cars for moving grain and other commodities. It is transportation deficiency that causes much of the profiteering, intermittency in employment, and instability in the coal industry. One authority estimates that each of our periodic transportation shortages costs the American people no less than a billion dollars.

During the last six years this coal problem has been constantly upon my mind and heart. It was just six years ago that in our balmy climate of South Carolina I witnessed for the first time a mere sample of what a coal famine might produce, not only for our people in South Carolina but more especially for the people in Northern States, where the winters are longer and severer. It was in November, 1916, when an unusually early snow had fallen in our city of Greenville, and there was a total absence of coal in the yards of the dealers, when early in the morning two carloads of coal arrived, and the word spread over the city rapidly, with the result that in a little while hundreds gathered there to buy and to carry away coal by every describable means. There was the wealthy or well-to-do citizen in his fine limousine, there was the drayman with his one-horse wagon, there was the ubiquitous Ford, and there was the wheelbarrow and the baby carriage, as well as many people with sacks and bags to carry coal home upon their backs to warm their wives and little ones. Ever since that impressive scene the coal problem has been with me, and my constant observations confirm the opinion of Mr. Parsons to the effect that lack of cars and motive power has caused high coal prices many times. That fact is the reason and the motive for the provisions in the bill that I have introduced. Why in all common sense and reason and fairness should a shortage of cars to carry coal or of locomotives to pull coal trains be any reason for raising the price of coal at the mines? The universal law of economics is that an accumulated supply of a commodity without sale and transportation facilities causes a reduction in price. When the railroads can not haul coal away from the mines it accumulates at the mouth of the mines, and the miners stand idle. The railroads can not charge any increased freight rate merely because of a shortage of cars or locomotives. Therefore, while car shortage does reduce the supply of coal in the yards of the wholesale and retail coal dealers probably long distances from the coal mines and the scarcity at that place might be the pretext for their raising the price, yet it can not under any reasonable excuse justify an increase of price of coal at the mines. I believe that local sentiment and the fear of public condemnation will prevent the dealer from charging exorbitant rates for handling the coal. At any rate, that is an aspect of profiteering that Congress can not deal with. After the coal arrives in the yards of the local dealers it is no longer subject to the laws regulating interstate commerce, but is subject to the laws of the State where the yards are located, and the States will have to pass laws, if they have none, so as to check the greed of any conscienceless dealer.

But I insist that scarcity of cars and locomotives can not properly increase the price to the local dealer of coal, though it may reduce the quantity received. But we all know, just as Mr. Parsons states, that car shortage has frequently been made the excuse and pretext for the coal mining companies to raise prices of coal at the mines. All business men have had the experience of finding that their contracts for future delivery of coal are ignored during a strike or during a car shortage or for any other excuse. The truth seems to be that coal-operating companies are glad enough for some such interruption as a strike or car shortage to furnish a pretext for raising prices. I have been reliably informed that such operating companies failed to carry out their contracts with their regular customers at a price below $2 per ton at the mines, and directly themselves or indirectly through some fictitious brokerage company—which uses very pretentious stationery and employs very ominous and suggestive words about the threatening coal famine—now offer coal to the people at prices from $4 to $6 a ton at the mines.

Mr. Parsons estimates that each such periodic fright over a coal famine has netted to the operating companies or their speculating brokerage creatures a profit of at least a billion dollars. A billion dollars means a per capita contribution of about $10 for every man, woman, and child in America. This is just as deliberate and high-handed a holdup as if a robber were to point his pistol at your head and compel you to surrender your purse. How long will the American people stand for such highway robbery? The multimillionaires that have been created by such outrageous and unjustifiable profiteering are parading over the world, spending their thousands in foreign countries, and pretending to be Americans. In fact and in a certain sense they are enemies of America. Instead of contributing to America's greatness and instead of serving America in time of need, they have been fattening upon America's necessities; they have bled her in time of war; and they have bludgeoned her in time of peace. It is our duty as lawmakers to have backbone enough to pass laws with teeth enough in them that shall be sharp enough to stop this absurd and outrageous holdup upon the American public.

Now, in brief, Mr. Speaker, my bill authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe a uniform text of contract to be employed between coal operators and coal consumers and dealers, when that coal is to pass through the channels of interstate commerce. It further authorizes any buyer of coal to file his contract when executed for future deliveries through a period of three months or more with the Interstate Commerce Commission and then require the Interstate Commerce Commission to serve upon the railroad that would normally carry the coal in question a copy of such contract, and also to require the railroad to have cars ready for such periodic future deliveries contemplated by such contracts; the bill further makes the coal companies violating such contracts without legal excuse liable in damages, not only damages proximately suffered but remotely suffered by the purchasers of coal, and, furthermore, the bill provides—and here is the longest and sharpest tooth in it—that if any coal company convicted in a proceeding in the nature of a criminal action in the United States court, where the United States is the actor, of having willfully violated its contract in two or more instances, with two or more consumers, then such coal company shall be denied the right to use any interstate commerce transportation agency for a period of five years. Thus the coal company will not only lose the means of selling coal in another State but the railroad will be denied the opportunity of hauling the coal to another State. This provision will not only tend to make the company keep its contract but it will also tend to make the railroad help the company keep its contract.

Now, what about the effect of such a bill? First, it will tend to discourage and possibly entirely eliminate strike trouble in the coal fields. We were told by the President of the United States—and even before that we all knew it to be true—that the strikes among the coal miners are not caused by their wages, in so far as the pay for each day's work is concerned, but are caused by nonemployment; that is, by reason of the fact that the coal companies do not keep the miners regularly and constantly at work; if they could work regularly they would be well paid for their labor, which is arduous and full of perils to limb and hazards to life. This morning's newspapers tell us that when the shaft of the Argonaut mine was finally penetrated, in which 47 miners have been imprisoned for three weeks, they were all found to be dead; although that was a gold mine, it is but a type of what often happens to the coal miner.

Now, my bill would tend to cause all consumers of coal and all dealers in coal to contract far in advance for their future deliveries. This would tend to stabilize the price, because the companies would know far in advance what they could get for their coal. That in turn would stabilize the employment of men in the mines; it would also tend to stabilize the transportation of coal, because the railroad companies would know in advance, through the notice served upon them by the Interstate Commerce Commission, that they must furnish cars for fixed quantities of coal going to known destinations. At present there is the utmost confusion and crisscrossing in the transportation of coal. The railroads know nothing of what is expected of them in the future. They never know until the bill of lading is signed just where the coal is to go. A coal company may load a hundred cars to-day and they may have 100 different destinations. The effect of the bill introduced would be not only to stabilize the wages of the miners and to stabilize the profits of the operating companies and to stabilize the prices to be paid by the consumers but it would stabilize the transportation by the railroads, because it would establish fixed currents and courses through which the coal would travel, and thus the railroad companies could establish a never-ending and moving circuit of loaded cars to their destination and of empty cars back to the same mines.

The public is interested not only in a fixed and sufficient supply of coal, not only in reasonable prices for coal, but it is also interested in a stabilized and fairly constant price for coal. The manufacturer, the hotel keeper, and the owner of an apartment house and of an office building want to know within a reasonable limit what his coal will cost him for the next 12 months in order to fix the price for the goods of the factory and the rent for the office building. The head of the family is interested in a stabilized price for coal. In fixing his family budget he must know how much to set aside for coal, and if he sets aside $50, based upon the price of coal in July, and when January comes the price of coal has been doubled or trebled, his budget is deranged, and in order to have sufficient coal there must be a cutting down of the allotment for clothing or for food or perhaps for school opportunities for the children.

Mr. Speaker, it is our duty as a Congress to lay aside partisanship and personal interest and to abrogate some of the unwritten rules of procedure that have bound us as a Congress and get down to rock-bottom difficulties in this coal problem and do something to settle it and settle it upon a permanent basis. I very much fear that the effect of temporary priority orders passed by a fuel administrator will be made another excuse by the coal companies for pointing their prices pinnacle high. While I voted for the bill because I am for anything that promises reasonable relief, yet that measure can only meet an emergency and prevent people from freezing. But the fundamental principles in the bills which I have introduced are calculated to prevent the emergency from arising. We have not considered anything to prevent the repetition of this coal famine. The idea of the fact-finding committee is more or less temporary and palliative. If we will only dig to the depth of our consciousness, we already know the facts, and they are indisputable, that these periodic panics in coal prices have demoralized all business, paralyzed all industry, and have simply robbed the people and made a relatively few people multimillionaires. These are the facts that we already know. And they are sufficient to arouse us to serious action. I will vote for the fact-finding commission bill also, but I do intend to emphasize that it is our duty to dig for a fundamental solution of the situation and to apply a fundamental remedy.

I respectfully submit that if the other Members of this Congress will take this idea contained in this bill, crude though it may be, and study it and add suggestions and amendments as their experience and wisdom may dictate, we can arrive at legislation that will make this Congress memorable for all time to come and will win for it the lasting approval of the people—of the masses of the people who produce the wealth of our country in peace and who fight her battles in time of war. I have no special pride of opinion as to the details of this bill; I court suggestions; I invite criticisms; I beg for amendments; and all I ask for is action. Some may say that it is too late to get results to help matters for the near-approaching winter. That may be true, but it is certain that 12 months from now another winter will be approaching and two years from now still another winter will be approaching, and thus every autumn so long as our children and our grandchildren and their posterity shall be dependent upon coal as the chief fuel for this Nation, will the winters approach with fuel needs; and if we continue to dig our heads into the sand like ostriches and refuse to recognize the inevitable demands of the future, we will deserve, as we shall receive, the execration and contempt of the thinking men and women of this country.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask on behalf of Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH of Maryland, permission that he may extend his remarks on the tariff beyond the limit of 10 days fixed in the general leave.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] have leave to extend his remarks on the tariff beyond the 10-day limit. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps that might require a special issue of the RECORD, if the remarks are withheld too long.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH will be able to extend his remarks within 20 or 30 days.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman wish to have a special edition of the RECORD for that purpose?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That will not be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the President's veto of the soldiers' bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the veto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this bill is again before the House because of the President's veto; I was hopeful that justice would be accorded the soldiers and a nation's pledge of honor be redeemed.

This adjusted compensation measure is known as the American Legion bill; it has been approved by the American Legion Auxiliary, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Gold Star Mothers, and the Disabled American Veterans and their auxiliary. These organizations voice the sentiment of all those interested in the welfare of the ex-service men. The American people as a whole are for, and they demand, adjusted compensation for the soldier. The only opposition to this measure comes from the big interests of the country; my office has been flooded with propaganda and arguments from this source against the bonus, and it is significant to note that the same interests that are opposing the passage of this bill are found opposing every humane and progressive measure and advocating every measure of benefit to the special-privileged class.

The majority of the ex-service men come from the ranks of the working classes. They need this compensation and they look hopefully to receiving same. It will help them tide over this period of industrial depression; it will help many in a small way to start owning their own farms and homes; expenditures by the ex-service men of the money provided in this bill will benefit the merchant and stimulate business, there must be money put in circulation before prosperity can be fully restored in our country.

The soldier is not asking for charity, he is asking for just recognition and a square deal from the Government and the country he served so faithfully and well. The American people back up that request. Millions of dollars have been taken out of the Treasury to finance the railroads; the Government has paid war contractors an adjustment on their contracts of about $3,000,000,000 in addition to their profits. Is it not time that something was done to show appreciation to the boys who were sent 3,000 miles away to battle for humanity and "make the world safe for democracy"?

It is inconceivable to me that men in public life who have any human sympathy in their make-up, any element of human justice, any knowledge of the hardships our soldier boys are experiencing, or who have any appreciation of the great and heroic service they rendered this country and the allied cause, should voice opposition to the soldier bonus and attempt through sophistical argument to justify their position.

I am for this soldier bonus bill, and I am for the expenditure of money by this Government to take care of her sick and disabled soldiers and to protect from want the widows and orphans of soldiers, because it is my firm belief and my honest conviction that this Nation owes a debt of gratitude to its soldiers that never can be paid. Oh, I know the cry is raised that the bonus legislation is unjustifiable; that it is a waste of public money; but let me say there is and there can be no waste of public money when it is honorably and honestly paid out to those who by their bravery, by their self-sacrifice, by their loyalty, and by their service have justly earned and merited it. If those opposed to the bonus take refuge in the plea that it will deplete the Treasury, let me say there is a way to fill the Treasury, and that way is to restore the excess-profits tax; and, further, instead of this country worrying over how to be more generous and liberal, more friendly and more charitable to European debtor nations, let us exercise a little American independence and demand the interest due on foreign loans be paid; and if it is necessary in order to take care of American soldiers and their dependents, let us demand payment of the principal. Our first duty is to our own country and our own people.

It is within the memory of everyone of us that when the American boys left their native land to fight on foreign soil they went away amid the waving of banners, the songs of praise ringing in their ears. They were lauded as heroes, these guardians of America's honor and America's destiny.

They left good homes and good positions, and promises were given unasked that on their return their old jobs would be waiting for them; at any cost they were to be taken care of. What has happened? Not only were their old jobs denied them but thousands upon thousands of them have been unable to find work of any description; many of them are in destitute circumstances, ill from the effects of their experience, and in numberless cases carrying the burden of their family in want upon their shoulders, wondering wearily what has become of the fine but faithless and hollow promises made them and no doubt sometimes thinking that it might have been more merciful if with their fallen companions they, too, had answered the final summons and were resting in Flanders' fields.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the workman's compensation law applying to railroad employees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the workman's compensation law applying to railroad employees. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bonus bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I already have unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to extend not only my own remarks but also extracts, which I wish to insert in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. On what subject?

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. On the subject of light wines and beers. I have already secured consent to print remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD in 8-point type the extracts which he wishes to include in his remarks on the subject of light wines and beers.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Also on the subject of religious freedom in America.

The SPEAKER. On all subjects on which he is allowed to print, that he may print in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the legislation and workings of this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on the legislation of this Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that they are the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9275. An act for the relief of Frances Kelly;

H. R. 7456. An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11173. An act to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended;

H. R. 10196. An act to provide for the applicability of the pension laws to certain classes of persons in the military and naval services not entitled to the benefits of article 3 of the war risk insurance act as amended;

H. R. 8475. An act to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith; and

H. R. 11347. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale.

PRINTING COPIES OF THE PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. It has not been read yet. It will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the message of the President of the United States returning without approval the bill (H. R. 10874) "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," be printed as a House document, and that 25,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have reduced the number of the original request to 25,000 copies, which I think will be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman have printed also as a House document the speeches made during the campaign of 1920 by the President, in which he advocated the passage of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would be very glad if all the messages and speeches of the President and of former Presidents could be printed in book form in sufficient number for all the people.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman incorporate in his request that the speeches and statements made by the President in his campaign in 1920, in which he advocated the passage of this bill be also printed as a House document?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; this is simply a request for the printing of the veto message, which makes it a House document.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why does the gentleman want these speeches to go through the document room instead of through the folding room?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For the reason that there will be an ample supply in the document room for all, and it is presumed the House will not be in session for the next few weeks. Anyone desiring to get copies in the document room can do so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How can they get them if somebody goes to the document room and takes out all the copies there are there? In the folding room the copies are prorated to each Member.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is so late in the session that we thought it better to do it the other way. The gentleman can get all he wants, as any other Member can.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to ask the gentleman what is the use of having printed the number of copies asked for in this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The original resolution provided for 50,000, and I have cut it down to 25,000. I have to guess at the probable demand.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is there anybody who wants copies of this veto message besides the 54 Members of this House who voted to sustain the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not know. All House documents are always called for in considerable number.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I think the number is too great altogether.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Massachusetts that, if I am correctly informed, this veto message will be distributed through the Republican national campaign committee, provided the Republicans on that side do not dissuade them from so doing.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw all objection.

Mr. TINCHER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington if it has been customary to print the veto messages of Presidents as public documents.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I think so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING THE TARIFF LAW.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 70.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of Congress 80,000 copies of the tariff law of 1922 in pamphlet form, indexed, to be apportioned as follows:

Thirty-five thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House document room, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and that the Public Printer be authorized to print for sale such copies of said law as in his discretion may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I assume that the gentleman in calling the resolution up now has no doubt that the President is going to sign the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think there is no doubt about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We can be assured of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope so. If the Member will notice the reading of the resolution, we have decided to leave out the binding of the copies, which would be quite an expense in addition to the printing. I assume that the volume will be in demand for a number of years, and that those who make the most use of the copies will have them bound.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, I did not gather how these were to be distributed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Copies for the House go through the folding room.

Mr. BLANTON. The resolution states that 35,000 copies are for the use of the House of Representatives, but it makes no stipulation that they are to be distributed through the folding room.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When a printing resolution reads that way it forces distribution through the folding room.

Mr. BLANTON. Will these go through the folding room?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If there is no objection, I should like to address the House for a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to inform the Members that through cooperation of the Joint Committee on Printing and the Public Printer, Mr. Carter—and usually by unanimous consent of the Members of the House—there has been saved and turned back into the Treasury from the Government Printing Office a total of $4,500,000. That represents money appropriated and not spent on account of reforms inaugurated. It does not include savings made through new methods of ordering and distributing Government periodicals and magazines, nor does it include savings from new methods of making contracts for paper stock of all kinds. I presume savings in these lines will amount to another $2,000,000. I do not put these facts forward in a partisan way, but simply for the purpose of showing what can be done in cutting down waste. In conclusion, it gives me pleasure to say that there was nothing to the story recently printed that the International Typographical Union had adopted a resolution attacking Public Printer Carter. A resolution to that effect was almost unanimously voted down and Secretary Hays was instructed to refute the contrary statements which appeared in various newspapers, and also instructed to so notify Mr. Carter, who as Public Printer is a conscientious, painstaking, and saving Government official.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the full month of September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the conference report on the coal commission bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12377) to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal and all questions and problems arising out of and connected with the coal industry, there is hereby established a governmental agency to be known and designated as the United States Coal Commission, to be composed of not more than seven members appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No Member of the United States Senate or of the House of Representatives shall be eligible to serve on said commission. Said commission shall elect a chairman by majority vote of its members, shall maintain central offices in the District of Columbia, but may, whenever it deems it necessary, meet at such other places as it may determine. A member of the commission may be removed by the President for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $7,500 a year. Any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Said commission shall cease to exist one year after the taking effect of this act.

"The term 'person' as used in this act means any individual, partnership, corporation, or association; the term 'coal' means anthracite, bituminous, and other coal, lignite, coke, and culm, whether in place, extracted, or banked.

"It shall be the duty of said commission to investigate and ascertain fully the facts and conditions and study the problems and questions relative to the coal industry with a view to and for the purpose of aiding, assisting, and advising Congress in matters of legislation which will insure a supply of this commodity to the industries and the people generally throughout the country and maintain the uninterrupted flow of commerce among the States, or any legislation which Congress may, after said investigation, deem wise and which, under the Constitution, Congress has the power to enact.

"To this end said commission shall ascertain and report to the President and Congress: As to the ownership and titles of the mines; prices of coal; the organizations and persons connected with the coal industry; cost of production; profits realized by the operators or owners of said mines during the last 10 years; profits of other persons or corporations having to do with production, distribution, or sale of coal; labor costs; wages paid; wage contracts; irregular production; waste of coal; and suggestions as to the remedy for the same; the conditions generally under which coal is produced; distribution; the causes which from time to time induce strikes, thereby depriving interstate carriers of their fuel supply and otherwise interrupting the flow of interstate commerce; and all facts, circumstances, or conditions which would be deemed helpful in determining and establishing a wise and efficient policy by the Government relative to said industry.

"Said commission shall, under the provisions of this act, make a separate investigation and report for the anthracite industry, which investigation and report shall cover all of the matters specified in the last preceding paragraph, and shall cover also every other phase of the anthracite industry, including the production, transportation, and distribution of anthracite, and the organized or other relationships, if any, among the mine operators or the mine workers, or among any persons engaged in the production, transportation, or distribution of coal.

"Said commission shall also submit recommendations relative to:

"(a) Standardizing the mines upon the basis of their economic productive capacity and regarding the closing down of mines which, by reason of their natural limitations, or other conditions, fall below the standard.

"(b) Ascertaining and standardizing the cost of living for mine workers and the living conditions which must be supplied or afforded in order to surround the workmen with reasonable comforts, and standardizing also as far as practicable the amount of work a man shall perform for a reasonable wage, recognizing the value and effect of such surroundings in respect to their efficiency.

"(c) Standardizing a basis of arriving at the overhead cost of producing and distributing the coal, including delivery at the door of the consumer, recognizing in this compilation that the standardized cost of living to the miners should be the first and irreducible item of expense.

"(d) The advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation, or control in the coal industry.

"Said commission shall render its first report and recommendations to the Congress and to the President not later than January 15, 1923. Said commission shall render its separate report on the anthracite industry on or before July 1, 1923, and shall endeavor, in said separate report and in the recommendations contained therein regarding wages in the anthracite industry, to take into consideration the conditions obtaining up to the time when said report is made.

"That any officer or employee of the commission who shall make public any information obtained by the commission without its authority, unless directed by a court, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"That any member of said commission shall have power to administer oaths, to subpœna and examine witnesses, and to compel the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and to take or authorize the taking of the deposition of any person before any person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction and be subscribed to by the deponent. The same fees and mileage as are paid in the courts of the United States shall be paid in the case of witnesses subpœnaed or depositions taken under this act.

"No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying and deposing, or from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may be compelled to testify or produce in evidence; except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"Any member of the commission, officer or employee thereof, duly authorized in writing by the commission, shall, at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination, have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized by this act to investigate.

"That every officer or employee of the United States whenever requested by the commission shall supply it with any data or information pertaining to any investigation by the commission which may be contained in the records of the office of such officer or employee.

"That any person who shall willfully neglect or refuse to attend and testify or depose, or to produce or permit access to any book, account, record, document, correspondence, or paper, as herein provided for shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"That the commission may appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents; and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses, including salaries, traveling expenses of its members, secretary, officers, employees, and agents, and witness fees as are necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in the commission by this act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time, and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the efficient administration of this act. All of the expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission. No salary or compensation of any employee shall exceed $7,500 per year.

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available until expended, for carrying out the provisions of this act.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'To establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"To establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HOMER HOCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. E. BORAH,
THOMAS STERLING,
DAVID I. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The essential differences between the conferees' amendment as contrasted with the Senate amendment and the House bill are about as follows:

The number of commissioners has been set at seven, as contrasted with nine in the House bill and five in the Senate amendment. Members of the Congress of the United States are made ineligible for appointment on the commission.

Except for the foregoing provision the President has authority to appoint such persons as he chooses on the commission.

In the conferees' amendment the commission is directed to ascertain and report to the Congress and to the President on a number of subjects in addition to those which were set forth in the Senate amendment.

The Senate provision for a separate report of the anthracite coal industry, etc., as it appeared in the Senate amendment is retained. This feature was not covered by the House bill.

The conferees' amendment retains the features (a), (b), and (c) which appeared in the Senate amendment, but (d) and (e) have been embodied in the conferees' amendment and read as follows:

"(d) The advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation, or control in the coal industry."

The conferees' amendment contains the provision for fine or imprisonment, or both, for officers or employees of the commission "who shall make public any information obtained by the commission without its authority, unless so directed by a court, * * *." The Senate amendment contained no provision for penalty for divulging information as herein described.

The conferees' amendment provides "No salary or compensation of any employee shall exceed $7,500 per year." The Senate amendment provided $5,000. No limit was fixed for salaries for employees in the House bill.

An appropriation of $200,000 was authorized in the conferees' amendment, as contrasted with $300,000 in the House bill and $100,000 in the Senate amendment.

In the conferees' amendment the title of the House bill was substituted for the Senate amendment.

SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,
HOMER HOCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and I reserve the last five minutes of the hour for my own use.

Gentlemen of the House, if you have before you or will get a copy of the report and statement of the House managers signed by two managers of the House and all of the managers of the Senate, you will be able to see the differences in contrasting the amendments embodied in the report with the original House bill and Senate amendment. I will undertake to read the very essential differences, not for the purpose of argument but to give an opportunity for questions.

In the House bill nine commissioners were provided for, and in the Senate amendment five. The conferees provided for seven. The statement sets forth that in elaborating the duties of the commission a number of features were added to the Senate provision, but the new suggestions by the conferees in the amendment covers the duties as set forth by the House or the Senate in the original documents.

In respect of subdivisions "d" and "e" of the Senate amendment it seemed best to strike them out and introduce a new section, "d," which reads as follows:

(d) The advisability of any legislation having to do with Government or private ownership, regulation or control in the coal industry.

That means that the commissioners are asked to study the question and make such recommendations to the President and Congress as they see fit in respect thereof.

In the Senate amendments no punishment was provided for the employees and officers of the commission who might divulge information, and so forth. The conferees adopted the House provisions, and the penalty clause is established accordingly.

In the House bill no salary limit was placed in respect of the employees of the commission. By the provisions of the conference a limit of $7,500 was made. The appropriation for carrying out the provisions of the act was set at $100,000 in the Senate amendment and at $300,000 in the House bill. The conferees agreed to $200,000. The title of the House bill was substituted for the title set forth in the Senate amendments.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the gentleman to make the statement just now that the salary of the commission was not fixed in the House bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. Employees, I should have said.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This fixes the salary of the commission. Does the gentleman from Arkansas have reference to the top of page 7?

Mr. WINSLOW. I can answer without the page. The commissioners were to get $7,500 each a year as provided for in both the House bill and the Senate amendment. When it came to the matter of the employees the House bill had no limit. The Senate amendment provided $5,000. This amount has been raised by the conferees to $7,500.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman refer to the particular section. I was reading at the top of page 7. I have the bill and the gentleman has the report. I see now.

Mr. WINSLOW. It is clear to the gentleman?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman state, if he has the data and is able to do so, what is the language of the Senate bill in reference to inquiring into the advisability of nationalizing the coal industry and the reason why that language was modified in conference?

Mr. WINSLOW. In the Senate amendment, subsection (d) reads as follows:

The advisability or wisdom of nationalizing the coal industry.

Subsection (e) reads:

The feasibility or necessity of governmental regulation and control of the coal industry.

We thought we could combine the two as we have, and also present the suggestion of an investigation of the private ownership as well as Government, which we think was the general purpose of the discussion. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I shall take the five minutes, but there is one feature of the conference report to which I wish to call special attention. It will be recalled that when the bill was before the House there was a question in regard to the making up the personnel of this commission, whether in making up that commission we should provide for representation of operators and miners or whether we should have an entirely disinterested commission. It will be recalled that the House by a very decisive vote determined upon a commission entirely disinterested. Now, the Senate bill had no reference at all to that question, but simply provided that the President should appoint this commission by and with the consent of the Senate. The managers on the part of the House were very earnest in their support of the position maintained by the House. In view of the fact that the Senate made no reference at all, we thought we might very well leave it open to the President, and we came to that conclusion very largely because of the statement the President himself made in his message, and I want to read the provision in order that there may be no misunderstanding of what the provision is with reference to the make-up of this commission. The President used this language:

The need for such investigation and independent consideration is revealed by both operators and mine workers in the provision in the Cleveland agreement so recently made. The Government will gladly cooperate with the industry in this program so far as it is the public interest so to do, but I have an unalterable conviction that no lasting satisfaction or worth-while result will ensue unless we have a Government commission, independent of the industry, clothed with authority by the Congress to search deeply, so that it may advise as to fair wages and as to conditions of labor, and recommend the enactment of laws to protect the public in the future.

So I simply want to say for the information of the House that the managers of the House did not feel that they had in any way retreated from the decisive position which the House took upon that proposition. I am, of course, not at liberty to speak, and do not presume to speak, for the President, and I simply call attention again here to the language which he used in his message in which he said, in his judgment, this commission should be independent of the industry. So far as the other changes in the bill are concerned——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, the bill as presented by the conference places no limitation at all on the power of the President in selecting the members of the commission, except that he shall not select Members of Congress in either branch?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It was considered by the Senate that he should be prohibited from selecting a member of the Cabinet, but that limitation is stricken out now?

Mr. HOCH. Yes; that limitation was stricken out. I may say to the gentleman that that was done in harmony with the same reasoning that I just suggested, to leave the matter entirely in the hands of the President.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman agrees now, I suppose, with this view, that the President being left practically unrestricted, the result of this investigation to a very large extent will depend upon how he will constitute this commission?

Mr. HOCH. I agree to that. I agree that the value of this investigation will depend very largely upon the character of the commission which is selected, and I have faith that the President will select a commission of such character that it will command the respect of the country, and the country will be assured that we shall have just as searching an investigation as it is possible to make, within the time limits set out here, of this great industry. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] yield some of his time?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in my 10 minutes I may speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE RAILROADS.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to understand why there is an insistent effort to lead the public to believe that the Government is guaranteeing returns to the railroads. We have it untruthfully reiterated time and time again that the Government guarantees to the railroads a fixed return under the transportation act of 1920, known as the Esch-Cummins Act. The only guaranty in that act expired September 1, 1920, over two years ago. This was a guaranty of the return fixed by President Wilson for a period of six months after Federal control ended, the period necessary for the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish the new rate structure. In other words, we simply carried on Federal control as to railroad revenues for a period of six months. This was absolutely necessary, for the freight-rate structure at the time Federal control terminated lacked over a million dollars a day paying operating expenses in the hands of the Government. Not one penny has been paid by the United States Government for any period after September 1, 1920, more than two years ago. And the Government is not obligated to pay one single penny for any period since that date.

RULE OF RATE MAKING.

Some of those who favored Government ownership of railroads or the continuance of Federal control in their disappointment in not getting what they desired have continued circulating the false statement that the rule of rate making was a guaranty. I denounce this statement as an unqualified fabrication. The Esch-Cummins Act required the Interstate Commerce Commission to "establish rates so that the carriers as a whole—or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate—will under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers."

For a period ending March 1 last, the act specified that a fair return was to be 6 per cent on the property value. This period ended more than six months ago, but it was never meant as a guaranty and can not possibly be construed as a guaranty. For the first year after the establishment of the rate structure the railroads earned less than 3 per cent on the value of their property as fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The roads suffer the loss, however, and the Government has not agreed to and will not make up the difference as would be the case if there were a guaranty. The Interstate Commerce Commission at the end of the two-year period fixed the rule of rate making at 5½ per cent return on the property value.

There is an important provision coupled with the rule of rate making, that where any road earns more than 6 per cent, one-half of the excess shall be paid to the United States Government.

Although freight rates have been greatly reduced they are still considerably higher than the rates were before the war. The demagogue declares this is due to the transportation act. The claim is wholly without foundation.

Whatever may be said of the wisdom of these provisions, it can unquestionably be said that neither the guaranty for the six months nor the rule of rate making is responsible for high freight rates. The obvious proof of this is that the six months' guaranty was not added to freight rates, but was paid out of the Treasury just like the deficit under Federal control and the rule of rate making did not yield 6 per cent, but less than 3 per cent, on the property value of the roads. This rate of return would have been commanded by the provision of the Federal and State Constitutions against confiscation of private property.

There is just one thing that is mainly responsible for high freight rates and that is the high operating expenses of the roads. If the rates were reduced so that the roads would not receive any net return on investment the reduction would not be a substantial one and would give but little relief.

From September 1, 1920, to August 31, 1921, the year following the guaranty period, the total operating revenues of the class 1 railways, which represent 95 per cent of the revenues, was $6,045,338,100. Of that, there was a net railway operating income of $530,655,927. This is but 2.9 per cent on the property value of the railroads. The total operating expenses, including taxes, were $5,514,682,173. It is clear that relief is not in providing less than the 2.9 per cent return, which is represented by the $500,000,000, but in attacking the operating expenses, which represent $5,500,000,000 of the amount paid in rates. The latter is about eleven times greater than the former.

For the 11 months' period from September 1, 1921, to July 31, 1922, the rate per year was 4.27 per cent. The shortage under 6 per cent for the 23 months is $888,160,696, but not one cent is made up to the roads for the simple reason that the act did not guarantee the return.

Reduction in operating expenses is being made. Reductions in the cost of materials and equipment and reduction in labor costs have been of a substantial nature, and reduction in freight rates are following. The transportation act has weathered two and one-half years of the most trying days of readjustment, and in spite of business depression it has so sustained railroad credit as to prevent the financial disaster which would have resulted if railroad failures and receiverships had occurred. The railroads, as an instrumentality for transportation, have been preserved and improved. The net earnings are moving upward as the operating costs are being lowered. This will be accelerated as the increase in business shall increase the freight and passenger revenues. Capital for additions and betterments can now be obtained. We thus have the safe and secure basis for a continued reduction in freight rates. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the devious methods by which Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals has been played with, evaded, and finally put to sleep present a striking instance of the influence which the invisible powers of monopoly, big finance, and big industry exercise upon our Government. They also illustrate political chicanery in its most perfect development.

The Government constructed nitrate plant No. 1 and nitrate plant No. 2 near Muscle Shoals at a total cost of $85,000,000. These plants were complete and ready for operation in February, 1921. The Government had also expended to that time about $17,000,000 in constructing at Muscle Shoals a dam and power plant designed to furnish power for the operation of the nitrate plants.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS VOTED TO JUNK MUSCLE SHOALS.

In February, 1921, the war being ended and the immediate need for munitions having passed, the question was presented to Congress whether an additional appropriation to complete the dam should be made. In both Senate and House of Representatives the Republicans were in control with a substantial majority. The issue was squarely presented in the House by a motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the sundry civil bill, by which amendment $10,000,000 was appropriated for further work on the dam. The question was fully debated. Leading Republicans, such as GOOD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and LONGWORTH, of the Ways and Means Committee, opposed any further expenditures and frankly advocated abandoning the dam and junking the two nitrate plants. A yea-and-nay vote was had (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3878, February 25, 1921). The result was 182 yeas and 193 nays. The Republican leaders, such as CAMPBELL of Kansas, CANNON, DEMPSEY, FESS, FORDNEY, GOOD, LONGWORTH, MONDELL, SNELL, TOWNER, VOLSTEAD, and WINSLOW and those who followed them, voted "nay" and thereby indicated their decision to "junk the works."

The Republicans having decided not to complete the Muscle Shoals plants, the Harding administration sought to find some private interest which would take over the nitrate plants and the unfinished dam. For months none could be found to make an offer. Finally, on July 8, 1921, Henry Ford made his offer to buy the nitrate plants and to lease the dam when completed. I will not deal with Ford's offer in detail—it has been both criticized and approved—it is fair to say that it is agreed by all sides that his offer is the best that has yet been made. If we had offered the works to the highest bidder, good faith would require that we accept Ford's offer.

FORD WAS OFFENSIVE TO ADMINISTRATION.

But Ford was personally offensive to the Harding administration. He had contested the election of NEWBERRY, the President's personal friend, and had greatly embarrassed the Republican leadership. He had flouted and antagonized the financial interests of Wall Street. He frankly avowed his purpose at Muscle Shoals to compete with certain great industrial interests dear to the administration's heart. Ford's offer met with immediate public approval, but Secretary of War Weeks carried on a propaganda against it and although admittedly without power to accept it, delayed transmitting it to Congress for seven long months, until February 2, 1922.

When the House committee took up Ford's offer for consideration Mr. Weeks promptly presented himself in opposition. He was followed by others who spoke for the great selfish interests to whom Ford was distasteful. The subject was probed by the committee for four weary months but was finally reported to the House by H. R. 11903 and placed upon the calendar on June 9, 1922.

But placing the Ford bill upon the House Calendar did not secure action upon it. Action was a matter under the control of the Republican steering committee. They were opposed to Ford's offer. They did not allow it to come before the House because they feared that a majority of the Members favored it. Though the Republicans have a majority of more than 2 to 1 in the House there has always been a substantial number representing agricultural districts who have not bowed to the leaders in opposing the Ford offer.

Ford's offer has been widely discussed in the press and elsewhere since it was submitted. Disinterested public sentiment largely favors accepting it. The farming interests, seeing the promise of cheaper fertilizers, have earnestly insisted upon the offer being accepted. Public opinion, generally, has been for months demanding that Congress take some action upon the subject.

DELAY AND EVASION—THE CUE.

In the meantime the November election was in the offing. Republican leaders feared the result of their obstinate refusal to allow Congress either to accept or reject the offer. They were in a predicament. If they voted to accept Ford's offer they would antagonize the great selfish interests which were opposing Ford. If they voted to reject it they would excite the wrath of the farmers, laborers, and others who were favorable to Ford. Their cue, as they caught it, was delay and a subterfuge which would release them from the pressure of public opinion.

In this state of the matter the Norris amendment to the War Department appropriation bill was presented. It authorized the expenditure of $7,500,000 for further work on the Muscle Shoals dam. Of course, its author was sincere. The amendment expressed his view of what should be done. He has frankly advocated the completion of the Muscle Shoals works and the operation of same by the Government in the production of munitions. His amendment logically carried out its author's views upon the subject. But, strange to say, the amendment was supported by those opposed to Government operation—by those who had advocated abandoning Muscle Shoals and junking the plants—in short, by the anti-Ford groups.

NORRIS AMENDMENT PRESENTED AS AN ADMINISTRATION MEASURE.

The Norris amendment was considered in the House on June 24, 1922. Weeks prior to that time the Associated Press had carried what purported to be an article inspired by the White House, stating that the President was opposed to Ford's offer. A denial of the authenticity of the statement was promptly made by those who assumed to speak for the President. However, when the Norris amendment came up in the House, word was passed to the faithful that it was an administration measure; that the President wished it adopted without change; that its purpose was to put Ford's offer to sleep and to relieve Republican leadership of an embarrassing situation. The word was passed as an expression from the President. Prominent Republican Members, who had been expected to aid in an effort to change the Norris amendment so as to provide for accepting Ford's offer, bowed to party regularity. They did not desire to be put in the attitude of openly opposing the President. The situation warranted the belief that the Associated Press report of the President's attitude toward Ford's offer was authentic and fully authorized.

Upon the Norris amendment coming up in the House it was clearly recognized what the effect of its adoption upon Ford's offer would be. It would well furnish an excuse for further delay in acting upon the offer. We sought to have the amendment changed so as to recognize Ford's offer. A prominent Republican Member, who was favorable to Ford, had consented to offer an amendment. However, he found himself unwilling to do so in the face of the administration's attitude. The matter had actually been called up in the House before Ford's friends learned that their plan had miscarried.

The Norris amendment was about to be submitted without change when Mr. JAMES, of Michigan, an antimachine Republican, offered an amendment which postponed the availability of the $7,500,000 appropriated until October 1. I felt that the James amendment did not sufficiently express the position of Ford's friends. I thereupon offered as a substitute the identical amendment which had been drawn by the Republican Member who had at first consented to lead the Ford forces.

My amendment may be found on page 9329 of the RECORD. It provided that the appropriation should not become available until Ford's offer had been acted upon. The purpose of my amendment was obvious, first, to obtain an expression from the House in favor of Ford's offer, and, second, to defeat the purpose of delay and evasion which was back of the administration measure.

Upon a vote being taken, my amendment was lost by 118 yeas against 132 nays. And think of it, among those voting "nay" were CANNON, DEMPSEY, FESS, FORDNEY, MONDELL, SNELL, TOWNER, VOLSTEAD, and WINSLOW, all of whom had voted the year before to abandon Muscle Shoals and make no additional appropriation. They were followed by practically every Republican Member present who had voted with them on the previous occasion.

FORD'S OPPONENTS DO NOT FAVOR GOVERNMENT PRODUCTION OF NITRATES.

My amendment having been defeated, Mr. JAMES's amendment, which, without any expression upon Ford's offer, merely postponed the availability of the appropriation until October 1, was adopted by a vote of 145 to 105. Again, did the same Republican leaders and the strict administration supporters vote in the negative. I am safe in saying that not one out of five of those who voted for the Norris amendment favors Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plants. To the contrary, they look on Government ownership and operation with extreme aversion, almost horror.

My views upon the Norris amendment were expressed in my remarks found on page 9345 of the RECORD—June 24, 1922—as follows:

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, * * *. The effect of the adoption of the Senate amendment without change will be anti-Ford. The test is being put to you here to-day. If you favor the development and operation of Muscle Shoals under the Henry Ford offer, vote for the substitute which I have presented. If, on the other hand, you want to kill the Ford offer, vote against the substitute.

The Senate amendment is merely a piece of hypocrisy. Its real purpose is to make an excuse to the people of this country for 12 months of inaction, to excuse your failure to act on the Ford offer for 12 long months.

If you want to pretend to do something without really doing anything, vote against the substitute. If you want to make a pretense that you want the Government to develop and operate Muscle Shoals as a great water power when really in your souls you want to turn that great national asset over to the Fertilizer Trust, to the Aluminum and the Power Trusts, vote against the substitute. If you want to do the work of the great financial and business interests that are fighting Henry Ford, then vote against the substitute. The choice is yours.

If it were really true that those who advocate the adoption of the Senate amendment without change wanted the Government to actually operate the Muscle Shoals plant for the people, there would be less reason to oppose them. But we know that they have no such genuine purpose. We well know that the powers which are now in control of the Government hold to no such purpose. We know that the present move is only a bluff. We know that the real object in view is to kill the Ford offer and then to turn Muscle Shoals over to the Alabama Power Co. or some other exploiting interest.

Mr. MONDELL, the Republican leader, in his reply to my remarks, said:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase the gentleman from Alabama but not follow his lame logic, I say if you want to start the Muscle Shoals development, vote to concur in the Senate amendment; if you want to delay the Muscle Shoals development, vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. That is the proposition before the House right now.

PLENTY OF TIME TO CONSIDER FORD'S OFFER.

There was in Mr. MONDELL's statement the clear implication that the adoption of the Norris amendment would not be permitted to affect the Ford offer, that no delay in considering the Ford offer would be caused, and that the offer would be considered in due and regular course. But what transpired? On August 15 the House reassembled after recess. Day after day passed with the transaction of little or no business. The House merely met and adjourned. Even three-day recesses were taken. Members began to press openly for action on Fords' offer. Finally, on August 24, the following occurred (see RECORD, p. 11758):

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming if it is in contemplation that there shall be a vote at any early date upon the disposition of the Muscle Shoals property?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, so far as I am acquainted with the views of the Members on this side—and I am guided wholly in my attitude by the views of the majority of the majority—I do not believe that it is desired that there should be an early consideration of the Muscle Shoals matter. I think the majority on this side believe that for the time being the Muscle Shoals situation is taken care of by the provision made for the continuation of the work on the Wilson Dam.

Again:

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The limitation was placed on the use of the appropriation in order that the Congress might have an opportunity to pass on the final disposition of the matter. Now, there is no reason why it should not be considered at once. The Committee on Military Affairs has reported, and there are three reports. I am not now advocating any particular report. What I am asking is that the House shall now have an opportunity to pass upon that matter.

Mr. MONDELL. The House will pass on that matter in due time, as soon as it is necessary to do so. In the meantime we have provided for the continuation and development at Muscle Shoals. That is all that could be done if we were to act upon the reports.

Note that Mr. MONDELL said:

I do not believe that it is desired that there should be an early consideration of the Muscle Shoals matter. I think the majority on this side believe that for the time being the Muscle Shoals situation is taken care of by the provision made for the continuation of the work on the Wilson Dam.

Compare this statement with Mr. MONDELL's statement on June 24.

And now the House is about to adjourn for the session. In the belief that public opinion has been quieted, no action upon Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is to be taken until after the November elections. When Congress meets again the Republican leaders will be free. They will be secure from the wrath of the people. They will have a free hand to ignore Ford's offer, to postpone consideration indefinitely, or to reject it outright.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD UNDERSTAND.

The thing which the people should be made to understand is that the House has had plenty of time during the past 40 days in which to act on Ford's offer—to accept it or to reject it. We might well have considered it. The privilege of considering the Ford offer has been deliberately denied to the House by those who are in leadership upon the Republican side. This can not be disputed by any candid and sincere man.

There may be those among the people who are credulous enough to entertain the hope that when Congress comes back at the December session the Ford offer will be fairly considered and acted upon. Let me say to them that such is not the purpose of those who are in control of the majority of Congress. It is not intended that the Ford offer shall ever be accepted. To the contrary, the plan is to tire down Ford's friends and the public who are insisting upon action and finally, when public attention has wandered from the subject, to deliver Muscle Shoals and all the great wealth of resource and development which it represents to some one or more of the grasping monopolistic interests who are seeking it.

Ford would manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals; he would cheapen its price—therefore the Fertilizer Trust does not want him there. He would make nitrates—therefore the Powder Trust is opposing him. He might be found in competition with the Aluminum Trust—therefore the beneficiaries of that monopoly do not want him at Muscle Shoals. He would finance his own enterprises without paying toll to Wall Street usurers—therefore the powerful financial interests of the country would like to throttle him. He would pay better wages as a competitor in the southern labor market—therefore reactionary employers and exploiters of cheap labor are against him. He would bring a new, powerful, and disinterested influence into the southern political field—therefore crooked politicians, machine men, and the "Old Guard" would keep him away.

Let it be remembered that all those who have fought to keep Ford away from Muscle Shoals have played the game of the selfish or unscrupulous interests which would be affected if his offer should be accepted.

As usual, invisible government wins.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). On this roll call 261 Members have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] has 19 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes out of order immediately after the gentleman from Alabama concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that perhaps the gentleman had better wait until after the gentleman from Alabama has concluded his remarks.

Mr. KEARNS. I thought now would be a pretty good time to make this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] he may be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not be just as well satisfied to get unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes directly after the vote on the pending bill?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I think most gentlemen are going to quit the Chamber as soon as the vote is taken, and I thought I had some information which would be of interest to Members of the House.

Mr. WINSLOW. My only reason for objection is that at the end of the gentleman's remarks we might not have anybody to vote for the bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINSLOW. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the House of Representatives has just gone on record this afternoon confirming its previous action on a measure of great interest to the Nation, and of interest particularly to the ex-service people of the Nation, known as the adjusted compensation bill.

Now, of course, we can not be sure that the predictions that have been published since the President vetoed adjusted compensation on yesterday, to the effect that the Senate will not pass the measure over the veto, will come true; but if that estimate of the situation does prove to be correct, then we are to witness the ringing down of the curtain on this season's last performance of that well-known Republican farce, "Now you see it and now you don't," or which might be still better known as the play called, "The political manipulation of adjusted compensation."

With the stage here in the Capital City of the Nation, and with the entire people of the Nation as audience, the scenes of this deceitful performance have been unfolded one by one since May, 1920.

The administration's star performer has proven to be a quick-change artist of ability. He has shown up in different colors, in different surroundings, or against different backgrounds with chameleonlike rapidity and naturalness.

The several acts of this farce have been timed skillfully, politically speaking, as we will point out as we go along. The party now in power has toyed with the ex-service people of the Nation for more than two years on this proposition.

On May 29, 1920, the adjusted compensation bill passed the House by a vote of 289 to 92. At that time the Republican majority was in full control of this House. A few months later, just before the November (1920) election, Mr. Harding, then a candidate, during an address at Cincinnati, Ohio, was asked why the ex-service people did not get the adjusted compensation, and he said:

> Well, I am very happy to say to you that the House passed the bonus bill, and the Senate has it under consideration, and I have no doubt the Senate will pass it. I, myself, think it ought to pass it, if you want to know my views. (From the Cincinnati Enquirer, October 30, 1920.)

That was the expression of Warren G. Harding when he was a candidate for election. And then, functioning right along in line with the views expressed out in Ohio by the Republican Party leader just before the election in November, 1920, the Finance Committee of the Senate, on June 20, 1921, reported S. 506 to the Senate. But they had failed to consider the rapid-changing proclivities of the President. They did not know that he would so soon abandon his avowed policy of noninterference with Congress, about which so much had been said during the campaign, and appear in their midst as ringmaster, to crack the whip of control over the heads of the Senators, causing them to change front at once, wheel about, and submissively trot the bill back to the Senate Finance Committee, whence it came.

At that time it was generally considered that it was a postponement of the passage of the legislation that the President meant to recommend. I quote an extract from an editorial from the Washington Herald of July 13, 1921:

The announcement of the disarmament policy and proposed conference may explain President Harding's request to Congress to postpone consideration of the soldiers' bonus. He was reported as saying to the Senators that he believed it might be safely passed at the regular session, or within a year. It would seem the disarmament program tells the why of this confidence; it may tell why it could be voted then without greatly disturbing the Government's fiscal program.

If this conference succeeds and disarmament follows, the Government will save enough, combined with the saving through the Budget system, to pay the proposed bonus in a term of years. There are few who seriously oppose this payment to the service men. There are those who wish it had not been asked, but none who do not feel it has been earned.

* * * * * * *

The bonus is as assured as if already acted upon. It is waiting, not losing, that is asked, and the reason now seems plain.

* * * * * * *

That editorial appeared the next morning after the President's postponement message to the Senate. At least his message was considered then to be a postponement message.

But just two months later, on September 11, 1921, he addressed the men of the Fifth Division at Atlantic City, and on that occasion he showed still another side and another color. Regarding adjusted compensation, the papers quoted him as saying then:

I am not so much concerned with those who came out of the war unimpaired.

In an editorial which appeared in the New York World I find the following comment on the President's shifting qualities:

Before his election and for some time after he took office his utterances on the subject were construed fairly enough as indorsement of the bonus plan for all veterans. At Secretary Mellon's urgent request he departed from this original position to force a postponement of bonus legislation for the sake of economy. In his address to the Fifth Division, delivered Sunday at Atlantic City, the President has again shifted ground, this time to emphasize the prime necessity of rehabilitation for the wounded and disabled and to express a doubt of the need of a general subsidy for ex-soldiers.

There, you see, the New York World called attention to the fact that the President "has again shifted ground." You will note that the New York World editorial does not say that he, the President, departed from his original position, which was favorable to adjusted compensation, of his own accord or upon his own decision, but it says it was "at Secretary Mellon's urgent request." Of course, we know that all the Mellons, of Standard Steel Car Co., a war-profiteering concern, are opposed to adjusted compensation. And we know that Secretary Mellon, a man of millions, has been "urgently" against adjusted compensation all the time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Of course, I agree with him that our highest duty is to the disabled veterans, and everyone agrees with that. The American Legion has for these years given its best efforts to secure the best possible consideration for the disabled. The disabled men are well aware of that fact, and have been aware of it all along. The disabled veterans have, as you know, gone on record many times as being in favor of adjusted compensation for their comrades who are not disabled. There is no argument about that.

I hope you gentlemen all saw the full-page advertisement in Monday's (September 18, 1922) Washington Post, submitted by the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, and that you read it carefully.

It is full of very interesting facts and figures and presents a forceful argument for a fair adjusted compensation bill. I want to quote right here its closing paragraph:

Believing in the justice of their cause, the soldiers have awaited recognition, although they have seen all the other war debts paid, and have watched the Allies compensate their own soldiers out of the money they borrowed from us.

Disabled want this debt paid now.

[Applause.]

Now let us consider for a moment the plan to which the President seems to be wedded for the raising of a special fund to meet this obligation.

He has chosen the sales tax—a scheme designed for the wealthy, a scheme to shift the tax burden altogether to the consumer, an opening wedge in that direction—an effort to get that opening wedge in on the people of this country by attaching it to the soldiers' compensation bill.

Why the necessity or what is the justice of a special tax or special taxation for this particular purpose?

The Government used the railroads during the war. The Government has paid these railroads immense sums as reimbursement to them for damage done to their stock—more than $700,000,000.

Why did not the Government levy a special tax of some sort to pay this immense sum claimed by the railroads as adjusted compensation or reimbursement, and point out to the people that they were paying such a special tax for reimbursement to the railroads?

A special tax might as well be levied for this purpose as for the purpose of paying adjusted compensation to ex-service people.

The Government paid war contractors immense sums amounting to about $3,000,000,000 in addition to their profits. Why was not a special tax mentioned in order to pay this Government obligation? A special tax might as well be levied for this purpose as for the purpose of paying adjusted compensation to ex-service people.

But no! It seems that it is not desired that the attention of the people be called to the fact that it is their money which has been and is being so lavishly handed out on every conceivable sort of a claim to reimburse these people for the economic handicap which they claimed to have been left under as a result of the war.

The principle and practice of adjusted compensation has been recognized by the American Government in payments to Federal employees of $225,000,000. That is a matter of right and justice, and we do not begrudge them that added compensation, but it all comes out of the Treasury, and we do not have any special tax attached to that particular expenditure.

If full reparation to the railroads for all losses sustained during the war; if reimbursement for war contractors; if help for the Russians; if a square deal for the great army of war workers; if all this is done in the name of justice, then why not grant fair adjusted compensation to the men and women who turned themselves over to Uncle Sam and went away to serve for $1 per day, less allotment, less insurance, less other items that left a man about $1.75 per month which he could squander on tobacco and other luxuries?

If a square deal to the railroads, if a square deal for the war contractors, then why, in God's name, not some semblance of a square deal for the poor devil of an American doughboy soldier, who sweat blood and slept in the mud for the preservation of the homes of America, for the safety of the wives and mothers and children of America, and to keep this country safe for the continued operations of the profiteers? [Applause.]

Why attach all the odium to the legislation affecting ex-service people? What has the soldier of the Great War done to so offend the Chief Executive of the Nation that he does not see fit to allow this bill, which has been passed by an overwhelming vote in both branches of Congress, to become a law unless he can have attached to it an obnoxious sales tax?

Why should the President desire to thus single out adjusted compensation for ex-service people to make it a stench in the nostrils of the people of the Nation?

At this particular point let me quote from the RECORD the statement of Mr. MONDELL, the distinguished leader on the majority side of the House:

I can not agree with those who believe that the House failed in its duty in that it did not make provision in the bill for the payment of the obligations under it. We legislate frequently in a way to lay heavy obligations on the Federal Treasury without accompanying such legislation with any provision for the raising of revenue. In fact, it is very unusual in our legislation to make special provision for meeting the obligations which the legislation entails. It would be a departure from our ordinary procedure to do that.

Now, that statement was made by Mr. MONDELL just a few days ago here on the floor of the House, and I was very glad, indeed, to hear the Republican floor leader so flatly refute and set aside the feeble, pitiful objection which has been raised all along by President Harding to this adjusted-compensation measure.

Regarding the matter of levying a special tax for one certain governmental expenditure Mr. MONDELL said that it would be "a departure from our ordinary procedure."

As I have said, we did not do it to pay these fabulous sums to railroads and war contractors, nor did we do it to provide funds with which to pay added compensation to our Government employees; we did not levy a special tax in order to loan twenty millions to the Russians; so let me ask again, Why should we single out adjusted compensation for our ex-service people as the one thing for which some special obnoxious tax must be levied?

Let me quote you just here from the Des Moines (Iowa) Capital, March 16, 1922:

There is no necessity for preparing the bonus as a bitter dose of medicine and swallowing it as such. * * * In the name of all that is good in this Republic, let us pay the back wages to the soldiers without taking the process as a whipping. Such a payment involves as much real justice as any bill that has ever come before the American Congress. The Federal Government, which is a going concern, can pay the soldiers without special taxes which jump up into the taxpayer's face and shout, "I am the bonus."

This adjusted compensation bill passed the House for the second time on March 23, 1922, by the overwhelming vote of 333 to 70.

Just here let me call your attention to some shifting which was done by another prominent Ohioan. In May, 1920, when the bill first passed the House, the Hon. Mr. FESS voted against the bill. Now, in March, 1922, when the bill came up for passage the second time, we find this same Mr. FESS appearing as one of the first speakers on the Republican side in favor of the measure. Let us remember that Mr. FESS is a candidate at this time—he is running for the Senate. In closing his speech in favor of adjusted compensation he said: is essential, and any appearance of lack of appreciation through clear discrimination is unwise. I will vote for this bill.

Their good will—

Speaking of the soldiers—

Now, my friends, that is Candidate FESS, running for the Senate, speaking entirely different to what he was speaking two years ago. I hope the boys in Ohio will give this matter their very careful attention and that they will do their best to delve into this man's heart and find out, if they can, if he is really at heart for them, and if he has formed his new opinion as a matter of right and justice or if he has formed it as a matter of political expediency, and because, being a candidate for the Senate, he finds it wise that he should have the good will of the ex-service people, which he now considers as being "essential."

Mr. Harding, candidate in 1920, was for adjusted compensation then, but is against it now. Mr. FESS, candidate for Senate now, is for adjusted compensation now, but was against it in 1920. Perhaps the "good will" of the ex-service people was not considered by him as being "essential" to him then. In the Senate the bill passed on August 31, 1922, by a vote of more than 2 to 1. It then was sent to the President, going to him, of course, by way of the Secretary of the Treasury. Regardless of the fact that it passed the House by more than 4 to 1 and that it passed the Senate by more than 2 to 1, the President vetoed the bill.

Let us recall that the New York World said about a year ago that when the President first forced a postponement of the measure, thereby departing from his own original position, he did so "at Secretary Mellon's urgent request." Now we know that he has vetoed the bill at the urgent request of this same Secretary Mellon, the richest man who ever held a Cabinet position, and other big interests like the interests controlled by the Mellon family.

In his message which accompanied his veto to the House the President contradicts himself. He first says in explaining his veto that Congress failed to provide the revenue from which the bestowal is to be paid. In other words, he said there that if Congress had provided some special means to raise this special fund it would have been all right. Later on in his message he said that a peace bestowal on ex-service men would be a perversion of public funds. In other words, he said there that even if he had the money it would be a perversion of public funds to grant adjusted compensation to our ex-service people to help them to again pick up the threads of their civil lives and to help them, even though it would be in a small way, to overcome the heavy economic handicap suffered by them on account of their service during the war.

I wonder if Mr. Harding included that statement in his message "at Secretary Mellon's urgent request."

This same Mr. Harding does not think it would be a perversion of public funds to loan $5,000,000 to the Liberians, while we have destitute ex-service people here in our own country. In his letter of July 29, 1921, addressed to the Senate, transmitting the letter from Secretary Hughes recommending the reestablishment of the loan credit, President Harding declared:

It is impossible to escape the conviction that we have an obligation which the executive branch of the Government can not discharge without the properly expressed approval of Congress.

If a peace-time bestowal—and I want you to notice that he calls this adjusted compensation a "bestowal"—to ex-service people could be termed a perversion of public funds, how can President Harding arrive at his conclusion that a five million peace-time bestowal to irresponsible Liberians is a moral obligation on this Government? In other words, we are under no moral obligation to our ex-service people, but we are under moral obligation to black Liberians.

President Harding evidently does not feel that his own pet scheme—the ship subsidy, which would be for the enrichment and special benefit of certain interests and which would cost the American people seventy-five millions per year—would be a perversion of public funds.

A Washington newspaper some time ago carried an editorial from which is taken the following extract:

A New York newspaper opposed to the soldier bonus says in a headline over a news dispatch from Washington:

"Bonus alienating donors to G. O. P. campaign coffer. Prominent supporters emphasize displeasure in reply to national committee appeal."

The Stars and Stripes of March 4, 1922, carried the following news item, which is self-explanatory:

THIS G. O. P. CLUB SAYS BONUS IS PARTY SUICIDE.

[Special to the Stars and Stripes.]

NEW YORK CITY.—Opposition to the soldiers' bonus is recommended by a committee of the National Republican Club, headed by Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, and composed of prominent citizens, including prominent bankers, brokers, and others. The club does not speak officially for the Republican Party, although it numbers wealthy and influential party leaders in its ranks.

By vetoing the adjusted compensation bill the President has doubtless loosened the purse strings again of those usual big donors to the G. O. P. campaign coffer who are holding back and threatening to withhold their support, moral and financial, if adjusted compensation for ex-service people should become a law.

Those who voted in the House and in the Senate can go back to their people and say they voted for adjusted compensation for the ex-service people and try to hold the ex-service people in line by their statements to that effect, and, on the other hand, the President by his veto has pleased the big interests of the country, who are the main opposition to the measure. In other words, the leaders of the party now in power are "playing both ends against the middle" and are making a political football out of this sacred obligation to the people who made it possible for 23,000 new millionaires to spring up in this country during the period of the war and the period immediately following the war, and those big interests who reap the golden harvest on the strength of the service of our soldiers and sailors are now the main "conscientious objectors" to adjusted compensation.

It is, it appears to me, a shameful situation.

I wish to insert a statement by Hanford MacNider, national commander of the American Legion, on the threat of financial interests to withhold campaign contributions if the Senate passes adjusted compensation legislation:

My attention has just been drawn to the published threat of the financial interests of Republican persuasion that if the Republican Congress passes the veterans' adjusted compensation bill there will be no contributions from that quarter to the Republican campaign funds. In the words of one dispatch, big business informed Chairman Adams, of the Republican national committee, that "If Congress passes the bonus bill it may get some soldier votes for the respective candidates, but it will lose the support of business."

This is very enlightening. A great deal has been said about political threats in connection with the adjusted compensation bill. Enemies of the bill have declared the American Legion has uttered such threats, that it had held a political pistol at the head of Congress, etc. Not the slightest proof of the truth of these statements has been attempted, which has been wise, because not a vestige of such proof exists. The American Legion has made a clean fight based on the merit, the justice, equity, and economic soundness of this legislation, and not one scintilla of evidence has been produced to dispute these contentions.

But now a real effort to coerce Congress reveals itself, and the effort is being made by the intrenched financial interests and not by the American Legion. The lines are more clearly drawn than ever. On one hand we have an element of the business and financial interests of the Nation which contributed least and profited most by the war. These interests are threatening Congress, flourishing the political pistol, and a gold-plated one at that. On the other hand we have the men who fought for their country presenting their case on its merits, confident that they enjoy the Nation's confidence now as they did in 1917 and that justice will be done. Whom do the people of the United States wish their Representatives in Congress to follow? It is for them to choose.

HANFORD MACNIDER,
National Commander, American Legion.

Under the permission to extend my remarks on this subject I insert the statement in favor of adjusted compensation for all ex-service people published by the Disabled American Veterans of the World War:

[From the Washington Post, Monday, September 18, 1922.]

THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS, 172,000 STRONG, WANT THE BONUS BILL TO BECOME A LAW—THE NEWSPAPERS HAVE NOT PUBLISHED OUR APPROVAL OF ADJUSTED COMPENSATION, SO THE DISABLED SOLDIERS, THE BOYS WHO STILL SUFFER FROM THEIR WAR WOUNDS, ARE TELLING THIS FACT TO THE PUBLIC THROUGH THIS ADVERTISEMENT.

Four and one-half million service men and women—including the disabled—want President Harding to approve the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

Among the representative soldier organizations which have officially approved the American Legion bill, now before the President, are: The American Legion Auxiliary, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Gold Star Mothers, the Widows of Veterans, and the Disabled American Veterans and their auxiliary.

These organizations have passed official resolutions approving this measure.

Their membership totals two and one-half millions, and they speak with authority for the remainder of the ex-service population as yet unorganized.

THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WANT THIS JUST DEBT PAID.

The American form of government is representative, and whenever the American people have had the opportunity to express their will upon this measure they have shown their belief in the justice of this legislation.

The legislatures of 22 States have petitioned Congress to enact this legislation.

The legislatures of 18 States have acted favorably on the question of State bonus legislation.

The governors of 32 States have called upon the Chief Executive to approve the bill now before him.

The Representatives in Congress have twice voted for the measure, the vote upon the present bill being 333 to 70.

The Senate Finance Committee has approved this measure three times. This bill was passed by the Senate 47 to 22 and the conference report by 36 to 17.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE HAVE SHOWN THEY WANT THIS DEBT PAID.

In every instance where the American people registered their will directly upon this question they have voted, without exception, for adjusted compensation for the soldier.

Instances of this are:

The people of 18 States have voted for State compensation for their own veterans. Their majorities for compensation were from 4 to 1 to 8 to 1. This is proof of the sentiment of the people on this question.

The Literary Digest has taken a national poll, based chiefly upon subscribers to telephones. This resulted in a victory for compensation of 466,814 to 444,221.

A separate poll of women shows 64,609 in favor of compensation to 42,738, and a third poll on employees of factories shows 15,312 in favor of compensation to 2,090, or a majority of nearly 8 to 1. There are more workers in America than there are subscribers to telephones. Had the poll been confined to the factories, can anyone doubt the overwhelming majority the soldiers would have received?

The chamber of commerce, in the referendum among its members, gave a total vote of 4,116 in favor of compensation to 2,657.

THE SOLDIERS' CLAIM IS A JUST AND HONORABLE ONE.

The soldier asks no reward for service in uniform. That is his pride.

For the hardships, dangers, and sufferings he endured have already been paid for in his knowledge for all time that in the hour of his country's need he was called and not found wanting.

But he is forced to share the expenses of the war and pay his proportion of the debt incurred and of the profits earned in his absence.

Our associates in the World War already have made an adjustment of compensation for their soldiers.

This adjustment has been predicated on American loans, and we American soldiers must help to repay the underwriting by American bondholders. This adjustment of compensation to the soldiers of our allies was paid with American money.

AMERICA ALREADY HAS ADJUSTED COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

The principle and practice of adjusted compensation has been recognized by the American Government in payments to Federal employees of $225,000,000 and to the Army and Navy of more than $100,000,000.

This $325,000,000 has been paid as a war measure and has been in addition to the pay prescribed by law. It is a greater sum than the payments required from the Government under the first three years of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, which amounts to only $242,000,000.

AMERICA HAS ADJUSTED THE COMPENSATION OF RAILROADS AND WAR CONTRACTORS.

The Government drafted the railroads during the war. Up to August 1, 1922, the Government, under the transportation act, has paid them $764,271,000 in addition to their earnings.

The Government paid war contractors an adjustment on their contracts of about $3,000,000,000 in addition to their profits.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION WILL BENEFIT THE VETERANS.

It will enable them to escape the rent profiteer by building their own homes.

It will help many in a small way to own their own farms and homes.

It will enable others to learn a trade or profession which will insure their future prosperity.

The loan feature may enable many to avert the disaster of foreclosure, tide over financial difficulties caused by sickness or unemployment, or be the anchor to save a small business from ruin.

The insurance feature will stabilize veterans and add to the security for their loved ones.

It will enable many to marry and thus insure to future generations that American ideals will be cherished.

It will allay the feeling now held by many that America has lost interest in the soldier, now that her safety is secured, and fails to recognize the financial handicap suffered by the soldier.

Expenditures by veterans under this bill will stimulate building and industry and bring employment to those now out of work. It will benefit the merchant and the manufacturer and will increase the tide of prosperity now arising in the country.

THE PEOPLE'S REPRESENTATIVES HAVE PLEDGED THEMSELVES TO PAY THIS JUST OBLIGATION.

In the national campaign of 1920 a majority of the candidates for public office of both great political parties stated that they would work for the passage of this legislation.

Three years ago at the request of the Congress the American Legion drew the five-fold adjusted compensation bill. This bill has since been approved by national conventions of other service organizations. It is now modified to meet legislative and executive requirements.

DOES THE BILL MEET EXPRESSED OBJECTIONS OF CHIEF EXECUTIVE?

The bill now before the President has been drawn in the belief that it fairly and squarely meets the objections raised by the Chief Executive to former bills. The reduction in the cost from $850,000,000 during the first two-year period, to $242,000,000 for the first three-year period in the present bill obviates the necessity for financial provisions. However, the payment of interest on its debt by England is now assured for the immediate future. And this payment alone will be more than sufficient to meet the annual cost under this bill.

Conditions in the country are vastly improved from a year ago when the President requested action be deferred upon the soldiers' measure. Business is booming, stocks and bonds have increased billions in value; Liberty bonds are at par; interest on Government obligations has dropped from 5½ per cent to 3½ per cent, and Treasury offerings during the year have been oversubscribed $5,750,000,000. More than $4,000,000,000 worth of private securities and foreign loans have been sold the American public during the year, and in addition $3,000,000,000 of bonds have been bought upon the New York Stock Exchange alone. And the public debt has been reduced $1,000,000,000 while all this financing has been conducted.

On January 24 last Secretary Mellon predicted a deficit of $24,000,000 for the fiscal year, but when the year ended, June 30 last, a surplus of $313,000,000 was announced by Mellon instead of the deficit he had predicted five months before.

The banks can well afford to lend the comparatively small sums the veterans will borrow upon their adjusted-service certificates.

They earned during the war and the prosperity period immediately following profits which they still retain of $1,747,605,000. This is three times more than the profits they retained for a similar period preceding the war and three times the maximum amount which the chamber of commerce estimates the veterans will borrow.

The maximum the chamber has estimated the veterans will borrow in the first three-year period is $600,000,000, although others estimate this sum at much less. Compare this to the assets of $40,000,000,000 owned by the banks of this country.

Money is now so cheap it is almost a drug on the market. Financial magazines state that the difficulty now is to find investments for available money and not as ordinarily, to find available money for investment.

The veterans understand that the present bill has been drawn primarily to meet former Executive objections. Should this bill fail approval, the veterans can only think that the Chief Executive intends for his part that compensation shall be delayed for another three years. For the bill now before the President has deliberately reduced the first three years' payment to where the assured interest payments from England will more than take care of them.

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION ALREADY HAS BEEN TOO LONG DELAYED.

It is now nearly four years since the armistice, yet the veteran still waits for the adjustment of his compensation. Further delays may prevent the veterans from realizing the full benefits designed under this measure.

THIS IS THE LAST OF THE GREAT WAR MEASURES.

The debt which this bill is designed to pay is a part of the cost of the war. Other approved war measures have been:

(a) The declaration of war.

(b) The selective service act, which took the young men from their peaceful pursuits on farms, in industry, and in the professions and placed them in uniform to defend their country.

(c) The great Liberty loans, which provided the war funds and paid out billions to American manufacturers, contractors, and war workers and also provided the dollar-a-day wage of the soldier. Notwithstanding the discrepancy in pay between those who served in the trenches and the factories, the soldier must bear equally in payment of the war's expenses.

(d) The drafting of the railroads.

(e) The payment to the railroads of an adjustment in their compensation exceeding $764,000,000.

(f) The payment of an adjustment on uncompleted war contracts of $3,000,000,000.

(g) An adjustment of the rates on large incomes which has saved the possessors of large fortunes more than $90,000,000 annually.

(h) Reducing the excess-profits tax, which saves the industries of this country $450,000,000 annually.

(i) The payment of an adjustment of compensation to Federal employees amounting to date to $225,000,000 and which is still being paid.

(j) The payment of an adjusted compensation to Army and Navy, amounting to $100,000,000.

The foregoing war measures have been met and approved. The only one still to be met is an adjustment of the pay of the men and women who sacrificed most and asked for the least that their country might be successful in this great enterprise.

VETERANS BELIEVE THAT THE BILL WILL MEET WITH EXECUTIVE APPROVAL.

The case of the veterans has been laid before the Congress and the President.

Believing in the justice of their cause, the soldiers have awaited recognition, although they have seen all the other war debts paid and have watched the Allies compensate their own soldiers out of the money they borrowed from us.

Disabled want this debt paid now.

THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,
C. HAMILTON COOK, National Commander.

(This advertisement paid for by friends of compensation.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the chairman of the committee and one of the conferees upon having saved the country from a very serious menace. The bill as it passed the Senate contained the word "nationalization." The Senate has, upon the insistence of Senator BORAH, incorporated in the coal bill a provision that the commission to be appointed by the President is to report upon the advisability and wisdom of the nationalization of the coal industry. The conferees of the House, solicitous not only for the present welfare of the country but anxious that no dangerous doctrines be disseminated capable of disturbing peaceful minds in the future, has substituted other words for the word "nationalization." I have no particular quarrel with the words which they have substituted. They probably mean the same thing. After all, a great deal will depend on the intelligence and wisdom of the men whom the President will appoint. And who is there who will dare doubt that the President will appoint the wisest men the country possesses? I would also congratulate the chairman of the House committee on the wise step he has taken in receding from the position he took when the bill was originally before the House. You will remember that when the bill was before the House it carried a provision that no person in anywise interested in coal should be a member of that commission. Every man with intelligence above that of an imbecile is interested in coal, and the House conferees acted with due modesty when they receded from their original position. Now it will be possible to have on the commission men who know something about coal.

But while the conferees have temporarily saved civilization by eliminating the dangerous suggestion of nationalization, I want to assure the chairman of the committee that he can not escape the problem. It was Livy who said in regard to conditions in Rome that the Roman statesmen had reached a state where they realized that the evils were unendurable and none but unendurable remedies were suggested. Are not our Republican statesmen in that very position to-day? We have gone through a strike in the coal industry; we may have another one. The suggestion is frequently made by the unthinking that the way to remedy strikes is to prohibit them by law. Nothing more idiotic or more subversive of democracy can be suggested than the prohibition of a strike by law. Whenever a law attempts to prohibit men from abandoning work—whenever a law——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me three minutes in order to finish this?

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Whenever a law indirectly attempts to compel people to work against their will it destroys the very basis of civilized society. The cemetery is the only place where they have no strikes; where people lie just as they have been put; where there is life, there is discontent. The strike is an inadequate and imperfect weapon of defense, but under existing conditions it is frequently the only method of resisting oppression. The employment of the physical force of the State to suppress the right of the individual or of a group of individuals to quit work means civic death. And so the problem is how to avoid the clash, the bitterness, the dishonesty, the cruelty of modern competitive conditions, and to preserve the liberty of the individual. How to save the community without destroying the basis of civilized community, which is the free individual. That is the great problem to which thinking men should address themselves.

Another suggestion I want to make in connection with this commission is this: Originally it was supposed to be purely a fact-finding commission. By the action of the Senate the functions of the commission have been enlarged. It is to make recommendations. It is to suggest legislation.

In order that we may get the viewpoint of every group interested in the coal industry there should be on the commission representatives of labor, representatives of capital, and representatives of the rest of the people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. And if recognized for that purpose I shall make a motion to recommit to that effect.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, for two years now I have advocated the enactment by Congress of legislation which would clothe some governmental agency with power to find out the facts pertaining to the coal industry and the reasons for these expensive and periodic strikes in both bituminous and anthracite fields. I liked the original House bill better; but, Mr. Speaker, we must not delay the enactment of this legislation. Substantially this bill gives all the power of the original bill.

In brief it provides for a commission of seven who are to investigate and report as to bituminous by January 1, and anthracite by August 31 next. The two industries are vastly different. The bituminous is suffering from an excess of competition due to overdevelopment and excess of labor, while the anthracite business is to all practical effects a monopoly both as to operators and workmen.

The commission is given complete power to investigate as to cost of production, including actual investment, labor costs, labor efficiency, hours of labor worked per day, days worked per week, and wages paid per day. The prices charged at mines and by middlemen will be thoroughly gone into. There are many other questions which enter into the problem and which cause these periodic and costly disturbances which they will report on.

The President is at liberty to appoint anyone to the commission, even if they are interested financially in coal operating or are interested as a mine worker. I hope, however, he will choose all members from without the ranks of either.

I disagree with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] who has just spoken. If we want results—and we do want results—let us not repeat the mistake made in providing for the Labor Board. Let there be no special representatives of either side sit on the tribunal. Let every member thereof be a representative of the public and owing allegiance to the public and no one else. This does not mean that men knowing nothing of the industry from the standpoint of operator or miner will be permitted to serve. There are men, able men, in the country to-day who know the coal business, but who have no financial interest in it, who can and who would out of a sense of public duty consent to serve.

There is a suspicion that is fairly general—I hope there is no ground for it—that there has been at times collusion between operator and miner so as to cause a strike, create a shortage of coal, and permit the mine operator to recoup his losses by exorbitant prices and the miner to recover his loss through increased wages and steady employment. I hope there is no truth in it, but the feeling exists. Keep the commission free from it as you would a court or jury.

I believe that the President will appoint the very best men that can be found, and we ought immediately following January 1 to await their report, and while public sentiment is aroused pass some legislation which will prevent any recurrence of a strangling of the transportation system and industrial life of the country because operator and miner can not or will not agree on terms of employment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a motion to recommit the conference report. Am I recognized now to make that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONDON moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference, with instructions to that committee to amend as follows: After the word "commission," in the first sentence of the first paragraph, strike out all up to the period and insert the following: "to be composed of seven members, two of whom shall be nominated by the President upon the recommendation of the United Mine Workers of America, two upon the recommendation of the Coal Operators' Association, and three to be nominated by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on that, although I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the motion to recommit. It is not proper under our rules to recommit and instruct the conference committee to make certain amendments. It is all right to instruct our conferees to agree to something or to disagree to something.

Mr. LONDON. That is exactly what was done with the sugar conference report. That is exactly what was done in that case.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; the gentleman is in error. No; I do not know as to that. I will take that back.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, of course we can not instruct the Senate conferees. All that we can do is to instruct our conferees to agree or disagree to something.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. All that this does is to instruct the conference committee.

Mr. LONDON. The motion is that the House conferees be instructed to insist.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is rather difficult for the Chair to read that motion, and it would all depend on one or two words.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion seeks to insert matter that was neither in the House bill nor in the Senate bill. It is entirely new matter.

Mr. LONDON. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, to instruct the House conferees to consent to the Senate amendment, with the following addition:

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, will you kindly tell the House where we stand on this matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I think the gentleman from New York should make his motion a little bit plainer, so that the Clerk can read it without interruption, so that everybody will know what is in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. LONDON. I know what is in my mind, and so does everybody else. The parliamentarians are simply trying to confuse things. I move to instruct the conferees to insist on the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONDON moves to instruct the House conferees to insist on the following amendment: After the word "commission," in the first sentence of the first paragraph, strike out all up to the period and insert the following: "to be composed of seven members, two of whom shall be nominated by the President upon the recommendation of the United Mine Workers of America, two upon the recommendation of the Coal Operators' Association, and three to be nominated by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the Clerk read that correctly, the gentleman from New York struck out the motion to recommit, and the motion now is to instruct the conferees. Of course, the only motion in order is to recommit with certain instructions to the conferees. But as I understood the Clerk to read it, this is a straight-out motion to instruct, which, of course, is not in order until after the conference report is disagreed to.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, I make again the point of order that we have no power to instruct the conferees to insert matter which was not in disagreement between the Senate and the House; that the gentleman here seeks to instruct the House conferees to insist upon an amendment which was not either in the House bill or in the Senate bill. We have no right now at this stage in the proceedings to insist upon some entirely new legislation which was not in either the House or the Senate bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order that the gentleman from Kansas makes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, first, I ask that instead of the word "nominated" the word "appointed" be substituted wherever it occurs in my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the gentleman's motion.

Mr. LONDON. My motion is to recommit the bill with instructions to the House conferees to insist upon the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Was there any such amendment in either House or Senate bill?

Mr. LONDON. The conference report is now before the House, and the House can do anything it pleases with that conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, no. It is entirely out of order. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment, but it is certainly in order to make the motion to recommit. The matter which the gentleman proposes to insert by way of an amendment is not a matter foreign to the legislation, because the legislation itself provides for the appointment of a commission composed of seven members. The mere method of how they shall be appointed is what the gentleman from New York now seeks to remedy. He merely provides a certain means whereby they shall be appointed. I think the gentleman's motion to recommit is in order and should be considered by the House, although I am against it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the Chair that the original House bill contains a provision for nine Members. The Senate bill contained a provision for five Members. The Senate bill contains no restrictions excepting that no Member of the House or Senate or anyone holding public office in the United States shall be appointed to the commission. The House bill contains that restriction and the further restriction that no one financially interested in the industry shall be appointed. Now you have those two bills. There is no provision in either of the bills which in any way is anything like the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] in his motion to recommit. He is injecting into the adoption of the conference report a motion to instruct the conferees on something that is wholly extraneous to the subject matter before them in reference to the composition of this commission. It seems to me there can be no question but what that is clearly subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HICKS). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair can see some difficulties that beset this point, but there is a precedent in Hinds' which seems almost parallel to this motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

It has been held (Hinds', vol. 5, Nos. 6386, 6394) that "Instructions may not direct the managers to do that which they might not otherwise do," and while the Chair feels it is the better practice to restrict rather than to enlarge the powers of the conferees the Chair fails to see how this motion violates the rule. In section 6423, volume 5, of Hinds', it states "Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject."

In that case the conferees not only recommended the adoption of the Senate text but enlarged the provisions of it, making the number of commissioners five instead of three, although it was asserted there was no issue between the two Houses on this point. Speaker Henderson overruled the point of order.

In the present case the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York is germane to the Senate amendment, and the instructions do not require the managers on the part of the House to do that which they could not do under the conference rules.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 59, noes 1.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] to recommit the bill with instructions.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 19, noes 68.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed will vote "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 156, not voting 165, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were—ayes 183, noes 87.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman evidently misunderstood the Chair. The ayes are 183 and the noes are 87.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-six Members rising to second the demand, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Accordingly the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a privileged resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of September, 1922, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides for final adjournment at 2 o'clock on Friday. I had hoped it would be possible to secure an adjournment to-morrow, but the deficiency appropriation bill has not yet been reported to the Senate. It may not be reported to the Senate until to-morrow morning. In that event it may not be possible to adjourn to-morrow. It occurred to me that it would be better to fix the date of adjournment at a time when the business of the Congress which we expect to finish at this session will be quite certain to be completed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The resolution provides for a sine die adjournment, does it?

Mr. MONDELL. It does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The resolution was agreed to.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

FEMALE ATTENDANT, HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as folows:

House Resolution 430 (Rept. No. 1248).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $100 per month to the female attendant in the ladies' retiring rooms of the House Office Building in lieu of the salary now being paid such attendant.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 3, strike out "$100" and insert "$60," and in line 5, strike out the words "lieu of" and insert the words "addition to."

So that the resolution as amended will read:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $60 per month to the female attendant in the ladies' retiring rooms of the House Office Building in addition to the salary now being paid such attendant.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, just a word.

Mr. CRAGO. How much is this attendant now receiving?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Forty dollars a month. Just a word in explanation. Some days ago a resolution was passed by this House increasing the salaries of the two female attendants in the rest rooms of the Capitol Building and making their salaries $100 per month. At that time the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] raised the question as to whether the committee might not at that time have included the increasing of the salary of the female attendant in the rest rooms in the House Office Building. The chairman of the committee very properly stated that it would be better to leave the resolution as it was and that later a resolution pertaining to this particular place could be introduced. The resolution was presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and has been before the Committee on Accounts, and is unanimously passed by them as being proper, and it is presented to the House in its present form. This lady has been receiving $40 per month for her work. Of course, the bonus in addition makes it $60.

Now, the reason for the amendment by the committee is this: The salary of $40 is now provided for out of the general maintenance fund of the House, and it was thought best not to place on the contingent fund of the House the entire burden. Hence the committee made the amendment so that it would provide for $60 from the contingent fund of the House and continue $40 from the maintenance fund of the House. This makes the total salary $100 for the attendant at the House rest room the same as the former resolution made it for the two attendants in the rest rooms of the Capitol.

Mr. YOUNG. Does this include the bonus or is it without the bonus?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. This does not include the bonus.

Mr. YOUNG. What will the whole salary be, including the bonus?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. One hundred and twenty dollars per month.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it true that there are men janitors in the House Office Building who get only $60 a month—men with families, who give all their time to their work?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. This lady gives her entire time from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How many rest rooms are there in the House Office Building?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Two for the ladies of the House Office Building and visitors, and the wives of Members.

Mr. BLANTON. And only one attendant?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Only one attendant.

Mr. BLANTON. She has nothing else to do except to take care of this rest room?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why does not the chairman of the committee attempt to equalize the salary of these janitors? They are receiving only $60 a month.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I have not brought up this matter at all. As chairman of the committee I simply bring in this resolution because it was reported by the unanimous vote of the committee to equalize the salary of these lady attendants. We wish to equalize the salary of this lady with that received by the ladies of the Capitol Building, who receive $100 per month under the resolution passed the other day. May I say to the gentleman that the facts in support of this resolution are contained in a letter from the Architect of the Capitol, which I wish to read here to the House:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., September 19, 1922.

Hon. A. P. NELSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: With further reference to the matter of Mrs. Mary E. Ryan, the attendant of the ladies' rest room of the House Office Building, she was appointed on the char force in 1908, immediately upon the completion of the House Office Building, at $20 per month.

In December, 1912, she was put in charge of ladies' rest room in the Maltby Building, which building was used by the additional Members of Congress who came in under the 1910 census. At that time she was drawing $40 per month.

In 1913 she was transferred to the House Office Building at the same salary—$40 per month. In 1918 she received the bonus of $10 per month. In 1919 the bonus was increased to $20, the amount she is receiving at the present time. This, of course, totals $60 per month.

Mrs. Ryan's duties are to take care of any ladies who are temporarily indisposed, and some days she administers to as many as a hundred. In addition to this, she looks after the toilet and two baths, which adjoin the rest room, and which are in almost constant use. Her hours are from 9 to 5, whether or not the House is in session, as there are always employees in the building. I should say there are approximately 500 young women employed in the House Office Building.

Mrs. Ryan's husband died in 1908, leaving her four little children absolutely dependent upon her for support, and this is her only means of subsistence.

Respectfully yours,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Architect of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. A. P. NELSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that on account of the serious illness of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRONG] he was unable to be present this morning, but if he had been present, he would have voted to pass the bonus bill notwithstanding the veto of the President.

LANDS WITHIN THE WENATCHEE NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report for printing under the rule.

The Clerk read the title, as follows: "H. R. 6750, for the consolidation of various lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes."

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3 and the amendment to the title, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

I. L. LENROOT,
R. N. STANFIELD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

Amendment No. 1 harmonizes said bill with the general forest exchange act of March 20, 1922 (Public, No. 173).

Amendments Nos. 2 and 3 add a small amount of additional lands to the Olympic and Snoqualmie National Forests.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the Senate adopts the resolution which we adopted a few moments ago we shall adjourn at 2 o'clock on Friday. It is highly important that we have a quorum to-morrow. It is very important that the appropriation bill which is now before the Senate shall be passed before Congress adjourns. I trust that gentlemen will make arrangements to remain in the city until at least to-morrow night.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask whether that is the only business which the gentleman anticipates will be brought before the House?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the most important, and I think it is important. The bill is being withheld now awaiting a possible additional estimate of a sum for the care of American refugees in the Near East. The Secretary of State was not certain this morning what sum will be necessary. The probability is that it will be necessary to make some appropriation for that purpose, and that is delaying the appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the Senate were to pass the resolution, of course motions for suspending the rules would then be in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but there are no suspensions in contemplation. The business before the House is the unfinished business as it now stands.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. I want to ask about the corrupt practices act passed by the Senate. We have a similar House bill reported out by the Committee on Elections of which I happen to be a member. With the elections coming on this fall, that is a highly important matter, and we could take that up under suspension of the rules, and I think the House should have an opportunity to pass it. I am not running at variance with the chairman of the committee on the majority side. I did not see him here when I rose, but I know it is his desire to get it up. I think the corrupt practices act passed by the Senate is very important and should be acted upon, and the people of the country want it acted upon before the elections this fall. Is there any chance to get it up under a motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. MONDELL. There are quite a number of bills now pending in both Houses which will be acted upon as soon as we can. Manifestly we can not dispose of all the legislation before both Houses. At any rate, we can not dispose of Senate bills that have not reached our calendars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes on the work of this Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think he could confine it to one minute? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask that the gentleman from Wyoming have an hour to tell what the Congress has failed to do?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress draws to a close. The Congress, one or both branches, has been in continuous session for almost 18 months, and in that time has transacted an unprecedented volume of business.

During these sessions the Congress has considered every important pledge contained in the last national platform of the party, every problem presented to us by the President, and every important question arising out of the changing conditions of public affairs. The most important of these pledges, problems, and questions have been fulfilled, met, and provided for by legislation. Those which have not been fully settled and determined have received careful consideration by committees, by one or both of the two Houses, and will have further attention and consideration at the earliest practicable date.

Judged either by the volume of the business transacted or the highly important character of the questions and problems considered and passed upon, the sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress thus far may be properly classed as among the most important sessions in American legislative history. No Congress in our history has been more diligent; none has had more difficult or complicated problems to solve; none has had so great a variety of such problems, and none has transacted so large a volume of important business in the same period of time.

The "Do Nothing Congress," as some of its critics stupidly persist in characterizing it, has proven to be the Congress that has done more in the same length of time than any other.

VOLUME OF BUSINESS.

This Congress has up to this time placed upon the statute books 545 separate laws, of which 405 are public and 140 are private, including claims. This is at the rate of nearly 2 laws per legislative day for the entire session. In addition, the House of Representatives has considered and passed 249 bills, of which 140 are public and 109 are private. In addition to these, 7 Senate bills have passed the House but have not yet reached the state of final agreement between the two Houses.

We are justified in emphasizing the fact that this is a Republican Congress under a Republican administration, and our justification for this emphasis grows out of the fact that some who are not of our political faith are much disposed to claim credit to themselves for the splendid achievements and accomplishments of this Congress, while reserving to themselves the privilege of criticizing the Congress and the administration in general and in particular whenever they feel it will serve their personal and partisan interests so to do.

We are glad to acknowledge the confession of former error involved in opposition support of our legislative proposals, but we are not unmindful of the fact that such support has not been essential at any time to the carrying out of our program. As we expect partisan criticism of our procedure and of any mistakes we may have made, we insist upon credit on behalf of the party and the administration for those things that have been accomplished.

WE GLADLY PRESENT THE RECORD.

Firm in our adherence to the truth "that public office is a public trust," we gladly present the record of the party and of those who have served the people under its standards as the best possible assurance of future faithful service.

The marvelous achievements of the American people under the leadership and in harmony with the policies of the Republican Party have no parallel in human history, and the roster of the great men who have served the Nation and the world as Republicans stands unrivaled in the annals of time.

Heartened by the inspiring record of party accomplishment and party leadership, we consecrate ourselves anew to the maintenance of high standards of enlightened and faithful public service in the interest of all the people. In the spirit of Lincoln and Roosevelt, we meet the manifold problems of the day under the fine leadership of Warren G. Harding.

Providence, whose ways are past finding out, willed that our party should not occupy the seats of national power when the great conflict in Europe threw its menace across the face of the earth, and that fact afforded opportunity for the display of the finest spirit of patriotic cooperation and helpfulness ever shown by an opposition and minority party in all the annals of civil government. This party, that had proven its loyalty and strength when in position of responsibility and control, rose to the supreme height of unselfish patriotic helpfulness as a minority in the hour of the Nation's need and peril.

THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

The backhanded reward for that patriotic service came in the nature of a presidential call to place none but Democrats on guard, and the American people answered with the Republican Sixty-sixth Congress.

We must begin with that Congress if we are to secure the perspective from which to intelligently view the outlook of to-day. The President who had asked for a Congress of a different political faith was compelled to call it into session in May, 1919, to enact the seven great supply bills which its Democratic predecessor had failed to pass. The Congress promptly justified the people's faith by reducing the appropriation bills $940,000,000 below the sums they carried when considered in the former Democratic Congress.

When that Republican Congress met, six months had passed since the signing of the armistice, but we were just reaching the peak of our war expenditures. In the fiscal year then drawing toward its close the total expenditures of the Government were $18,500,000,000—a sum greater than our total Government expenditures in the 30 years preceding the outbreak of the European war. The total gross public debt of the United States had risen from the sum of a little over $1,000,000,000 at the outbreak of the war to the stupendous sum of almost $26,000,000,000.

We were still technically and officially at war. The railroads were still being operated by the Government at a cost to the taxpayer of nearly $2,000,000 a day, with high rates and poor service. The telegraph and telephone lines were still under the public control. The war laws were still upon the statute books. More than $30,000,000,000 of the people's money had been expended since the war began—more money than the Government had spent in all the years since the Civil War. All the world outside our borders was prostrate from the effects of the Great War and not an industry or an enterprise anywhere was functioning normally. This was the condition of affairs when we first came into responsibility after the Great War.

WHAT THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS DID.

That Congress returned the railroads, the telegraph, telephone, and cable lines to their owners; passed comprehensive legislation for the compensation, hospitalization, and vocational training of the veterans of the World War; adopted the woman suffrage amendment; placed on the statute books a complete and comprehensive national prohibition law; enacted the general leasing and water power acts; the civil service retirement act; the act for the relief of those disabled in industry; the Army reorganization act; and other constructive measures too numerous to mention.

That Congress passed the Budget act only to meet with a presidential veto. It attempted to restore a condition of official peace with a like result, and even a resolution repealing the war laws, attempting to restore constitutional conditions of government, failed because a President drunk with power refused, a year after the war was over, to surrender one iota of his extraordinary and despotic power.

This Sixty-sixth Congress, which began its record with a saving of nearly a billion dollars on seven appropriation bills, continued its record of economy by reducing the appropriations nearly two and one-half billion dollars below the estimates. The expenditure of eighteen and one-half billions in the fiscal year in which the Congress began its sessions was reduced to an expenditure of less than six and one-half billions in the first full fiscal year for which the Congress appropriated and to an expenditure of a little more than five billions in the fiscal year during which the Congress ended.

BEGINNING OF THE HARDING ADMINISTRATION.

The splendid record of the Sixty-sixth Congress for economy and constructive legislation challenged the admiration of the American people and paved the way for the wonderful victory of 1920, while the multiplying evidences of extravagance, incompetency, and graft which characterized the Wilson administration rendered inevitable the astounding victory which gave us a Republican President and a Republican Congress on the 4th of March, 1921.

April 11 saw the Congress in special session, charged by the President with the duty of lifting the tax burdens, revising the tariff, restoring peace, and legislating toward the restoration of normalcy.

The inevitable reaction from a period of enormous inflation and expenditure, of high wages, flush times, and easy money had arrived. The cold gray dawn of the morning after was upon us. The dance was over and the fiddler was demanding his pay.

The multiplied ills of the period of deflation, acute everywhere, fell most heavily upon the farmer and the stockman, and to his relief the new administration and the new Congress turned even before it took up the great tasks of general tax and tariff legislation, of budgetary and general restoration and reform.

All the world beyond our borders was in acute distress, or threatened with bankruptcy and financial collapse. Ours was the only treasure chest in the world from which real money could be secured in exchange for commodities, and so they came to us from the ends of the earth, pouring through every custom-house. Eggs from China, frozen meats from Australia and the Argentine, wool from everywhere, and prices of these and other farm products were on the toboggan.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION.

Within two days after the Congress met, the House of Representatives reported an emergency agricultural tariff bill. Within two more days it had passed the House, and in a little more than a month it was a law. It checked the downward trend of prices, and gradually as the surplus of imported stocks was exhausted, there came the upward trend. Wool soon reached a fairly remunerative level and, with the return of normal and favorable conditions, bound to follow the settlement of the coal and rail strikes, there is every prospect of satisfactory prices for all agricultural products.

The passage of the emergency tariff bill only partly met the needs of the agricultural and live-stock industries. The staggering blows these industries had received demanded heroic and unusual remedies. Credit and an abundance of it was essential.

It was not an easy problem from a national standpoint. The first suggestions were neither adequate nor practical, but the administration and the Congress worked out the problem through the revival, the extension, and the enlargement of the powers of the War Finance Corporation and the establishment of a credit of a billion dollars in this institution. Four hundred millions have been advanced—approximately three hundred millions to the farmers and the stockmen of the West; more than nine millions to the stockmen and farmers of this State.

It is no exaggeration to say that these two measures—the emergency tariff and the war finance loans—have been the salvation, the saving, of the live-stock industry of the West, and in saving that industry the Nation has performed a great service not only for those directly interested but for those indirectly interested in the maintenance of an adequate meat supply for the Nation.

Some of the down-east folks have been inclined to think that this Congress was organized mainly to look after the interests of the farmer and the stockmen of the country, and this view has a considerable basis in the long list of the legislation of the Congress helpful to those industries and interests. It includes such important legislation as the packer bill, which was reported in the House of Representatives within a month after the Congress assembled, was passed promptly, and after some delay in the Senate became a law on August 4, 1921; the bill prohibiting gambling in grain futures, which passed the House within a month after the Congress convened, and became a law only to be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. A new measure, believed to be constitutional, was promptly passed and is now a law.

The cooperative marketing act was reported to the House of Representatives, and passed that body in less than 30 days after the Congress met, and after a long delay in the Senate, it became a law in February last. These and other bills, enlarging the facilities of the land banks, and otherwise aiding and assisting agriculture, have received the prompt attention and consideration of the Congress, and the House Committee on Banking and Currency is now considering a measure intended to supply new and enlarged agricultural credits.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

But legislation in the aid of agriculture, while it had the first attention of Congress, by no means monopolized its energies. The Budget bill which fell under the ax of President Wilson's veto was revived promptly, placed upon the statute books, and through the appointment of Gen. Charles G. Dawes as Budget Director got actively at work.

The peace resolution, relieved from the menace of a presidential veto, restored a condition of official peace with the Central Empires.

The tax revision reducing the annual tax burden nearly a billion dollars.

The Fordney tariff, under which the Nation's labor and industries are protected.

The maternity bill, the prompt passage of which had been recommended by President Harding, after some delay and vicissitudes, became a law.

All national activities in behalf of the disabled and injured soldiers were combined in the Veterans' Bureau.

The national highway act—highly important provisions were placed upon the statute books.

The immigration restriction act.

The acts to prevent profiteering in coal and providing for a coal fact finding commission.

The Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation were placed upon a more substantial basis pending further legislation in the aid of the merchant marine.

The foreign debt refunding act provides a commission and authority for the refunding of the $11,000,000,000 debt owed us by foreign nations.

All these and much more in the way of useful, helpful, and constructive legislation occupied the time and attention of the Congress.

THE TAX REVISION LIFTING THE BURDEN.

The House took up and passed the general tariff bill first, but the Senate reversed the order and passed the tax bill before they began to give consideration to the general tariff.

The tax revision could not, in the nature of things, have satisfied everybody, nor was it possible, under the conditions of the Public Treasury, and in view of the obligations and increased demands growing out of or resulting from the war, to reduce the tax burden to the extent that the Congress would have been glad to have reduced it. It must, however, be admitted by all that so far as the revision went it proceeded along sound and sane lines. There was an actual lifting rather than a shifting of the tax burden. There was not only an honest but a successful attempt to relieve fairly and equitably, so far as was possible under the circumstances, the tax burdens of all classes of the people. It reduced the burden for the calendar year 1921 in the sum of approximately $80,000,000 and, according to the latest estimates of the Treasury, relieves the tax burden for the present calendar year nearly a billion dollars.

BURDEN LIFTED EQUITABLY.

The Federal tax gatherer no longer collects taxes on ice-cream cones, soda water, pills and lotions, or parcel post, nor exacts tribute on transportation or on the purchase of wearing apparel. The man of moderate means, and particularly such a man with a family, has had his income-tax burdens appreciably lightened. Those classes of taxation which were most successfully passed on to the consuming public, or which most hampered and retarded business transactions and discouraged or prevented the growth and development of productive enterprise, like the excess-profits tax and the higher brackets of the surtax, no longer exercise their deterrent effects upon business and development. In the nature of things this was not a finality in tax revision, for, as we get away from the war burdens and escape the inevitable expenditures of the war's aftermath, we shall be able to still further lighten the burden of direct Federal levies and relieve the people and the industry of the country from the handicap that heavy taxation inevitably entails.

The tax on transportation has been lifted in the sum of $270,000,000; the tax on amusement admission and dues, $100,000,000; on parcel post, $20,000,000; and so on down the line. The excess-profits tax, justified for a brief period in time of war, indefensible in time of peace because it was inevitably passed on and multiplied to the consumer, was repealed. The high income surtaxes, 67 per cent on large incomes, were reduced to 50 per cent, or a total of 58 per cent with the normal tax, with the hope of bringing about the return of large incomes from the field of tax-free securities to the field of productive industry—a field in which we of the West, needing development, are tremendously interested.

What shall we do with the ten or fifteen billion income-tax free State, county, municipal, and school district bonds? So long as they remain tax free it is useless to assess an income tax of 58 per cent on the earnings of large fortunes. They simply stop earning in productive enterprise and go into the tax-free field. We must either get the States, school districts, and municipalities to give up the benefits of having their bonds tax free, or we must reduce the high surtax and thus secure a greater tax return from large fortunes than we are able to secure with a high surtax which can be escaped in the safe haven of tax-free bonds.

There is a bill before the House of Representatives proposing a constitutional amendment to enable the Federal Government to tax these bonds of the States and their subdivisions. The matter will be put up to the people of the States for them to decide what they desire to do about it.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

Congress has had no more important problem before it than that of the revision of the tariff laws. The House proceeded to the consideration of the question promptly and vigorously, and prepared and passed the Fordney tariff bill in a little more than three months after the assembling of the Congress.

There has been much criticism of the long delay of the tariff in the Senate, 13 months having elapsed from the time the bill was presented to that body until it passed. It must be remembered, however, that never had conditions surrounding the preparation and enactment of tariff legislation been so trying; never has the ascertainment of foreign costs been so difficult; never have prices and values been so rapidly and widely fluctuating.

The House adopted a plan of American valuation of imports. The Senate fixed its rates on the basis of foreign valuation. The same ad valorem rates, therefore, give a higher measure of protection in the House than in the Senate bill.

As finally agreed upon the rule of foreign valuation was, in the main, adopted, but with it a most important provision under which the President is authorized under certain conditions to increase or decrease rates not to exceed 50 per cent or to transfer them to American valuation. This provision empowers the President to meet, to a very considerable extent at least, the conditions that seemed to demand and justify American valuation; it grants the President discretionary powers to impose additional duties or prohibitions upon imports from any country discriminating against the overseas commerce of the United States.

RATES AND PROVISIONS.

Notwithstanding the very great difficulties surrounding the preparation of tariff legislation at this time the bill as prepared and perfected will, it is believed, prove, taken all in all, the best tariff measure that has ever been placed upon the statute books. The rates, while high enough to afford needed relief from the effects of the Underwood tariff law, still average lower than the rates under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law and lower than the rates under any Republican tariff bill heretofore enacted. Some of the agricultural schedules are somewhat higher than the Payne rates, but lower than the rates carried in the emergency tariff bill, which the general tariff supersedes.

The administrative features of the bill are admirable, and are a very substantial improvement over the provisions of existing law. The provisions of the act place in the hands of the President authority to meet any situation which may develop under which the rates provided may require adjustment.

SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—THE BONUS.

As the House in the Sixty-sixth Congress passed the four-fold bonus plan proposed by the American Legion, which was not acted upon in the Senate, so the House in March of this year passed the five-fold bonus plan and sent it to the Senate. The passage of this measure in the Senate was long delayed, but it was finally considered by that body. The Senate committee in reporting the bonus bill struck out the land reclamation settlement features of the House bill which had been the first feature of the Legion four-fold plan. In the Senate the so-called Smith-McNary reclamation bill, with some modifications, was inserted in lieu of the Mondell-Lane soldier settlement bill which the House bill carried. The conferees reported the measure eliminating both reclamation provisions. A point of order was raised in the House against the elimination of these reclamation provisions but the Chair held that they were so dissimilar that the conferees were justified in their action. The bill, therefore, went to the President without the land settlement feature.

The President returned the bill with a veto message setting forth at length the reasons which he believed justified him in withholding his signature. The House voted by a large majority to pass the bill, notwithstanding the President's veto, but in the Senate the veto was sustained by a very narrow vote.

ECONOMY AND RETRENCHMENT.

Nothing has been more urgent and essential to the restoration of normal and favorable conditions in the country than the exercise of strict economy in Government expenditure, and the carrying out of such a program has been as difficult as it has been essential. The riot of waste and extravagance during the period of the war laid burdens and obligations and put in motion operations that it was exceedingly difficult, in many cases impossible, to avoid, curtail, or eliminate immediately after the close of the war. The problem was tackled forcefully and courageously and, thanks to the new Budget system, to the earnest and faithful efforts of President Harding, to the cooperation that has existed between the Congress and the administration, the results obtained have been gratifying in the extreme.

As a result of economy and good business management of the Nation's affairs the total gross debt of the Nation was reduced, between May 31, 1919, and June 30, 1922, almost $3,000,000,000, or to be exact $2,953,492,388. The reduction in expenditures by years has been as follows:

Fiscal year 1919	$18,514,879,955.00
Fiscal year 1920	6,560,467,535.13
Fiscal year 1921	5,538,209,189.30
Fiscal year 1922	3,795,302,499.84

Leaving out of consideration the enormous reduction of more than $12,000,000,000 between the expenditures for 1919 and 1920, the most remarkable showing ever made of Government retrenchment in time of peace is to be found in the reduction of expenditures for the fiscal year which closed the 1st of last July of nearly three billions below the expenditures for the fiscal year 1920.

The triumph of economy and good administration which these figures eloquently portray is more clearly understood when we take into consideration that through the great reduction in other expenditures during the fiscal year just closed we have been able to reduce the public debt more than a billion dollars and still leave a balance in the Treasury, after paying all our bills, for the first time since we entered the Great War and in the sum of more than $300,000,000.

We have, under the most stupendous difficulties, at last reached a position from which we can survey the difficult road over which we have traveled and appraise the splendid results triumphantly achieved. In three years we have reduced the public debt as much as it was reduced in the 50 years following the Civil War. We have reduced the tax burden approximately a billion dollars per year. We have been reducing the national expenditure at the rate of a billion dollars a year. We have restored a favorable balance on the books of the Nation. The national balance sheet is no longer in the red.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

The work of the Congress has been so tremendous in volume, so important, and so diversified in character that even a brief detailed reference to all of it is impossible within the limits of even an extended speech. I shall, therefore, content myself with comparatively brief statements with regard to the more important legislation.

THE BUDGET.

The hopes entertained by those who for many years labored for a budget system, of those on both sides of this Chamber who efficiently served in the enactment of budget legislation, has been abundantly justified by our experience under the Budget thus far. Not only has the Budget Bureau, under the efficient management of its first directors, in harmony with the views of the Chief Executive, asserted a most helpful and beneficial influence over the estimates presented to the Congress, but the director, with the constant and unfailing support of the President, has exerted a mighty influence for economy over the departments and bureaus and independent establishments of the Government, resulting in the saving of many millions of dollars out of appropriations made before the Budget was established. The Congress, and particularly the House of Representatives, which, after all, is the final arbiter, trimmed the appropriations below even the reduced estimates of the Budget. To a considerable extent this was made possible by the cooperation of the executive departments and by reason of the reductions in the Naval Establishment made possible by the Conference on Limitation of Armament.

THE PEACE RESOLUTION.

The peace resolution declared the end of a state of war, the existence of which was proclaimed by the war declaration. It placed us in a position of official peace with Germany and Austria, and paved the way for the negotiations since entered into for the reestablishment of normal peace relations with our late enemies.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The act for an emergency tariff on agricultural products, which was promptly passed and has been extended until such time as the permanent tariff shall take effect, checked the threatened flooding of our markets at a time when the reaction from war prices had brought many of the agricultural products of the country to a price far below the cost of production.

The legislation has had a continuous steadying effect, helpful to the producer and beneficial in its effect upon the general business of the country. Since the enactment of this legislation there has been a widely helpful upward trend in the prices, not only of the agricultural products directly affected by the legislation but of a variety of other farm products as well, affording the producer a fair return for his effort and outlay without appreciably affecting the prices paid by the consumer.

It may be truthfully said that this act, together with the loans made to agriculturists and stock raisers under the amended War Finance Corporation act, have been the salvation of the great basic industries of agriculture, and the benefits rendered them have been reflected in improved business conditions generally.

VETERANS' BUREAU ACT.

The act establishing a Veterans' Bureau and consolidating all of the agencies charged with care and responsibility on behalf of the ex-service men was the fulfillment of a national obligation to provide an organization which, so far as it was possible to do so, should cure the delays which had been complained of in meeting our obligations to our national defenders. The bureau is now functioning with increasing efficiency and notwithstanding the enormous burden placed upon it, looking after the welfare of the more than 300,000 men who are under its care or have applied for its benefits, is continually reducing the cases and the causes of complaint among those whom it serves. The bureau will this calendar year pay to the veterans of the World War and expend for their benefit the stupendous sum of approximately $425,000,000.

HOSPITALS, VETERANS' BUREAU.

Continuing its policy of making every needed provision for the care and comfort of the sick and disabled veterans of the World War, Congress passed the act of April 20, 1922, which authorized appropriations in the sum of $17,000,000 in aiding the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional facilities and to furnish medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion. These funds are in addition to the $18,000,000 provided for similar purposes near the close of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it is believed that with the sums now made available abundant hospital facilities will be provided for all of the veterans who may seek them.

THE FOREIGN DEBT REFUNDING ACT.

This Congress has had no more important question before it than that of providing for a commission to treat with our foreign debtors and to arrange with them as to the terms of payment of the principal and interest of the foreign debt, amounting to more than $11,000,000,000, which they owe us. Had the former administration proceeded in full conformity with the law, these obligations would have all been funded and time and terms of payment agreed upon, and nothing further would have been necessary. While the Secretaries of the Treasury of the Wilson administration may not have acted contrary to law, they certainly did not carry out the directions and provisions of the law in full, and, on the contrary, did enter into an agreement with our foreign debtors whereby all interest payments were delayed for a period of three years, and the only obligations taken were mere I O U's, with no definite stipulation as to conditions of payment.

In this state of affairs it became necessary to legislate a grant of authority for the handling of this tremendously important matter, involving not only the vast sum of more than $11,000,000,000 but affecting our relations with Armenia, Austria, Belgium, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, Russia, and Serbia, all of whom owe us sums ranging from a few thousand dollars to hundreds of millions of dollars.

The legislation creates a commission of five members, with the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman, the others to be appointed by the President, who, subject to the approval of the President, are authorized to refund or convert and extend the time of payment of the principal or interest, or both, of the obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States. This is one of the most important pieces of legislation which has been passed by the House.

APPROPRIATION FOR THE INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTION OF WAR FRAUDS.

The enormous operations of the Government during the war afforded abundant opportunity for fraud, and investigations made by the war investigating committees of the Sixty-sixth Congress made it very evident that many had taken advantage of the opportunities to defraud the Government, and that there had been much carelessness in the settlement of war claims. The investigation of these matters by the War Department and the Department of Justice, the auditing of accounts, and the examination of records has proven a slow and tedious proceeding, particularly in view of the fact that records were in many cases poorly kept and in some cases had been removed. While very excellent progress has been made, it became evident that increased appropriations were necessary if this work were to be carried on thoroughly and with promptness and dispatch. The Congress therefore provided an additional appropriation of $500,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Attorney General for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds.

COAL PROFITEERING ACT.

For some months past the Nation has been passing through a trying situation growing out of the difficulties and differences attending wage adjustments. Happily these difficulties seem to be in the way of settlement, and in the coal-mining industries peace again reigns, and we are rapidly approaching a normal output. Unfortunately there are those who would take advantage of the people's needs in the condition growing out of the long period of nonproduction, and the Nation is confronted with the menace of conscienceless profiteering in the sale of coal.

In this condition of affairs the President appealed for legislation to prevent, as far as it was possible for the Federal Government to do, the plundering of the people in this hour of coal shortage. The Congress has promptly responded and placed upon the statute books legislation which it is believed will go far toward preventing the exorbitant prices for coal which have been threatened.

The Government has no authority to directly fix prices, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has authority to provide for the allotment and allocation of cars, and the legislation which has been enacted provides for a Fuel Distributor, whose duty it shall be to study conditions and make recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission with regard to car allotments and allocations, with a view to distributing coal in accordance with immediate needs and of discouraging the charging of exorbitant prices by withholding car allotments.

No one with a proper understanding of the limitation of the powers of the Federal Government and appreciation of the fact that the best intended efforts at regulation frequently fall short of accomplishing the helpful results sought can view legislation of this character with unmixed satisfaction. When conditions such as those which now confront us arise, however, the Congress would be blameworthy if it did not at least make an effort to protect the people and must therefore legislate in the hope that wise and sane administration will secure the maximum of benefit with a minimum of harm and inconvenience.

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

In the address of the President delivered before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on August 18, 1922, and in which he called to the attention of the Congress the industrial situation of the country, the President recommended, among other things, the creation of "a commission to make a searching investigation into the whole coal industry, with provision for its lawful activities and the bestowal of authority to reveal every phase of coal production, sale, and distribution." Such a commission to consist of seven members and clothed with authority, as suggested by the President, has been provided.

The commission is to report promptly, and it is believed that the information which it secures and presents in its report will be most helpful and useful in the consideration of the many questions and problems which require study and solution in connection with the industry, in the interest of those engaged in it, and of the general public, which has so lively an interest in the matter of fuel supply.

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

Soon after taking office Attorney General Daugherty created a voluntary commission to inquire into the question of relieving the United States district courts of the congestion which was steadily increasing. This commission, after studying the situation, recommended authorization for the appointment of 2 district judges at large in each judicial circuit—18 in all. They were to be designated and assigned to districts from time to time to assist the resident judges in disposing of the arrears of business.

There has been but little difference of opinion as to the necessity for additional judges, but after careful consideration it was finally determined that the additional judges should be assigned to particular districts. The legislation as enacted provides for 24 additional district judges. It also provides for annual conferences, to be called by the Chief Justice, of the senior circuit judges of each judicial circuit, which conferences are to make a comprehensive survey of the condition of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans for assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts as the condition of the public business before the courts may suggest and require.

The appointment of these new judges and the provision for the assignment and transfer of judges will, it is believed, greatly relieve the present congested conditions of the court dockets of the country.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACTS.

The Federal highway act, which became a law November 9, as an amendment to the Federal aid act, carried out the President's recommendations with regard to needed and essential changes in the Federal road aid act, particularly with a view to centralizing authority in the States and insuring the upkeep of Federal aid roads. The act made an appropriation of $75,000,000 for Federal aid in road building for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, and of $5,000,000 for forest roads and trails for the same fiscal year, and $10,000,000 for the same purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. This was a measure of the highest importance. It provided much needed amendments to the Federal road aid act, insured the continuance of Federal aid and participation in road building throughout the country.

On the 1st of May, 1922, the House passed a bill further amending the Federal highway act and authorizing highway appropriations in the sum of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; also authorizing appropriations for forest roads and trails in the sum of $6,500,000 for the fiscal year 1924. The Senate did not, however, consider this bill, but placed provisions for highway appropriations on the Post Office appropriation bill. For these provisions the House substituted its bill of May 1, and in conference appropriations for highways were authorized in the sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $65,000,000 for 1924; and $75,000,000 for 1925; $6,500,000 was also authorized for forest roads and trails for each of the fiscal years 1924 and 1925. The Federal highway act was amended in several important particulars in the interest of economy and proper maintenance, and cooperation by the Federal Government was limited to $16,250 per mile, exclusive of bridges, for the year 1923 and $15,000 per mile thereafter.

THE STOCKMEN AND FARMERS' WAR FINANCE ACT.

The act amending the legislation creating the War Finance Corporation to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products has had a highly beneficial effect upon the industries which it directly aids and upon the entire country. It may be said without exaggeration that this legislation has been the salvation of the live-stock industry of the West. It has preserved from bankruptcy industries essential to the prosperity of the entire Nation. Under this act more than $309,000,000 has been loaned to the farmers, the stock growers, and the agricultural producers of the Nation on a sound business basis, as evidenced by the fact that more than $45,000,000 of the original loans have been repaid and that the corporation presents every evidence of soundness in its operation. The recent extension of this act for one year assures the country of its benefits until permanent provision can be made for farm and live-stock credits.

MATERNITY AND INFANCY ACT.

The Republican platform declared "the supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice." The President, having in mind this party declaration of national duty, in his message to Congress at the beginning of the session, said:

> I assume that the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

There was considerable difference of opinion with regard to this measure in the Congress and in the country, both as to the policy it invoked and with regard to its provisions. The newly enfranchised women voters, so far as their views were expressed, were almost unanimously favorable to the measure. It appealed to the conscience and sympathy of all as a measure asserting national leadership for the purpose of stimulating the States and communities in the tremendously important work of the protection of maternity and infancy. The act provides for cooperation between the National Government and the several States and authorizes an appropriation of approximately $1,500,000 for the current fiscal year, which may be increased in the sum of $1,000,000 a year for five years.

The measure as reported by the committee and passed by the House differed quite materially from the bill as it passed the Senate, and the bill as thus amended was promptly adopted by the Senate. The enactment of this measure is not only creditable to the Congress as "adding to our manifestation of human interest," as stated by the President in his message, but as a prompt fulfillment of our platform pledges. Both parties in the last campaign made promises to the new voters, the better half of mankind newly invited into participation in government. Those promises have been kept, at least partially, and so far as they were definitely made in platforms and in presidential statements, by the passage of this act under which we encourage the States and cooperate with them in the highly important, splendid, and humanitarian work of the protection of maternity and infancy.

INDEPENDENT CITIZENSHIP FOR WOMEN.

For years there has been more or less agitation for the amendment of our laws relating to citizenship and naturalization with a view of authorizing the naturalization of alien women independent of the naturalization of their husbands and for the retention by American women of their citizenship, notwithstanding marriage to an alien, so long as she desires so to do and remains a resident of the United States. Since women were granted the franchise the demand for and the desirability of legislation of this character has increased, and one of the last acts of the session was the final adoption of legisaltion of this character. The act relating to the naturalization and citizenship of married women provides for the recognition of alien married women who desire and are qualified to become American citizens by permitting them to become naturalized without waiting for the naturalization of their husbands. It provides against the automatic loss of an American woman's citzenship by her marriage to an alien, and for the restoration to citizenship of such women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by such marriages.

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION ACT.

The immigration restriction act provides in a practical and workable way for the staying of the great volume of the tide of immigration threatened as an aftereffect of the war. While America regrets even partially to close her gates against those who in good faith and with good intentions seek our shores, this measure was necessary as a means of preventing a flood tide of immigration, not all of a desirable character, and beyond our capacity to speedily assimilate.

The gates of free America have always swung open for the oppressed of all lands, for those seeking to better their conditions, and we desire to keep them open, provided, however, that we shall not allow this flood to come more rapidly than we can assimilate the newcomers to the ideas and ideals of true Americanism, the principles of liberty under laws. For the time being we have restricted the coming immigrants, welcoming as many as we believe to be safe for America, and we stand ready again to widen the door of opportunity when we may be able thoroughly to Americanize a larger number of well-intentioned people who may seek a home among us.

RECOGNITION OF AGRICULTURE IN FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The Federal reserve act provides that the President, in making appointment of members of the Federal Reserve Board, shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, industrial, and commercial interests of the country. Inasmuch as agriculture is the basic industry of the country, failure to recognize this as one of the industries entitled to representation on the board seemed an extraordinary oversight. The act approved June 3, 1922, remedies this situation by providing that in the appointment of members of the Federal Reserve Board the "President shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial" interests of the country. The act also increases the appointive membership of the board to six, and otherwise amends the Federal reserve act.

THE PACKERS ACT.

The so-called packers act, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock and dairy products, poultry, and eggs, is a wise, sound, and sensible measure. The enactment of this legislation was a distinct triumph, one of the most notable achievements of the Congress, for it gave the country the benefit of sound legislation affecting the meat-packing and allied and associated industries and activities after previous Congresses had struggled in vain with these questions, largely because of the radical, experimental character of the legislation that had been urged. Notwithstanding the fact that the legislation as enacted was severely criticized by those who had been vainly seeking radical legislation, it has worked so well and been so highly beneficial that it has compelled the indorsement of those who were at one time its severest critics.

ANTIGAMBLING IN GRAIN FUTURES ACT.

The bill for regulating transactions in grain for future delivery, which became a law August 21, 1921, was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States on the 15th of May, 1922, as to section 4, the court holding against the provision for the regulation of exchanges by taxation. On June 1 of this year a bill was introduced with a view of meeting the objections of the Supreme Court and yet so regulating the transactions of grain exchanges as to eliminate purely speculative and gambling operations. This bill was taken up by the House and passed on June 26. The legislation as to some of its features, at least, has been vigorously opposed, but it is believed that its enactment, while making possible all legitimate transactions, will prevent those gambling operations which frequently disastrously affect the prices of grain and foodstuffs.

ASSOCIATION OF PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

This measure is intended to authorize producers of agricultural products to form associations for the purpose of collectively preparing and marketing their products. Associations for this purpose have become very common in many of the States, but the States can not confer any right upon their organizations to engage in interstate or foreign commerce. While this measure confers on farmers certain privileges it can not properly be said to be class legislation. Business corporations have under existing legislation all the powers and privileges conferred on farm organizations by this legislation. The organizations authorized are under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, and it is believed that through the operations of organizations of this kind it may be possible to eliminate unnecessary middlemen, to improve conditions of marketing, and, while assuring the producer a reasonable price, protect the consumer against the high prices which he has frequently paid for products for which the producer received little.

IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—FARM LOANS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

We have long needed a Federal law providing for the organization of irrigation districts on projects under the national reclamation law in order to make it possible for the Federal authorities to deal with the settlers and water users collectively instead of individually. This is now made possible by the act of May 15, 1922. This act also provides for the conditions under which farm loans can be made on lands on reclamation projects, thus meeting a long-felt want on the part of settlers on such projects.

THE ANTINARCOTICS ACT.

It has become increasingly evident that drastic legislation is essential to the control of the growing evil of the use of narcotics. The act providing for a Federal Narcotic Control Board, making it unlawful to import narcotics, except such as are necessary for medicinal and other legitimate purposes, fixing heavy penalties for violation of the provisons of the act, will, it is believed, have a helpful and beneficial effect in reducing the importation and use of narcotics.

THE NAVAL SCRAPPING ACT.

The entire world has sung the praises of the great accomplishment of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament in putting an end to the mad rush of competitive naval expansion and construction. Its effect is reflected in the reduction of the personnel of our Navy and a decrease of one hundred and twenty-five millions in naval appropriations. The so-called naval scrapping bill gave legislative effect to the provisions of the treaty on the limitation of naval armament. It authorized the President to take the steps necessary to make the terms of the treaty effective by scrapping a portion of the ships now under construction, which are not to be completed, and authorized the conversion of two of them into great airplane carriers.

READJUSTMENT OF PAY—ARMY, NAVY, ETC.

Temporary increases in pay which had been granted to certain men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps expired July 1, 1922. It therefore became necessary to make some provision to meet this situation, and the act of June 10, 1922, readjusted the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service. These readjustments were in accordance with the report made by a joint commission of the two Houses, the Members of which gave careful and painstaking consideration to the involved and confusing provisions of law relative to the pay of these establishments and recommended a measure which is believed to be fair and equitable and which reduces somewhat the aggregate pay of the services.

EMPLOYEES IN PATENT OFFICE—INCREASED PAY.

The act of February 18, 1922, provided needed and essential amendments to the patent laws. It provided for a reclassification and granted a substantial increase in the pay of the employees of the office. This legislation was urged with very great vigor by the patent attorneys of the country and others familiar with the situation, and has cured a condition with regard to which there was much complaint.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS OF PENSIONS.

Civil War pensioners have for some time petitioned the Congress that their pensions be paid monthly instead of quarterly and Congress has responded by making provisions to that effect. This increase in the frequency of payment is very much appreciated, particularly by those pensioners who have little or no means other than their pension. The change has resulted in a considerably increased cost, but this is justified in view of the benefits conferred on the pensioners.

AID FOR STARVING RUSSIA.

The country responded enthusiastically to the action of the Congress in making an appropriation of $20,000,000 out of the funds of the United States Grain Corporation to purchase corn, seed grain, and preserved milk for the relief of the starving people of Russia. In the administration of this law the Secretary of Commerce secured the cooperation of the authorities in Russia by a very substantial, supplemental contribution and in the furnishing of transportation, so that the American relief was even vastly more effective and helpful than it otherwise would have been. This contribution undoubtedly saved the lives of great numbers of people, stayed the spread of pestilence, and aided in the restoration of vast areas, particularly in the Volga Valley.

Congress by the act of January 20, 1922, also authorized the President to transfer medical and hospital supplies from the War Department for the relief of the distressed people of Russia.

THE ANTIBEER ACT.

The so-called Volstead antibeer bill became necessary as a result of an eleventh-hour decision by Attorney General Palmer the day before the close of the Wilson administration. While there has been much sharp difference of opinion with regard to the provisions of the measure, it is believed that the bill is a fair compromise, maintaining the national faith in the enforcement of the prohibition act, while guarding against the possibilities of abuses of power and authority.

FUNDS FOR FARM LOAN BOARD.

The bill making provision for an additional Treasury deposit of $25,000,000 for the Farm Loan Board makes available for that important farm loan agency a total working capital of $50,000,000, and places the Farm Loan Board and banks for the first time since their organization in position to function continuously in the making of loans to the farmers of the Nation.

FACILITATING EXPORTS.

The amendment to the Edge bill, providing for the promotion of export trade by facilitating the organization of corporations, was intended to and has very greatly aided, assisted, and facilitated the organization and the operation of those useful agencies.

TELEPHONE ACT.

The bill providing for a much-needed consolidation of independent telephone companies rendered possible the reorganization whereby the losses through unwise duplication have been eliminated or greatly reduced, under which more satisfactory systems and more favorable rates should be secured.

CABLE ACT.

The bill under which the President is authorized to provide for the orderly and controlled landing of submarine cables remedied a situation which had greatly embarrassed the former administration and established a policy under which proper national control of these important agencies of communication is established.

COLORADO RIVER BILL.

The bill providing for an agreement among the Western States for the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River is an important measure, marking a new and beneficial policy in the settlement of the vexed questions arising out of the use of the waters of interstate streams for the purpose of irrigation. The famous Kansas-Colorado case is the most important of the suits that have been before the courts testing the question of the relative rights of the various States in the arid region where irrigation is practiced to the waters of an interstate stream. It is much better, where it is possible, to have an adjustment and settlement of these questions in advance of the appropriation and use of the waters than to wait until rival claims have been established, and then settle the vexed questions, frequently at great loss to those who have expended money in irrigation enterprises.

AMENDMENT OF WAR MINERALS RELIEF ACT.

The act for the relief of those who had responded to the call of the Government departments for the production of war minerals and who were subject to losses by the sudden termination of the war was so narrowly construed by the commission authorized to adjudicate claims under it that it became necessary to broaden somewhat the provisions of the act, or, rather, to enact in more definite language what was the intention of Congress in the first instance. The passage of this act will relieve many worthy claimants of small means who responded patriotically to the request of the Government for the production of war minerals.

APPROPRIATIONS TO MEET CROP FAILURES IN THE NORTHWEST.

The act of March 20, 1922, made an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purpose of purchasing seed grain to be supplied to the farmers in certain areas of the Northwest where there had been successive crop failures and where the new settlers were likely to be compelled to leave their homes unless given some aid. There was a limit of $300 on the loan that might be made to any one farmer under this act. This appropriation has unquestionably been of very great benefit and will undoubtedly prevent what would have been a quite general temporary abandonment of considerable regions in the Northwest.

AUSTRIAN RELIEF.

By the act of April 6, 1922, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to extend for a period not to exceed 25 years the time of payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria for the purchase of flour from the United States Grain Corporation.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

The act of April 7, 1922, provided that veterans of the World War who, because of physical disabilities due to service, were unable to return to their homesteads might make final proof without further residence or improvements and receive a patent for their land.

Public Resolution 36 grants preferred rights of homestead entry for 90 days to ex-service men in case of the opening of lands, which can only be defeated by valid prior settlement rights, and the act of April 6, 1922, provides that the time during which an honorably discharged soldier of the World War shall be receiving treatment for injuries received or disabilities incurred in the line of duty shall be deducted from the time of residence required on a homestead.

ECONOMY IN PUBLIC PRINTING.

Public Resolution 57, which became a law on May 11, 1922, ended waste in Federal printing and fixed the status of desirable Government publications, saving millions of dollars annually.

ACT PROVIDING FOR INTERCHANGEABLE MILEAGE BOOKS.

There has long been a demand for interchangeable mileage books, and an act making provision for such a book passed the Senate in January. The act as amended in the House provides for interchangeable mileage or scrip coupon tickets good for passenger carriage upon the passenger trains on roads subject to the interstate commerce act.

BILLS WHICH HAVE PASSED THE HOUSE.

In addition to the bills which have become laws the House has enacted 249 bills, of which 140 were public and 109 were private. It would be impossible in the course of a speech of any reasonable length to even give the titles of all of these measures. Many of them are measures of primary importance and their preparation and consideration involved an earnest and faithful effort on the part of the House and its committees. I shall refer only to a few of them by title:

The antilynching bill.
The railroad refunding bill.
The blue-sky securities bill.
Bill to prevent corrupt trade practices.
Bill for the revision and codification of the Federal statutes.
Bill prohibiting interstate trade in filled milk.
Bill providing for standard measures for fruits and vegetables.
Bill to prevent the manufacture of adulterated and misbranded food and drugs.
Bill for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic.
Bill to incorporate disabled American veterans of the World War.
Bill permitting States to impose taxes on stock of banking associations.
Bill excluding from the mails fraudulent devices.
Bill providing regulations for promoting the welfare of American seamen in merchant marine on vessels on the Great Lakes.

THE UNFINISHED WORK OF THE CONGRESS.

It may be said of a Congress, as of a housewife, that its work is never done. If Congress were to remain in session continuously its calendars would never be cleared and there would be no end to the proposals of legislation presented to it. This Congress, notwithstanding the importance and magnitude of the work it has performed, has its unfinished problems of importance. First among these are the measures to some of which I have briefly referred which have been considered in the House and will be before the Senate when it shall have completed consideration of the measures now before it.

THE SHIPPING BILL.

The most important measure which has been considered by a House committee, and which now awaits action by the House, is the shipping bill. In the early history of the Republic we were the possessors of as fine a merchant fleet as sailed the seas, and our brigs and clipper ships carried our flag to the ends of the earth. At one time and another legislation to aid in the reestablishment of a first-class American merchant marine has occupied the attention of the Congress, but always the question was, "What shall we do to build and equip a merchant fleet?" The question now before us is an entirely different one. It is, "What shall we do with the fleet we have already builded at a cost of three and a half billions of the people's money?" Shall that vast expenditure be a total loss, or shall we out of it, and through it, reestablish American shipping on a generous scale and restore our merchant flag to its rightful place in the shipping business of the seven seas? A measure aimed to accomplish this highly useful and patriotic purpose has been reported, and in the no distant future it will be our duty, as representatives of the American people, to give earnest and unbiased consideration to the solution of the problems which our war-built ships and our national need for shipping present to us.

THE FINANCING OF AGRICULTURE.

This Congress has done much for agriculture. It has, in fact, a remarkable record in the aid of this basic industry, but one thing remains to be done—agriculture needs credit facilities which are not fully supplied by present commercial institutions. The War Finance Corporation has temporarily afforded most helpful aid and assistance to certain branches and pursuits of agriculture, but it has not covered the entire field, and it is necessarily a temporary expedient. The Joint Committee on Agricultural Inquiry, the officers of the War Finance Corporation, and many others have been giving these matters careful consideration; bills have been introduced, and it is hoped that in the no distant future an agreement may be reached and action taken on these important questions.

A CONGRESS AND ADMINISTRATION OF ACCOMPLISHMENT.

With the falling of the gavel on the adjournment of the Congress Members will have for the first time in nearly a year and a half an opportunity to visit their constituencies, with the work of the Congress for a time concluded. Fortunately, they can make report of a record of legislation and administration in every way creditable.

The interest-bearing national debt has been reduced by a billion dollars. Through economy in appropriation and expenditure we have balanced the national Budget, and present a surplus of receipts over expenditures of approximately $300,000,000. In appropriations for the coming fiscal year we have adhered to and improved upon our record of economy and have made a saving over the current year of approximately $215,000,000 in appropriations for the war establishments.

We have reduced the annual burden of taxation in the sum of nearly a billion of dollars, and the burden has been lifted fairly and equitably.

We have legislated wisely and judiciously along many lines, and the beneficial results of the work of the Congress and of the administration are being felt in the revival of industry, the wiping out of unemployment, and in a gradual but steadily progressive return to normal conditions.

The record is one of which we may well be proud, and which will, I am confident, meet with the approval of our constituencies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Congress. I may probably incorporate in those remarks some statements made by the Secretary of War [laughter] and some other gentlemen closely connected with the administration. I want to be as candid as possible in stating what I shall include.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Congress——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did I say work? I should have said nonwork.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee, the Chair thinks, did say on the work of the Congress, but the Chair will change his request to the nonwork of the Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the coal investigation bill and the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Illinois defer his request for one or two personal requests?

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FENN, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, for an indefinite period, on account of death in family.

[Cries of "Regular order!]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ascertain whether the gentleman intends, if leave is given, to confine it to an extension of his own remarks, and I ask that question for this reason: The other day, in the confusion just before adjournment, leave was given to put in the RECORD a political speech made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] before a political convention in the State of Ohio. Of course, that is to be circulated for party purposes under the franking privilege. I think the practice is wrong, and that prompted me to interrogate the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I make the same request that was granted to my colleague from Kentucky in reference to the work of the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, soon after President Harding was inaugurated the Republicans formulated a tentative program outlining the work which Congress would take up in an early effort to restore the country to a peace basis and bring about a return of normal conditions.

In keeping with their time-honored methods, the Democrats started at once to oppose, delay, and obstruct. In August, 1921, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee issued and had printed Report No. 350, in which they denounced the policy of the Republicans, and on page 12 of this document appeared their battle slogan, as follows:

Let our fellow Democrats stand firm as one man against this vicious, monstrous program of the Republicans.

From that day to this hour the Democrats have been busy attacking the Republican policies and praising the preceding Wilson administration.

A brief review of the first 16 months of the two administrations may prove interesting.

When President Wilson and a Democratic Congress took charge of this Government it was the richest and most prosperous Nation on the face of the globe. Its indebtedness was less than a billion dollars and its bonds were above par.

At the close of every day the sun threw its parting gleams over a country with 5,500 more population and $23,000,000 more wealth than it had on the day previous. Eight millions of laborers were at work, and the United States with only 5 per cent of the world's population, and 6 per cent of its area, had a commerce two and a half times greater than that of the rest of the entire world.

The leading governments of Europe had not been wrecked and bankrupted by war, and the United States had its mighty trade relations firmly established and coextensive with civilization on the globe.

Now, what did our Democratic friends do with this heritage?

They first destroyed the Republican policy of protection to American industries and enacted the Underwood tariff law.

In six months of the operation of this law and the application of Democratic methods of administration they wiped out an annual pay roll to labor of more than $800,000,000.

They sent into idleness and decay 242,000 freight cars and 500,000 railroad men were put out of work.

For two months before the World War started the business of this great Nation decreased more than $1,000,000 an hour.

On June 23, 1914, the following statements appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"To-day there are a million idle men in the iron and steel and associated industries, representing a daily pay roll of more than $2,000,000.

"To-day there are 275,000 miners in this country out of work that in Republican times were earning $750,000,000 annually.

"Every day since this Democratic administration went into power more than 10,000 men have been forced into idleness. This is the price of Democracy."

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the result of the first 16 months of the Wilson administration.

Then came the World War, and with it the inevitable war prosperity.

The flood of foreign goods entering the country, to take the place of the products made by our own people, was stopped.

Europe began to buy war supplies of us, and the effect was practically the same as a protective tariff in peace times.

Let us now briefly take up President Harding's administration.

What did the Republican administration that came in March 4, last year, find?

Instead of a debt of less than $1,000,000,000 we found a debt of over $24,000,000,000, with an annual interest charge of over $1,000,000,000.

Instead of our bonds selling at face value, a $100 Liberty bond was selling for $85.

Instead of a world-wide trade with prosperous foreign countries we found the leading nations of the World War wasted and financially demoralized.

We found a large standing Army and Navy, costing the people millions of dollars to maintain.

Peace terms had not been agreed upon with Germany.

We found the ocean gates wide open to the products of cheap foreign labor.

We found practically twice as many clerks and officers as were needed to run the Government.

We found the farmers financially stranded.

We found the Government losing $200,000,000 a year trying to operate poorly constructed ships built during the war.

We found many of our industries demoralized because they had been working on war contracts and had to change to a peace basis.

We found about 5,000,000 men out of employment.

We found billions of dollars of unsettled war claims and thousands of suits pending against the Government.

We found that one-third of the vast sum of money we had raised by the sale of Liberty bonds had been wasted and misspent.

We found that the Wilson administration, in order to keep up a semblance of their so-called war prosperity, had loaned upward of $2,000,000,000 of our money to Europe after the war had ended, and that, all told, European nations owed us $11,000,000,000, for which no proper bonds or securities had been executed.

We found thousands of disabled soldiers complaining of the inefficient and disorganized Government machinery with which they had to deal in securing the treatment to which they were entitled.

Mr. Speaker, it would take hours to even mention the additional problems handed over by the outgoing administration in 1921.

Not since time began did any other statesman or head of a Nation have committed to him and his administration for solution such momentous problems as were placed upon the shoulders of President Warren G. Harding when he took the oath of office.

In spite of Democratic opposition and criticism, the President and a Republican Congress fearlessly began the solution of the grave and momentous questions confronting the Nation. No other legislative body on earth ever made greater progress in the same length of time than the Sixty-seventh Congress has made.

It meant work—serious work—to tackle the mess incident to eight years of Democratic control, to say nothing of the problems of the greatest war of the ages.

This Congress has placed upon the statute books 545 separate laws, or an average of about two for each legislative day.

It is a record that stands the test of investigation. I shall not speak of these laws at length. Already the country is experiencing the benefits of this much-needed and long-delayed legislation.

A Republican administration and a Republican Congress have reduced the Nation's debt over $1,000,000,000 in one year.

Reduced expenditures for 1922 $3,000,000,000 below the expenditures of 1920.

Reduced taxation this year more than $800,000,000.

Strengthened the Nation's credit so that a $100 Liberty bond is worth more than par.

Enacted a protective tariff law that will promote and maintain the prosperity of our own people.

Provided for our disabled soldiers and their dependents.

Adopted a Budget system that is saving millions of dollars in the running of the Government.

Efficiency and economy have taken the place of waste and extravagance.

The Army and Navy have been reduced to a peace basis at a saving of millions of dollars to the taxpayers.

A Republican President took the initiative in calling and making a success of the first great conference of nations on limitation of armaments, which at once put an end to taxing the people to construct new warships which cost over $30,000,000 each to build.

The people understand the magnitude of the work which a Republican administration has undertaken.

Already our country is entering upon a period of marvelous prosperity. Every railroad car and engine is being utilized to move the expanding commerce of the Nation. There is a job for every man who wants work.

There remains much yet to be done by the administration now in power. It will take time to clear away such a tangled wreck as the Republicans inherited. But with the progress already made, with our Nation leading the world, there is no disposition to-day to turn the management of the Government over to those who were responsible for the problems that are now being so successfully solved.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the woman's suffrage bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the woman's suffrage bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I know that the women of this country are gratified with this Congress and the President in the enactment of H. R. 12022, providing for the independent citizenship for women.

This law has the indorsement of both the Republican and Democratic National Parties. Its principles were inserted in their platforms of 1920.

It has the indorsement of a large number of women's organizations, as shown by the statement issued by them on the day prior to its passage in the House by a vote of 206 yeas and 9 nays, that statement being as follows:

We earnestly ask your consideration of the Cable bill (H. R. 12022), which we expect will come before the House for a vote this week, and we trust that you will give it your active support.

This is a bill relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, and provides that a woman's citizenship shall not be dependent upon her marital status.

The organizations that we represent have all indorsed the principles found in this measure.

Very truly yours,
AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN,
MRS. RAYMOND MORGAN.
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN,
MARY STEUART.
COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
MRS. L. OPPENHEIMER.
GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS,
LIDA M. HAFFORD.
NATIONAL LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS,
MAUD WOOD PARK.
NATIONAL WOMEN'S TRADE UNION LEAGUE,
ETHEL M. SMITH.
WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
LENNA LOWE YOST.

It is proper that the United States should take the initiative in the passage of such a law. Bills are now pending for substantially the same rights in England and France.

A natural-born American must wait 21 years before she is permitted to participate through suffrage in the government of this country. A foreign born, by residing here continuously, could acquire the same rights by naturalization in five years. Further, under the old law, a foreign-born woman who came to this country one day and married an American citizen, or her husband became naturalized, could acquire the same rights of suffrage in a still shorter period of time. An American girl, on the other hand, if she married an alien, even though she continued to reside in this country, lost all her rights of citizenship here.

The chief objection to the old naturalization law was the fact that it was the man and not the woman who received the benefits of Americanization work. She was left at home while he was taught the English language and something about our country and its Constitution. So also, under the old law, the wife of an alien residing in this country could not, even if she wished, become an American citizen without the naturalization of her husband.

These unfair propositions have been repealed, and under this new law, even as the woman acquired equal political rights under the nineteenth amendment, she now acquires equal citizenship rights under this act. The alien woman is entitled to the same education as the man and must be naturalized by the same method. The alien woman who marries an American does not acquire citizenship through a wedding ceremony, but must be naturalized; and the American girl who marries an alien eligible to citizenship still may retain her citizenship.

In my opinion, however, the rich American woman who marries a title and lives abroad should cease to have the privileges and benefits of an American citizen, and under this new law special provision is made that she may renounce her citizenship in the court, or if she resides continuously for two years in the country of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or resides continuously for five years abroad, she is presumed to have ceased to be an American citizen.

The purpose of the law is to place citizenship on the highest plane possible. It is a privilege and not a right. It should be acquired upon an independent basis; justice and common sense dictate that the woman should have the same right as the man to choose the country of her allegiance. Participation in our Government and the protection by our country should not be determined solely by wedding ceremonies.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on House Resolution 349, a resolution which I introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on House Resolution 349. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of our entrance into the World War all of the leading economists and a few national legislators of our country urged upon Congress the enactment of legislation to conscript both wealth and men for war purposes. We all know what happened. Men were conscripted for the Army while unrestrained profiteering was allowed to run rampant in all lines of industry and business.

Since the war a lot of people have been doing some tall thinking along this line. That is especially true of the ex-service men. President Harding, in his inaugural address, strongly indorsed the principle and recommended universal service of both material and human resources, if war is again forced upon us, so that "not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination."

In order to get this subject before the House of Representatives for serious consideration, I introduced on May 18, 1922, House Resolution 349, which, without the preamble, reads as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee is hereby created, to be known as the "War Finance Committee," which shall consist of 15 Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said committee shall investigate and report, within one year after its appointment, to the House the best and most practical methods for financing future wars so that no public debts shall be incurred and no war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, and shall recommend legislation which in its opinion will carry out such purpose and which will secure the benefits and advantages and avoid the evils referred to in the inaugural address of President Harding.

Said committee shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled by the Speaker.

Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of the House, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution, and the expenditures shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

INDORSED BY THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION OF IOWA.

On August 2, 1922, the Iowa Republicans, in convention assembled at Des Moines, Iowa, incorporated the following plank in their platform:

We indorse the principle of universal conscription of material and personal resources, and urge such action on the part of Congress in times of peace as will automatically effect such result upon the declaration of war.

INDORSED BY THE IOWA DEPARTMENT OF THE AMERICAN LEGION.

The ex-service men feel very strongly on this subject. In their annual State convention at Waterloo, Iowa, September 7–8, 1922, the Iowa Department of the American Legion adopted the following resolution:

Whereas President Harding has in public addresses advocated a more equitable distribution of national obligations in times of national distress than prevailed in the late war; and

Whereas House Resolution 349, now pending in the House of Representatives, is in accordance with the expression of the 1921 convention of this department: Be it

Resolved, That the Department of Iowa reaffirm its position in favor of the universal draft in time of war of all available human and material resources, and that it urge upon the national department at the national convention at New Orleans by proper resolution the advisability of incorporating this principle in the national Legion program, to the end that legislation shall be perfected in times of peace that shall automatically become effective to accomplish this purpose on declaration of war.

For an extended discussion in support of House Resolution 349 I respectfully refer all persons interested in the subject to my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 6, 1922—"How future wars must be financed."

Mr. BOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the ship subsidy bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the ship subsidy bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks that I made this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend the remarks that he made this morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in reference to legislation pertaining to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks with reference to legislation pertaining to the District of Columbia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, District legislation was virtually scorned in the earlier sessions of this Congress, due in large part to legitimate causes, but it is time for us to redeem ourselves, remembering that we are responsible to the people of the country for the development of their National Capital, which should be a model for all other American communities and the outside world. The principal legislative proposals, the big things, for the city of Washington have not received the consideration we have urged and hoped for, except in committee, whereas they would have been regarded important business before any local city government throughout the country.

The first thing that we must realize is that this Federal city is absolutely dependent upon Congress for "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" on what shall be done here. The people pay taxes proportionately as high as in any well-managed municipality elsewhere in the Union. The fathers feared that the military might become dominant in this Federal city and so they made Congress supreme ruler.

As a matter of fact, we ourselves have made the military pretty nearly dominant in the District, with an Army officer as engineer commissioner in charge of all public works, and with another Army officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who is also in command of a special police force.

This city has grown beyond the dreams of the fathers, until to-day it is not merely Uncle Sam's workshop, the legislative city for the country, but a progressive municipality made up of the picked men and women of the Nation who have been called here for the most part to do Government work, and the merchants, shopkeepers, professional men, and others necessary for the proper living of such a large community.

It is not the fault of these people—as loyal and true Americans as are found anywhere in the country, as proved by their enlistments as soldiers and sailors and by their subscriptions to all war drives—that they can not run their own affairs; that they have no vote or voice in their government, local or national; that they can not say how the money they pay in taxes shall be spent.

We have before this Congress proposals to correct this condition. A constitutional amendment resolution, providing for national representation for the people living in the National Capital, is before Congress. There is also a District delegate bill awaiting action. But there has been divided jurisdiction. The national representation bill has been the subject of a hearing before the House Judiciary Committee and before the Senate District Committee, with no authorized representative from any group of residents or from any national organization offering one word of protest. The District delegate bill is before the House District Committee. The Senate District Committee has favorably reported both the national representation constitutional amendment and the delegate bill.

Something should be done to correct this divided consideration of the issue in the House. The entire question should be threshed out and decided, for the more orderly progress of legislation in Congress as well as to meet the desires of the people resident in Washington. Without attempting to discuss the merits of this question—whether the people of the National Capital should have a freeman's right to vote what shall be done with the money they raise in taxes and to exercise the constitutional right of participation in the common council—the matter should be conscientiously considered and decided. Personally I see no more reason for denying the right of suffrage to people just because they live in the Federal City than there was several years ago for denying it to them on account of sex.

There are pending resolutions offered by Representative R. WALTON MOORE, of Virginia, proposing a distinct system of special consideration for District legislation and appropriations, which will assure the District of prompt consideration of its needs. This proposed legislation also should be considered on its merits.

We hear much in Congress by narrow-minded men who feel that they are making votes in their home districts by parsimony toward the District of Columbia and by protesting against the requirement that their constituents pay 40 per cent, or formerly 50 per cent, of any improvements or upkeep here. Just let them divide the total population of the United States into 40 per cent of the total appropriations annually for the District and see how many postage stamps, or newspapers, or street car rides they could buy with what they pay toward making their National Capital the finest city in the world. That is all poppycock. There is not a man, woman, or child in the country who would not pay dollars instead of cents to make possible the proper development of their Capital—and I speak here with particular emphasis for the people I have the honor to represent in Congress. They want all that is best for their National Capital—and hang the expense.

And yet we haggle over a few dollars. Take the matter of public education as a glaring example. Chairman MADDEN of the Appropriations Committee volunteers the opinion that—

> It is the best investment for any city to provide adequate school facilities where the coming generation can be properly trained. I do not know anybody anywhere who complains of taxes for schools. They are the foundation of our citizenship.

Washington, above all cities in the United States, should have a model public-school system. To make it so not only involves the providing of adequate housing accommodations for the ever-growing school population, but some changes in the administrative organization and increased salaries for all school employees.

The most urgent need of the school system, however, is more schoolhouses. School buildings are generally overcrowded. Some of them are greatly congested. Some of them are antiquated and should be replaced.

Several factors have contributed to this situation. During the period of the war Washington experienced an unprecedented increase in population. The school system experienced a corresponding increase in school attendance. During this same period of the war, when school population was increasing so rapidly, schoolhouse construction was largely at a standstill, due to war conditions.

But the war was not the only factor. The present shortage of classrooms in both elementary and high schools represents an accumulation of failures from year to year to provide the additional classrooms necessary to take care of the increase in enrollment, and to provide the additional educational facilities necessary in a growing and progressive school system. Obviously, when the additional classrooms opened each year are insufficient to accommodate the increased enrollment it is impossible to abandon any old buildings, no matter how antiquated or unserviceable they are. Evidence has been presented by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, showing that schoolhouse construction during the past 40 years has not been sufficient to meet the growing needs of the school system.

The regular annual appropriations for schoolhouse construction must be materially increased if the shortage of the past is to be made up. Two million dollars a year for a period of five years will be necessary, according to the estimate of Superintendent Ballou.

This amount will make it possible to abolish from the schools: Part time in the elementary schools and double shifts in the high schools; oversize classes in the elementary and high schools; the use of portables and other undesirable rooms in the elementary schools; all rented buildings, and the use of buildings recommended for abandonment.

The need of increased salaries for Washington's teachers is apparent to everyone familiar with public education. The present salaries are low in comparison with the salaries paid in other cities. They are not high enough to secure the quality of service to which the Nation's Capital is entitled.

The legislation fixing salaries of school employees and establishing the plan of organization and administration of the school system of Washington was passed in 1906. Outside of piecemeal legislation in appropriation acts, no supplementary legislation has been passed since that time.

Meanwhile, since 1906 great progress has been made in theory and practice of educational administration. New legislation is now a necessity, not only to provide adequate compensation for the employees but also to bring up to date the organization and administration of the school system.

For a long time the school officials have felt the urgency of such legislation. Attempts have been made annually in the school budget to secure increased salaries for employees over those established by law. Moreover, the appropriation acts have frequently carried scraps of legislation to meet new situations as they have arisen. This is not a good practice. The salary schedule should be established through legislation, and the school estimates for salaries prepared in accordance with that schedule. Moreover, the need of recognizing and establishing by law the many new practices which have necessarily been inaugurated in the school system is equally urgent.

Accordingly, legislation was introduced in Congress during the past year covering a new salary schedule and providing for some administrative reorganization. This bill provides increased compensation for school employees. It recognizes the junior high school by providing a salary schedule for its teachers. It provides a salary schedule for free or administrative principals of elementary schools with 16 rooms or more. It abolishes session-room pay as a means of compensating principals of elementary schools. It abolishes the classes 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, into which elementary-school teachers are now grouped. It abolishes the present annual increases in salary which vary in amount and establishes a uniform increase of $100 per year for each elementary-school teacher.

This bill provides for the enlargement and reorganization of the boards of examiners, in order that they may transact the increasing amount of important business which they must annually do. It authorizes the Board of Education to establish the rank of "annual substitute teacher." It authorizes the board to appoint temporary teachers. It authorizes the Board of Education to establish the compensation of all employees in the community-center department, the night schools, the vacation schools, and of all other employees who are paid out of lump-sum appropriations.

The proposed salary schedule for Washington was based on the present compensation in Washington and on the schedules received from other cities. Since Washington must compete with other cities for its supply of teachers, it must be prepared to pay as high for their services as other cities. If Washington is to have as good teachers and as good teaching as other cities it must pay salaries sufficiently high to secure and retain such teachers. It is on the principle of supply and demand that the new salary schedule is based.

The new proposed schedule will not, in any case, place Washington at the head of the list of cities paying leading salaries. In general, Washington will stand from one-third or one-fourth the way from the top of such a list. Nevertheless, in view of the comparatively low salaries which Washington now pays the new schedule will provide a substantially better salary for all educational employees than the present schedule provides.

The bill was considered and favorably acted on by many citizens' associations. Such bodies as the board of trade and the chamber of commerce are on record in favor of higher salaries for school employees. The commissioners approved the bill "with some reservation." No opposition has appeared to the bill; not a single body of citizens has taken action against the passage of the bill.

There is another bill on our calendar which should be passed, known as the free textbook bill. In our report the House committee gives convincing reasons why this measure should be passed, as such laws have for years been in force in communities broadcast throughout the land. Public education, especially in the National Capital, should be absolutely free in every respect, so that there could be no excuse for any child not receiving the fullest benefits of that free public-school system which has done more than any other institution to develop this country of ours.

The compulsory school attendance bill, which makes the law compelling school attendance more effective and provides for the taking of a school census in the District, has passed the Senate and is now on the House calendar, having been favorably reported by the House District committee. This measure is strongly advocated by the Board of Education and the public-school officials of the District. Early action should be had on it in the House.

I would direct the conscientious and sympathetic consideration of the school needs of the District to your attention, and solicit your cooperation in putting through promptly before the close of this session a comprehensive, carefully planned program for providing adequate modern school facilities here.

Legislation designed to bring about a solution of the traffic problem here has been considered at length by your District Committee. We have placed before you two bills, one representing the best compromise opinion of the members of your committee and the other suggested by the District Commissioners. Congress should give earnest attention to this matter, because the laws passed by Congress placing restrictions on the existing street-car lines that they must not merge have prevented them from doing so. It is also the peculiar congestion of traffic caused at certain short periods of the day by the thousands of Government employees crowding to and from work that causes the most serious problem. It is only fair to the street railway companies themselves that the decision should be made.

Bills have been pending from time to time providing for the extension of the beautiful park system of the Nation's Capital by acquiring the Klingle Valley, Piney Branch, Patterson, and other tracts of land, which will undoubtedly give way to building growth if action is put off much longer.

The same observation applies with equal force to the proposal to acquire the sites of old Civil War forts and to connect them with a circular driveway about the city.

For several years the health department of the District has been urging enactment of a new law to afford better protection to the milk supply of the National Capital.

A "blue-sky law" to prevent fraud in the sale of securities in the District is another important piece of legislation the local authorities have asked Congress to enact.

There also has been pending for several years proposed legislation to amend the pawnbrokers' law in the District with rates the same as in other cities.

The license laws of the District need a thorough revision to meet present-day conditions, and the Board of Commissioners has transmitted to Congress a bill suggesting what they regard as the necessary changes in license regulations for various kinds of business establishments.

There have been two bills pending in which the police department is keenly interested, one to define and punish vagrancy in the District and the other to license private detectives.

Next to the proposed milk law the most important piece of legislation affecting the health of the community is the bill for the control and prevention of venereal diseases.

There are a number of local matters of less importance awaiting action, among which are the following bills:

Authorizing the widening of First Street NE.

To close a portion of Piney Branch Road NW.

Authorizing the closing of certain streets, roads, and highways that have become useless.

To vacate certain streets and alleys in the grounds of Walter Reed Hospital, and for the extension of Fourteenth Street through the hospital grounds.

Authorizing the opening of a new street from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street.

To transfer part of Anacostia Park to the commissioners for a tree nursery.

Guaranteed adequate water supply for domestic use and high pressure for fire purposes.

Consolidated public utilities with better service and lower cost to the public.

More and still more houses as the one and only means of forestalling the avarice of the profiteer.

The mere mention of these measures—every one of which would be promptly considered by a board of aldermen or common council in your home communities—shows you the importance and wide scope of the legislative program for the District that is waiting.

Our esteemed colleague from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is unfortunately leaving us after 20 years of devoted work, much of it for the development of the Capital City, will tell you that in the years not far gone, when for a decade he was a member of the House District Committee and handled the legislation on the floor, the District was allowed its full day twice a month for the passage of needed legislation. The so-called "million-dollar bridge" on Connecticut Avenue, the extension of Sixteenth and Fourteenth Streets, and other great forward-looking legislation of those earlier days are monuments to his zeal for the District and his vision of its glorious future which has already been well justified.

I bespeak the most earnest cooperation of Mr. CAMPBELL as chairman of the Rules Committee, and with his old-time zeal for putting through most, if not all, of this legislative program for the National Capital, in which he has been so actively interested for nearly a quarter of a century, before he quits the legislative halls.

Let us all take a great, broad vision and pull together—now—for big things for our great Capital City that will set it upon a pinnacle for all the world to pattern after.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the soldiers' compensation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the soldiers' compensation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, there are many things in the President's attitude and message on the soldiers' bonus bill which I do not approve. The whole thing is, and since its inception by the first action of the House has been, a disgusting and pitiful piece of political and legislative faking.

Its whole design has been to pretend that legislation for the special benefit of all ex-service men was to be enacted, when those who controlled Congress and the Government knew—and all Members of Congress should have known—that nothing but a hypocritical farce was being enacted for the purpose of inducing the ex-service men and their friends who favor the legislation to vote for them.

The pretense at passing the bill was a farce, and the bill itself is a farce. I have in many public statements to the people who sent me here denounced this duplicity as unworthy of the Congress and Government of the United States. Hypocrisy is falsehood designed to deceive. When I detect men lying to me or making a conscious effort to deceive me about matters in which I am concerned I lose all confidence in them and all respect for them.

For the Congress and Government of the United States to deliberately try to deceive the people is a disgraceful crime. Whatever might be my views on a bona fide constructive legislative proposition to help ex-service men of the World War get established as home-owning, independent, self-reliant citizens, no such proposition has been considered by the Sixty-sixth or Sixty-seventh Congresses, and no other bona fide proposition has been considered. To turn political faker, by pretending to be doing what I know is not being done, is so inconsistent with common honesty and my own self-respect that I can not do it.

I trust I shall never do it. If any gentleman believed that these measures were bona fide constructive measures being considered by the Republican majority with a view to their enactment, I have no word of criticism for him. Those who believed the measures to be mere fakes and took part in the faking will answer to their own consciences and constituents. That the measures considered and voted through the House were designed mainly to deceive and that the pretended passage of them was not bona fide has been stated by many Members.

On March 23, 1922, Hon. LOUIS T. MCFADDEN, Republican chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, said:

> I do not want to hand the soldiers of this country, to whom the country owes such a great obligation, a gold brick, and that I can not but feel is what you will do if and when you pass such a measure as the present one. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4437.)

Hon. CHARLES H. BRAND, one of the able lawyers in the House, said:

> Mr. Chairman, the bill which the Republican Steering and Rules Committees agreed upon in the interest of the ex-service men, and which they propose to cram down the throats of the Democrats and those Republicans who in good faith are willing to enact bonus legislation which will be of substantial service to the ex-service men, will not prove satisfactory to them. Under the gag rule adopted by the authors of this measure, for which these two committees are responsible, it will be utterly impossible for any real friend of the soldier to submit any amendment of any character whatever in behalf of the soldier. Under the autocratic tactics of the Republican machine we were prohibited from submitting any amendment in behalf of either the soldier or the taxpayer. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4420.)

On March 23, 1922, Hon. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW, of Georgia, discussing this question, said to those who were responsible for the handling of this and other legislation:

Shell down the corn. You know you have played politics—petty political politics—with this absorbing question. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4432.)

Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, the Democratic leader, said of it:

The consideration proposed is a farce. The dignity of the subject requires more honorable treatment. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4356.)

Hon. WALTER H. NEWTON, of Minnesota, Republican, said:

I oppose this bill upon the further ground that it does not deal frankly with the service men it is designed to benefit. With the exception of the man who served but a short time, this bill confers no cash benefit whatever. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4438.)

Five Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, which reported the bonus bill, filed a minority report ridiculing the bill as dishonest. They say:

Treat the boys white, gentlemen of Republican Congress. If you really favor the money bonus, pay them like men in cash in full and do not send them out of the Capital with only scraps of paper, tramping mendicants at the mercy of the banks in our towns and cities. * * * He now deserves fair, manly treatment at your hands. * * * What do you offer him—a gold brick?—Signed by Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, Hon. W. A. OLDFIELD, Hon. CHARLES R. CRISP, Hon. JOHN F. CAREW, Hon. PETER G. TAGUE, all Democratic members of the House Committee on Ways and Means. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4460.)

Hon. WALTER M. CHANDLER, Republican, speaking about this bill on the floor of the House, told some of the many things Members had said to him in private conversation about this bill without giving the names of the persons making the statements. He said:

Now, contrast for a moment, if you please, this language with the declarations in private conversation and in public debate of the Members of this House upon the pending measure:

"The bill is an insult to every World War Veteran, a shameful disgrace to Congress and the Nation, but I will vote for it.

"I do not believe that the measure is a good one but the soldier boys at home want it, and let them have it.

"I know that it is a bad measure, but I have made a pledge to support it, and I shall have to keep the pledge.

"Any man who votes against the bill will be defeated. I shall vote for it.

"It may be statesmanship to oppose this bill, but there is such a thing as a statesman without a job. Excuse me.

"The bill is damned bunk, but the Legion demands it."

These are almost verbatim quotations of language that I have heard from Members in hotel lobbies, in the House, and on the floor of this Chamber. And these are but specimens of scores of others that I have heard. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4416.)

Mr. CHANDLER closed his speech with a prayer that God will—

Protect and preserve the Republic and all its people from the ways and wiles of demagogues of this House who believe one way and vote another; that have declared this bill to be bad, very bad; and now propose to vote for it. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4420.)

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS, of Tennessee, speaking of this bill said:

However I will not help perpetrate this fraud upon the ex-service men upon the supposition which Members of the House freely admit they are proceeding upon; that the ex-service men will not see through the fraud before the coming primary or election. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 4464.)

I could continue through many pages of quotations from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to prove that great numbers of other Members of Congress openly confessed that the bill itself was a deceitful farce and openly denounced it as such. The private declarations of contempt for it and for those who were pretending to pass it were general. I have heard scores of such remarks as I have quoted from the speech of the gentleman from New York, Mr. CHANDLER. I heard few if any men privately contend that it was anything but a contemptible sham.

Moreover, the pretense that a bona fide effort was being made by the majority to pass the measure was a joke. When such a bill was brought up in the House during the Sixty-sixth Congress they waited until a day or two before the House and Senate were both to adjourn so as to make sure the bill could not pass the Senate, be agreed upon in conference, approved by the President, and become a law. Members winked and smiled knowingly as they talked and voted for the bill. That was just before the primaries of 1920. Of course, the Senate did not pass the bill, or even consider it then. It was never intended by the majority that the Senate should act on it, or that it should become a law. In keeping with that purpose the measure slept the sleep of death through the next day or two of that session and through the whole succeeding winter session, the last of the Sixty-sixth Congress. It had served its purpose up to that time.

Then in May, 1921, the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress was convened. Was there prompt action by that Congress on the bill? No, indeed; it slept until the primaries of 1922 approached, when they took it up in an absurd and ridiculous form under a special rule which would not permit the House to amend it. Why take any special pains to prepare a bill which was not to become a law? Why should they allow amendments which would advertise the absurdities of the sham bill and which might correct them and get the bill in such shape that the country would approve it and cause it to be actually enacted into law? The straw must not be torn out of this dummy measure, put up solely for the purpose of buncombe.

Several months later the Senate took it up and began to talk about it. The majority would never let it pass through the Senate until they knew the President would veto it. The first plan of dealing with the assured veto of the President was for the House and Senate to pass the bill, send it to the President in its final burial clothes, and adjourn and go home so they could not pass it over his veto. I heard this stated not once, but many times among Members. It was pretty generally recognized as the plan by which Senators could join Members of the House in saying "I voted for the bonus bill," and yet the bill would be dead. But that scheme was too easily understood and exposed. It was finally abandoned and a decision reached that enough Senators should vote against the bill after the President's veto to make the veto effective to kill it. That was done. So an overwhelming majority of both Houses could say "I voted for it" during the approaching campaign. Still the bill would be dead. What farce!

The humbuggery of this procedure is shown by the contents of the bill itself as it "passed" the House each time, which has already been made plain. The hypocritical, farcical character of the procedure is made just as plain by the manner in which the proposition was handled in the House and Senate and by the President. I shall quote from the speeches of two ex-service men made on the floor of the House, one of them a Republican from California and the other a Democrat from Alabama.

Hon. WALTER F. LINEBERGER (Republican), an ex-service man, said:

Without doubt a bill conforming to the President's suggestion (which was that a tax be levied to raise the money to pay the bonus) would have a safe majority in the Senate and would be functioning within 90 days of passage in the House.

Any other measure at this time is doomed to failure and will defeat the purpose of those who are attempting to force it through, for following the weary months of waiting on the part of the expectant ex-service men will come the final disappointment and a spirit of dejection and cynicism which will far exceed the temporary elation caused by the passage of the bill as now reported in this body. The men will know they have been "gold bricked," and all who know the ex-soldier well will tell you that he is unequaled for his powers of intuition, and he will place the responsibility flatly upon those who have deceived him. [Applause.]

If I may be permitted to prophesy, the major criticism will fall on this House for having passed a legislative bill with full warning and full knowledge in advance that it was doomed to failure. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the present bill should finally be forced through both Houses and that it could muster a two-thirds vote in both Houses, which every Member knows it could not do in the Senate in the face of the President's opposition, and that it finally became a law over the President's veto, would it, in view of its questionable financial features and the long delay which would be the price of such legislative tactics, be worth the price? Gentlemen, it is not even good politics, for it is not good American horse sense. (RECORD, 2d sess., 67th Cong., p. 3885.)

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS (Democrat), an ex-service man from Alabama, speaking on the floor of the House while this farce was being enacted, and before it was completed, said:

Now, of course, we can not be sure that the predictions that have been published since the President vetoed adjusted compensation on yesterday, to the effect that the Senate will not pass the measure over the veto, will come true; but if that estimate of the situation does prove to be correct, then we are to witness the ringing down of the curtain on this season's last performance of that well-known Republican farce, "Now you see it and now you don't," or which might be still better known as the play called "The political manipulation of adjusted compensation."

The prediction did prove true. That the Senate would so vote as to make the veto effective was a part of the scheme, as Mr. JEFFERS and most others then knew. He continued:

With the stage here in the Capital City of the Nation, and with the entire people of the Nation as audience, the scenes of this deceitful performance have been unfolded one by one since May, 1920.

The administration's star performer has proven to be a quick-change artist of ability. He has shown up in different colors, in different surroundings, or against different backgrounds with chameleonlike rapidity and naturalness.

The several acts of this farce have been timed skillfully, politically speaking, as we will point out as we go along. The party now in power has toyed with the ex-service people of the Nation for more than two years on this proposition.

The 4,000,000 citizens who served in the World War can have nothing but contempt for the action of a Congress or individual Member who consciously took part in a fraud so palpable. I want to serve my people here, but I would much prefer to retire rather than forfeit their confidence and my self-respect by engaging in so shameless a piece of deceit.

The President vetoed the bill. What is his attitude? Does he favor the bonus and veto it because no money is provided for its payment? Heretofore he has declared unequivocally for a bonus bill which provided no money for its payment. The sham measure which passed the House in 1920 was exactly like this one in that respect. It made no provisions for its payment, and yet the President, while a Member of the Senate and a candidate for President, speaking of that very bill, said (RECORD, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, p. 13023):

> Well, I am very happy to say to you that the House passed the bonus bill and the Senate has it under consideration, and I have no doubt the Senate will pass it. I myself think it ought to pass, if you want to know my views. (From the Cincinnati Enquirer, October 30, 1920.)

Commenting on the President's position as shown by such declarations as this and many other inspired statements from the White House, the Washington Herald said:

> The bonus is as assured as if already acted upon. It is waiting, not losing, that is asked, and the reasons now seem plain.

In an editorial which appeared in the New York World discussing the President's attitude toward this proposition it is said:

> Before his election and for some time after he took office his utterances on this subject were construed fairly enough as indorsement of the bonus plan for all veterans. (RECORD, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, p. 13024.)

Now let us see if the President is in any better attitude before the country than the Members of Congress who have made a promise they could not keep, and thereby cornered themselves, so that they felt compelled to go on pretending and trying to deceive ex-service men to whom they had made the promises.

When the President promised it he had been a United States Senator for several years and knew, or should have known, the condition of the Treasury. If he promised it without knowing that it could be paid, his promise was unjustified. Reasonably careful, moderately honest men promise only what they know with reasonable certainly can be done.

The President needed votes when he said what he did at Cincinnati just before election day in 1920. But the making of the promise was wrong, because he did not know conditions were such as to permit the payment of the bonus. The presumption is that he did know the condition of the Treasury, which, now after he has obtained votes by the promise, he says will not permit its payment. If he did not know, he had no business discussing the question and making promises. If he did know that the condition of the Treasury forbade its payment, and notwithstanding his knowledge made the promise to get votes?

With the President's and Mr. Mellon's effort to get the country to adopt the sales tax as a system of taxation for raising a large revenue I have no sympathy. By that system the poor and middle classes would be made to pay their own share of the taxes and the greater portion of the taxes owed by the very wealthy.

Under such a system of raising the money with which to pay the bonus, the boys and their parents—brothers, sisters, fathers, mothers—and neighbors would have been forced to pay for the greater portion of whatever bonus they received, plus all the vast expense of collecting and disbursing the money, plus all the pyramiding and profiteering which would have been based upon it. This would not have been the end of it, but it would have been the very opportunity which wealthy tax dodgers have been seeking to place still more taxes upon the poor and middle classes. To have voted for such a system of taxation would have brought upon Members of Congress such a storm of wrath as they were not prepared to meet.

Such a vote would have retired the Republican Party and the majority of men of both parties to private life. The "old guard" group of the President's party claim him as their very own. They believe in such results as the sales tax would produce. The more liberal majority of the Republican Party stand for many things that are unjust, but they would not stand for this. That is why the President and Mr. Mellon could not put the sales tax over, even with a majority of 175 in the House and a big majority in the Senate.

Special provision must be made by special tax or bond issues for any larger special expense. The usual and ordinary expenses are provided for in the regular taxes, but the regular taxes are made only large enough to meet regular current expenses. For instance, take a case of county finances. If a small amount of work is to be done on a public road, in the shape of grading or the construction of a single bridge, or several small ones, that can usually be paid for out of current road and bridge funds, but if many miles of good road of an improved class are to be constructed, the ordinary current funds are not usually sufficient. How do the people get such improved roads constructed? They usually do two things to provide the extraordinarily large amount of money for the extra purpose. They issue bonds for large amounts and sell them to raise the extra funds for the extra purpose. At the same time they levy a special tax to pay the bonds.

The laws of Texas and most other States will not permit a school district, precinct, or county to issue their bonds until they have levied a special tax to pay the principal and interest of the heavy obligation thus fixed against the public treasury. This is a sound, absolutely necessary practice in government financing. The laws of Texas will not permit heavy, extraordinary obligations to be issued until the special tax is provided. This is absolutely necessary with all governments, where the funds for the extraordinary expenditure are not in the treasury. Such surplus funds are almost never in the treasury, because taxes are rarely made more than enough to pay current and usual expenses. Thus when the World War broke out the Government had to issue large amounts of bonds from time to time, and from time to time levied new war taxes.

The experience of the people in dealing with such propositions in their school districts, precincts, and counties in matters involving new and large expenses, in addition to ordinary running expenses, will remind them why it is necessary to make some kind of special provision for the payment of the bonus.

When a county has needed a new courthouse it has usually issued bonds or levied a special tax for the purpose. Usually both these things have been done to provide the money to build a courthouse, a public-school building, or a system of improved public roads.

When Texas was considering the payment of the small pension she pays to Confederate veterans and their widows she had to levy a special tax to provide the money. Later, when we wanted to increase the pension fund, we had to increase the special taxes for that purpose. Because our State constitution did not authorize a special tax for this purpose we have had to amend the Texas constitution so that the Texas Legislature could levy the special tax to get the extra money for this purpose. See amendments to sections 50 and 51, constitution of Texas, adopted in 1898, 1904, and 1912.

If the laws governing our school trustees, county commissioners, and State legislatures, and our own experience in dealing with schools, public roads, courthouses, jails, and Confederate pensions did not show us that it is necessary to make special provision in the way of taxes for paying a bonus or additional compensation which will cost some billions of dollars outside the ordinary expenses of the Government, our good business sense should teach us.

Present taxes, provided to pay such expenses as were contemplated when they were levied, do not provide enough money to pay present expenses. Therefore there is a deficit for this fiscal year of more than $600,000,000, as estimated by the President. Now, if the present taxes are not sufficient to pay current expenses, how can we promise billions of additional expenses out of the very same taxes which are not sufficient for present expenses?

If the money we are receiving will not pay what we are now spending, how can we spend much more without increasing taxes? Let common sense and hard facts answer.

Now, how did the President and Congress get in this deplorable attitude? The President while a Member of the Senate and a candidate for President declared that he favored a bonus like the one passed by the House in 1920, which provided no funds for its payment, and later vetoed such a bill because it was like the one he favored in providing no revenues for its payment, the majority of Congress pretending and shamming and trying to deceive ex-service men in the manner pointed out above. How was it created? I will tell you. The President and Members of Congress while candidates promised too much, promised more than the situation warranted, promised more than they had reasons to believe could be granted. That is the course of this shameful predicament of the Government, in which the President first declared that he favored the bonus bill then pending, though it did not provide the money to pay it, then later says he favored one if the means of paying it were provided; and then, in his veto message argues against this one, chiefly because it does not provide funds for its payment; and then argues against the payment of any bonus; a predicament in which the majority of Congress put up a dummy—offer the men a gold brick, which many of the Members denounce as "a sham," "a fraud," "a gold brick," and then proceed to vote for it. When asking the people to vote for them they had promised the taxpayer that Federal taxes and expenses would be reduced and at the same time promised ex-service men additional compensation. Both could not be granted. The measures promised went in opposite directions. If the people will read or recall the "platforms" and campaign statements of this year and two years ago they will find many of them contain promises to reduce Federal taxation and national expenses, and at the same time promise other big national appropriations and an adjusted compensation, or bonus, to ex-service men. Candidates should tell the people the truth. If they propose to make large expenditures, such as this requires, they should say "This will of course increase Government expenses and taxes, but I nevertheless favor it." Then they would not find themselves where they must camouflage and try to deceive in order to cover up their previous efforts to deceive for campaign purposes. The people will in this connection remember the old folklore saying "A liar needs a good memory." This is because lying or deceitful action requires further false statements or action to hide it.

Candidates for public office and political parties should tell the people the truth. Lying to the people and deceiving them destroys their respect for public men and officials and for Government itself and breeds contempt for law and Government and consequent lawlessness, which is already a serious menace to the country.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

691. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting request that the unexpended balance of the appropriation "Hot water returns to boiler house, $100,000," under the head of "Naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.," in the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, be made available for improvement of the heating system at said naval operating base (H. Doc. No. 392), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TILSON: Committee on Ways and Means. H. J. Res. 379. A joint resolution to extend for three months the provisions of the dye and chemical control act, 1921; without amendment (Rept. No. 1247). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GORMAN: A bill (H. R. 12730) to grant the use of Government hospitals to civilian employees suffering from tuberculosis; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12731) to increase the number of holidays which may be observed by the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 12732) extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission and making available funds appropriated under authority of Public Act 367 of the Sixty-fourth Congress for controlling the floods of the Mississippi River and continuing its improvement from the mouth of the Ohio River to Rock Island, Ill., and for the purpose of levee protection and bank protection of the tributaries of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Ohio River and Rock Island, Ill., in so far as these tributaries are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12733) for the purchase of a site for the erection of a post-office building at Tuscola, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 12734) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Mount Sterling, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

6385. Also, petition of the Broadway Association of New York, that the Government adopt the plan of owning its own post-office building instead of leasing it; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, September 21, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou art love and life to multitudes. Thou dost give unto us a new day with all its opportunities, and we humbly ask for Thy guidance through all its deliberations and decisions. Help us to realize that in our infirmity we are assured of Thy strength, in our besetment of Thine own infinite patience and tenderness. Give us, we beseech of Thee, at this hour such a consciousness of Thy presence that this may be a very sanctuary to us in the realization of results. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Reed, Pa.
Brandegee	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Broussard	Glass	McLean	Shields
Calder	Gooding	McNary	Shortridge
Cameron	Hale	Moses	Simmons
Capper	Harreld	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Harrison	New	Stanfield
Culberson	Heflin	Newberry	Sterling
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Swanson
Curtis	Kellogg	Norbeck	Townsend
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	La Follette	Pepper	Warren
Ernst	Lenroot	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell	Williams
France	McCormick	Rawson

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CORRECTION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in order to keep the RECORD straight I want to call attention to an article appearing on the front page of the Washington Post of this morning. In part, the headline of this article reads:

WILLIAMS, ASHURST, and HEFLIN speak in support of veto.

Mr. President, I submitted some remarks here on yesterday and was doing my best to override the veto of the President. That is what these boys who are sensitive on deflation get by leaving the press gallery and not staying here to hear what I say. Certain ones of them slip out of the press gallery when deflation is mentioned and then when they undertake to write about what occurs here they misrepresent me. The statement which I have read is just about as near as I ever get to being reported correctly. It is a very sad commentary upon the situation here.

I pleaded with the Senate on yesterday for quite a while to override the veto of the President; I gave a good many reasons why I desired to override it; I suggested that I thought it was just to the boys and fair to them that we should override the veto of the President; and then I find myself misrepresented next morning in flaming headlines, stating that I spoke in favor of the veto of the President. Realizing that I was being purposely overlooked by many of the papers I knew as soon as I saw my name in the headline that there was something absolutely wrong with the article. Whenever you see one of these particular newspaper correspondents put my name in a headline he has done something unto me down in the body of the story. [Laughter in the galleries.] However, it will not always be thus, Mr. President. Little by little and bit by bit we are going to work out this problem.

At some time in the future when some one may pick up a copy of the Washington Post and say, "Why, Senator HEFLIN voted to override the veto of the President, but he made a speech in favor of the veto," and then quote a distinguished and brilliant writer, who was not in the press gallery when I spoke. I merely wish the RECORD to show that this is about as near as certain press correspondents ever get to doing me justice in a report about what I have to say in the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege.

On yesterday I had the honor to address the Senate briefly on the veto message respecting the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, and referring to the RECORD, near the bottom of page 13047, I said:

I read from the Cincinnati Enquirer, from the issue of Saturday morning, October 30, 1920, omitting the headlines, because sometimes in journalism the text does not support the headlines.

I little thought, when uttering that sentence on yesterday, that we would find this morning in a paper owned by the same persons who own the Enquirer, headlines saying that Senators ASHURST and HEFLIN spoke in support of the veto. This morning I am astounded to find headlines in the Post saying that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and I supported the veto.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, to what extent is the Washington Post circulated in Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. The Washington Post is an ably edited journal and the Senator can not get me into a quarrel with my good friends on the Washington Post; but they ought to make their headlines support the text and make the text support the headlines. It has subjected me and my office force to no little inconvenience to lay aside my work this morning and answer 200 telephone calls, explaining to those people who never read anything but headlines, that Senator HEFLIN and I spoke against the veto, and urged that it be overridden, and voted to override the same.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, on yesterday evening the chairman of the Committee on Finance suggested to the Senate that the veto message of the President on the adjusted compensation bill be taken up to-day. For that reason I kept a very important engagement that had been made and advertised for some time, and was absent at the instance of the national committee. If I had been present I should have voted, of course, as I had previously spoken, in favor of soldiers' compensation.

DISTURBANCES AT SMYRNA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram received by me from Virginia McMaster, corresponding secretary of the Tampa Union of Christian Endeavor Societies, with reference to the Turkish outrages at Smyrna, as they claim. I realize that this is an international question very largely, and that in such matters we should be governed by the position taken by the President. At the same time, I submit the telegram and the article for printing in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TAMPA, FLA., September 20, 1922.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Washington, D. C.:

The Tampa Union of Christian Endeavor Societies in regular monthly meeting express their indignation at the latest horrible outbreak of Turkish ferocity at Smyrna, after all but one of countless such which have brought unspeakable horrors on Christian peoples and which have been permitted to go on by the great powers, to their disgrace. We appeal to you to lift a voice in protest, demanding in the name of our country and of humanity that these outrages cease, and to the end also that our Nation be no longer, by its silence, a party to the shame.

VIRGINIA MCMASTER,
Corresponding Secretary.

CALLS ON NATION TO STOP TURK MASSACRE—REVEREND BROWER TELLS OF ATROCITIES—ONLY SOLUTION TO DEPRIVE TURK OF ANY POWER IN ASIA MINOR, HE SAYS.

Calling upon the American people to take some action to stop the "holocaust of hate" of the Turks against Christian men, women, and children in the Near East, Rev. C. DeW. Brower delivered a sermon on the "Release of Power" at the First Congregational Church yesterday morning.

"For decades and decades," he said, "the world has been shocked by the horrors perpetrated by the fiends in Asia Minor on their helpless subjects, and Christendom has withheld the one sufficient help which every instinct of humanity has demanded be given—the making of the Turk helpless to carry on his activities.

THOUSANDS BUTCHERED.

"Men and women have been butchered, starved, tortured; girls carried to fates worse than death; children left to famine and death by disease. It has been our part to raise vast sums of money, to gather shiploads of clothing, to arouse sympathy anew each year for the homeless and naked.

"For years American missionaries have labored among the peoples of Asia Minor to educate, relieve. We have built hospitals, schools, orphanages, colleges, and medical missions have multiplied, lavishing care on Turks as on Armenians. To-day we see our buildings destroyed, our missionaries driven out or murdered, the subjects of care lost in the holocaust of hate.

"For decades and decades we have seen the great nations keeping the Turkish Empire, the devil's own, alive and letting it flourish and carry on its work because of the jealousy of those great nations. The fear that one might possess Constantinople, that some highway to the East might pass to another, the holding of Turkish bonds, has permitted the world's chief shame to go on unrebuked. England could have prevented these shames. France, with some mandate over the country, could do so. Now the only thing done is to provide warships by which some of the helpless creatures left by the Turk may be carried to some place of safety.

"Our own country's chief service has been to maintain 'Near East relief' funds to save such remnants as might have escaped the sword.

TIME FOR ACTION HERE.

"The time has come for our Nation to act. Is there no voice to be raised in Congress in defense of the outraged people? Is there no humanity to be expressed and in such terms as to make the world listen? Are we so engrossed with tariffs and bonuses and profiteerings and a hundred self-interests that not one thrilling appeal can be made and the heart of the Nation respond to the cry? An hundred thousand young men with the spirit of Byron, who flew to the defense of Greece, ought to enlist to stop the carnage of which Smyrna's fate is but a sample. If such action be against the law, so much the more interest, enthusiasm may be quickened. In this case there is a 'higher law,' the law of humanity, of brotherhood, of justice.

"God keep us from dying of the rot of self-interest, from the curse of Meroz, who went not to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

"It is here that there should be a release of power. Here in the demand of a people through Congress that these infamies should cease, the clear statement that they must cease. Shall we not appeal to our own Congressmen and Senators to speak? Can we not, here in Tampa, send out some influence, release some power which shall be felt, yes, to the Near East? Can not some great public meeting be held to this end?

"Of one thing we may be sure: If we fall as individuals, as a Nation, some day we shall suffer ourselves for an indifference for which we shall have to give account to Almighty God."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type several able editorials in regard to the pending shipping bill. They are very brief and are solely on the measure, not political at all, but discuss that very important bill in an interesting statesmanlike manner.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

[From the Union (Mo.) Republican-Tribune, June 30, 1922.]

SHIP SUBSIDY.

We have heard and read of a ship subsidy for many years, and we have always favored it. We are of that number who believe in America and her way of doing things. We want to see the American flag float proudly from the masthead of American ships upon the seven seas. But these things can not be done without a ship subsidy. Just now we have an enormous merchant marine left us from the World War. These ships stare us in the face as a great liability, and the longer these ships are inactive the greater will be the liability. We believe it would indeed be a national sin to either sell these ships for a song or let them rot in the harbors of the United States.

The President is right when he demands a ship subsidy law for the United States and we admire very much the stand he has taken in this matter. We are sure that the spirit of the American people is back of President Harding on this question of a ship subsidy. We see no reason in the world why the greatest and richest nation on earth should not have the greatest merchant marine afloat. It will be a wonderful help to this country in time of peace, and in case war should come—and we hope it never will—this country will be prepared both on land and sea for the ordeal. We hope that it will never be necessary to use the merchant marine except in peaceful pursuits; but history repeats itself, and if it does in the case of our country, let us be prepared for the ordeal.

[From the Kansas City (Mo.) Journal, July 15, 1922.]

PROTECTING A HUGE INVESTMENT.

It is costing the Government about $4,000,000 every month—one-fourth the amount being paid when the present administration took office—to guard, keep in repair, and otherwise protect the interests involved in the ships under control of the Shipping Board. The $50,000,000 annual outlay for this purpose is approximately equal to the subsidy which the President's bill provides shall be paid in order to place the American merchant marine upon a footing of equality of opportunity in competing with the merchant marine of other countries.

There is, however, this radical difference: The payment of $50,000,000 in protecting the ships now swinging idly at anchor represents a total loss, so far as any returns are concerned.

The payment of $50,000,000 in subsidies will put these ships to work, carrying American goods in American bottoms to the four quarters of the earth in time of peace, and in time of war constituting an indispensable and enormously effective arm of the national defense.

To this advantage must be added the certainty of large returns to the Government from the surplus over the given earnings of the ships under private enterprise, for the owners retain only those earnings below a definite percentage.

There, of course, remains the unthinkable alternative of selling the ships for whatever they will bring and throwing the whole merchant marine overboard, pouring freight and passenger rates into foreign coffers in time of peace and hiring foreign ships to transport American troops and supplies in the event of war, abandoning the seas and ceasing to be a merchant-marine power.

What patriotic American can contemplate such a solution of the problem? What wise American can fail to see the folly of spending the equivalent of the subsidy for maintenance of empty ships when the same amount would involve a patriotic and profitable investment?

The ships are now "eating their heads off," in popular parlance, without earning anything.

Without equalizing assistance, private enterprise could not operate them in competition with foreign vessels.

The payment of money in subsidies of the money now spent on maintenance would put them to work in peace time and make them an arm of national defense in war.

How could the matter be put more conclusively than by stating the mere facts?

How can intelligent and patriotic Americans fail to realize the meaning and the duty involved in those facts?

[From the New Albany (Ind.) Tribune, August 3, 1922.]

SHIP SUBSIDY A NAVAL BILL.

How large is this ship subsidy against which the self-appointed watchdogs of the Treasury rail?

A typical 5,000-ton ship will be paid a subsidy of 25 cents a mile, not much more than the expense of operating an automobile, all costs considered.

Even when our merchant fleet is supplemented by the construction of passenger vessels and at last we have a balanced merchant marine of 7,500,000 gross tons—even then the subsidy will amount to only about $30,000,000. That is just one-fifth of the saving in Federal expenses attained by scrapping our battleships in accordance with the naval disarmament treaty.

We shall save $150,000,000 annually by not having those ships operate.

By destroying our battleships in process of building, in exchange for Britain's destroying blue prints of ships to be built, we equalize our Navy with hers.

Theoretically. Practically we shall not be equal until we have a merchant marine approximately equal with hers, to be ready to serve as warships and naval auxiliaries in war time, and in peace time to train a personnel from which the Navy can recruit.

The subsidy aims to encourage the construction of such an American merchant marine.

We are taking $30,000,000, one-fifth of our savings through naval disarmament, and applying it to strengthen that branch of the Navy in which we are weakest.

That is the meaning of the ship subsidy bill as a naval measure.

[From the Chicago (Ill.) Journal of Commerce, August 16, 1922.]

PASS THE MERCHANT MARINE BILL.

To the landlubbers who dwell in the Central West it may seem that the pending merchant marine legislation has nothing of importance in it to them. Theirs are the pursuits of the land and the factory, and whether the ships that enter and leave American ports fly the American flag or not may, at first thought, seem inconsequential. If they consider the effect of the present railroad strike upon commerce at home, however, they may realize what the lack of an efficient American merchant marine means to her commerce abroad.

A control of vessel transportation gives to the nation enjoying it ascendency in competition. By manipulating ocean freights as the varying conditions suggest, that nation can practically shut a competitor out of any market. Great Britain, having an abundance of vessels, comes close to dominating foreign trade; America, with an adequate amount of shipping, backed up by her unexcelled natural resources and excess manufacturing, can do the same thing.

With a market abroad to absorb excess farm and factory products, labor would find employment that to-day is idle; the farmer and the manufacturer would have a more stable market at home; the general buying power of the workingman would be increased so that a steadier degree of prosperity would obtain.

Not only this, but the growing demand for tonnage to move our exports would give employment in the shipbuilding yards of the Nation, and the fueling and provisioning of the ships would give new markets for American people. Then, too, an adequate American merchant marine would provide the needed auxilary to our Navy to put teeth in any war program that the future may force upon the country. Without this auxilary tonnage the American Navy, even under the present naval treaty, would be severely handicapped and forced to keep in home waters during a war.

The provisions of the pending merchant marine bill would detract from rather than add to the burden now placed upon the country to support the present Shipping Board. The cost of America's Government-owned ships is $50,000,000 annually at present, and they are not in service. The new bill provides for a graduated direct subsidy of from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually to private vessel owners and for the sale of Government-owned ships. Under the bill not only would the Government be able to market the ships (since the subsidy would make it possible for private capital to operate them profitably in competition with foreign ships), but also would the building of the new vessels of the heavy tonnage, rapid transit type, be encouraged.

The merchant marine bill offers a saving in taxation to the public; an opportunity for the country to widen its foreign markets and to build up a naval auxiliary to protect us in time of war. It deserves the support of the country, and should be passed by Congress. Landlubber and seafaring citizens alike should indorse it.

[From the Successful Farmer, Des Moines, Iowa, September 1, 1922.]

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

A vast amount of propaganda on both sides of the ship subsidy question has flooded the editorial offices of the country. It would take nearly all of an editor's time to read it all, and when he was through he would discover that most of it has been chasing around in a circle, getting nowhere so far as new argument is concerned. There has been much misrepresentation of the facts.

A great deal has been said in the past concerning the slipshod manner in which American-made goods have been packed for overseas shipment. One would think that no one but the English, German, or Japanese shippers knew how to build a shipping crate. There was the evidence—the foreign goods came through in fine shape, but the American goods were damaged in shipment, due to faulty packing. Naturally foreign buyers preferred to buy where the goods came through the best.

The secret of this is that American goods were shipped in foreign ships, handled by foreign deck and wharf hands, and purposely handled so roughly that no shipping crate could stand the journey. These same men handled the goods of their own countrymen so that they were not damaged. It was a black eye to American manufacturers.

If we had an American merchant fleet, our goods would be handled by American seamen and dock hands and receive the careful handling they deserve. This would end complaint against American shipping crates and damaged goods upon receipt in foreign markets. It is perfectly natural that foreign ships should be in no hurry to get American goods into a competitive field. Delays in port, on one excuse and another, are easily provided. Where speed is an object to reach a foreign market and only foreign ships are available, it should not be expected that American goods will be rushed in ahead of foreign goods. Human nature controls business.

If we had our own ships, we would find a great difference in the appearance of our goods when they arrive in a foreign port, and a great difference in the speed of delivery, which is an important factor in competitive business. When the farmers get into the exporting game through the United States grain growers this will become apparent.

It is costing Uncle Sam about $50,000,000 a year to support the Government-owned merchant fleet built for war purposes. The subsidy proposed will cost less by several millions, and private owners will have the worry and upkeep of the fleet. Uncle Sam did not run the railroads with a saving to the shippers. It was a very costly experiment in transportation. Uncle Sam can not run a merchant fleet as cheaply as private owners can. "More business in government and less government in business" was the slogan of President Harding when elected. If Congress will follow that cue we will all be thankful. It is not so much a question of subsidy as a question of meeting conditions as they are and making the best of a bad bargain.

[From the New York Tribune, September 13, 1922.]

BUSHWHACKING OUR MARINE.

The American merchant marine is again threatened with discriminations by other maritime nations. Aside from certain economic difficulties, such as higher wages, higher capital costs, higher subsistence for crews, and our own restrictive legislation, many governmental and private activities abroad are a bar to our progress on the seas. Free and open competition is a motto, not a fact.

The Shipping Board is empowered by Congress to protect the interests of American ships. It has made a good beginning. Before 1916 our steamers had no recourse when foreign officials or steamship lines imposed handicaps. Now we have a body which can act effectively, though in doing this it must have the support of an enlightened and determined public opinion. Such a campaign is not anti-British, anti-German, nor antianything. It is simply pro-American.

When the conference of British steamship lines refused to let American ships participate in the Egyptian cotton trade, though they were willing to take the business at a much lower cost, the Shipping Board coerced a compromise by means of a rate war. United States ships now have 50 per cent of that trade.

The State Department took the right step when it refused to reprimand the consuls at Newcastle-on-Tyne without reasonable proof that they had exceeded their authority in aiding our vessels. Unsigned affidavits do not make legal evidence. There is substantial reason for the belief that competing steamship lines had a part in that affair.

When Australia puts higher duties on goods imported in American than in British or Canadian ships, while our hands are tied by the "jellyfish" treaty of 1815 with Great Britain, it is time to look into the situation and to consider the revision of that document.

When British and Japanese stevedores bungle the delivery of 400 tons of tea to an American passenger line in the Orient and cause a costly delay, the Shipping Board must find the best method of correcting the trouble.

When a British steamship line at a South African port filled every pier with scows and barges on the day the first vessel of a new American line was due fair play was thrown to the winds. The consul who forced an opening for the ship on that occasion deserves the greatest praise.

When the Italian Government imposes conditions on passenger liners that can hardly be met by any except Italian companies, the Shipping Board must assert its protective power.

Since 1850, when American shipping was the equal of any and carried its fair share of our trade, the country has spent its energy on internal development. We must now turn a larger part of our attention to foreign fields. Ocean transportation under the American flag is a great factor in that development.

The purpose of American steamship men and Government officials is to transport one-half of our commerce in American vessels. We are entitled to that proportion, and neither petty annoyances nor regulations by alien interests must be allowed to go unchallenged.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. ERNST, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 107) for the relief of Robert Edgar Zeigler, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 925) thereon.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4022) to amend the revenue act of 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned, in compliance with the request of the Senate, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska, with the accompanying papers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes;

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920;

H. R. 10419. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands;

H. R. 10766. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11212. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; and

H. R. 12377. An act to establish a commission, to be known as the United States Coal Commission, for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, for which I ask immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I make the usual request that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The Senator from Wyoming asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have a very important amendment which I wish to offer, and I do not want to wait until the committee amendments are disposed of. I have no objection to the bill being read for amendment, but when we reach that item in the bill I wish to offer my amendment. Therefore, I object to the committee amendments being first considered from that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects to the committee amendments being first considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I merely ask that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments, according to the rule, but that the amendment I shall propose may be offered when that paragraph of the bill is reached.

Mr. WARREN. The rule provides that there must be a formal reading of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I waive that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection to waiving the formal reading of the bill, that will be the order. The Secretary will read the bill for amendment.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Legislative," on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Adelaide Curry Crow, widow of Hon. William E. Crow, late a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

To reimburse the Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for expenses incurred during the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, fiscal year 1923, $4,484.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to insert:

To pay Alexander K. Meek for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress as an assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 21, to insert:

EXECUTIVE.

WHITE HOUSE POLICE.

For the following employees from October 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923, both dates inclusive, at annual rates of compensation as follows: First sergeant, $2,140; 2 sergeants, at $1,800 each; 30 privates, at $1,660 each; in all, $41,655.

For uniforming and equipping the White House police, including the purchase and issue of revolvers and ammunition, firscal year 1923, $9,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 14, to insert:

UNITED STATES COAL COMMISSION.

To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes," approved September —, 1922, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and rent if space can not be assigned by the Public Buildings Commission in other buildings under the control of that commission, fiscal year 1923, $200,000: Provided, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of annual compensation in excess of $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to state the next amendment, which was, at the top of page 5, under the heading "Department of Commerce," to insert down to line 15.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before we get to the item for the Department of Commerce I wish to move an amendment to the bill. I was waiting until the Secretary reached that point.

Mr. President, I do not have a copy of the bill before me from which the Secretary is reading, and the paging of the bill I hold in my hand is not the same; but under the heading "Department of State" there is a provision in the bill which I have here, on page 4, line 4, which is headed "Mixed claims commission, United States and Germany," which reads as follows:

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

For the expenses of determining the amounts of claims against Germany by the mixed commission established under the agreement concluded between the United States and Germany on August 10, 1922, for the determination of the amount to be paid by Germany in satisfaction of the financial obligations of Germany under the treaty concluded between the Governments of the United States and Germany on August 25, 1921, including the expenses which under the terms of such agreement of August 10, 1922, are chargeable in part to the United States; and the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of claims and the presentation thereof before said mixed commission, including salaries of an agent and necessary counsel and their assistants and employees, rent in the District of Columbia, printing and binding, contingent and traveling expenses, and such other expenses in the United States or elsewhere as the President may deem proper, $180,000.

Mr. President, I move that that provision of the bill be stricken from it, and I desire to address the Senate on that question.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator state where the provision to which he refers commences in the bill?

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is found on page 8, beginning in line 6, of the bill as reported, under the heading "Mixed claims commission, United States and Germany."

Mr. WARREN. That is a House item entirely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the Senate committee has not changed the language.

Mr. President, I will ask those Members of the Senate who are present for their attention for a while in regard to this matter, because it is of very serious import. We are asked to make an appropriation for a commission which is about to be established without warrant of law, for no authority of law exists for it, and which is in direct contravention of the law of the land as established in the German treaty of peace which was ratified somewhat over a year ago. It is also in contravention of the precedents of the Senate, so far as the Senate is concerned, for 100 years. I do not mean to say that the Executive has not taken action of this kind at some time in the past, but, so far as the Senate is concerned, it has always occupied the position that in the settlement of war claims and war matters it should have a voice.

More than that, Mr. President, there is legislation now pending in the Senate before the Judiciary Committee for an adjustment of this question. Hearings have been had, but, on account of the pressure of business, I have no doubt, no conclusion has been reached by the committee. The chairman of the subcommittee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who has had the matter under advisement, has been almost continually occupied since it came before him either with the pressing matters growing out of the strike conditions in the country or as Presiding Officer, and has made no report. I am not criticizing the Senator at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think a word ought to be said at this point. It is true, I am chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee considering the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama. We held one hearing upon the bill. Very shortly after that time the President entered into an agreement to which reference has been made by the Senator from Alabama, and thereupon the question naturally arose before the subcommittee, Has the President the power and authority to enter into an agreement of that character?

I made an arrangement for a further hearing upon that question alone, and the committee was to be addressed by a representative of the State Department, by some one selected by the proponent or the proponents of the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama. Before we could arrange for that hearing the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is a member of the subcommittee, met with an accident, which has prevented up to this time his appearance in the Senate. The hearing has been postponed for that reason, and for that reason alone. I thought that ought to be stated, because the subcommittee was very anxious to conclude the hearing and submit a report to the full committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has made the statement. What I said was not in criticism of his action.

This is a very grave matter involving the rights of citizens of the United States in connection with foreign governments, involving our treaty rights, and also a judicial question as to whether the Secretary of State has any power to act in this matter at all, which question is now being considered by the chief law committee of the Senate. As the Senator from Iowa has said, his committee have taken it up; they have entered upon hearings, but circumstances over which the Senator from Iowa had no control have interrupted the course of the hearings. The Secretary of State has left the United States and will not be able to appear before the committee until his return, and one of the important members of the committee—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]—representing this side of the Chamber on the committee, has met with an unfortunate accident, having broken his foot, and can not attend. Yet in the face of that, because the chief of the Budget Bureau has asked Congress to appropriate $180,000 in order to carry out the work of the proposed executive commission—and the members of the commission have not been appointed—suggested by the President, under an executive agreement the Appropriations Committee of the Senate now proposes to ignore entirely the fact that there is legislation pending here; that there is investigation going on involving the determination of the very delicate and difficult questions involved. Without further consideration, it is proposed that Congress shall make an appropriation to inaugurate this work, without any understanding as to where it may lead us. I wish to say to the Senate that, in my judgment, if we proceed to set up this commission and start it to work, if it is contrary to the law of the land, as I believe it is, we may involve the Government in some very difficult and dangerous questions, including conflicts between the executive branch of the Government and the Senate of the United States, and in the end conflicts between the attitude of the German Government and our Government on the subject. It is not a question that can be lightly passed over by merely making an appropriation without consideration.

I am not saying this in criticism of the members of the Appropriations Committee. I know they have not considered this matter. It was put in the bill in the House. I am sure that the Appropriations Committee of the House gave not one word of consideration to the legal questions and the difficult international questions involved. They sent this provision over to the Senate, and the Senate committee made the appropriation as a matter of course, without any consideration of the issues involved in this matter—and they are grave issues.

I think we should halt. I am not asking the Senate this morning to decide the question finally. I am only asking the Senate to strike this appropriation out of this bill and let it stay out until we meet here in December, in order that an opportunity may be given for those to be heard who think this is not a legal way to approach this matter, and that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate may have an opportunity to report its findings before we foreclose the whole situation by making an appropriation to start a commission to functioning when the Senate has not given any real consideration to this question.

Mr. President, I do not think I ought to let the time go by, because I do not know what the Senate is going to determine, without at least putting into the RECORD a statement in regard to this matter.

The chairman of the committee suggests to me that he has a letter from the Secretary of State and the estimates in regard to this matter, and it might be well enough to have it read now. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator to yield so that we may have read such portions of this letter as appear on the pages marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The Secretary will read such portions as are marked.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the whole document may appear in the RECORD, because it shows the salaries and other expenses that are required to be paid, and I think the Senate should be informed in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

The Assistant Secretary read the marked portions of the document (H. Doc. 376, 67th Cong., 2d sess.), which, entire, is as follows:

[House Document No. 376, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

EXPENSES OF MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

Communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, $200,000.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 24, 1922.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Very respectfully, R. O. KLOEBER,
Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 22, 1922.

Hon. H. M. LORD,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget,
Treasury Department.

SIR: Under the terms of an agreement concluded August 10, 1922, between the United States and Germany a mixed commission is provided for the determination of the amount of American claims against Germany growing out of the recent war. The agreement provides that a commissioner is to be named by each Government, and that the two Governments are to agree upon an umpire who is to decide finally upon any questions as to which the commissioners may be unable to agree. The German Government having expressed a desire to have an American citizen to serve as umpire of the commission, the President has named as umpire William R. Day, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court. This agreement was concluded to provide a suitable arrangement to obtain rights respecting claims under the treaty of August 25, 1921, between the United States and Germany, securing to the United States and its nationals the rights specified in the joint resolution of Congress approved July 2, 1921, including all the rights and advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaty of Versailles.

The categories of claims to be considered include those for American property losses in Germany since August 1, 1914, other losses sustained by American citizens since July 31, 1914, as a consequence of the war, and debts owing to American citizens by the German Government or German nationals, these claims being more fully defined in the treaty of August 25, 1921, between the United States and Germany and the treaty of Versailles.

Several thousand American claims, aggregating in amount probably $300,000,000, are to be considered by the commission. Included among these claims are hundreds for loss of American life in the Lusitania and other submarine disasters and the destruction of American vessels and cargoes on the high seas, and for the destruction of American property in the devastated areas in Belgium and France. The Government of the United States, through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance (Veterans' Bureau) has nearly $30,000,000 of claims to present.

In order that the work of preparing claims for presentation to the commission may proceed promptly it is necessary that an adequate lump-sum appropriation be made immediately available. The agreement of August 10, 1922, concluded with Germany provides for a meeting of the commission at Washington within two months after the date of its signature.

Accordingly I inclose herewith an estimate of appropriation in the amount stipulated to cover the period from September 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923, which I would be pleased to have you transmit to Congress with the request that early action be taken thereon.

I am also inclosing herewith for your information a copy of the claims agreement and of the treaty of August 25, 1921, to restore friendly relations existing between the United States and Germany prior to outbreak of war. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, by the Department of State.

Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany: For the expenses of determining the amounts of claims against Germany by the mixed commission established under the agreement concluded between the United States and Germany on August 10, 1922, for the determination of the amount to be paid by Germany in satisfaction of the financial obligations of Germany under the treaty concluded between the Governments of the United States and Germany on August 25, 1921, including the expenses which, under the terms of such agreement of August 10, 1922, are chargeable in part to the United States; and the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of claims and the presentation thereof before said mixed commission, including salaries of an agent and necessary counsel and their assistants and employees, rent in the District of Columbia, printing and binding, contingent and traveling expenses, and such other expenses in the United States or elsewhere as the President may deem proper (treaty of Aug. 25, 1921; agreement Aug. 10, 1922; treaties 1st sess., 67th Cong., p. 117) $200,000

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment at this point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The letter which has been read was evidently the basis upon which the House included this provision in the bill. As the Senator knows, it is entirely a House provision so far, but it met our approval because it seemed to us to carry out the compact between the two Governments. When the hearing was had before the House committee, Assistant Secretary Bliss, who appeared before it, did not go into the details of the matter and made no comment upon its legality or anything of that kind except to state that in his opinion the work would require this amount of money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have not said that the Appropriations Committee have not considered in detail the amount of these estimates and the amount of money that should be expended provided this commission is inaugurated. I am sure they have given careful attention to that matter. What I have said is that the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, which of course are not the law committees of the two Houses, have given no consideration whatever to the question as to whether the executive branch of the Government in this case has a right to appoint a commission at all, or what the effect of this appointment would be so far as American claims are concerned, or in regard to the question as to whether there is an executive usurpation of the power that has been granted to the Congress.

In order that the record may properly show the issues involved, I want to ask, first, that I may have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, without reading, a copy of a bill I introduced on the 20th day of July, 1922, to provide for a tribunal to hear and determine these claims of American citizens against the German Government.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"SEC. 20. (a) A commission is hereby created and established to be known as the Enemy Property Claims Commission, hereinafter referred to as the Commission, which shall be composed of six commissioners, all of whom shall be learned in the law, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. One of said commissioners shall be designated by the terms of his appointment to be the president of the Commission.

"(b) The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall fill all vacancies which may occur in said Commission.

"(c) Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

"(d) Each of the members of the Commission, the Assistant Attorney General, the attorneys, and the clerk provided herein shall be citizens of the United States, and shall take the oath of office prescribed by law to be taken by officers of the United States.

"(e) The Commission shall have a seal with such device as it may order.

"(f) The Commission may sit as a whole, or in two divisions, each composed of three members of the Commission. The Commission may divide and assign its business to such divisions of the Commission, reserving for the consideration of the entire Commission such matters as it may deem advisable. Two of the commissioners constituting such a division of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business assigned to such division, and the agreement of two such commissioners shall be necessary to decide any question arising before such division of the Commission. Four members of the entire Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and the agreement of four such commissioners shall be necessary to decide any question arising before said entire Commission.

"SEC. 21. (a) The said Commission shall, within 30 days after the appointment of the members thereof, meet, and it shall thereafter hold its sessions in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

"(b) The said Commission shall proceed immediately after its first meeting with all convenient dispatch to arrange and docket the several claims admissible hereunder, and to consider the evidence which shall have been, or which may be, offered by the respective claimants, and in opposition thereto, allowing such further time for the production of such further evidence as may be required and as it shall think reasonable and just; and shall thereupon proceed to determine and award upon each of the said claims according to the provisions hereof.

"(c) The said Commission is hereby authorized to publish notice of its sessions, and to make all needful rules and regulations not contravening the laws of the United States, for regulating the forms and mode of procedure before the said Commission, and to carry into full and complete effect the provisions hereof. Such rules and mode of procedure made with regard to claims filed under section 29 herein shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the district courts of the United States. The said Commission is hereby vested with the same powers now possessed by the district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before the said Commission.

"(d) The said Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. Such testimony may be taken, pursuant to the provisions of existing laws and the rules of practice of the district courts of the United States, so far as applicable, before the Commission or any commissioner or commissioners appointed to take testimony hereunder.

"(e) The marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, or his deputies, shall serve, within said District, all process issued by said Commission, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of said Commission; and outside the District of Columbia the process of said Commission shall be served by the United States marshals, or their deputies, in their respective districts: Provided, however, That the said Commission or any commissioner appointed by it to take testimony in the United States or foreign countries is hereby authorized to appoint an officer to serve any process issued by said Commission or commissioner.

"(f) When testimony is to be taken before the Commission, or any commissioner appointed to take testimony, within any district, Territory, or insular possession the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory or the clerk of any local judicial tribunal for such insular possession shall, on application of the Commission or commissioner appointed to take testimony, or of any party to the proceeding, or his attorney, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the Commission or commissioner at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpœna, refuses or neglects to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proved to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process or punish the disobedience as any court of the United States or such insular possession may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by such court; and the production before such Commission or commissioner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"(g) Each of the said commissioners, and the clerk, and each of the commissioners to take testimony shall have authority to administer oaths and affirmations and to take the depositions of claimants, parties, and witnesses in all matters pending before or to be presented before the Commission; and if any person shall knowingly and willfully swear or affirm falsely in such examination or deposition to any matter or fact touching which such person is examined, or if any person, whether claimant or witness, shall so swear or affirm falsely to the contents of any memorial, petition, affidavit, deposition, or other paper containing any matter or fact pertaining to any claim or proceeding pending before or to be presented before said Commission, or shall, in giving testimony or in swearing or affirming to any deposition, affidavit, or other paper before any officer authorized to administer oaths or to take such testimony, swear or affirm falsely to any matter or fact pertaining to any claim or proceeding pending or to be presented before said Commission, every such person so swearing or affirming falsely as aforesaid shall be deemed guilty of perjury just as if such false oath or affirmation had been taken in a judicial proceeding in any of the courts of the United States or in any local judicial tribunal of any insular possession, and shall be liable to indictment and trial in the district court of the United States for the district in which such perjury shall have been committed, or in the proper courts of the United States for the Territory or District of Columbia, or in proper courts of the insular possessions in which such perjury shall have been committed, and shall upon conviction suffer such punishment as is provided by the laws of the United States or of the insular possession for that offense. No person shall be excluded as a witness before the Commission because such person is a party to or interested in the claim or proceeding, and any claimant or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

"(h) All claims filed hereunder shall be filed with the clerk of the Commission, and the prosecution of the claim shall be deemed to have commenced at the date of such filing.

"SEC. 22. (a) The Commission shall appoint and fix the compensation of a clerk, and may also appoint and fix the compensation of one or more messengers, stenographers, typists, interpreters, and such other employees as the business of the Commission may require; and may also appoint and fix the compensation or fees of one or more commissioners (who are herein designated as commissioners to take testimony), who shall be citizens of the United States, whose duty it shall be to take testimony in the United States or in foreign countries in such cases as may be brought before the said Commission, but no compensation shall be paid in excess of that paid for like or similar service in the departments and executive agencies of the United States.

"(b) Each of the said members of the Commission shall be paid monthly at the rate of $7,500 per annum. The Department of State shall provide said Commission with all necessary and suitable rooms and offices for holding its sessions and transacting its business. All the expenses, including the salaries and compensation of said Commission and of its officers and employees, shall be paid by the Department of State upon vouchers certified by the president of the Commission or by order of the members of the Commission in case of his absence or inability to act.

"SEC. 23. It shall be the duty of the Commission, and it shall have jurisdiction, to receive, examine, and adjudicate all claims filed as provided herein. It shall adjudicate said claims according to the merits of the several cases, the principles of equity, and of law.

"SEC. 24. (a) The orders, judgments, awards, and decrees of the Commission or any division thereof shall be final, unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said Commission, and no retrial or rehearing shall be had except upon motion made within 30 days of said order, judgment, award, or decree.

"(b) When the Commission is in doubt as to any question of law arising upon the facts in any case before it, it may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same.

"SEC. 25 (a) The Commission, immediately after its award shall have been made and become final, shall transmit a copy thereof, certified by the clerk of the Commission and signed by the president of the Commission, or by at least two other members of the Commission in his absence or inability to act, to the Alien Property Custodian or Treasurer of the United States, or both, as the case may be, which officials thereafter, as soon as may be, shall dispose of any money or other property in accordance with such award.

"(b) The powers and jurisdiction hereby granted to said Commission shall be in force and continue for the period of two years from the date the Commission meets for the first time, as provided in section 21 hereof, and for no longer time: Provided, That the President may, from time to time, extend the said period beyond said two years, not exceeding six months in each instance, when in his judgment such extension is necessary to enable the Commission to complete its work: And provided further, That in case the Commission shall have completed its work before the expiration of the said two years or any extension granted by the President he may dissolve said Commission. Immediately after the Commission shall have completed its work all the files and records of said Commission shall be deposited in the Department of State.

"SEC. 26. (a) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who shall hold this office during the existence of said Commission, and the Attorney General of the United States is empowered to employ and fix the compensation of such other attorneys and employees as the duties laid upon his office by the provisions hereof may require. It shall be the duty of said Assistant Attorney General and attorneys to appear as attorney and counsel for the United States under the direction of the Attorney General and to defend its interests in all claims and proceedings before said Commission.

"(b) Service of all notices of claims and petitions filed hereunder shall be made upon the Attorney General at such time and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commission.

"(c) The defense of the United States to any claim shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe: Provided, That should the Attorney General fail to so defend any claim, the claimant may proceed with the case under such rules as the Commission may adopt; but the claimant shall not in such cases have award for his claim, or for any part thereof, unless he shall establish the same by proof satisfactory to the Commission.

"SEC. 27. (a) All money or other property or the proceeds of the sale thereof held by the Alien Property Custodian or Treasurer of the United States by virtue of the trading with the enemy act, as amended, the return of which is now authorized by section 9 thereof, shall be, as elsewhere provided herein, returned to the owner thereof or his agent or legal representative.

"(b) Claims made under this section by any person asserting citizenship of the United States by naturalization process shall not be denied on the ground of any presumption of expatriation which may have arisen against him, if he has returned to the United States and gives satisfactory evidence of his loyalty to the United States during his absence abroad.

"(c) Claims made under this section and subsections (b) and (c) of section 30 hereof shall be filed with the Commission within one year after the date the Commission meets for the first time, as provided in section 21 hereof, or shall be forever waived and barred.

"SEC. 28. All money and other property, including the proceeds of the sale thereof, held by the Alien Property Custodian or the Treasurer of the United States by virtue of the trading with the enemy act, as amended, which at the time it was conveyed, assigned, transferred, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian or required so to be, or seized by him, belonged to any person enumerated in this section, shall be returned by the Commission to the owner thereof or to his agent or legal representative, if the payment of claims which may be allowed by the Commission to claimants under sections 29 and 30 hereof are otherwise satisfied; otherwise, the same shall be just subject to the payment thereof as herein provided. The Alien Property Custodian shall classify all such money and other property in two lists; one covering that belonging to Germany and its nationals, the other covering that belonging to Austria-Hungary and its nationals, as follows:

"Class 1. Money and other property belonging to the Government, or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or any agent or agency thereof.

"Class 2. All other money and property belonging to any person not enumerated in the foregoing class 1, the return of which is not authorized by section 27 hereof.

"(b) No person enumerated in this section shall file claim for the return of his money or other property until such time as the Commission shall announce it will receive such claims, provided that all such claims shall be filed with the Commission within one year after the date of such announcement by the Commission, or shall be thereafter forever waived and barred.

"SEC. 29. (a) The following shall be deemed claimants of the first class hereunder:

"(1) Any citizen of the United States who has suffered damage growing out of acts committed by the German Government or by any German authorities since July 31, 1914, and prior to April 6, 1917, or by the Austro-Hungarian Government or by any Austrian or Hungarian authorities since July 28, 1914, and prior to December 7, 1917;

"(2) Any civilian citizen of the United States who suffered damages by injury or who, as surviving dependent, suffered damages, by personal injury to or death of civilians, caused by acts of war, including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all direct consequences thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising;

"(3) Any civilian citizen of the United States who suffered damage caused by Germany or her allies as a victim of acts of cruelty, violence, or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, internment, or evacuation, of exposure at sea or being forced to labor), wherever arising, or who, as surviving dependent of any such civilian victim, suffered damage;

"(4) Any civilian citizen of the United States who suffered damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory, or in occupied or invaded territory, as a victim of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honor, or who, as a surviving dependent of any such civilian victim suffered damage;

"(5) Any citizen of the United States or any person serving in the military, naval, or air forces thereof who suffered damage caused by any kind of maltreatment by Germany or her allies of prisoners of war; and

"(6) Any civilian citizen of the United States who suffered damage caused by being forced by Germany or her allies to labor without just remuneration.

"(b) The following shall be deemed claimants of the second class:

"(1) Any citizen of the United States who suffered damage or injury inflicted on his property rights or interests, including any company or association in which he may be interested in German territory as it existed August 1, 1914, or in the territory of the former Austro-Hungarian Empire by the application by such nations of either of the exceptional war measures or measures of transfer mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 3 of the annexes to Section IV, entitled 'Property rights and interests,' of the treaties of Versailles, Trianon, and St.-Germain-en-Laye, respectively;

"(2) Any citizen of the United States who has suffered damage in respect of all property, wherever situated, belonging to him, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured, or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea, or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war; and

"(3) Any citizen of the United States who has suffered through the acts of the Imperial German Government, or its agents, or the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, or its agents, since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to his person or property, directly or indirectly, whether through the ownership of shares of stock in German, Austro-Hungarian, American, or other corporations, or in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war, or otherwise, not hereinbefore enumerated.

"(c) The following shall be deemed claimants of the third class:

"(1) The Government of the United States, representing the people thereof, for damage caused to the people thereof for all its pensions or compensation in the nature of pensions to its naval and military victims of war (including members of its air force), whether mutilated, wounded, sick, or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims, the amount due being calculated for each of them as being the capitalized cost of such pensions and compensation on the basis of the scales in force in France as to Germany at the date of November 11, 1921, and as to Austria and Hungary at the date of May 1, 1919;

"(2) The Government of the United States for the cost of assistance by such Government to prisoners of war and by their families and dependents;

"(3) The Government of the United States for allowances by such Government to the families and dependents of mobilized persons or persons serving with its forces, the amount due to them for each calendar year in which hostilities occurred being calculated for the Government on the basis of the average scale for such payments in force in France during that year;

"(4) The Government of the United States, for damage in respect of property wherever situated belonging to it, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured, or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea, or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war; and

"(5 The representatives of any civilian population of the United States which suffered damage in the form of levies, fines, and other similar exactions imposed upon them by Germany or her allies.

"(d) The award to any claimant under this section shall be only for the amount of the actual damage which said claimant shall prove that he has sustained. Remote or prospective damages shall not be awarded. The awards made to claimants under this section shall include interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, from the date that the loss, damage, or injury was sustained by the claimant, until such date as the award is paid.

"(e) All claims under this section shall be filed with the Commission within six months after the date the Commission holds its first meeting, or shall be thereafter forever waived and barred; provided that the Commission may, in its discretion, extend the time for filing said claims for an additional period not exceeding six months.

"(f) Any claim prosecuted under this section shall be presented by petition, containing such allegations and in such form as the Commission may require. The petition shall be signed and be verified by the affidavit of the claimant, his attorney, or agent.

"(g) All persons whom the Commission may require shall be made parties defendant, and service shall be obtained upon all parties defendant in accordance with the practice in the District courts.

"(h) In case any award is rendered by the Commission to claimants under this section, the Commission shall, upon motion of the attorney or counsel for the claimant, allow in addition to the amount thereby awarded such counsel and attorney fees to the counsel and attorneys employed by the claimant or claimants, respectively, as the Commission shall determine to be just and reasonable as compensation for the services rendered the claimant in prosecuting such claims, which allowance shall be entered as a part of the award in such case and shall be made specifically payable to said attorney or counsel as a part of said award, the payment of which shall be in full compensation to the counsel or attorney for prosecuting such claim; and all other liens upon, or assignments, sales, transfers, either absolute or conditional, for services rendered or to be rendered, about any claim or part or parcel thereof, provided for in this amendment heretofore or hereafter made or done before such award is rendered and payment thereof made, shall be absolutely void and of no effect.

"(i) The Commission shall order the payment of all claims allowed by it to claimants under this section against the nation concerned, insofar as such awards are otherwise unsatisfied, out of the money and other property enumerated in section 28 hereof which shall have been classified as belonging to it and its nationals; provided that all the money and other property constituting the first class set forth therein shall be exhausted before that constituting the second class shall be subject to such awards. In event all money and other property classified as belonging to one of the former enemy nations and its nationals shall be more than sufficient to satisfy all awards against it, the balance shall be held subject to the satisfaction of the awards which may be rendered against the other enemy nation concerned, if such other awards are not otherwise satisfied, and provided that the same shall not be so used until all money and other property belonging to such other nation and its nationals shall have been exhausted.

"Awards allowed to claimants of the first class shall be paid before awards allowed to claimants of the second and third class, and awards allowed to claimants of the second class shall be paid before awards allowed to claimants of the third class, and should such money and other property be insufficient to satisfy in full awards to claimants of any one of said three classes the same and/or the proceeds thereof shall be distributed ratably among the several claimants of that class.

"(j) All money held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States belonging to persons in the class then subject to the payment of awards under this section shall be exhausted in the satisfaction of such awards before the property held by the Alien Property Custodian belonging to the same or other persons in the same class be subject to liquidation for the payment of such awards.

"(k) So far as such awards shall be payable by the Treasurer of the United States, all or any part of same may, at his option, be paid in United States bonds, at par, provided that any amount of the award of which a $50 bond is not a factor shall be paid in currency.

"SEC. 30. (a) Any person enumerated in section 27 or section 28 claiming any right, title, or interest in any money or other property which has been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or seized by him and held by him or the Treasurer of the United States by virtue of the 'trading with the enemy act,' as amended, may, as provided in said sections, respectively, file with the Commission a notice of his claim containing an application for allowance thereof, under oath and in such form and containing such particulars as the Commission shall require; and the Commission may order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery of the money or other property so held by the Alien Property Custodian or Treasurer of the United States, or of the interest to which the Commission shall determine said claimant is entitled, to said claimant, his agent, or attorney.

"(b) Any citizen of the United States or his legal representative, to whom any debt, which became due prior to July 14, 1919, may be owing from any person whose money or other property is subject to the payment of claims as provided in section 29 hereof, may file notice of such claim containing an application for the allowance thereof, as provided in the foregoing subsection (a); and the Commission may, with the assent of the owner of said money or other property, and of all persons claiming any right, title, or interest therein, order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery of the money or other property so held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States, or of the interest therein to which the Commission shall determine said claimant is entitled, to said claimant, his agent, or attorney.

"(c) Any claimant enumerated in the foregoing subsection (b) who is unable to obtain assent to the payment of the debt as provided therein may make application for the allowance of said debt by filing a petition therefor as provided for claimants under section 29 hereof, and the Commission shall proceed to adjudicate upon said claim under the same rules and regulations as it may provide for claimants under said section 29.

"(d) The Alien Property Custodian and the Treasurer of the United States shall not comply with any award or order of the Commission allowed to claimants under the foregoing subsections (b) and (c) until all of the awards of the Commission to claimants enumerated in section 29 herein have been paid or otherwise satisfied. Claimants under said subsections (b) and (c) shall be entitled to priority of payment according to the time of the filing of their respective claims.

"(e) All applications for the allowance of claims made to the President in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the trading with the enemy act, as amended, which have not, at the time the Commission meets for the first time as provided in section 21 hereof, been allowed or disallowed, shall be delivered over to the Commission; and all applications so pending shall be deemed to have been filed with the Commission as of such time. The Commission, upon the receipt of said applications, shall proceed to adjudicate upon such claims in accordance with the provisions hereof: Provided, That after the Commission meets for the first time, as provided in section 21 hereof, no further applications for the allowance of claims shall be received by the President under the said section 9, nor shall the President, on his own motion, dispose of any money or other property under the provisions of said section 9. The Commission is hereby authorized to allow any claim for debt which might have been allowed under said section 9, provided that any such claim shall be filed under the same terms and conditions as any other claim hereunder and subject to the same restrictions as provided in said section 9.

"(f) Nothing contained herein shall in anywise prejudice the rights of any claimant who has heretofore instituted or shall hereafter institute suit in equity in the district court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as provided in said section 9. No claim shall be prosecuted before the Commission if such suit in equity has theretofore been instituted in such district court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia asserting the same claim; and no suit shall be instituted in such district court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia if the same has theretofore been filed with the Commission: Provided, That any person who has heretofore instituted any such suit in a district court of the United States or in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the merits of which suit shall not have been determined by such court at the time of the approval of this act, may apply to such court for the dismissal of such suit, and upon the dismissal of the same may file his claim before the Commission.

"SEC. 31. (a) The sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any money or other property, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, heretofore conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him, shall be that provided by the terms of the trading with the enemy act as amended and the terms hereof; and in the event that such property has been or shall be sold or otherwise disposed of by the Alien Property Custodian shall be limited to and enforced against the net proceeds received therefrom and held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States, and no such money or other property, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, liquidation or other dealing therewith so held shall be returned, or otherwise disposed of, unless the lawful expenses incurred by the Alien Property Custodian in holding and administering the said money or other property to be returned, or otherwise disposed of, are first deducted therefrom or otherwise satisfied.

"(b) The return of any money or other property, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, or payment of any debt, in accordance with the provisions of the trading with the enemy act as amended, or the provisions hereof, shall operate as and be a full acquittance and discharge of the Alien Property Custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, and of the United States in respect to any and all claims for or interest in said money or other property or compensation or damage arising from the capture and administration of such property by the President or the Alien Property Custodian.

"SEC. 32. All money or other property held by the Alien Property Custodian or the Treasurer of the United States by virtue of the trading with the enemy act as amended shall be administered as provided in said act as amended until such time as the Commission may otherwise order the disposal of the same or as Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided, however, That no property shall hereafter be sold except to insure the prevention of waste and protect such property or to satisfy such taxes as are provided to be paid in an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1918, or to satisfy claims in accordance with the awards and directions of the Commission."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In order that the RECORD may show the position of the executive department of the Government, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that on July 29, seven days after that bill was introduced, the Secretary of State wrote a letter to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, explaining to him that he expected to negotiate an executive understanding with the German Government, which I think he refers to in this letter as a treaty, but which was not a treaty, in reference to the settlement of these claims. I ask that that letter, a copy of which I hold in my hand, may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, without reading, so that the RECORD may show the facts up to this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 29, 1922.

The Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NELSON: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of July 21, 1922, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 3852) "To amend an act entitled 'An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes,' approved October 6, 1917, as amended," and requesting in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate an expression of my opinion as to the advisability of the legislation contemplated by this measure.

For the purpose of indicating my views regarding the bill, it is unnecessary at this time to enter into a detailed discussion of its provisions. I understand that its general purpose is to provide for a commission composed of American citizens which is to pass on certain classes of claims of American citizens, and also on claims of the Government of the United States, for damages sustained as a result of the acts, during periods described in the bill, of either the former German Government or the former Austro-Hungarian Government, or their authorities, respectively.

In addition to the claims of the citizens of the United States, the bill embraces provision for claims made by the Government of the United States for "all its pensions or compensation in the nature of pensions to its naval and military victims of war, including members of its air force, whether mutilated, wounded, sick, or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims"; also for "the cost of assistance" by the Government of the United States "to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents"; and also for "allowances" by the Government of the United States "to the families and dependents of mobilized persons or persons serving with its forces."

Provision is made for the satisfaction of these claims, in accordance with a stated order of priority, out of the property of German and Austrian nationals held by the Alien Property Custodian.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that I am most anxious that a settlement of the claims of American citizens should be promptly effected. You undoubtedly appreciate that in addition to the difficulties which, as a result of political and economic conditions, have confronted the nations with which the United States was associated in the war in effecting settlement of claims against former enemy countries, the Government of the United States was obliged to deal with conditions incident to the conclusion of treaties with Germany, Austria, and Hungary to reestablish friendly relations with those nations.

Following the conclusion of such treaties, negotiations were entered into with Germany looking to the adjustment of the claims of our citizens pursuant to the rights of the United States recognized under the treaty concluded August 25, 1921, with that country. It is contemplated that a mixed commission on which Germany will have representation will be established to determine the amounts of these claims in accordance with the procedure usually governing matters of this kind.

I am glad to say that despite the recent difficulties in Germany which apparently have delayed the completion of the arrangement, gratifying progress has been made, and I believe that a satisfactory convention will shortly be signed. The negotiations with the German Government indicate a desire on its part to move as expeditiously as possible with a view to the consummation of the plans under consideration. It is manifest that legislation such as that contemplated by the bill in question would be embarrassing to the Executive in dealing with the matter of these claims, since the enactment of the bill into law would make it necessary to abandon present plans.

Apart from this effect of the passage of the bill, I may say that it seems to me entirely appropriate that the usual practice should be followed in the determination of international claims, and that Germany should have appropriate representation upon a mixed claims commission by which the amount of these claims shall be assessed. The bill seems to deal with the settlement of claims as if it were purely a domestic affair. But the claims are those of American citizens against Germany, Austria, and Hungary, and it has hitherto been contemplated, as the joint resolution of Congress approved July 2, 1921, makes clear, that these Governments shall make suitable provision for the satisfaction of these claims. But if these Governments are to make such provision, I should regard it as proper that they should have the opportunity of being represented on the claims commission by which the amount of the claims is to be fixed. I do not see that any different principle should be applied because we hold the private property of former enemies in pledge, but this situation, I should suppose, would rather make the course to which I have referred, if possible, still more important before resort were had to such property for satisfaction. To undertake to exclude a nation in a case like the present from any participation or voice in matters thus vitally affecting its interests and to deal with such matters by ex parte action would be, in my judgment, at variance with the principles and practice generally observed by nations in their relations with each other, and I should think it unfortunate if such a course were initiated by this Government.

I do not speak of the situation which would be disclosed if Germany refused to make an arrangement for a commission to act in the assessment of claims in a manner which would be reasonable and satisfactory to our Government. I am, however, speaking of the present situation, in which negotiations are pending and where there is every reason to believe that they will shortly be concluded.

I shall not discuss the plan, which the bill sets forth, of confiscating the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian by providing for its application not only to the payment of the claims of American citizens but also to the claims of this Government for pensions and allowances, as described in the bill. While the latter class of claims is to be postponed in payment to the former, all are to be satisfied under the provisions of the bill, and it is manifest that the entire private property of former enemy nationals in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian will not be sufficient for the purposes stated.

Up to this time Congress has not committed itself to a confiscatory policy. In the joint resolution of July 2, 1921, Congress provided that the property should be retained by the United States and no disposition thereof should be made, except as had been or might be provided by law, until such time as Germany and Austria and Hungary "shall have respectively made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said Governments, respectively," of American citizens who have been damaged through the action of these Governments, as stated, and until compliance with the other provisions of the resolution. In other words, so far as the claims of American citizens are concerned, the properties in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, or their proceeds if liquidated, are to be held virtually in pledge until Germany, Austria, and Hungary, respectively, make suitable provision for the satisfaction of these claims.

As I have said, this implies a fair opportunity to make the required provision. When the amount of these claims has been determined, the question of the satisfaction can be taken up at once, Congress, of course, reserving its authority to deal with the question in the light of the event. I am of the opinion that this course can be followed quite as expeditiously as the course contemplated by the bill, and I should hope that in any case no measure of confiscation would be adopted until there had been a failure, after reasonable opportunity, to provide for the satisfaction of the claims of American citizens, duly ascertained. I remain, my dear Senator NELSON,

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, when I introduced the bill on the 20th day of July I had not heard from any source that the Secretary of State was negotiating with the German Government in regard to this matter at all, and, so far as any determination was arrived at, it had not been determined at that time, because it was not until some time after the date of the letter of the Secretary of State, the 29th of July, that a final determination was reached between the State Department and the German Government in regard to this matter and the executive agreement in regard to these claims was entered into. That was after the Senate of the United States had taken jurisdiction of this matter; it had been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on the Judiciary had entered on an investigation of it. So, broadly speaking, the matter was pending before the Congress of the United States, and the executive branch of the Government, by executive agreement with Germany, took it out of the control of the Congress.

I think it is fair to the executive branch of the Government to say that I have heard that before that time the matter was under discussion; that there were conversations going on between the German Chancellor and the Secretary of State; but no conclusion had been reached before we took jurisdiction of this matter.

After the letter of the Secretary of State had been filed with the Senator from Minnesota I wrote a letter to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, stating my viewpoint in regard to the matter, and I now intend to make a statement to the Senate which will substantially follow what I said to the Senator from Iowa. I do that because it is a more convenient way to make the statement and bring the matters to the attention of the Senate, and it will probably take less time than if I attempted to do it in some other way.

I wish to say at the outset that I do not believe any precedent exists in our history which may be termed applicable to the present situation. Presumably, the President has relied on the fact that representatives of the State Department have at divers times in the past entered into certain agreements for the adjustment of claims of American citizens against foreign governments, which agreements were not submitted to the Senate for its ratification.

Passing over the question whether in general such agreements are binding upon this Nation in the absence of the Senate's confirmation, I wish to point out that usually such agreements have covered only pecuniary claims of individuals arising in times of peace.

I repeat, presumably the President has relied on the fact that representatives of the State Department have at divers times in the past entered into certain agreements for the adjustment of claims of American citizens against foreign governments, which agreements were not submitted to the Senate for its ratification.

Passing over the question whether in general such agreements are binding upon this Nation in the absence of the Senate's confirmation, I wish to point out that usually such agreements have covered only pecuniary claims of individuals arising in times of peace, have met with the approval of the claimants, and have involved no obligation on the part of the United States other than the relinquishment of the claim.

President Buchanan, in submitting the claims agreement with Venezuela, signed January 14, 1859, to the Senate, said:

> Usually it is not deemed necessary to consult the Senate in regard to similar instruments relating to private claims of small amount when the aggrieved parties are satisfied with their terms.

The principal executive agreements involving more than one claim that have come to my attention are: The agreement with Spain of February 11–12, 1871, for the adjustment of certain claims of citizens of the United States on account of wrongs and injuries committed by authorities of Spain in the island of Cuba; the agreement with Venezuela of February 17, 1903, for the adjustment of all claims owned by citizens of the United States against Venezuela which had not at that time been settled by diplomatic agreement or by arbitration; and the protocol with China of September 7, 1901, for the adjustment of claims growing out of the so-called Boxer troubles of 1900.

No President, to my knowledge, has ever entered into such an agreement providing for the adjustment of claims arising out of war. I am sure I am correct about that.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know who is the author of the document the Senator has been reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am the author of it.

Mr. LODGE. Then, if the Senator will allow me, the Boxer claims arose directly out of a war in which we were engaged.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, Mr. President; that is where the Senator is making his mistake.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think I am.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The situation was saved by the admiral in command of the American fleet not firing on the Chinese ships when the troops went up the harbor, and we always claimed, in the Boxer case, that we had not been in technical war with China. Of course, the other powers occupied a different position.

Mr. LODGE. We sent troops to Peking, and were the first to storm the city.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We sent the troops to Peking to guard our embassy.

Mr. LODGE. They blew in the gates in doing it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I do not mean to say that some riots did not occur, but the position of our Government in reference to this Chinese trouble has always been that we did not engage in war, and the result itself was proof. The Chinese minister remained in Washington during the entire time, and we never concluded any treaty of peace with China after the difficulties were over, and there was no declaration of war, either on the part of the President or of Congress. So, technically speaking, what I say is correct.

Mr. LODGE. Technically it was not a war, but it grew out of war just the same.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Where we have had a war there has never been an adjustment of claims in the history of this country, except with the consent of the Congress or of the Senate acting with the Executive.

I repeat, no President, to my knowledge, has ever entered into such an agreement providing for the adjudication of claims arising out of war. Perhaps this is due to the fact that the President, with but a few nominal exceptions, has never entered into an agreement for the adjustment of a private claim of a foreigner against the United States without securing the approval of the Senate, but I think that it is chiefly because the settlement of war claims is necessarily part and parcel with the treaty of peace which, of course, under our Constitution, must be submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent.

For a discussion of the foregoing question I wish to refer the Senate respectfully to the Digest of International Law, by John B. Moore, volume 5, page 211; Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement, by Samuel B. Crandall, second edition, page 108; "The treaty-making powers under the Constitution," by John W. Foster, Yale Law Journal, December, 1901; "Treaties and executive agreements," by John B. Moore, Political Science Quarterly, September, 1905; and "International agreements without the advice and consent of the Senate," by James F. Barnett, Yale Law Review, November and December, 1905.

Mr. President, I have excerpts here from most of these papers, and they set out the cases where the President has made executive agreements, as well as those where he has not. These excerpts are not entirely my way, but I want the full information to go to the Senate. I have had them compiled for my information, and I think the Senate is entitled to the information, and if the Senate does not want it, the country is entitled to it. So I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks these papers may be printed in 8-point type as an appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. An examination of the agreements made in relation to private claims against foreign Governments discloses that the practice of their submission or nonsubmission to the Senate has not been uniform.

However, as I said above, I do not think that we can rely upon precedents in the present situation for, needless to say, in none of the cases heretofore considered in the history of our Government were there involved American claims running into hundreds of millions of dollars, secured by approximately $346,000,000 worth of collateral.

Assuming that the President enjoys authority to negotiate executive agreements under usual circumstances, I am doubtful if he has such authority at the present time with respect to the claims of our Nation and its citizens against the former enemy Governments.

It is impossible to divorce the disposition of the enemy property held by the Alien Property Custodian and the settlement of claims of our citizens against the former enemy Governments.

Congress, in enacting the trading with the enemy act, specifically provided—and I ask the Senate to bear in mind what I am saying here, because here is where I claim the law is that has been ignored by the executive branch of the Government. Congress, in enacting the trading with the enemy act, specifically provided in section 12 thereof that any claim of an enemy or ally of enemy to any money or other property received and held by the Alien Property Custodian or deposited in the United States Treasury shall be settled as Congress shall direct.

That is your law. That is the law of your Government. I am not criticizing the President personally. He had but little to do with the matter. It was negotiated by his Secretary of State. But that is your law, which you passed and made the law of the land, yet it is ignored entirely in this executive agreement, to start and carry out which you now propose to appropriate $180,000. Is the Executive of the Government above the law of the land? Should we pass the matter without consideration when it is pending before a committee of the Senate which will later on have the opportunity to properly consider it and report the facts and the legal status of the matter to the Senate for its consideration? It seems to me it would be unwise to rush into the matter without consideration before the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am disposed to agree with the Senator in his general observation as to lack of authority upon the part of the Executive to commit the Government and the nationals of the Government to the policy to which this protocol or agreement seems to commit us, but if I understand the terms of the trading with the enemy act—and it is a long time since I read it—my recollection is that it intended to deal with the property of German nationals situated in the United States which might be seized under the terms of the provisions of that act, and held by the Alien Property Custodian, and did not attempt to deal with the claims which American citizens might have against the German nationals or the German Government because of tort of either the German Government or the German nationals. I may be in error.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just read to the Senate an excerpt from section 12 of the trading with the enemy act. Of course, I agree with the Senator that when the trading with the enemy act was passed the matter of which he speaks was the matter mainly in the mind of Congress, but the statement which I have read is in the law. I am not guessing at it. I have read section 12 of the law.

While this congressional reservation refers to the claims of the former owners of the property concerned, its purpose was to insure the retention of such property as a pledge for the satisfaction of such claims of our citizens as might arise during the war in case Congress determined to so apply it. The inseparable connection between the disposition of enemy property and the settlement of such claims is further apparent from the consideration given these two subjects in the treaties of Versailles, Trianon, and St. Germain-en-Laye, the pertinent section of the first-named treaty being section 4, part 1, from which I quote the following:

ART. 297. (h) Except in cases where by application of paragraph (f) restitutions in specie have been made, the net proceeds of sales of enemy property, rights, or interests wherever situated, carried out either by virtue of war legislation or by application of this article, and in general all cash assets of enemies, shall be dealt with as follows:

"(1) As regards powers adopting section 3 and the annex thereto, the said proceeds and cash assets shall be credited to the power of which the owner is a national through the clearing office established thereunder; any credit balance in favor of Germany resulting therefrom shall be dealt with as provided in article 243.

"(2) As regards powers not adopting section 3 and the annex thereto, the proceeds of the property, rights, and interests, and the cash assets of the nationals of allied or associated powers held by Germany shall be paid immediately to the person entitled thereto or to his Government; the proceeds of the property, rights, and interests, and the cash assets of German nationals received by an allied or associated power shall be subject to disposal by such power in accordance with its laws and regulations and may be applied in payment of the claims and debts defined by this article or paragraph 4 of the annex hereto. Any property, rights, and interests, or proceeds thereof or cash assets not used as above provided may be retained by the said allied or associated power, and if retained the cash value thereof shall be dealt with as provided in article 243. * * *"

Of course, in those treaties it was assumed that the various claims set forth as reparations claims would be taken care of through the Reparation Commission. However, as such treaties confirmed to the United States the right to dispose of enemy property as it saw fit, there can be no objection to the enforcement of reparations claims against enemy property if the Congress should so elect.

When the Congress passed the joint resolution declaring war to be at an end, which was approved by the President on July 2, 1921, it carefully reserved to itself all of the rights as to the ultimate disposition of enemy property that it had specified in the trading with the enemy act and which had been confirmed to it by the treaties of Versailles, Trianon, and St. Germain-en-Laye. Section 5 of that resolution provides that all such property should be—retained by the United States of America and no disposition thereof made, except as shall have been heretofore or specifically hereafter shall be provided by law until such time as the Imperial German Government and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, or their successor or successors, shall have respectively made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said Governments—as specified therein, and shall have complied with the other conditions therein set forth.

Now, I want to say another thing in passing. The executive agreement which it is proposed to start to functioning now only relates to German claims. It does not involve and has no representation on it of the claims against Austria and against Hungary, and yet the Alien Property Custodian holds property of those citizens in pledge under treaty rights with their Governments. Yet you are proposing to start a one-sided commission to decide only a part of the matter. You may not think that is material, but I want to point out to you a class of claims where it will become very material. Of course, since I introduced the bill I have had a number of letters on the subject, and a number of claims have been called to my attention in which I have no interest except that the claimants are citizens of the United States, coming from States other than my own, and have a right to a fair day in court in the disposition of their matters. One of those cases, which is an actual case, is as follows:

There was a ship of commerce, not a warship, belonging to citizens of the United States and flying the American flag. It was sunk by an enemy torpedo in the Mediterranean sea. The owners are unable to prove whether the torpedo came from a German or an Austrian source. They knew it was an enemy, of course. They were fired on and sunk. They are to be sent to this one-sided court, which is to be inaugurated to-day if the pending appropriation bill is enacted into law. The burden of proof will be on them to show that their claim is against Germany. Of course, they have a claim. It was a peaceful commercial ship carrying no munitions of war, sailing in the neutral waters of the Mediterranean, and was sunk by an enemy torpedo, but they would be put to the test of proving that the torpedo came from a German ship and not an Austrian ship. If they fail to make the proof—and they must fail, because the torpedo boat was under the surface of the sea—they will then be asked if they have filed a claim against Austria and to prove their case there and that the torpedo was an Austrian torpedo, which, of course, they can not do, whereas, if the bill which I have introduced and is pending before the Senate is enacted into law, they could prove that their vessel was shot down by the enemy, and the question of whether the claim was against Germany or Austria would be a question for those Governments to prove and settle between themselves. No question of rights of that kind is taken care of in the proposed executive agreement. No agreement with Austria-Hungary has been provided for. When we get through with the German commission, we will then have to go along and appoint some more commissions to take up the other side of the question instead of having a case settled by law and having one final settlement of the whole matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know the terms of the agreement which the President has entered into, and if under the terms of the agreement the President seeks to bind American nationals so that if they do not submit their claims before the proposed commission they will be forever barred? Is there no option at all upon their part to refrain from submitting their claims against Germany to a tribunal which they have no voice in establishing?

Mr. LODGE. The agreement is printed in pamphlet form, if the Senator from Utah desires to see it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have the agreement on my desk, and it has been ordered printed as a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I wish to say to the Senator that the President could not bind American nationals; he has no power to do so. He does not try to do it. He merely steps in as a good wisher, without their request, carries them into a tribunal, and invites them to come and settle their claims before the tribunal without any authority of law. When a claim shall be settled in such manner the settlement will not be binding upon them or upon anybody else.

Why this agreement was made I can not tell. There has been no such performance, I think, in the annals of history, that a government, without the request of its nationals, should inject or force itself into an agreement with an enemy government or a former enemy government, without the knowledge of anybody outside the State Department, for the settlement of American claims along lines about which the claimants knew nothing whatever. That is a very different question from the one cited as a precedent. Of course, if I should be injured in a foreign country, either in person or in my property, and I go before the Secretary of State of my Government and say that I have been injured in a foreign country, and they will not accord me right treatment, and I ask the Secretary of State to use his good offices to settle my claim, then the Secretary of State would be acting as my agent. He presents my claim to the foreign government and negotiations ensue. The Secretary of State does not have to come to Congress in the matter. It is an individual matter; exercising the power of our Government, he merely presents the claim to another government. When I approve of his settlement, nobody else is involved; it is an individual settlement, and largely an individual matter in most cases, even if there may be more than one party involved. Here, however, is a war condition that is settled, not individual rights; here is a great fund that is being held in trust for the payment of these claims if the Congress so orders, that action being agreed to by both governments in a solemn treaty compact, and with the understanding that the Congress shall pass laws to determine how this matter shall be settled.

Then we find the Secretary of State, without consulting the claimants, without consulting the Congress, without knowledge of anybody in the United States, enters into an executive agreement.

I shall not pass on the legal aspects of it, but the Secretary of State, in a letter that was read from the desk this morning, stated that this agreement will take care of claims such as those growing out of the sinking of the Lusitania. Mr. President, that letter came after I had printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter which had been written to me by a very able lawyer representing the estates of men who had been killed when the Lusitania was destroyed, and which stated that the executive agreement was not broad enough to protect their claims, to give them a standing in this executive tribunal which had been set up.

I will not say whether the lawyer who wrote the letter was right or wrong; his letter was written before the Secretary of State said anything about it. Of course, the lawyer is interested; he is not adverse to the Secretary of State, but he represents claimants, the widow and children of the husband and father who was sacrificed in the sinking of the Lusitania, and he would like to have a day in court. He pointed out in his letter that, in his judgment, this executive agreement only relates to property matters and to personal injuries in cases where those who have been injured have set up claims, but not for losses by death; and I am inclined to think he is right about it. That, however, is neither here nor there; it may be that he is right or it may be that the Secretary of State is right; but are we going to determine that question this morning by ordering this tribunal to proceed by giving it $180,000, before the Judiciary Committee has a chance fairly to investigate this matter and present it with a fair understanding to the Senate?

That is what I am arguing this morning; I am not arguing as to who is right or who is wrong about this matter. I am merely arguing against starting this tribunal to functioning when careful consideration has not been given to the question involved here. In a matter affecting thousands of American citizens and millions of dollars' worth of claims and millions of dollars' worth of property, it is proposed to rush on blindly and organize the court, without knowing a blamed thing about the issue which is involved.

Mr. President, this section of the joint resolution was incorporated in the separate treaties of peace with Germany, Austria, and Hungary. It was stipulated in each of those treaties of peace, respectively, that while the United States was privileged to participate in the Reparations Commission and in any other commission established under the treaties of Versailles, St. Germain-en-Laye, and Trianon, or any agreements supplemental thereto, the United States was not bound to participate in any such commission unless it so elected. Nevertheless, the Senate in ratifying each of those treaties of peace reserved for legislation by the Congress the matter of the disposition of enemy property and the adjustment of the claims of the United States and its citizens by ratifying such treaties subject to a certain understanding.

I should like the Senate to listen to that understanding. I think that some votes in the Senate which were cast for the German treaty would not have been cast to ratify that treaty if there had not been written into the German treaty the clause which it is now proposed to repudiate. I will read it. It is as follows:

> That the United States shall not be represented or participate in any body, agency, or commission, nor shall any person represent the United States as a member of any body, agency, or commission in which the United States is authorized to participate by this treaty, unless and until an act of the Congress of the United States shall provide for such representation or participation; * * * that the rights and advantages which the United States is entitled to have and enjoy under this treaty embrace the rights and advantages of nationals of the United States specified in the joint resolution or in the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, to which this treaty refers.

Mr. President, that was the solemn declaration of the Senate of the United States in ratifying the treaty of peace with Germany, and is the law of the land; and yet this morning we are asked to repudiate our own action, to repudiate entirely our own position in regard to this question by making an appropriation to allow an executive commission to function without authority of law.

To summarize, both branches of Congress by their action on the trading with the enemy act reserved to the Congress the ultimate disposition of enemy property, and by the joint resolution reasserted their legislative authority over that subject; the Senate by the exercise of its treaty power has since reaffirmed those reservations in the trading with the enemy act and the joint resolution with an express proviso that, except, pursuant to an act of the Congress, no representative of the United States should sit on any body, agency, or commission dealing with matters covered by the separate treaties of peace.

Therefore, if the adjustment of these American claims, so intimately connected with the disposition of enemy property, is arranged by a purely executive agreement, it is hardly necessary to point out the possibility that the Congress, when it comes to the disposition of enemy property, may reopen the matter of the adjustment of American claims.

I wish to emphasize that any such a difficulty will be obviated by the passage of the bill I have introduced providing for a commission composed solely of American citizens to adjust such claims; but, of course, if my viewpoint that it should be an American commission is not accepted by law, such a commission may be provided as the Congress may determine. The President's viewpoint as to the kind of a commission you desired may be accepted, but what I am contending for this morning is that it shall be done by law and not in violation of every law placed on the statute books.

The commission would have jurisdiction to hear all claims against Germany, Austria, and Hungary. There is not contemplated a special commission to hear such claims as may be presented against each of these nations, respectively. Further, the bill would enable the Congress at one time to enact legislation not only caring for American claims, but also providing for the ultimate disposition of enemy property.

I wish to call attention again to the fact that the State Department has acted without any law whatever in the making of the agreement it has entered into with the German chancellor; but more than that, it has made the agreement not only without a law to authorize it but without the knowledge or consent of the claimants themselves. Of course, I have not heard from all of them, but I have heard from many of the American claimants, since I wrote the bill referred to and since the action of the President was taken, protesting against the President's action and asking that a tribunal established by law might function in the matter, showing conclusively that the action of the State Department was not with the consent of the American claimants.

That, Mr. President, makes it a very different case from the case that may be cited—and a number of which I have already put in the RECORD—where I as a claimant, for instance, have suffered at the hands of the nationals of a foreign country or at the hands of a foreign Government, and I go to the State Department and ask the State Department to represent me as my agent to settle the claim. There are numerous instances of that kind, and I have cited a number of them in the RECORD, and they will be printed. That, however, is not the issue here. There is no law to authorize this action by the State Department, and there is no request by the men who have the claims that the matter shall be dealt with in this way; and, as I said, some of the claimants who have lost their fathers and their mothers believe that the terms of the settlement as provided for by the Secretary of State are not broad enough and full enough to allow them to present their cases to the tribunal. Do you think they are going to be satisfied if finally the arbitrator decides that the terms of the agreement are not broad enough, and they are thrown out? Had you not better stop this morning, in your mad rush to appropriate this money, long enough to give the Judiciary Committee of the Senate an opportunity to investigate this matter and report back to you what the status is?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KING. I may be anticipating the position which will be taken by those who are the proponents of this proposition; the Senator may have answered this question while I was called from the Chamber a few moments ago; but can it be contended that the President in negotiating the agreement which he did, and the State Department in proceeding as it is now proceeding or seeking to proceed, were merely executing the terms of the treaty entered into between the United States and Germany—terms which devolved upon the President and upon Germany the procedure which they are now seeking to carry into effect?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know what theory somebody may entertain, but such a position would be absolutely in contravention of everything that has been written into the law or written into a treaty. Mr. Bradley Palmer, who represented the Government in reference to these claims at Versailles, testified before the Foreign Relations Committee and said distinctly, without contradiction, that the final determination of how these claims and this property should be settled rested with the Congress of the United States. Nobody disputed it. It was accepted, and that was accepted as the status when the Foreign Relations Committee reported to the Senate the separate treaty of peace with Germany, ratifying the clauses in the treaty of Versailles relating to this property of American claimants, that it is a matter for the Congress to determine; yet we find the Executive making an agreement, without the request of the American claimants, without the request of the Congress, without anything in our treaties or the laws to justify it, and going on to proceed to consummate it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, has the Senator the testimony of Mr. Palmer before him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not, but it has been published.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not remember particularly what he said. My recollection of the treaty itself, and of the testimony that came before the committee, was that the United States Government could elect to take its proceeding either under the treaty or in any other way it pleased. It was not stated that it was for Congress to decide, but for the Government of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He did say what the Senator says, but that is not all he said. He also said that the final disposition of this whole matter rested in the hands of the Congress of the United States. If the Senator has any doubt about it, while I have not the document lying on my desk, if he will have a page get a copy of the hearings on the bill that I introduced before the subcommittee of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and read the testimony of Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian, who was first in charge, he will see that Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer quoted the position of Mr. Bradley Palmer, who represented us at Versailles, and quoted him distinctly on this point, that it was a matter for the Congress to determine.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My recollection goes back further than the testimony of Mr. Bradley Palmer. My recollection goes back to conversations had with those who were present in Paris at the time this treaty was negotiated; and all that our negotiators intended to do was not to be bound to submit these claims to a mixed tribunal, but for the Government of the United States—not the Congress, but the Government—to have the right to elect whether it would have the matter decided before a mixed tribunal or in some other way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will get that testimony he will refresh his mind on what Mr. Palmer said. I do not know what other people have said. Mr. Palmer was the man who represented us in reference to this particular issue; but that does not make any difference. Taking the Senator's construction of it, he said that it should be decided by the Government of the United States. The only way that the Government of the United States can act is in law. The President of the United States may act, as Executive, as my agent when I have a claim and present my claim to a tribunal; but the President of the United States can not act for me and bind me against my will and consent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me that if the United States enters into a treaty with another country providing a method of adjusting matters, the President is the one who can take the initiative in operating under that treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, certainly, if it does; but the only treaty it has entered into is the German treaty, and the German treaty relates back to the treaty of Versailles, and adopts the claims paragraph of the treaty of Versailles. The Senator from Nebraska was probably out of the Chamber when I reviewed that matter this morning; but those provisions in the treaty of Versailles do not give the Executive any power to act in this matter. As Mr. Bradley Palmer pointed out before the Foreign Relations Committee, it is left for the Congress of the United States to make laws concerning it. That is the only way you can do it, and you are simply going to open Pandora's box. Now, I do not say this will happen, but it probably will:

Here are claims filed before the State Department that I understand, on their face, amount to a billion of dollars. Of course, I take it that they will not amount to that much when any tribunal finally reaches a conclusion, because some of them are claims sounding in damages for destruction of life and property, and perhaps they have claimed more than the court will find due; but when you come as a practical question to operate on this case, your presidential, Executive order commission goes out to function in the matter, and it finds that A has a claim against the German Government, and A is satisfied, and he accepts the finding. It finds that B has no claim against the German Government. B is not satisfied, and does not accept the finding and the commission goes on through the alphabet ad infinitum in reference to thousands and thousands of claims, rejecting one and accepting the other. Then, when you come down to the final settlement of this matter, it requires congressional action to dispose of this pledge you have, this alien property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. It can not be done by the Executive.

The Executive does not claim that he can dispose of it. It is fixed by law in the Alien Property Custodian, and when you come to dispose of it, you have to do so by action of the Congress of the United States, with the approval of the President. Of course, the bill that I have introduced proposed to have a commission find these claims and give Germany a chance to pay them. If Germany pays them and Austria and Hungary pay them, give them back their property. That is what the bill I have introduced proposes; but if they do not pay them, then we operate on the property that we have here.

If the claims commission appointed by the President makes a finding and finds that certain American citizens have just claims, I take it, of course, that the President will ask the German Government—of course, the Austrian and Hungarian Governments are not yet represented; they may be at a later time—the President will ask the German Government, so far as those claims are concerned, to pay them; and if they do not pay them, what are you going to do? Why, if those claims that his joint commission holds are good are to be operated on without the German Goverument paying the money, it will be necessary to come to Congress to get a law to pay them out of his alien property. Now, I want you to go with me just a step further. I said we would consider that the claim of A was found good, and the claim of B was turned down by this presidential commission. Do you think B, your constituent, is going to stay at home in his town and consent to the turning down of his claim by a commission with whose appointment he had nothing to do, that he did not invite, and that he probably will say was unfair, whether it was unfair or not? You know those cases. He will proclaim that it was unfair, and he will come here to you and say that when you go to dispose of this German property he wants you to provide for the payment of his claim out of this property, as well as the other fellow's claim; and what will you do? You will have a Pandora's box in the House of Representatives and in the Senate of the United States in connection with this matter. You know you will. You know what claims are.

Talk about a "pork-barrel" bill, as they used to call the river and harbor bill sometimes, when every fellow got in his item. In a situation of this kind where the claims of American citizens to the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars are involved, you will have something a great deal worse than a pork-barrel bill. I say that if the Congress of the United States is wise, it is not going to blind itself and back into this situation without knowledge of what is going to happen. It will establish by law what it is going to do, and bind not only the Government of the United States, but its nationals, its citizens, by the action of Congress before it starts into this matter, not afterwards.

Of course, I do not believe in this executive commission appointed by the President. I think he has made a mistake. I do not think he has gone at it in the right way; but if you think so, if you think his commission is broad enough to cover this question; if you think it is the wise conclusion to reach—that it shall be a mixed tribunal limited to the terms provided in the order of the President—then, I say to you, for heaven's sake make it the law of the land now by congressional action, so that it will bind your Government and bind your nationals now. Make them go into the court and settle the claims there, once and for all, and do not have this proposition decided without law, without any binding effect, by a mere Executive order, and then have it come back here to hang around the necks of the Congress of the United States for the next generation to come.

There is not any question about that, Mr. President. I have my own viewpoint about it. I think we should decide this question in a different way from the position taken by the President; but I do know that if you proceed in this way you bind nobody. You are only creating trouble; and after a decision is made by the President's commission, and it comes back here for final action, you will have to make it all over again, and you will have citizens from every part of the United States knocking at your door, demanding your consideration of their claims.

I am not asking this morning that the Senate decide whether the President is right or wrong. All I am asking the Senate to do is to strike out of this bill an appropriation and to give the Judiciary Committee of the Senate an opportunity to investigate and report on a matter of legislation pending before them, and then let that come up and be presented to the Senate as a matter of legislation, considered by a legislative committee, and not have it injected into the Senate as a mere appropriation, without warrant of law, by the Committee on Appropriations.

"SEC. 57. Adjustment and settlement of pecuniary claims of citizens against foreign Governments: The President, being intrusted with the right of conducting all negotiations with foreign Governments, is the sole judge of the expediency of instituting, conducting, or terminating them in respect of reclamations for injuries sustained by citizens abroad. Agreements for the adjustment or settlement of pecuniary claims of citizens against foreign Governments, which meet with the approval of the claimants, and by which no obligation, except to relinquish the claim, is assumed on the part of the United States, are not usually submitted to the Senate.[19] President Buchanan, in submitting to the Senate, February 9, 1860, an agreement with Venezuela, signed January 14, 1859, for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States as the result of their expulsion by the Venezuelan authorities from the Aves Island, said: 'Usually it is not deemed necessary to consult the Senate in regard to similar instruments relating to private claims of small amount when the aggrieved parties are satisfied with their terms.' In the particular instance, it was thought advisable on account of the unstable condition of the Venezuelan Government to give the agreement a formal ratification with the advice and consent of the Senate.[20]

"The agreement may be recorded by an exchange of notes, or it may be embodied in a protocol or memorandum. Instances of adjustment and direct settlement are numerous. A notable instance is that of the Mora claim against Spain, finally settled by the agreement of August 10, 1895, for the payment by Spain of the sum of 1,500,000 gold pesos. An agreement for the settlement and payment of the claim had originally been reached by exchange of notes in 1886, but the Spanish Cortes failed to vote the necessary appropriation. The Congress of the United States, by a joint resolution approved March 2, 1895, requested the President to insist upon the payment of the sum so agreed upon, with interest from the date when payment should have been made under the agreement.[21] Another notable instance of agreement for direct settlement is recorded in notes exchanged May 28, 1881, between Sir Edward Thornton, British minister, and Mr. Blaine, Secretary of State, in which the Government of Great Britain agreed to pay, and the Government of the United States agreed to receive, the sum of £15,000, in full satisfaction of claims of American fishermen for injuries sustained in their fishing operations on the coasts of Newfoundland, with particular reference to the Fortune Bay episode of January 6, 1878. These claims grew out of mob enforcement of local regulations alleged by the Government of the United States to have been in violation of the fishery liberties secured to inhabitants of the United States under the treaty with Great Britain of 1818.[22]

"Of important agreements for the submission to arbitration of such claims, made and carried into effect without the advice and consent of the Senate, mention may be made of those recorded in notes exchanged, or protocols of agreement signed, as follows: February 11–12, 1871, claims of citizens of the United States against Spain for injuries committed by Spanish authorities in Cuba;[23] August 17, 1874, claims of citizens against Colombia for the seizure of the Montijo; June 13, 1891, claims of American citizens and British subjects against Portugal on account of the recision by the Portuguese Government of the concession to the Lourenco Marques Railroad Co.; July 6, 1897, claim of the Cheek estate against Siam;[24] May 28, 1884; May 24, 1888; and October 18, 1899, claims of Pelletier and Lazare, Von Bokkelen, and Metzger & Co., respectively, against Haiti; March 14, 1870, claims against Brazil resulting from the wreck of the Canada; September 6, 1902, claims of Brenner et al. against Brazil; April 28, 1902, claim of Sala & Co. against the Dominican Republic; January 31, 1903, certain questions as to the time and manner of payments to be made by the Dominican Republic to the San Domingo Improvement Co.; February 23, 1900, claim of Robert H. May against Guatemala and the counterclaim of Gautemala against May; March 2, 1897, claims of Charles Obelander and Barbara Messenger against Mexico; March 22, 1900, amounts to be awarded by Nicaragua to Orr and Laubenheimer and the Post-Glover Electric Co.; May 17, 1898, amount of damages to be awarded by Peru to Victor H. MacCord; December 19, 1901, claim of the Salvador Commercial Co. against Salvador; September 8 (August 26), 1900, claims against Russia for the detention of certain American schooners by Russian cruisers; May 22, 1902 (ratified by the Mexican Senate, May 30, 1902), the Pious Fund claim against Mexico; February 17, 1903, the unsettled claims of American citizens against Venezuela; May 7, 1903, the question of the preferential treatment of the claims of certain powers against Venezuela; February 13, 1909, the claims of the Orinoco Steamship Co., the Orinoco Corporation, and the United States & Venezuela Co. against Venezuela;[25] May 25, 1909, claim of George D. Emery Co. against Nica-

XXX.

"4. One of the principal duties of the Department of State relates to the protection of American citizens abroad. If the citizen receives an injury to person or property in a foreign country and the local tribunals or other authorities unjustly deny him redress, the department will as a rule present his claim to the Government of the delinquent State. If reparation takes the form, as it usually does, of a payment of money damages, the State Department, acting in behalf of the claimant, receives the money in trust for the latter. (37, 29 Stat. L. 28.) It may happen, however, that the foreign government is unwilling or unable to pay the claim immediately. In that case the representatives of the two governments may enter into an agreement setting forth the amount due and the date and terms of payment. This is, of course, a mere written acknowledgment of an existing indebtedness. Such were the agreements of May 1, 1852, with Venezuela (38 Butler, Treaty Making Power, II, 519), and May 24, 1897, with Chile (39 Foreign Relations U. S., 1900, p. 68). They were not submitted to the Senate for approval, nor would there be any reason for doing so. It often happens, however, that the foreign government disputes the facts or the law involved in the claim, and recourse may be had to arbitration to effect a settlement. The arbitral undertaking, styled a 'protocol of agreement,' usually names an arbitrator or provides a method for choosing one or more, as the case may be; stipulates as to matters of procedure, such as the submission of evidence and briefs of counsel; fixes a time limit within which the award is to be made, and provides that the award shall be final and conclusive. In certain cases the amount due, in the event of an award in favor of the claimant, is agreed upon in advance."

As was said by Mr. Cass, Secretary of State, in 1859: "It is not necessary to submit to the Senate for its formal approval conventions providing for the adjustment of private claims, unless such a course is indicated in the convention itself." (40 Wheaton's Int. Law (Lawrence), p. 456, note 154.) If the claimant is satisfied with the terms of the arrangement, third persons will have no particular interest in the transaction. Where arbitration is resorted to it is only another instrument in the hands of diplomacy for effecting a settlement.

Prior to 1870 these arbitral conventions were generally submitted to the Senate for approval. The reason for this seems to have been that they were either general in character, adjusting an accumulation of claims of many years' standing, or that the arbitral agreement represented only one of a number of matters adjusted by a particular treaty, which would necessarily require the constitutional assent of the Senate. So far as known no agreement referring to arbitration claims of foreigners against the United States has ever been entered into without the advice and consent of the Senate.

The following is a list of arbitration agreements which have been entered into by the President since 1870 and which were not referred to the Senate:

FOREIGN STATE, DATE, AND CHARACTER OF CLAIMS.

BRAZIL.

"March 14, 1870: Ship Canada, wrecked through the unlawful interference of Brazilian authorities.

COLOMBIA.

"August 17, 1874: Seizure and detention of steamship Montijo.

GUATEMALA.

"February 23, 1900: R. M. May, contract with Guatemalan Government.

HAITI.

"May 28, 1884: Unlawful arrest and imprisonment of A. Pelletier. Contract of A. H. Lazare with Haitian Government.

"March 20, 1885: Extending time limit for decision of arbitrator in above agreement.

"May 24, 1888: Unlawful imprisonment of C. A. Van Bokkelen.

"October 18, 1899: Seizure and sale of property of Metzger & Co. for nonpayment of taxes; also for contract claims against Haitian Government.

MEXICO.

"March 2, 1897: Injuries done to Oberlander and Messenger by Mexican citizens.

"May 22, 1902: The unpaid installments of interest due on the so-called Pious fund of the California. Referred to Hague tribunal.

PORTUGAL.

"June 13, 1891: Recission of contract of Lorenzo Marques Railroad.

NICARAGUA.

"March 24, 1900: Seizures of property of Orr & Laubenheimer et al. by Nicaraguan authorities.

PERU.

"May 17, 1898: Imprisonment and maltreatment of V. H. McCord by Peruvian authorities.

SPAIN.

"February 12, 1877: Injuries by person and property received by American citizens from Spanish authorities in island of Cuba.

"February 23, 1881: To terminate claims commission sitting under above agreement.

"December 14, 1882: Extending time of above.

"June 2, 1883: Extending time of above.

RUSSIA.

"August 26, 1900: Seizures by Russian cruisers of schooners James Hamilton Lewis et al. for illegal sealing.

SALVADOR.

"December 19, 1901: Claims of Salvador Commercial Co. for certain acts and grievances suffered.

VENEZUELA.

"February 17, 1903: All claims owned by citizens of the United States against Venezuela which have not been settled by diplomatic agreement or by arbitration.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

"January 31, 1903: Claims of San Domingo Improvement Co. et al., for relinquishment of certain railroad and other properties; also for bonds of Republic owed by claimants. (41 Moore, International Arbitrators, v. 4687, 4698, 4768, 4770, 4802–4808. Foreign Relations of U. S. 1900, Appendix I, 3; ibid., 1903, 804. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 13, 1905.)

"An important international engagement, entered into by the President alone, and which on account of its adjustment of claims of American citizens may be put under this head, was the final protocol signed by the allies at Peking September 7, 1901, after the termination of the Boxer uprising. It contained provisions for the payment of indemnity to American citizens, as well as to the subjects of other powers; it created an international commission to receive and distribute the indemnity; and assigned as security for payment the revenues of the Chinese maritime and other customs. It also contained provisions of a political character, such as the punishment of Chinese officials involved in the Boxer uprising, the razing of the Taku forts, the prohibition of the importation of arms and ammunition for two years, a definition of the limits of the legation quarter, a reform in the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the improvement of navigation of certain Chinese rivers, etc.

"[26] The claim was subsequently settled by direct agreement and a protocol of settlement signed September 18, 1909.

"[27] Note may also be made of the claims of the owners of the steamer Colonel Lloyd Aspinwall against Spain, submitted in 1870 (Moore, Int. Arb., II, 1013; Richardson, Messages, VII, 98); the claim of the owner of the bark Masonic against Spain, submitted in 1885 (Moore, Int. Arb. II, 1055, 1060); the claim for the seizure of the Good Return against Chile, submitted in 1873, which was subsequently settled by direct agreement (id., 1466–1468); the claim of Henry Savage against Guatemala, submitted by agreement signed May 4, 1864 (id., 1855, 1857); the claim of Doctor Ashmore against China, submitted in 1884 (id. 1857); and the claims of various citizens against Haiti, resulting from riots in Port au Prince in 1883 (id. 1850). See also For. Rel., 1904, p. 368; Moore, Int. Law Digest, I, 50–51. Of claims against the Government of the United States of nominal amounts adjusted by the Executive, note may be made of the claims of Zambrano, formally presented by the Mexican ambassador, and settled by the Secretary of State by the payment of $500 (For. Rel. 1904, pp. 481, 482), and the claim of Luciano Arestuche, settled by the payment to the Cuban Government of $500 (For. Rel. 1905, pp. 276, 277, 279). By an arrangement effected by exchange of notes between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, in 1900 (For. Rel. 1900, pp. 476, 627, 899, 902), the arbitrator under the treaty between those powers of November 7, 1899, was requested to include in his awards claims of foreigners not under the jurisdiction of the treaty powers, to which by the treaty he was limited. As the result of this arrangement the United States was found liable for claims of Danish subjects in the sum of $760 (Sen. Doc. No. 160, 59th Cong., 1st sess.), and of French subjects in the sum of $3,391.13 (H. Doc. No. 612, 59th Cong., 1st sess.). An act of Congress, approved June 30, 1906, made provision for the payment of these amounts. See for agreement between Great Britain and the United States that each should pay one-half of the amount found due German subjects (Sen. Doc. No. 85, 59th Cong., 1st sess.). The question of the fault of the U. S. S. San Jacinto for the collision with the French brig Jules et Marie on November 3, 1861, was referred by the Executive to a commission composed of American and French naval officers, with a naval officer of Italy as arbiter. It was found that the collision resulted through the fault of the San Jacinto, and that the sum of $9,500 would be an equitable allowance to the injured party (Richardson, Messages, VI, 142). By an act approved December 15, 1862, Congress made provision for the payment to the French Government of the amount so found due." (12 Stats. at L. 912.)

"Although stipulating a date for the withdrawal of the military forces of the allies from Peking, and therefore partaking of the character of a peace protocol, it can not be so regarded, because war in the legal sense had not existed between the allies and China. As has been pointed out, a peace protocol does not require the assent of the Senate, being an exercise of the war power intrusted to the President. But the agreement is preliminary and contemplates a subsequent embodiment of its terms in a formal treaty. The protocol of September 7, 1901, was to all intents and purposes a definite arrangement."

APPENDIX C.

[Excerpt from "The Treaty-Making Power Under the Constitution," by John W. Foster, Yale Law Journal, December, 1901.]

"* * * There are a class of executive acts of a diplomatic character which at first glance would seem to be an independent exercise of the treaty-making powef but which in a strict sense can not be so regarded. Of this class are agreements for the adjustment of claims of American citizens against foreign governments, which are often made by the Secretary of State without any reference of the agreements to the Senate. The most noted of these was the agreement of 1871, made with Spain for the adjustment by arbitration of the claims of American citizens arising out of the Cuban insurrection. The agreement, made by a simple exchange of notes, is included in an official volume of treaties (Treaties of the United States, 1889, p. 1025), but it was never submitted to the Senate for approval. Under this agreement claims to the amount of many millions of dollars were adjusted.

"A number of other agreements of a similar character have been made by successive Secretaries of State whereby specified claims of Americans have been submitted to arbitration. The practice has not been uniform with respect to the Senate. Sometimes such adjustments have taken the form of conventions which were submitted to the Senate and in other cases the same President has carried out the agreement without consulting that body. In the latter case he proceeds upon the accepted theory that all claims of private citizens against foreign governments are subject to political exigencies, and it is within the discretion of the Executive to urge them diplomatically upon the foreign government or not; but their submission is usually with the consent of the claimant.

"No case has yet occurred where the Executive has entered into an agreement for the adjustment by arbitration of the private claim of a foreigner against the United States without securing the approval of the Senate in the form of a convention. The reason for this may be that the Executive can not bind the Government to the payment of money. * * *"

1. QUESTION AS TO GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

"During November and December, 1904, and January, 1905, there were signed at Washington by Mr. Hay, on the part of the United States, and by the ministers of various other countries, 10 general treaties of arbitration. The treaties first concluded were those with France and Switzerland, which were signed on November 1, 1904. Then came treaties in the order of date with Portugal, Great Britain, Italy, Spain, Austria-Hungary, Mexico, and Sweden and Norway, that with Sweden and Norway being signed on January 20, 1905. All these agreements were duly submitted to the Senate. A similar treaty was afterwards signed with Japan; but, in view of the differences which had arisen as to the instruments previously negotiated, it was not transmitted to the Senate.

"All the treaties above mentioned were based upon the same model, namely, a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and France, which was concluded at London on October 14, 1903. The signing of this treaty was followed by the conclusion of numerous conventions between other European powers in precisely similar terms. The treaties signed by Mr. Hay varied from them only in the formal parts, the language defining the questions to be arbitrated and the mode of procedure being precisely the same.

"The substantive clauses of the American treaties, like those of the European treaties, were embraced in two articles. Of these, the first reads as follows:

"'Differences which may arise of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two contracting parties, and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the convention of the 29th July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honor of the two contracting States and do not concern the interests of third parties.'

"The second article reads thus:

"'In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special agreement defining clearly the matter in dispute and the scope of the powers of the arbitrators and fixing the periods for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the procedure.'

"While the treaties were pending before the Senate various questions were raised as to their probable effect. It was suggested, among other things, that they might require the United States to submit to arbitration claims against some of the individual States of the Union on account of repudiated or unpaid debts. In order to obviate this apprehension the President addressed a letter to Senator Cullom, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, setting forth his views as to the inadmissibility of such claims and giving an assurance that during his administration they would not be entertained. A more serious question afterwards arose.

"On January 20, 1905, there was signed at Santo Domingo City by Commander A. C. Dillingham, United States Navy, and Mr. Dawson, the American minister, on the one part, and by the Dominican Minister of Foreign Affairs on the other, a protocol under which the United States was to guarantee the integrity of the Dominican territory, undertake the adjustment of foreign claims, administer the finances on certain lines, and assist in maintaining order. As it was stipulated that the arrangement should take effect February 1, the inference was widely drawn that there existed an intention to treat the protocol as a perfected international agreement without submitting it to the Senate. Such an intention was soon afterwards disclaimed by the administration; but the incident resulted in the raising of the broad question as to the power of the President to enter into international agreements of any kind without the advice and consent of the Senate, and the discussion was soon found to involve the second article of the arbitration treaties. By this article, as we have seen, it was provided that the President should in each individual case, before appealing to the permanent court of arbitration, conclude a "special agreement," defining the matter in dispute and the scope of the arbitrators' powers and fixing the periods for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the procedure. As announced in the press, the position was taken by Senators that the "special agreement" required in each case must be in the form of a treaty duly submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent. The President, on the other hand, took the ground that the arbitration treaties, if approved by the Senate and afterwards ratified, would in themselves constitute complete legislative acts which it would be within his powers as Executive to carry into effect as occasion might arise; and that if a new treaty were required in each particular case, the general treaties would fail to accomplish their primary purpose and would in reality constitute a step backward rather than a step forward in the development of the practice of international arbitration by the United States. These views the President embodied in a letter to Senator Cullom, which was in the nature of a protest against the position which Senators were understood to have taken. On receiving this letter the Senate with only seven dissenting votes immediately amended the treaties by striking out of the second article the word "agreement" and substituting for it the word "treaty," so that it would be necessary in each individual case before proceeding to arbitration to conclude a special "treaty" defining the matter in dispute and the scope of the arbitrators' powers, as well as fixing the periods for the formation of the tribunal and the several stages of the procedure. When the treaties as thus amended were returned to the President it was announced that he would not submit them in their amended form to the other Governments concerned, but would consider the action of the Senate as constituting in principle a disapproval of them.

"As the record stands, issue was thus joined on the broad question whether it is within the power of the President to conclude any 'agreement,' or at any rate any arbitral agreement, with a foreign power without the advice and consent of the Senate. As regards this question, the President appears upon the affirmative side, and the Senate apparently upon the negative. No doubt, if the subject had been further discussed, the issue might have been brought within narrower limits. It will not be pretended by anyone that the President can make any and every kind of an international agreement without the cooperation of the Senate, for the Constitution expressly requires that 'treaties' shall be made by him

'by and with the advice and consent' of that body, signified by the approving vote of two-thirds of the Senators present. On the other hand, it can easily be demonstrated that the word 'treaties,' as used in the constitutional law of the United States, does not embrace any and every kind of international agreement.

2. THE TERMS "TREATY," "CONVENTION," "PROTOCOL."

"In diplomatic literature, the words 'treaty,' 'convention,' and 'protocol' are all applied, more or less indiscriminately, to international agreements. The words 'convention' and 'protocol' are indeed usually reserved for agreements of lesser dignity, but not necessarily so. In the jurisprudence of the United States, however, the term 'treaty' is properly to be limited, although the Federal statutes and the courts do not always so confine it, to agreements approved by the Senate. Such an agreement may be and often is denominated a 'convention,' and perchance might be called a 'protocol'; but it is also, by reason of its approval by the Senate, in the strict sense a 'treaty,' and possesses, as the product of the treaty-making process, a specific legal character. By the Constitution of the United States, 'treaty' is a 'supreme law of the land,' having the force of an act of congressional legislation and overriding any inconsistent provisions not only in the constitutions and laws of the various States but also in prior national statutes. It is at once an international compact and a municipal law, and in its latter character directly binds the courts and the individual inhabitants of the country. In this respect the legal system of the United States differs from that of most other governments, under which a 'treaty,' although it represents a binding international compact, becomes legally operative upon courts and individuals only when the legislature adopts it and enacts it into law. In England, for instance, an extradition treaty may be executed only where an act of Parliament already exists, or is passed, to render it effective; in the United States such a treaty may be immediately executed by virtue of its double character as an international compact and a municipal law. By reason of its added municipal character, a 'treaty' in the United States has a superior legal efficacy; but it is for the same reason peculiarly exposed to degradation by the action of the legislature, since the courts have held that it is, as a 'law,' subject to abrogation or 'repeal,' even by implication, by a later and inconsistent act of Congress. The international obligation may not be thus destroyed, but the Government of the United States is disabled from performing it.

6. THE SETTLEMENT OF PECUNIARY CLAIMS.

"Agreements of another class, the making of which has been considered to be within the competence of the Executive, are those providing for the settlement of pecuniary claims, especially of private individuals, against foreign Governments. Such an agreement the President, no doubt, may in any case submit to the Senate if he sees fit to do so, and we find, especially in former times, that this course was often taken.

(1) BY TREATY.

"Thus provision was made for the settlement of pecuniary claims, either directly or by means of arbitration, under article 6 of the treaty with Great Britain, commonly called the Jay treaty, of November 19, 1794, for the adjudication of claims of British subjects against the United States growing out of legal impediments interposed to the collection of debts under the treaty of peace of 1782–83; under article 7 of the same treaty for the adjudication of claims of citizens of the United States against Great Britain on account of violations of neutral rights and of claims of British subjects against the United States growing out of failures of neutral duty; under article 5 of the convention with Great Britain of October 20, 1818, for the arbitration of claims of citizens of the United States against the British Government growing out of the carrying away of slaves, in violation of article 1 of the treaty of Ghent; under the convention with Great Britain of February 8, 1853, for the arbitral adjustment of claims of the citizens of each country against the Government of the other; under the convention with Great Britain of July 1, 1863, for the adjudication of the claims of the Hudson Bay Co. and the Puget Sound Agricultural Co. against the United States; under articles 1–11, inclusive, of the treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, for the arbitration of the Alabama claims; under article 12 of the same treaty for the determination of claims of citizens of each country against the Government of the other, other than the Alabama claims, arising during the Civil War in the United States; under articles 20–25, inclusive, of the same treaty for the arbitration of the question what, if anything, was due to the British Government from the United States on account of the arrangement made with regard to the fisheries; under the convention of February 8, 1896, for the adjudication of British claims against the United States growing out of the Bering Sea controversy; and under the tripartite convention between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, of November 7, 1899, for the adjudication of the question of liability for the payment of claims of the citizens or subjects of the contracting parties growing out of the unwarranted military action of any of them in Samoa. By article 21 of the treaty with Spain, of October 27, 1795, provision was made for the adjudication of claims of citizens of the United States against Spain in consequence of the seizure of their vessels and cargoes by subjects of his Catholic majesty during the then recent war between Spain and France.

"Provision was made by the convention of August 11, 1802, for the adjudication of other claims of American citizens against Spain and of Spanish subjects against the United States, but, although the ratifications of this convention were afterwards exchanged, it was never carried into effect, and the subject to which it related was dealt with in the Florida treaty of February 22, 1819, by which all claims of the citizens of either country against the Government of the other were renounced and the United States undertook (article 11) to make satisfaction for the claims of its own citizens to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000. By article 9 of the same treaty the United States undertook to compensate the Spanish inhabitants of Florida for injuries suffered by the operations of the American Army in that Province. Claims against Spain arising during her war with her American colonies were directly settled by the Van Ness convention of February 17, 1834. Many claims on the part of citizens of the United States against France grew out of the wars in which that country was involved prior to the peace of Amiens. Some of these were settled under the indemnity convention of April 30, 1803, which forms one of the series of treaties relating to the Louisiana cession, as part of the price of which certain classes of the claims were assumed and paid by the United States. Subsequent claims against France, as well as certain claims of France against the United States, were directly settled by the Rives convention of July 4, 1831. A mutual adjustment of claims by the same countries through a mixed commission was accomplished under the convention of January 15, 1880. Claims of citizens of the United States against Denmark originating in the Napoleonic wars were directly settled by the treaty of March 28, 1830, as likewise were similar claims against Naples by the convention of October 14, 1832. Provision was made by the treaty of April 11, 1839, for the adjudication of claims of citizens of the United States against Mexico, and various claims which failed of adjustment under this convention were assumed and paid by the United States under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. By a convention of July 4, 1868, all claims of the citizens of either country against the other which had arisen since the signature of the last-named treaty were submitted to arbitration. Claims of citizens of the United States against Peru were directly settled by a convention signed at Lima on March 17, 1841. By a convention with the same country of December 20, 1862, the claims of the owners of the American vessels Georgiana and Lizzie Thompson against the Government of Peru were submitted to the King of the Belgians as arbitrator, but the claims were afterwards withdrawn by Mr. Seward and no decision was rendered. A convention for the mutual adjustment of claims as between the United States and Peru by means of a mixed commission was concluded on January 12, 1863. A similar convention was entered into on December 4, 1868. Claims of citizens of the United States against Brazil were directly settled by the convention of January 27, 1849.

"By a treaty signed on February 26, 1851, the claims of citizens of the United States against Portugal growing out of the destruction of the brig General Armstrong by the British at Fayal, in 1814, was submitted to Louis Napoleon as arbitrator. On September 10, 1857, a convention was concluded at Washington for the adjudication of claims of citizens of the United States against New Granada, especially of those growing out of the Panama riot of 1856, and the powers of the commission organized under this convention were extended by the convention of February 10, 1864. In 1821 a quantity of silver, representing the proceeds of sales of merchandise imported into Peru by the American bark Macedonian, was forcibly taken in the Valley of Sitaña by order of Lord Cochrane, then a vice admiral in the Chilean Navy. The claims growing out of this transaction were, under a convention concluded November 10, 1858, referred to the King of the Belgians. Numerous claims against China were settled by a convention of November 8, 1858. By a convention of February 4, 1859, the claims of the United States and Paraguay Navigation Co. against the Government of Paraguay were submitted to arbitration. A settlement of all claims of citizens of the United States against Costa Rica for injuries to persons or property was effected by means of a mixed commission under the convention of July 2, 1860. A mutual adjustment of claims as between the United States and Ecuador was effected in a similar manner under the convention of November 25, 1862. The claim of Julio R. Santos, a naturalized citizen of the United States, against the Government of Ecuador, growing out of his arrest and detention in that country in 1884 and 1885, was adjudicated under the convention of February 28, 1893. Provision was made for the arbitral settlement of claims against Venezuela by the convention of April 25, 1866; but the proceedings of the commission were set aside and the claims retried under the convention of December 5, 1885. The claim against Venezuela, growing out of the seizure of the vessels of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Co., an American corporation, was settled by a mixed commission under the convention of January 19, 1892. By a convention between the United States and Denmark of December 6, 1888, the claims against Denmark, known as the Carlos Butterfield claims, were submitted to Sir Edward Monson, then British minister at Athens, as arbitrator. Under a convention between the United States and Chile of August 7, 1892, all claims of citizens of either country against the Government of the other, growing out of acts committed by the civil or military authorities, were adjudicated by means of a mixed commission. This convention was revived by the convention of May 24, 1897, in order that unfinished business might be disposed of. We thus have 39 cases in which treaties have been made by the United States for the purpose of settling pecuniary claims. It is to be observed, however, that in only 20 cases were the claims against the foreign government alone. In 14 cases there were claims against both governments and in 5 claims against the Government of the United States alone; in other words, in 19 instances the settlement embraced claims against the United States; and, as the Executive is forbidden to bind the Government of the United States to the payment of money in the absence of authority of law, the President has never undertaken to settle claims against the United States, except by means of a treaty or by means of an agreement concluded ad referendum to Congress.

(2) BY EXECUTIVE AGREEMENT.

"But, as has heretofore been pointed out, pecuniary claims against foreign governments have constantly been settled by the President, and no question as to his possession of such a power, apart from discussions as to its possible limitations, appears ever to have been seriously raised. We, therefore, find in the books little that bears upon the subject; but, in at least one case in which a foreign government sought to qualify an agreement made with the President, the validity and finality of his action were vigorously asserted by the Government of the United States.

"On November 29, 1886, Mr. Moret, Spanish minister of foreign affairs, informed Mr. Curry, the American minister at Madrid, that the council of ministers had decided to settle the claim of Antonio Maximo Mora, a naturalized citizen of the United States of Cuban origin, against the Government of Spain, growing out of the embargo of his property in Cuba, by paying the sum of $1,500,000. This sum, said Mr. Moret, was to be paid by a charge on the Cuban budget; but, as the colonial budget was not in a condition to support such a sum at one time, the Government had reserved the determination of the most practicable mode of payment, of which due information would be given. On December 7, Mr. Curry, under instructions of his Government, accepted this offer; and a clause was inserted in the Cuban budget of 1887-88 for the payment of the money. This budget, however, was not passed, the Cortes avoiding action upon it by renewing the appropriations of the preceding year; and when, in April, 1888, the colonial budget for 1888-89 was submitted, the provision for payment was omitted. When Mr. Curry inquired as to the reason for the omission, Mr. Moret replied that, in view of the debates which had taken place in the Chamber of Deputies, the Government was convinced that the Chamber would not vote the money unless the 'totality' of American claims was settled, including those of Spain against the United States. At the same time Mr. Moret declared that the Government did not assume to alter what had been agreed on, but must judge when it would be opportune to lay the matter before the Cortes. The Government of the United States expressed its confidence that 'the Spanish Government would not repudiate the arrangement which was deliberately concluded in its name and by its authority.' Nevertheless, in consequence of the opposition manifested in the Cortes to the settlement which had been made, Mr. Moret was transferred to the ministry of the interior, and was succeeded in the ministry of foreign affairs by the Marquis de la Vega de Armijo. The latter, in August, 1888, stated that the Government intended to satisfy, as far as lay in its power, the Government of the United States, and expressed the belief that the Cortes would vote the money if the payment of the Mora claim 'coincided' with the payment of the claims of Spain against the United States. With reference to this statement, Mr. Bayard, as Secretary of State, on September 17, 1888, declared that, so far as the minister's note affirmed 'the inviolability of the settlement arrived at in the Mora case and its removal from the sphere of discussion,' it was satisfactory and fulfilled 'the expectations that had been confidently entertained in regard to the observance by the Spanish Government of the agreement heretofore concluded.'

"Mr. Bayard was not indisposed to include the 'payment' of the Mora claim with the 'settlement' of other claims, if this could be done within a reasonable time, but he declared that the 'sum agreed to be paid' in the Mora case might 'fairly be treated as a debt due and withheld by Spain from the United States, upon which interest should justly be computed from the time the agreement was concluded.' Again, on December 18, Mr. Bayard declared that the claim had been 'conclusively adjusted for a specific sum and only awaits payment by the Spanish Government.' Similar ground was taken by Mr. Blaine, Mr. Bayard's successor as Secretary of State, who adopted the statement of Mr. Curry that by the settlement 'the case was raised from the debatable and negotiable ground which it had previously occupied to the height of an international compact, binding upon both Governments.' In the same paper Mr. Blaine said 'that by the most formal and sacred of international compacts the faith and honor of the Spanish Government' had been 'directly pledged' to the payment of the claim, and that the President was 'unwilling to allow the execution of the absolute settlement of the Mora case to be made dependent upon the further settlement of other claims.' In February, 1893, Mr. Foster, Mr. Blaine's successor, referring to a remark made by the American minister at Madrid as to the possible conclusion of a 'convention for the adjustment of the Mora' claim and the claims of Spanish subjects against the United States, said:

"'The Mora claim has been regarded by this Government as already a liquidated and adjusted claim, only awaiting an appropriation by the Spanish Cortes for its final payment. It should not therefore be placed in the category of unadjusted claims.' Mr. Gresham, Mr. Foster's successor, writing to Mr. Taylor, the American minister at Madrid, on July 14, 1893, declared that the United States 'could not recognize parliamentary difficulties in the way of securing an appropriation for the Mora claim as in any way relieving Spain from her distinct and unconditional obligation to pay that claim.' In a note of December 29, 1894, to the Spanish minister of state, Mr. Taylor declared that the United States had reached the 'irrevocable conclusions' (1) that 'when the proposition of settlement was accepted, an international convention was concluded,' precluding the discussion of all questions but that of payment; (2) that the 'unconditional promise to pay carried with it the obligation to pay in a reasonable time'; (3) that the United States would 'not consent' that payment should 'depend upon the willingness of the Cortes to make an appropriation' or upon the final adjustment of claims asserted by Spain against the United States. This presentation of the subject was approved by Mr. Gresham, who, in reply to arguments of the Spanish Government that the Mora case was not 'one of those matters of strict justice which require immediate reparation' and that the agreement to pay the claim was conditional and not unconditional, reaffirmed the position that the agreement was 'unconditional,' and further declared that all departments of the Spanish Government were bound by it and that no one department could nullify it, and that, whether the Spanish Government did or did not receive the income from Mora's estates was a question 'immaterial' to the 'rights' of the United States or the 'obligations' of Spain. Nevertheless, delay in the payment of the money continued, and at length Congress, by a joint resolution approved March 2, 1895, requested the President 'to insist upon the payment of the sum agreed upon between the Governments of Spain and the United States in liquidation of the claim of Antonio Maximo Mora against the Government of Spain, with interest from the time when the said amount should have been paid under the agreement.' (For the correspondence and the joint resolution, see Foreign Relations, 1894, Appendix I, pp. 364–450; ibid. 1895, Part II, p. 1163.)

"Instructions in conformity with the resolution were sent to the legation of the United States at Madrid, and like representations were made to the Spanish minister at Washington, urging an immediate payment on account and an arrangement for the early discharge of the remainder, should Spain be unable to pay the full amount at once. On July 20, 1895, the Spanish minister at Washington handed to Mr. Olney the text of a resolution of the council, approved by the queen regent, in which it was stated that, 'in view of the facts shown of record and of the conclusions formulated by the ministers and a subcommittee of reference,' it had been decided to notify the United States that Spain, 'in fulfillment of the engagement contracted by the notes exchanged on the 29th of November and the 7th of December, 1886,' was prepared to proceed to the payment of 1,500,000 pesos in three installments, the form and date of payment to be determined by agreements. On the 10th of the following August an agreement, signed by Mr. Olney, as Secretary of State, and by Mr. Depuy de Lome, Spanish minister, and by two representatives of the claimant and other interested persons, was entered into for the payment, on or before September 15, of 1,500,000 gold pesos, 'in full discharge and satisfaction not only of the principal sum agreed to be paid,' but also of any amount that might be claimed to be due as interest. This payment was duly made. (Foreign Relations, 1895, pt. ii, pp. 1162, 1163, 1166, 1170, 1171, 1176.)

"The conclusiveness of the settlement was thus finally maintained, in spite of Spain's contention that the agreement should be treated as having been made subject to the approval of the Cortes. No matter what view might be taken of this contention, the way was open to Spain to make it, since the country was in a state of tranquillity and all the departments of the Government were in the full exercise of their constitutional functions. Had a dictatorship existed and the constitutional guaranties been suspended, the case would have been obviously different. Such a condition of things has often existed even in recent years, especially in the countries of Spanish America, where international agreements of the most important character have been entered into and carried into effect by the chief executive in the exercise of dictatorial powers. Even territorial questions have been so settled. The treaty of commerce, navigation, boundaries, and extradition between Brazil and Bolivia of March 27, 1867, was concluded and ratified on the part of Bolivia by the President ad interim of that country. The arbitral agreements made with Venezuela in 1903, under which claims against that Government amounting to millions of dollars were settled, were ratified and put into effect by President Castro in virtue of dictatorial powers. Likewise, the agreement between the United States and the Dominican Republic of January 31, 1903, for the settlement of the claims of the San Domingo Improvement Co. and its allied companies, was executed and put into effect by President Vasquez, in the exercise of similar powers. From May 2, 1902, until July 20, 1903, there was no Congress, the constitutional guaranties being in suspense and all powers being exercised by the President. In such cases the only authority in existence is necessarily dealt with, it being inadmissible to hold that the national powers and responsibilities are in abeyance and can not be discharged because powers ordinarily exercised by one department of the Government have for the time being been assumed by another.

(8) ARBITRATION UNDER EXECUTIVE AGREEMENTS.

"Not only is the power of the President to settle the claims of citizens of the United States against foreign governments firmly established but he has repeatedly employed arbitration for the purpose. An eminent authority has observed that this 'at first glance would seem to be an independent exercise of the treaty-making power,' but that, 'in a strict sense' it 'can not be so regarded'; and it has therefore been placed among 'certain acts of an international character, binding the Government, which the President may perform without the interposition of the Senate.' (John W. Foster, 'The treaty-making power,' Yale Law Journal, December, 1901, vol. xi, pp. 77, 79.) The legal theory on which such settlements rest is simple. Arbitration is in such cases only one of the modes by which the President exercises his power to settle claims of individuals against foreign governments. If, in the exercise of this power, differences arise which apparently can not be directly solved, it is a natural and obvious thing to submit them to the judgment of impartial persons. As early as September 5, 1793, Mr. Jefferson, as Secretary of State, when discussing with the British minister the question of losses sustained by vessels unlawfully captured within American jurisdiction proposed as a provisional measure that the collector of customs of the particular district and the British consul, 'or any other person you please,' should 'appoint persons to establish the value of the vessel and cargo.' (American State Papers, Foreign Relations, vol. i, pp. 174, 175.)

"It would be a work of supererogation to attempt to cite all the cases in which the Executive of the United States has settled individual claims against foreign governments without reference to the Senate, but the more important examples may be given, including those in which the process of arbitration has been employed.

"By a convention signed at Caracas on May 1, 1852, claims of citizens of the United States against Venezuela, growing out of the seizure of certain vessels, were settled for the sum of $90,000 with interest to date of payment. An agreement, concluded seven years later (January 14, 1859), for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States on account of their expulsion from the Aves Islands, was submitted to the Senate, President Buchanan remarking that 'usually' it was 'not deemed necessary to consult the Senate in regard to similar instruments relating to private claims of small amount when the aggrieved parties are satisfied with their terms,' but that it was thought advisable in the present instance on account of the instability of the Venezuelan Government. (Executive Journal, vol. xi, p. 142.) By a protocol signed at Washington on February 17, 1903, all claims of citizens of the United States against Venezuela, which had not been previously settled by diplomatic agreement, were submitted to a mixed commission. The claims, with interest, amounted to upwards of $81,000,000; the awards of the commission, with interest, to $436,450.70. In connection with this settlement the nonblockading powers concurred with the blockading powers, under agreements concluded by the latter with Venezuela on May 7, 1904, in submitting to The Hague tribunal the question whether the blockading powers had a right to the preferential payment of their claims.

"In 1858 it was agreed by an exchange of notes between Mr. Reed, the American minister, and the Chinese authorities that a fund of 600,000 taels should be raised in China out of duties collected on American goods and bottoms at three treaty ports for the payment of American claims. This agreement Mr. Reed afterwards modified by concluding the convention of November 8, 1858. In 1884 the American minister arranged with the taotai of Swatow to refer to two of the foreign consuls at that port the claim of an American citizen named Ashmore for injuries to a fishery by native trespassers in 1872. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, p. 1857.)

"On May 4, 1864, the American minister in Salvador agreed with the Government of that country for the arbitration of the claim of an American citizen named Savage against Salvador on account of losses in connection with the exportation of a quantity of gunpowder. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, p. 1855.) By a protocol signed at Washington December 19, 1901, the claims of the Salvador Commercial Co. and other citizens of the United States, stockholders in the Salvadorian corporation styled 'El Triunfo Co. (Ltd.),' were submitted to a mixed commission composed of the chief justice of Canada, a citizen of the United States, and a citizen of Salvador. An award was made in favor of the United States for $523,178.64. (Foreign Relations, 1902, pp. 857, 861.)

"By a protocol signed at Rio de Janeiro March 14, 1870, it was agreed to submit to the British minister at Washington, as arbitrator, the claims of the owners of the American whaling ship Canada and her cargo against the Government of Brazil because of losses incurred, as it was alleged, by the illegal interference of Brazilian officials with the master of the vessel when he was attempting to pull her off a reef. An award was rendered in favor of the United States for the sum of $100,740.04. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, pp. 1733–1747.) By another protocol signed at Rio de Janeiro September 6, 1902, the claim of the owners of an American vessel against the Government of Brazil for indemnity for damages inflicted on the vessel and her longboat by the firing of Brazilian soldiers and by her detention at Rio de Janeiro was submitted to the arbitration of the minister of Sweden and Norway at Washington.

"By an exchange of correspondence in 1870 it was left to arbitrators to assess the damages in the claim of the American steamer Lloyd Aspinwall against the Government of Spain on account of the seizure and detention of the vessel by the Spanish authorities in Cuba. By a similar agreement in 1885 the claims growing out of the seizure of the American bark Masonic by the Spanish authorities at Manila was referred to Baron Blanc, Italian minister at Madrid. But far more important than these was the agreement effected at Madrid by an exchange of notes on February 11–12, 1871, under which all claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Spain for wrongs and injuries committed against their persons and property by the authorities of Spain in Cuba since the commencement of the insurrection in 1868 were submitted to a mixed commission consisting of two arbitrators and an umpire. These claims involved questions of great international importance, including the validity of decrees of the Spanish Government and of legal proceedings against both persons and property in Cuba. Questions analogous to those involved in the Virginia case eventually came before the commission, as well as many questions of nationality or citizenship. The commission remained in existence more than 10 years. It adjourned December 27, 1882, and the last awards of the umpire were filed on February 22, 1883.

"The amount of the claims presented to the commission was more than $30,000,000, exclusive of interest. The total sum awarded was $1,293,450.55. Immediately after the conclusion of the agreement Congress appropriated $15,000 for the United States' share of the expenses. Appropriations were thereafter regularly made for the same purpose, the whole amount contributed by the United States being $126,324.59. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, pp. 1019–1053.)

"The seizure and detention of the American steamer Montijo in Colombia in 1871 gave rise to claims against that Government. These claims involved various important questions, including that of the liability of a government for the acts of insurgents. They were submitted to arbitration under a protocol signed at Bogota August 17, 1874, and an award was rendered in favor of the United States. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, pp. 1426–1446.)

"On several occasions claims against Haiti have been settled in a similar manner. The award of the arbitrator in the cases of Pelletier and Lazare under the protocol signed at Washington May 28, 1884, was not enforced, because in the case of Pelletier the arbitrator misconstrued his power, and in the case of Lazare, as it was alleged, he did not have the benefit of certain important evidence. By an exchange of correspondence at Port au Prince in 1885 the American minister arranged for the adjustment by a mixed commission of claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Haiti growing out of riots at Port au Prince. The claims were of small amount. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, p. 1859.) In the case of C. A. Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, against Haiti, growing out of his imprisonment and detention in violation of treaty rights, an award was rendered in favor of the United States under a protocol signed at Washington on May 24, 1888, for the sum of $60,000. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. ii, p. 1809.) The claim of certain citizens of the United States against the Government of Haiti, on account of the seizure and sale of their goods, was adjusted in a similar manner under a protocol signed at Washington on October 18, 1899. The arbitrator, the Hon. William R. Day, rendered an award in favor of the claimant for $23,000. (Foreign Relations, 1901, p. 276.)

"The claims of two American citizens named Oberlander and Messenger against the Government of Mexico were disposed of by arbitration under a protocol signed on March 2, 1897, by Mr. Olney, Secretary of State, and Mr. Romero, Mexican minister. (Foreign Relations, 1897, pp. 382–388.) Under a protocol concluded on May 22, 1902, the claim of the Pious Fund of the Californias was referred to the Hague tribunal, which decided that Mexico should pay to the United States the sum of $1,420,682.67, and in each succeeding year in perpetuity the sum of $43,050.99 in money having legal currency in Mexico. (Foreign Relations, 1902, appendix ii.)

"Under a protocol signed at Washington, February 23, 1900, a claim of a citizen of the United States named May against the Government of Guatemala for a debt alleged to be due him under certain railway construction contracts with that Government and for damages caused by the Guatemalan civil and military authorities, was submitted to the British minister in Central America, who awarded the claimant $143,750.73. (Foreign Relations, 1900, p. 674.)

"Claims against Nicaragua of small amount were submitted to arbitration under a protocol signed at Washington on March 22, 1900. (Foreign Relations, 1900, p. 824.) So by a protocol signed at Washington on May 17, 1898, the claim of a citizen of the United States against Peru was referred to the chief justice of Canada. In 1897 the complaint of E. V. Kellett, United States vice consul general in Siam, on account of an assault committed upon him by soldiers of that Government, was disposed of by a joint commission. (Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. 2, p. 1862.)

"In the same year the claim of a citizen of the United States against the Siamese Government growing out of breaches by the latter of an agreement for the working of the teak forests was submitted under a protocol signed at Bangkok July 26, 1897, to the governor of the Straits Settlements, by whom an award was rendered in favor of the United States for $200,000 in gold. (Foreign Relations, 1897, p. 479; Moore, International Arbitrations, vol. 2, p. 1908.) Certain claims against Chile were directly settled by an agreement concluded on May 24, 1897. By an agreement with Russia, signed September 8, 1900, various claims for the detention of American sealing vessels by Russian cruisers were submitted to arbitration. The submission involved important questions as to marine jurisdiction.

"One of the most interesting of the arbitrations of the United States under executive agreements is that relating to the Delagoa Bay Railway, under a protocol between the United States, Great Britain, and Portugal, signed at Berne on June 13, 1891. The railway was constructed under a concession originally granted to an American citizen named McMurdo. McMurdo transferred his concession to a Portuguese company, which was in turn financed by an English company. The taking possession of the railway by the Portuguese Government in 1889 gave rise to interesting and complicated questions as to the rights of McMurdo, as well as of the English investors. Both the United States and Great Britain intervened for the protection of the interests of their respective citizens, and on the demand of the United States, which was supported by the British Government, the case was referred to three Swiss jurists, who in 1899 rendered an award in favor of the United States and Great Britain for the sum of $4,670,000.

"On several occasions claims against the Dominican Republic have been settled under executive agreements. In 1898 an American engineer, acting under such an agreement, rendered an award in favor of the United States for $74,411.17, with interest at 6 per cent for two and a half years, on account of the seizure of the Ozama Bridge by the Dominican Government. On April 30, 1904, an award was made by arbitrators of the sum of $215,812 on account of arms, ammunition, and other articles furnished by the firm of Sala & Co. to the Dominican Government while General Heureaux was President. The arbitral proceeding was conducted under a convention signed on April 28, 1902.

"By a protocol signed at Santo Domingo City January 31, 1903, provision was made for submitting to a mixed commission the question of the terms on which the Dominican Government should pay the sum of $4,500,000 which that Government had agreed to pay in consideration of the cession to it of all accounts, claims, and properties of the San Domingo Improvement Co. and its allied companies, including their rights in the railway from Puerto Plata to Santiago, and in settlement of all differences, as well as in consideration of the relinquishment by the improvement company of its right to collect the revenues at all ports of the Republic. The protocol expressly required the arbitrators to fix the mode in which the moneys to be paid under it should be collected. By the award rendered on July 14, 1904, it was decreed that the money should be paid in certain monthly installments and that in case of default it should be collected at certain Dominican ports by an agent to be appointed by the United States.

"It thus appears that if we include only the more formal settlements there have been 31 cases in which claims against foreign governments have been settled by executive agreement and that 27 arbitrations have been held under such agreements, as against 19 under treaties, where the settlement embraced claims against the foreign government alone and not against the United States.

"In connection with the arbitration under the protocol with the Dominican Republic of January 31, 1903, it may be pointed out that on various occasions the customs or other specific revenues of foreign countries have been pledged for the payment of American claims (e. g., conventions with China, November 8, 1858, and September 7, 1901; with Colombia, September 10, 1857, art. 3; with Costa Rica, July 2, 1860, art. 4; with Ecuador, November 25, 1862, art. 3; with Mexico, April 11, 1839, art. 6, and January 30, 1843, art. 4; with Peru, March 17, 1841, art. 6; with Venezuela, February 17, 1903, art. 5). Provision has also been made in certain cases for the direct collection of such revenues in the event of the failure of the local government to make the stipulated payments; but, as the cases in which such arrangement has been necessary have been comparatively infrequent, at any rate in the experience of the United States in such matters, it is proper to refer particularly to certain precedents in which the subject has been either discussed or practically dealt with.

"In 1880 the Venezuelan Government appealed to the United States for its interposition in difficulties which had arisen between Venezuela and France, because the former Government had fallen into arrears in payments due to the latter on the settlement of claims against Venezuela effected in 1864. As it was represented that there was danger that France would institute a blockade of Venezuelan ports and take possession of the customhouses for the purpose of collecting the money, and as there were conflicting claims as to preference among foreign creditors, Venezuela proposed to deliver certain monthly sums to the Government of the United States, which was to distribute the money among all the foreign creditors. Mr. Evarts, who was then Secretary of State, intimated that the proposal would be favorably entertained if it should prove to be acceptable to all the creditor Governments. Subsequently, no arrangement having been effected, Mr. Evarts's successor, Mr. Blaine, acting in the name of the President, instructed the American minister at Paris to suggest that the United States would place an agent in Caracas to receive such monthly sums from Venezuela as might be agreed upon and distribute them among the creditor nations, and that, in case the Venezuelan Government should default for more than three months in the regular installments, the agent appointed by the United States should be 'authorized to take charge of the custom-houses at La Guayra and Puerto Cabello, and reserve from the monthly receipts a sufficient sum to pay the stipulated amounts, with 10 per cent additional, handing over to the authorized agent of the Venezuelan Government all the remainder collected.'

"'It was,' said Mr. Blaine, 'the judgment of the President that an arrangement of this kind would give all reasonable security to each of the creditor nations.' (Foreign Relations, 1881, pp. 1217–1218.) The French Government afterwards arranged its differences directly with the Venezuelan Government and the proposal of the United States was not carried into effect.

"An actual arrangement, to which the United States is a party, for the collection of moneys from a foreign government by means of the sequestration of customs duties is that effected by the protocol between China and the allied powers, which was signed at Peking September 7, 1901. By this protocol China agreed to pay to the allied powers, one of which was the United States, an indemnity of 450,000,000 taels to cover the claims of governments, companies, or societies, and private individuals. For the collection of this debt a commission of bankers was created on which each of the foreign powers is represented by a delegate, and specific revenues are assigned for the payment of the debt. These revenues embrace (1) the balance of the revenues of the imperial maritime customs (the foreign service under Sir Robert Hart) after payment of the amounts previously pledged as security for prior loans; (2) the revenues of the native customs, which are administered in the open ports by the imperial maritime customs; and (3) the total revenues of the salt gabelle, exclusive of the portion previously set aside for other foreign loans.

"A still later example, which is specially interesting because it substantially carries out in Venezuela under another form the proposal made by the United States in 1881, is that of the settlement with Venezuela under the agreements signed at Washington in 1903, among which is the protocol between the United States and Venezuela of February 17 in that year. By Article V of this protocol, following the stipulations made in the other agreement, it is provided that the Venezuelan Government shall set apart in each month for the payment of claims 30 per cent of the customs revenues of La Guaira and Puerto Cabello, and that in case of failure to carry out this stipulation 'Belgian officials shall be placed in charge of the customs of the two ports and shall administer them until the liability of the Venezuelan Government in respect of the above claims shall have been discharged.' These precedents directly sustain the protocol with the Dominican Republic of January 31, 1903, and the award of the arbitrators thereunder."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am struck by the moderation of the request of my friend from Alabama, which is simply to kill the commission and prevent it from operating.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will pardon me, I have just said that I did not ask that the commission be killed. If you want a commission bring in a bill establishing one, and make it a law.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asks to have it killed by refusing the appropriation. There are many ways of killing a cat, as we know.

The Senator has argued with great force about the law and the treaties, but I venture to say, with all submission, that this agreement has nothing to do with the law or treaties, nor will it affect them in any way. In order to have claims settled, the first step is to ascertain their amount. If there is any provision in the treaty as to the method of ascertaining the amount of these claims it has escaped me. The treaty of peace with Germany acknowledges the American claims and gives us certain rights in regard to them. The law which puts the control of the alien property funds into the hands of the Alien Property Custodian is pursuant to the trading with the enemy act and covers those funds. I venture to say that in neither the testimony of Mr. Bradley Palmer nor in the testimony of anybody else is there any suggestion as to the method of ascertaining the amounts. All that is a question of detail. But it is the preliminary step, of course. It must be taken.

In all cases, whether the Alabama claims, under treaty, or claims under executive agreement, the Government appears for the claimant. A private claimant would have a very poor experience if he attempted to enforce a private claim against a foreign government, because it is universal for a claimant to be represented by the Government.

This does not repudiate the law; it does not repudiate treaties. It simply provides a method for ascertaining the amount of the claims as a preliminary step. No claimant need submit his claim through the Government of the United States. Every claimant who desires to do it, of course, has the opportunity. He can collect his claim in some other way if possible.

This is an executive agreement, and all it does is to provide a method of ascertaining the amount of the claims. There is no question about their merits. That is settled by treaty. But the amounts must be ascertained.

On that commission are one American representative, one German representative, and an American umpire, practically a third American member. So it is entirely in our control, just as much as under the commission proposed by the Senator from Alabama. The only thing is that the Germans are represented, which they would have to be in any event, by counsel or in some other way.

I have not with me the letter which the Secretary of State wrote in regard to it. I have sent for it, and I thought it had been printed, but I have not been able to put my hands on it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I sent it to the desk this morning.

Mr. LODGE. I would be very glad if I could have the letter of the Secretary of State, in which he cited the precedents. I have sent for it, but the State Department moves with some deliberation, and I have not yet received it. I only wanted to call attention briefly to the precedents of executive agreements to settle American claims against foreign governments. There are plenty of precedents for it. With all deference, I do not think claims are affected by a consideration of the fact as to whether they grew out of a technical state of war or whether they grew out of war, or any other troubles.

For instance, take the case of the Boxer rebellion, as it was called, in China, which has been mentioned. We did not declare war on China, nor did the other nations who intervened, but we sent troops out which stormed the city of Pekin and took possession of it. Then there was an agreement among the nations, and a protocol, which was never submitted to the Senate at all, was agreed upon, under which we received $20,000,000, as I remember, as indemnity. We had not asked for any indemnity, but that was allotted to us by the powers which met. That money was turned over by the Government of the United States to the Secretary of State, and he distributed it, after due hearing, to the claimants. I do not think even a commission was appointed. The Secretary of State heard all the American claimants, agreed to some claims, reduced others, paid others in full, and settled them all for a very much less sum than the twenty millions, and we returned ten millions, by a resolution which I happened to introduce, which passed both Houses.

I am speaking now merely of the cases I remember. Not long after that came the Alsop claim, which we collected from Chile under an executive agreement.

I have just been handed a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State. It is to be printed, so I shall not ask to have it printed. But this is not the letter I was thinking of, because it does not contain the reference to the authorities, which are all collected in an article by John Bassett Moore, which appeared in a magazine which I have read, but of which I have been unable to procure a copy, because it was printed some time ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator that I filed a collection of the authorities, published by Mr. Moore, to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I heard the Senator make that statement and I thought I could get a copy of it, but I find I can not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have introduced the authorities on both sides.

Mr. LODGE. At all events, I have read the article of Mr. Moore. There are abundant precedents of all kinds for the settlement of claims of this character by executive agreement.

As to the claimants requesting it, we have settled claims both by treaty and by executive agreement without asking the permission of the claimant. If you were to wait until the claimants all asked, you would get few of these claims settled.

As to the rapidity of congressional action, as compared with executive agreements, I call attention to the settlement of the French claims, which we got by treaty about a hundred and twenty years ago, and which are not all settled yet. They have disturbed many Congresses, and about three-fourths of them have been paid. I instance that as an example of the rapidity with which Congress deals with these questions. I think we can trust one commission as well as another.

I can not understand another point that was made, about not including the Lusitania claims. The Secretary of State says the agreement includes the Lusitania claims. The language is:

> Other claims for loss or damage to which the United States or its nationals have been subjected with respect to injuries to persons or to property.

If taking a man's life is not an injury to a person, I do not know what you would call an injury to a person.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I do not make that as a statement of fact. I merely stated that the lawyer representing one of the claimants—and, of course, he wanted his claim included—wrote a letter to me before the Secretary made his statement, saying that the language covers only property and injury to the person of a claimant, and does not cover——

Mr. LODGE. That is something read into the language which has no place there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not say this lawyer is right or that he is wrong, but he represents a claimant; he is an able lawyer, and he contends that the language of submission is not as broad as the Secretary of State says it is, and will not cover his case. Are you going to decide that this morning, or are you going to wait and let the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, which has jurisdiction of these matters, have a reasonable time to determine whether this lawyer was right or wrong?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the commission can determine that perfectly simple question themselves. Of course, it is an absurdity, to my mind, on its face, to say that the loss of life is not an injury. I do not think there is much in that.

The single point I wanted to make is that this does not interfere with the law; it does not repudiate treaties; it is simply a method adopted, with abundant precedents, in order to take the first step toward the settlement of these claims. It is done by executive agreements, for which, as I have said, there are abundant precedents, and it seems to me the quickest way of getting the preliminary step taken. After that is taken, then the request must be made on Germany, and if it does not pay the claims, of course it is open to us under the treaty to take the German property in our possession and use it for the settlement of the claims. There is no doubt about that in the world; and that will require action by Congress, unquestionably.

I can not see why we should arrest these proceedings, which will enable these claimants to get their money more quickly than any other, and hold them up while we debate this, and turn it all over and back and forth, as to the powers of Congress. Nothing could create so great delay; nothing could be so wrong to the claimants, in my judgment, as to stop this appropriation and prevent this claims commission from operating. I sincerely hope that the amount suggested by the Committee on Appropriations will be allowed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts, who of course has had great experience in the matter of treaties and claims, says that the settlement of these claims without the permission of the claimants is a usual thing; that the permission of the claimants has nothing to do with it. Some two years ago, when the treaty of Versailles was up before us, the Senator from Massachusetts filed with the Congress, not a full statement of settlements of claims, or so-called agreements or treaties made with foreign nations, but in order to show that the Senate should have its day in court and its statement about these he filed a list of claims; and I think there were about 80 agreements by treaty in the list the Senator filed and about a dozen executive agreements without treaties. Of course, there were many more without it, but that was the proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FRANCE. May I inquire how long it will take to dispose of the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. CURTIS. That will have to be answered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I think after the pending amendment is disposed of it will take but a short time.

Mr. WARREN. I believe after the pending amendment is acted on there will be very little more discussion, if any.

Mr. FRANCE. I am willing to consent to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business if it will not be unreasonably delayed. I do not think it should be laid aside for any great length of time.

Mr. CURTIS. As soon as the pending amendment is disposed of, which is the only one that is in controversy, I think it will not take very much more time to dispose of the bill. Of course, a demand for the regular order would bring the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to foreclose my position in the matter by making any agreement, but I will say for the Senator's information that so far as I am concerned I really do not expect at this time to proceed very much further with the particular item. I think probably after getting a vote on it we can dispose of the bill without very much more discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Massachusetts contends that the question of the Executive settling claims is not unusual. I have very carefully reviewed every claims case, I think, that a citizen of the United States has had against a foreign government so far as I could ascertain them. In almost every case where the settlement was made by Executive authority and not by law, it was an individual case and the individual came to the State Department, either in person or by his attorney, and asked the State Department to act as his agent in the matter. There are a few cases where there were two or more individuals involved, primarily claims against Spain in 1871, but there the claimants were presenting their cases and asking for consideration by the State Department. In so far as I know, from the beginning of the Government to this good hour, except in this executive agreement, there is not an instance where the executive branch of the Government acted without authority of Congress to settle claims of American citizens until after the claimants themselves had gone to the State Department and asked the State Department to act for them.

The Senator from Massachusetts said that if the claimants were to present their cases against a foreign government without the intervention of the State Department, they would have a right hard time to get consideration of their cases, and that is manifestly true. They will get no day in court at all if their Government does not stand up and act for them. But in concluding his speech the Senator said if they do not want to accept this agreement and come in to the executive tribunal appointed by the President, they need not do so. Of course, they need not do so. No one can compel them to do so. But what I say ought to be done is to fix the terms of the agreement by law. If you think the President has the right, enact a law to sustain him. If his agreement is broad enough and right enough, enact a law so that everybody will be bound by it. But if you are not willing to do that, then I do not think you ought to appropriate the money.

Now, as to the illustration made by the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the French claims, it has nothing in the world to do with this matter so far as the presentation of claims is concerned. There was a vast deal of property injured by cruisers of the French Government 120 years ago and we, as a Government, protested against it. There was no consideration of individual claims between the two Governments. The French Government finally settled the case by agreeing to pay to this Government a lump sum in final settlement of all claims, and then our Government agreed to have the matter determined in the courts and to pay the American claimants out of that fund the damages which they had suffered from the French cruisers.

I suppose there were a good many fictitious cases filed, and probably a great many honest cases filed which may not have been paid yet. We have not paid some of the claimants. We have paid some of the claimants more than once by mistake. They are still hanging around the Capital of the United States because Congress proceeded to do then exactly what you are proceeding to do now—to settle the cases without operation of law. If you fix a tribunal, whether it is the President's tribunal or the one I have suggested, or one somebody else may suggest, and give those people a day in court to come and have their cases adjudicated and disposed of, you settle the matter for all time. But if you are going to do it by this loose Executive order you are going to have those claimants of this property hanging around your necks for the next generation, if, indeed, it is not as bad as it was in the French claims case, and then you would have them hanging around for a hundred years to come.

I therefore very earnestly hope that the Senate of the United States will not adopt the plan. The Senator from Massachusetts said that I was trying to kill the matter. He is mistaken. I want a just opportunity for Americans to get their claims paid. Why, the treaty of Versailles with Germany was ratified in July, 1921, and I waited very nearly a year for the party in power, within the terms of the treaty, to do something about the matter. There was not a word said, there was not anything done. So, then, I introduced a bill to provide for a court to determine the claims and settle the rights of American claimants legally and within the terms of the treaty. Then for the first time we learned that the executive portion of the Government had not been considering it at all, and had never heard of it before that. Does that sound like I was not trying to get a day in court for these claimants?

I have besought the Judiciary Committee—and I am not saying it in criticism—to hear the matter and report a bill to the Senate, if not my bill then somebody else's bill, providing a lawful tribunal in which the claims could be settled. I have done that in season and out of season, but I could not get any action. All I am pleading for now is not that you delay settlement of the cases, but that you establish a tribunal by law so that when they attempt to settle them they will be settled finally and forever. If you insist on going on and making appropriation of this money and establishing your tribunal as proposed, after you get the findings of your commission, composed of American and German representatives, and bring them back, what is going to happen will be just what I have said. Every man whose claim is turned down by the tribunal will think his remedy is in Congress, and if you agree with him you will bring the executive branch of your Government in conflict with the German Government, and we will have an international embroglio, probably nothing serious, except continual misunderstanding about the matter. The Senate should be willing to wait and take the time—because we will be back here in 60 days—to do legally what should be done, and not by Executive order, for which nobody has yet contended that there is any warrant of law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] proceeds on the theory that the Senate and possibly the Congress will take his view of the case ultimately and decide that the proper way to ascertain the amount due Americans by Germany is by the method which he has proposed in his bill. My judgment is that the Congress will never do that thing. My judgment is that the only fair way and the only way in accordance with justice and good conscience is, if possible, to reach an agreement with Germany as to the amount of the claims; that is to say, to reach it in a tribunal in which the German Government is interested, although the control is in the hands of the American representatives.

It seems to me that the effort which is being made by the Senator from Alabama moreover will inevitably result, even if he ultimately succeeds, in a very serious delay, and the delay already has become a crying evil. We have had hundreds of millions of dollars of property tied up in this commission now for four or five or six years, I do not know how long, and this is the first real practical move that has been made to cut the red tape and ascertain what are the claims that should be adjudicated and paid out of the property, unless Germany provides other means of paying them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says this is delaying the disposition of the property. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, just admitted that no matter what disposition is eventually made in regard to the executive commission, as to any disposition of the property that is ever had it would have to come back to Congress in the end.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would dispose of it or have the Congress dispose of it by settling the whole question—that is, providing for settlement of the question, not by Congress but by a commission provided by law. That involves no delay. That would expedite the matter. To appoint a tribunal to find a verdict without authority of law, and then bring it back here to be mulled around in Congress for years to come, would be opening a Pandora's box of delay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not agree with the Senator that this is without authority of law, in the first place. I realize, of course, that the control of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian is in Congress, but I deny that the appointment of a commission or the ascertainment of the amount of the claims is necessarily in Congress. The Senate has already ratified the treaty with Germany; and the Senator from Alabama voted for that ratification, as I did. That treaty imports into its articles certain provisions of the treaty of Versailles. The treaty of Versailles provides for a mixed commission to be agreed upon between Germany and the United States for the ascertainment, in a friendly way and on a just basis, of the claims that Germany shall pay. Under the original treaty of Versailles, and under the subsequent treaty with Germany, the President undoubtedly has the power to proceed by agreeing with Germany as to the appointment of a mixed commission to pass on claims. How can American claimants object to the constitution of that mixed commission, one appointed by the German Government, one appointed by the American Government, and the umpire also appointed by the American Government, and already chosen, being a member of our Supreme Court; so that the control of the decision is in the hands of Americans, and all Germany has is a representation upon the commission of one vote.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, his position would be that if there were no treaty—for instance, the treaty of Versailles, which authorizes, as he contends, the President to make this agreement—then it would be a matter for Congress to determine by appropriate legislation—that is, by authorizing the President to negotiate a treaty or by passing some statute creating an American or a mixed tribunal for the purpose of ascertaining the damages due to Americans from the German Government? In other words, the Senator, as I understand, admits that if it were not for the Versailles treaty there would be no authority whatever for the President to enter into the agreement for the appointment of the commission?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KING. And the Senator thinks that the Versailles treaty is full warrant for those proceedings?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any doubt of it.

Furthermore, the courts have decided where the Executive interprets a treaty the courts will grant to his interpretation the presumption of regularity and legality; and they are very slow to override such an interpretation.

To my mind the Versailles treaty is plain, and the treaty with Germany also is plain on the subject. It seems to me, in the interest of good relations with Germany, now that we are at peace, in the interest of American claimants, who have been waiting for four or five years—for four years, anyway, since the armistice was signed and peace entered into—and in the interest of that large number of people whose property is tied up in the trust which is controlled by the Alien Property Custodian, we ought to adopt the suggestion advanced by the President and agreed to by Germany, and ought to adopt his plan and give him the necessary money to work under it.

To my mind it is an unfortunate thing that for so many years this great amount of property has been tied up. I know of a great many cases in this country of families who are in distress because their property is still held in the control of the Alien Property Custodian and can not be returned to them until these claims are settled. I think they are entitled to some consideration; they are the victims of war; and I think there should not be an undue lapse of time. This is a method of cutting red tape; this is a method of getting an early agreement with Germany as to the amount of these claims. The control of the commission is in the hands of representatives of the United States, so it is impossible to conceive of any justice being done.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will yield in a moment.

The Senator from Alabama suggests that some of the decisions of the commission may not receive the approval of the claimants. That is always the case as to such decisions. They are not compelled to accept their money; but if they do accept the money they will be bound by the decision. If they do not accept the judgment of the commission as to their claims, then, of course, there may be some controversy; but it would inevitably be true, even if a commission were created by law, that they would still be knocking at the doors of Congress for an additional award.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I desire to say that I think he is entirely mistaken on that proposition. The claims bill that I have introduced in reference to these matters provides for almost the identical action that Congress took in reference to the Spanish War claims commission. After that tribunal wound up its work and rendered its verdict we never heard of it; that was the end of it, because we had established a tribunal and fixed the verdict by law.

There is nothing to bind the claimants in this case. They are injected into this proposal without their consent, without their desire; but when Congress establishes a court in which American citizens may present their claims, and the method is fixed by law, when a decision is rendered their matters are foreclosed. That, however, is not done in this instance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the action has the force of law, for it is taken under a treaty made by the United States, and a treaty is the highest law of the land. The President acts under the treaty in agreeing with Germany upon the selection of a commission. Of course, Congress might withhold an appropriation for expenses of the commission and end the matter in that way, but that will only mean further delay. The commission constituted under the terms of the treaty as interpreted by the President will be just as legal and just as binding a tribunal to settle claims as would be one created by the act of the House and the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator how the claimants, if an award shall be made in their behalf by this commission, will be paid?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Undoubtedly they can not be paid until Congress acts upon the result.

Mr. KING. Well, who will pay them—the German Government?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If Germany pays and the claimants accept payment, that will end the matter; but if Germany will not pay, the probability is that Congress will have to provide that some of the property now held in trust shall be used for the purpose of paying these claims, and Congress ultimately will have to do that, of course, because it has jurisdiction over the property which is held by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. KING. Then it is the theory of the Senator that Congress, after awards shall have been made by this commission—I am assuming that awards will be made—will by act confiscate the property now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, at least to the extent of a sufficient amount to meet all the awards that may be made by the commission?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is another question and another story, and it is a good way off. We can not reach that now under any theory in this case. What we are to decide to-day is whether we shall make a beginning for the purpose of ascertaining claims which have been neglected for four years. I think it ought to be done, and I believe the President is justified in interpreting the Versailles treaty as he has interpreted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUMMINS (when his name was called). Mr. President, I ask to be excused from voting on this question for the reason that, as chairman of the subcommittee having in charge the measure which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has mentioned, it will become necessary for me to pass upon the same question, directly or indirectly, and I do not want to prejudge the matter or foreclose myself by voting upon this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the roll call shall have been concluded the Chair will put the question whether or not the Senator from Iowa shall be excused from voting.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Mr. President, I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary appointed to consider the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. The chairman of that committee, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], has given his reasons for asking to be excused from voting. Being practically in the same situation in regard to that bill, I, for the same reason that he gave, ask to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the conclusion of the roll call the Chair will put the question to the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my regular pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Virginia has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

I wish further to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the Chair will now put the question to the Senate, Shall the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], for the reasons assigned by them, be excused from voting on this question? Those in favor of excusing them will say "aye." [A pause]. Those opposed "no." [A pause]. The "ayes" have it, and the Senators are excused from voting.

The Secretary will recapitulate the vote.

The vote was recapitulated, and the result was announced—yeas, 18; nays, 39; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Broussard	Heflin	Sheppard	Underwood
Culberson	King	Shields	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McKellar	Stanley	Williams
Fletcher	Myers	Swanson
Harrison	Ransdell	Trammell

NAYS—39.

Fernald	Ladd	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.	Weller
Gerry	McKinley	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Glass	Norris	Robinson

So Mr. UNDERWOOD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

To carry out the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," as amended, as follows:

For salaries of 35 additional inspectors whose employment is hereby authorized for nine months at the rate of $3,000 per annum each, $78,750; for per diem in lieu of subsistence for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for transportation for said inspectors for nine months, $37,800; for allowances to said inspectors for nine months, $15,750; in all, fiscal year 1923, $170,100.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that matter has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and was not included in the bill because it brings up a legal question, and therefore it was decided that it should be offered from the floor. By all means I think it should be adopted, and so far as the committee is concerned there is no objection on the part of any member of the committee to the adoption of the amendment that is offered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in view of the very general sentiment of the Senate upon this matter, and in view of the condition which prevails throughout the country with regard to the equipment, especially the motive power, of the railroads, I do not intend to consume a single minute in explanation or in defense of this amendment. I content myself by saying that there never was a time when the work of the inspectors was so necessary to the preservation of life, as well as of property, as at this time. The force of inspectors is not sufficient to do the work required of them at any time, least of all at this time; and I sincerely hope that every Senator here will favor the amendment. I recognize that a single objection would defeat it; but I have faith enough in my brother Senators to believe that under the circumstances which now exist there will not be a single voice raised against it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, last week, when the Liberian loan joint resolution was being considered, I offered an amendment carrying an appropriation of $150,000, I believe, to provide for more inspectors to inspect the locomotives throughout the country. I presented at that time facts that I thought should convince the Senate and the Congress that immediate consideration should be given to the proposition. I was delighted at that time that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], voiced sentiments similar to my own, and advocated the adoption of that amendment, as well as the Senator from Kansas, and other Senators. That amendment is now the pending amendment to the Liberian loan joint resolution, having been pending for some days.

I am very much delighted that this amendment is being offered, and that the committee is going to accept it. When we get to the consideration of the Liberian loan joint resolution, if this amendment is adopted, I shall withdraw the amendment that I proposed to that measure. I think it is quite necessary, and it should be adopted immediately.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am not fully posted about the intention of the amendment; but, while I shall not oppose it, I very much fear that it will cripple the service more than it will expedite it. It occurs to me that the railroads ought to have enough ability to inspect their own engines and keep them going. What I fear is that these Government inspectors will interfere with them, and will tie up engines that ought to be in use, and we need every available engine now to move the commodities of the country; but, in deference to the Senator proposing the amendment, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Secretary to turn to page 4, line 20, as I desire to make a correction. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "approved September —, 1922."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has been agreed to. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and it is now open to amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I now move to strike out the words I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "approved September —, 1922."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is a matter requested by the President of the United States—that $200,000 be included in the bill for the relief of American citizens who were sufferers in the Smyrna fire. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he now proposes be agreed to. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

Relief of American citizens and their relatives: For relief of American citizens and their relatives who have been victims of the recent march on Smyrna and the burning of that city, to be expended under the directon and supervision of the Secretary of State, to be immediately available, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that there may be printed, in this connection, the President's letter and also the letter from the Acting Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 20, 1922.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WARREN: I am inclosing to you herewith a letter which I have just this moment received from Undersecretary Phillips relating to the destitution among Americans and American refugees who have been the victims of the march on Smyrna and the burning of that city. It is very apparent that we have an obligation to afford relief which can not be met by private funds of American relief organizations. I am writing to request, therefore, if it meets the approval of the Senate, that you add an appropriation of $200,000 to the pending deficiency bill which may be expended in necessary relief of American citizens and their relatives. The letter of Undersecretary Phillips suggests that the appropriation be made available for expenditure at the discretion of the President, but I think it would be quite as well to lodge the discretion in the authority of the Secretary of State. It is not an important matter either way. I do think it is desirable to have available funds with which to meet the pressing need of relief, and I have no doubt that the Congress will concur in this opinion.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 20, 1922.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In response to your request for information regarding American citizens made destitute as a result of the disaster in Smyrna and the recent military operations in Anatolia, I beg to inform you of the receipt of the following telegraphic information from our officials in the Near East.

On September 14 Consul General Horton reported his arrival at Piraeus from Smyrna with 150 destitute Americans and stated that approximately 350 more American refugees were expected to reach that port the next day.

On September 15 Consul Morris telegraphed from Saloniki that "600 destitute American-Greek refugees" had arrived from Smyrna.

A recent dispatch from Admiral Bristol reports that a number of Americans are arriving in Smyrna from the interior of the country and indicates that there are a number of destitute Americans still in that city apart from those who have already been evacuated to Constantinople as well as to Greek ports.

The department has telegraphed to Constantinople, Athens, and Saloniki for detailed information as to the exact number of destitute Americans whose temporary maintenance or repatriation may be required. In the absence of replies to these telegrams it is difficult to give final information, but it would be safe to assume that the number of American citizens in need of relief would not be less than 1,000 and that this number would be considerably larger if the families and near relatives of these persons were included.

In view of this situation and considering the fact that the department has no funds available for this purpose, I would suggest the desirability of an appropriation of $200,000, to be expended at your discretion through American officials in the Near East for the relief of American citizens and their immediate relatives and for the repatriation of destitute Americans.

Faithfully yours, WILLIAM PHILLIPS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Spillway and drainage ditch, Lake Andes, S. Dak.: For the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., in accordance with the act entitled "An act providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak.," approved September 21, 1922, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on page 6, after the amendment just agreed to, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Following the amendment relative to Andes, S. Dak., just agreed to, on page 6, line 16, insert the following:

Wahpeton Indian School, Wahpeton, N. Dak.: For the purchase of additional land for the Wahpeton Indian School, $65,000, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. LENROOT. Have the two previous amendments on the same subject been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been agreed to as an entirety.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from North Dakota asked to have the amendment inserted immediately following the one which has just been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Following the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. LENROOT. These amendments have not yet been acted upon?

Mr. WARREN. They have been acted upon. We had proceeded to page 7, I understand.

Mr. LENROOT. I am informed at the desk that that is not the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

China trade act: To carry out the provisions of the act entitled "China trade act, 1922," including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere from October 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923, as follows: Registrar at $10,000 per annum, two assistant registrars at $5,000 per annum each, two clerks at $2,500 per annum each, clerk at $2,000 per annum, two clerks at $1,500 per annum each, and two clerks at $1,000 per annum each; rent outside the District of Columbia, travel and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, purchase of necessary furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, fiscal year 1923, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 15, to insert:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Oregon and California railroad lands and Coos Bay wagon-road lands: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, with the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, as in his judgment may be most advisable, to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against and check fires upon the lands revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916, and the lands known as the Coos Bay wagon-road lands involved in the case of Southern Oregon Co. v. United States (No. 2711, in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit), fiscal year 1922, $10,169.57.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCNARY. On page 5, before line 1, I move to insert the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. At the top of page 5, before the item "Department of Commerce," insert the following:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The appropriation of $103,600 made for the fiscal year 1923 for the enforcement of the future trading act, approved August 24, 1921, shall be available for carrying into effect the provisions of the grain futures act, approved September 21, 1922.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the subject matter has been considered by the committee. The amendment provides for no appropriation and should be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, after line 3, to insert:

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Rapid City Indian School, Rapid City, S. Dak.: For rebuilding and refurnishing the boys' dormitory at the Rapid City Indian School, Rapid City, S. Dak., which dormitory was recently destroyed by fire, $50,000, fiscal year 1923, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 9, to insert:

Tomah Indian School, Tomah, Wis.: For rebuilding and refurnishing the school building at the Tomah Indian School, Tomah, Wis., recently destroyed by fire, $50,000, fiscal year 1923, in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 24, 1922 (Public No. 289, 67th Cong., 2d sess.), $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of State," on page 6, after line 23, to insert:

Payment to nationals of Spain, France, Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Italy, Cuba, and the United States: For payment of the claims of the nationals of Spain, France, Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Italy, Cuba, and the United States arising out of the occupation by the American forces of Vera Cruz, Mexico, in 1914, as set forth in Senate Document No. 252 submitted to Congress at its present session, $45,518.59.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 7, to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

Claims for damages to and loss of private property: For payment of claims for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army that have accrued, or may hereafter accrue from time to time, $93,163.47: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the General Accounting Office, upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War, where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department, and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages: Provided further, That this amount shall be available exclusively for the payment of claims in excess of $500 which have been approved and recommended by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

JUDGMENTS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress during the present session in Senate Document No. 255, and which have not been appealed, namely:

Under the War Department, $9,786.96, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

For payment of the judgment rendered against the United States by the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey, sitting in admiralty, and certified to Congress in Senate Document No. 258 of the present session, under the Navy Department, $2,787.65.

For payment of the judgment rendered against the United States by the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting in admiralty, and certified to Congress in Senate Document No. 258 of the present session, under the Navy Department, $7,402.45.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 11, to insert:

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

Under the Post Office Department, $16,584.82;
Under the United States Shipping Board, $146,193.54;
In all, $284,034.71.

None of the judgments contained herein shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Robert L. Owen and associates, who are plaintiffs in the case of Wirt K. Winton, administrator of Charles F. Winton, deceased, and others against Jack Amos and others, in case No. 29821, the sum of $175,000, out of any funds now or hereafter due the Mississippi Choctaws under the judgment of the Court of Claims rendered on June 12, 1922, in favor of the above-cited plaintiffs against the Mississippi Choctaws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 21, to insert:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the General Accounting Office under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1920 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 254, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that we turn to page 11, line 21, and after the word "Choctaws" in that line I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 21, after the word "Choctaws" and before the period, insert a semicolon and the following words:

meeting the deficiency out of the reserve for unpaid Choctaw per capita funds, and reimbursing the same out of the funds hereafter due said Mississippi Choctaws per capita.

Mr. WARREN. The committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. There being unfinished business, is it not the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the Liberian loan joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from California. The Chair does not know for what purpose the Senator from California rises.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I only rise with regard to the House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 215.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield for that purpose.

TRICOUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

Mr. McNARY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 215, which were recalled from the House yesterday on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of the tri-county irrigation project, Nebraska, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "Interior" and insert "Interior, upon the payment to him in advance of the necessary funds to defray the expenses thereof"; on page 1, line 4, to strike out "a reinvestigation" and insert "an additional investigation"; on page 1, line 9, to strike out "the lands of" and insert "lands in"; on page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 3, inclusive, and to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution providing for an additional investigation of the tri-county irrigation project, Nebraska."

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the motion yesterday entered by me that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for a reinvestigation of the tri-county irrigation project, Nebraska, and asked a conference with the House thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from California yield a moment until I ask the Chair if there is on the desk a joint resolution, sent over from the House, providing for the payment of employees for this month immediately upon our final adjournment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WARREN. So that the record may be straight, the joint resolution should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee have already considered it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I now report favorably from the Committee on Appropriations House Joint Resolution 382, authorizing the payment of the salaries of employees of the Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

Mr. HARRISON. That report is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. HARRISON. I want recognition if the report is debatable. I can not understand why it is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised of the character of the report.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably the report is debatable.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The Senator from California has the floor, and he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not want to insist upon it, but I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Wyoming for the purpose of making a report. The Senator from Wyoming made the report, it has been stated to the Senate, and that report is necessarily debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator desire to debate the report? I desire to do so, if the Senator does not.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I certainly do not desire to debate the report, nor would I have yielded if I had ever anticipated that the Senator, for the purpose of delay, I think, wished to debate this report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has not the floor as yet.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask recognition.

Mr. WARREN. I simply want to state, if I may be permitted to do so——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi made a parliamentary inquiry which the Chair answered.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. FRANCE. Was unanimous consent granted for the consideration of this report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Wyoming to make a report upon a joint resolution. The report was made, and that report is debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. The report can lie on the table and come up again.

Mr. HARRISON. I am recognized, I understand. I desire to make a speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If some of the Senators standing in the aisle will take their seats, the Chair may be able to determine the precedence between them.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Chair to recognize me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Mississippi to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I rose to debate this joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, this was only a report. Is a report debatable unless it is called up for consideration? It is my understanding that when a report is made, it goes to the calendar unless unanimous consent is asked for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I refuse to yield for that purpose. This is a matter of a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee is not before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Clearly, I am not mistaken. I heard the Chair, as I thought, lay the matter before the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming, and I understood the Chair to say it was debatable, and I thought I had recognition. I am very anxious to get out of my system what I have to say about this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whenever the joint resolution comes before the Senate, it will be debatable, but it is not debatable until it is laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, is this a senate or an arena? If it is an arena, I have nothing further to say. I shall not undertake to consider it as an arena, but as the Senate. When the Chair recognizes me I assume I have the right to pronounce a sentence, and then Senators can raise their objections.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] yielded to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to make a report. It was made. That report, whenever it is laid before the Senate, is debatable. It is not debatable until it is laid before the Senate. The Chair recognizes the Senator from California.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state the inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it in order, with all deference to the Chair, for me to have read the Official Reporter's notes of just what transpired at that particular time, to see whether or not the report was laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that that be done.

Mr. CURTIS. While the Chair is waiting for the Reporter's notes may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will state the inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has demanded the regular order. Does not that automatically bring the unfinished business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the unfinished business would be laid before the Senate upon demand, and that the demand for the regular order brings the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I demanded the regular order some time ago, and I demand the regular order now.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. I just want to know exactly where I am. What is before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Liberian loan joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I withdraw the request that I made with reference to the reading of the reporter's notes and ask for recognition. Have I the floor now to address the Senate on the Liberian loan joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has just been recognized.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The unfinished business is now before the Senate. I had been recognized by the Presiding Officer as having the floor, and I would be glad to be advised when and by virtue of what act on my part I was taken from the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator took himself from the floor by yielding for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Wyoming to make a report to the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And as I understand the ruling of the President pro tempore, I yielded, as indeed I did, for the specific and limited purpose of permitting the report to be sent to the Secretary's desk. I did not yield for the purpose of having that report immediately or at any time considered. I have understood up to this moment that the Presiding Officer has so indicated, stated, and ruled. If that be true, then these intervening remarks have not deprived me of the right to the floor, for I yielded for the specific purpose stated. Now, the fact that the unfinished business has been laid before the Senate——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That fact has not taken me from the floor, with due respect to the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Mississippi, and the question of recognition is not debatable.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not debating; I am stating a few facts.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the Senator from California is out of order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I submit as a parliamentary inquiry this question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whether the Senator from California has retained the floor depends upon the extent to which he yielded to the Senator from Wyoming. The Chair is unable to recall distinctly and clearly the words used by the Senator from California when he yielded.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I beg leave, then, to say, Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that a question of recognition is not debatable under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be submitted without debate.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. I have the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the point of order is submitted to the Senate, it can be debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair declines to answer the parliamentary inquiry until the question of order raised by the Senator from Arkansas is decided, and the Chair submits that to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will that action of the Chair take me off the floor if there should be no point of order raised?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair declines to answer that inquiry at the present time.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I was upon the point of replying to a question put to me by the Chair, and that was as to what I had said, if anything, when the Senator from Wyoming requested permission to file the report. I now state that my reply was a mere assent, no more and no less.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those who believe the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas should be sustained—which is, whether the Senator from California has the floor or not——

Mr. ROBINSON. I respectfully call the Chair's attention to the fact that that is not the point of order which was made by the Senator from Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas made the point of order that, the Chair having expressly recognized the Senator from Mississippi, the question of recognition is not debatable and the Senator from California is out of order in attempting to debate the question of recognition. The Chair expressly recognized the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is now debating the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Arkansas is stating the point of order he made. I made the point of order that the Chair had recognized the Senator from Mississippi, and that the Senator from California was out of order in debating the question of recognition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decided to submit that to the Senate simply because there seems to be a controversy with regard to the manner in which the Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Wyoming. Those who believe the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas should be sustained will say "aye." Those Senators who believe otherwise will say "no."

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll. The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McLean	Shortridge
Borah	France	McNary	Simmons
Brandegee	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Harreld	Nelson	Stanfield
Bursum	Harrison	Nicholson	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	Norbeck	Sutherland
Cameron	Hitchcock	Oddie	Swanson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Keyes	Pepper	Trammell
Cummins	La Follette	Phipps	Underwood
Curtis	Lenroot	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Lodge	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Dillingham	McCormick	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	McCumber	Sheppard
Ernst	McKellar	Shields

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Arkansas, and that question is whether the Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. That question is debatable. It has been submitted to the Senate, and, having been submitted to the Senate, it is debatable under every decision ever made since the Senate was organized. I will read the decisions if the Chair desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes the Senator from Arizona is right about that.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Chair. The question, then, is debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, I desire to debate the point of order. Am I recognized, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order before anyone will be recognized. The Chair recognizes on the question of order the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire, before I begin to discuss the point of order, to ask that the Reporter may read just what transpired touching recognition, so that the Senate may intelligently vote upon this question. In my time, I want the Reporter to read just what happened.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want the RECORD read as to what I said or did not say when the Senator from Wyoming made his request.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to have it all read in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reporter will read as requested.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. There being unfinished business, is it not the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the Liberian loan joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from California. The Chair does not know for what purpose the Senator from California rises.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCNARY. I only rise with regard to the House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 215.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MCNARY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 215, which were recalled from the House yesterday on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Oregon, the following message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. MCNARY. Yesterday, Mr. President, in response to a request, the Senate recalled the papers, and I move at this time that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from California yield a moment until I ask the Chair if there is on the desk a joint resolution, sent over from the House, providing for the payment of employees for this month immediately upon our final adjournment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives:

"H. J. Res. 382, authorizing the payment of the salaries of employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month."

Mr. WARREN. So that the record may be straight, the joint resolution should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee have already considered it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I now report favorably from the Committee on Appropriations House Joint Resolution 382, authorizing the payment of the salaries of employees of the Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

Mr. HARRISON. That report is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. HARRISON. I want recognition if the report is debatable. I can not understand why it is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised of the character of the report.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably the report is debatable.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The Senator from California has the floor, and he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not want to insist upon it, but I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Wyoming for the purpose of making a report. The Senator from Wyoming made the report, it has been stated to the Senate, and that report is necessarily debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator desire to debate the report? I desire to do so if the Senator does not.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I certainly do not desire to debate that report, nor would I have yielded if I had ever anticipated that the Senator, for the purpose of delay, I think, wished to debate this report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has not the floor as yet.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask recognition.

Mr. WARREN. I simply want to state, if I may be permitted to do so——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi made a parliamentary inquiry, which the Chair answered.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. FRANCE. Was unanimous consent granted for the consideration of this report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Wyoming to make a report upon a joint resolution. The report was made, and that report is debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. The report can lie on the table and come up again.

Mr. HARRISON. I am recognized, I understand. I desire to make a speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If some of the Senators standing in the aisle will take their seats, the Chair may be able to determine the precedence between them.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Chair to recognize me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Mississippi to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I rose to debate this joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, this was only a report. Is a report debatable unless it is called up for consideration? It is my understanding that when a report is made it goes to the calendar unless unanimous consent is asked for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I refuse to yield for that purpose. This is a matter of a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee is not before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Clearly I am not mistaken. I heard the Chair, as I thought, lay the matter before the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming, and I understood the Chair to say it was debatable, and I thought I had recognition. I am very anxious to get out of my system what I have to say about this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whenever the joint resolution comes before the Senate it will be debatable, but it is not debatable until it is laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, I suppose that every Senator after hearing what transpired will certainly vote that the Senator from California, suave as he is, and entertaining always as a speaker, and anxious as we are to hear him speak, ought not to have recognition of the Chair, but that, the joint resolution presented by the Senator from Wyoming having been laid before the Senate for consideration, and being debatable, I was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I refuse to yield for the present.

Mr. FRANCE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not yield for any purpose.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not help yielding for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. That was not the case awhile ago when the Chair did not recognize me for a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. FRANCE. But I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. I refuse to yield for the present.

Mr. President, the joint resolution that was laid before the Senate——

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, a Senator has a right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. He has that right at any time, and he can not be shut off.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield only for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry, if I have to.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRANCE. If the question of whether the Senator from California or the Senator from Mississippi has the floor is debatable, I desire to ask if upon that question the Senator from California, until it is decided, has not the floor? I ask the Chair now to rule which Senator has the floor to debate the question of the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire, before I proceed further, to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to say that if the regular order was demanded, that meant that the unfinished business was laid before the Senate. The regular order was demanded both by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I presume, therefore, that in all this mix-up the unfinished business that is now before the Senate is the Liberian loan joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. So, in the discussion, I shall discuss the Liberian loan proposition, if I may be permitted, and the other proposition also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is with regard to the privilege of the Senator from California to hold the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, upon the point of order which the Chair stated is to be submitted to the Senate, I made the point of order that the Chair having recognized the Senator from Mississippi, and the Senator from California having risen and proceeded to discuss the question as to whether he was properly taken from the floor and whether the Senator from Mississippi rightfully had the floor, that is not a debatable question. Questions of recognition, under the precedents of the Senate, are exclusively within the decision of the Chair, and the Chair can not submit a question of recognition to the Senate. If the Chair adopts the policy of submitting questions of recognition to the Senate, the Senate may consume its entire time in discussing the question as to who is entitled to the floor, with the result that no one will ever get the floor and no business will ever be transacted.

The precedents of the Senate on this subject are unanimous. There is no one to the contrary. It devolves upon the Presiding Officer, when a number of Senators address the Presiding Officer, to determine the question as to who shall be recognized. It is the duty of the Presiding Officer to exercise that function impartially. The rule of the Senate contemplates that the Senator first rising and addressing the Chair shall be entitled to recognition; but if the Chair should happen to see another Senator first, or hear another Senator first, the Chair would recognize him. If the Chair decides the question wrongly, if the Chair chooses to act arbitrarily in the matter, and to recognize a Senator who last addressed him instead of a Senator who first addressed him, the decision of the Chair on that subject is conclusive, and the question can not be submitted to the Senate under any precedent that has ever been made before.

What occurred this afternoon was this: The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] took the floor and yielded first to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. Then he yielded to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who, after having discussed other matters, called up a joint resolution. It was called to the attention of the Presiding Officer that before the joint resolution could be considered in the Senate, it must first be reported formally by the Committee on Appropriations. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said that the committee had already discussed the matter and considered the joint resolution, and that he would thereupon report it. He made the report. The Chair formally, in the only way that he could have proceeded to do so, acting upon the implied request of the Senator from Wyoming, laid the joint resolution before the Senate and announced that that subject was debatable; whereupon the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asked the Senator from California whether he desired to debate the question that was before the Senate, the joint resolution which the Chair had finally declared was debatable.

The Senator from California announced that he did not desire to do so. Thereupon the Senator from Mississippi sought recognition for the express purpose of discussing the joint resolution. The Chair recognized him, but subsequently reached the conclusion that the joint resolution was not before the Senate, and that some other bill, the Liberian loan measure, was before the Senate. In the meantime the Senator from California had proceeded to discuss the question as to whether he or the Senator from Mississippi was entitled to the floor. He reviewed the circumstances under which he lost the floor. I made the point of order that that question was not debatable; that the decision of the Chair upon the subject was conclusive upon the Senator from California, even though the occupant of the chair might have made a mistake. The Senator from California persisted in the discussion, and I repeated the point of order; and thereupon the Presiding Officer announced that he would submit to the Senate the question as to who was entitled to the floor.

This is not only in violation of every precedent of the Senate but it will be destructive of all business procedure in the Senate. It will make it impossible for the Senate to do business. The Chair has the obligation of determining questions of recognition, and when the Chair determines a question of recognition, whether the decision in the opinion of the Senate is right or wrong, the Senate is precluded from discussing or appealing from that decision. The action of the Chair necessarily is conclusive upon the subject.

With all due respect to the present occupant of the chair, of whom the present occupant of the floor is very fond, the Chair has no right to submit questions of recognition to the Senate. If this precedent is established in times when debate runs high in the Senate and a number of Senators are contesting for the floor, there may be a dozen record votes on the question as to whether the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor; and, of course, if the precedent becomes established, and one Senator reaches the conclusion that he is entitled to the floor when some other Senator insists upon occupying the floor, it may be tested out by a vote.

The Chair held that the matter before the Senate was the joint resolution, and declared that it was debatable. Upon the refusal of the Senator seeking the floor, the Senator from California—who had yielded, according to the previous decision of the Chair—to discuss the question before the Senate, the Senator from Mississippi sought and obtained recognition, and proceeded to discuss for a little time the question before the Senate; whereupon, upon the Senator from California insisting that he was entitled to the floor, and the point of order being made by myself that the question was not debatable, the Chair sought to submit the question to the Senate. I think it is a very dangerous precedent for the Presiding Officer of this body to adopt.

This subject, of course, is debatable. Under the rules of the Senate, when the Chair chooses to submit questions of order to the Senate the subject is debatable. We might consume the entire remainder of this session, if we chose to do so, in the discussion of the question as to whether the Senator from California or the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say, on his own behalf, that in his opinion the question is not whether the Senator from California or the Senator from Mississippi has the floor. The question behind it all is whether the Senator from California lost the floor through yielding first to the Senator from Oregon and next to the Senator from Wyoming. If the Senator from California had not lost the floor, it would have been impossible for the Chair to recognize any other Senator.

The precedents are all ways with regard to the extent to which a Senator can yield without losing his right to the floor, and that is the question upon which the Chair would like the judgment of the Senate. No consistent rule has been pursued with regard to the right of a Senator to yield to a colleague for the purpose of making an inquiry, for the purpose of conducting a debate, or for the purpose of transacting business. The Chair has no inclination to shirk any part of the duty of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Chair and the indulgence of the Senate, the legal point as stated by the President pro tempore is in no sense different from the proposition as stated by myself. At last it resolves itself into a question of recognition.

The Chair held expressly that the Senator from California had relinquished the floor by yielding to the Senator from Wyoming for the purposes which the Chair mentioned and discussed. If the Chair was mistaken in that decision no appeal would lie from it, and therefore the question could not be submitted to the Senate; but subsequently the Chair very properly recognized another Senator who announced his purpose to discuss the question which the Chair said was before the Senate, and which the Chair held was debatable.

Upon that proposition the Chair's ruling was conclusive, no appeal being taken from his decision, so that at last it resolves itself into a question of recognition, and what the Chair is submitting to the Senate is whether or not the Senator from California lost the floor, as the Chair now states the proposition, by yielding to the Senator from Wyoming. The Chair decided that question, and under the rules of the Senate it can not be submitted to the Senate; but just as much difficulty, just as much harm, could arise from a precedent of the sort that is now proposed to be established as in the case that I first mentioned. The two cases are not in fact distinguishable in law in any sense. If a Senator who thinks himself aggrieved by having been taken from the floor can request the Chair to submit the question of his right to the Senate, and have that subject debated at great length in the Senate, the Senate may consume its entire time in the determination of the question as to who is entitled to speak and who is not entitled to speak, and thus the business of the Senate may be unduly deferred.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when the vote comes how shall Senators vote? Shall we pass around secret ballots? If I am for the Senator from California occupying the floor, how shall I vote, for instance? Or if some Senator should think I am entitled to the floor how would he vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There would be no difficulty about that, as the Chair imagines. The question would be upon sustaining the point of order: Shall the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas be sustained? Inasmuch, however, as there seems to be a desire that the Chair shall rule upon the question, the Chair will withdraw the submission to the Senate, if that be permissible; and the Chair holds that the point of order is well taken and recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I yield for a question only. I do not want to be taken off the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the Senator has not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Chair has rendered a decision. In the opinion of the Chair does an appeal lie from that decision?

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the authorities hold——

Mr. ROBINSON. I have any number of the authorities upon that proposition before me. No appeal lies. There never has been a case in which any Presiding Officer in the Senate has ever held that an appeal lies from a decision of the Chair on the question of recognition.

There are before me now Senators who are skilled parliamentarians, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Every Senator knows that when the Chair decides a question of recognition, there is no appeal from it. Why does the Senator from Indiana ask such a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt upon that point. If Senators will permit the Chair to make a ruling, the Chair decides that, in his opinion, there can be no appeal from the action of the Chair in recognizing a Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair is exactly right.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am asking the Senator to yield——

Mr. HARRISON. For a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Conceding the Senator's right for the moment——

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I rise to a matter of personal privilege. I wish the RECORD to be very clear to this extent, that when requested by the Senator from Wyoming——

Mr. HARRISON. I yielded only for a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. One moment, please.

Mr. HARRISON. I yielded for a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will put it in interrogative form. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I would rather proceed with my speech.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi this question——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am so anxious to get to a discussion of this joint resolution that I prefer not to yield right now. I will yield presently.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, as a question of privilege, then, I claim the right to intervene at this point, under parliamentary law.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I refuse to yield except for a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield save for a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Hereafter probably the Senator will yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senator, having engagements elsewhere, how many hours he thinks he will speak on this measure?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to occupy much of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I merely ask for the reason, that if permissible under any rule——

Mr. HARRISON. I refuse to yield; I do not yield for that. I want to go ahead with this speech.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And I want the Senator to do so; and if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me——

Mr. HARRISON. I refuse to yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the joint resolution providing for the Liberian loan is before the Senate, and has been considered here for weeks and for weeks. It has become an important measure because we have incorporated in it an appropriation of $20,000,000 for reclamation and irrigation work for the West, and I am sure there would be no Senator on the other side of the aisle, especially from the far western State of California, who would lend his influence or his vote to displace this very important joint resolution, carrying the $20,000,000 appropriation for reclamation and irrigation.

Some final action should be taken upon the resolution, with this amendment, especially the amendment, not necessarily the $5,000,000 appropriation for the colored population of Liberia, before the Congress adjourns to-morrow at 2 o'clock. I can not imagine what is in the mind of my good friend the Senator from California. I am very anxious to hear him make his speech before the Congress adjourns. It will be, I am sure, a gem of oratory, and we shall all be delighted to hear it. But if his purpose was to displace this appropriation of $20,000,000 for reclamation and irrigation work in the West, then I can not follow him, as much as I would delight to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not to mention the $5,000,000 for the Liberian population, which was intended to placate the negro vote just before the election.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is eminently correct about that, that the $5,000,000 appropriated——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I assume that what the senior Senator from Mississippi said is worth hearing. May I ask that it be stated again?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I told my colleague please not to forget the $5,000,000 for the population of Liberia, which, in my opinion, is intended to placate the negro votes for the Republican Party in the coming election. Now, I hope the Senator understands it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do, indeed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, so much for that. There was laid before the Senate, and objection was made to it by some one, a joint resolution reported from the Appropriations Committee of the Senate authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and the House borne on the annual and session rolls, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of September. That resolution should pass before the Senate adjourns to-morrow because these employees have been faithful, they have performed well their duties. They are entitled to it. If this joint resolution authorized compensation to Republican Senators, I would perhaps be opposed to it, because you have not earned "your bread." Just to think, here are the employees and clerks and the policemen around here performing their services well, earning their salaries. What is it you have done to earn your salaries?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARRISON. I might lose the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My colleague is speaking most eloquently and most powerfully in behalf of certain fundamental principles he and I hold dear, and it seems to me there is not a quorum of the Senate present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator to withhold that a moment? Mr. President, would I lose the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would apply the same rule to the Senator from Mississippi that he applied to the Senator from California, and if the Senator from Mississippi yields for the purpose of another Senator making an argument, the Senator from Mississippi will lose the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the point of no quorum. I would rather in the absence of a quorum listen to my colleague than in the presence of a quorum listen to anybody else.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I was proceeding to say, these faithful employees, for whom we are asked to make appropriations, earned their salaries; but for the most part, though not entirely, the gentlemen of the majority party in the Senate have not earned theirs.

What have you Republicans done? We have been in session for a long time, and we have seen in the closing hours of this Congress some of your sins of commission, as well as of omission. We saw, for instance, on day before yesterday the profiteers' adjusted compensation bill given its finishing touches by you. I read in the papers this morning that they are going to have great ceremonies at the White House. The President, it said, had delayed the signing of the profiteers' adjusted compensation bill until the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the chairman of the Finance Committee could be there, with their clerks and attendants, and then President Harding was to sign it with the motion-picture machines operating. I do not know why they did not include the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who have been so faithful to the big interests of the country behind closed doors, as well as on the floor of the Senate, in formulating and piloting the bill to the President of the United States.

It may be that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Indiana were invited to go along under promise that they would be given a gold pen, too, used by President Harding in the signing of the profiteers' adjusted compensation bill; but perhaps the scales now have fallen from their eyes and they have seen that the measure is not so popular, and they did not want to attend the final obsequies of their party.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean to say they refused the invitation?

Mr. HARRISON. I suspect so. At the same time they were, with their special messengers, carrying and signing this profiteers' adjusted compensation bill, you who now want to pay the faithful employees, as you should, were burying the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

Not only that, but I read in yesterday afternoon's papers that the leader of your party in the House of Representatives and the Speaker of the House of Representatives had gone to the White House and conferred with your President, whom I might say many of you forsook yesterday when he vetoed the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. Some of you leaders, who have tied yourselves so much to him and been so wedded and subservient to him, saw that he was going down too fast, and you let him sink yesterday, did you not? You could not continue with him and vote to sustain his veto on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], up for reelection, speaking to the soldiers of Massachusetts, pleading for votes up there, canceled his dates in Massachusetts and ran back to forsake the leader of his party and vote against sustaining his veto.

A similar vote was cast by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who confers with the President more than any other Senator, and whose word is always accepted as authority as giving the views of the President. The news reporters seek him, because he is in the confidence of the President. Even he forsook the President on the adjusted compensation bill. Why? Because he knew that his President had promised the soldier adjusted compensation, and that his veto was such a betrayal to the men who served their country in that great crisis that no excuse could be offered.

But, Mr. President, while the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of his party in the Senate, rushes back from Massachusetts to forsake the President on that proposition he did not do it on the profiteers' adjusted compensation bill.

What did my eyes behold yesterday? I read of this conference of GILLETTE and MONDELL and others at the White House, and a statement given to the press that while we are going to adjourn to-morrow at 2 o'clock, Congress would be called back in extra session on the 15th day of November. For what purpose? To take up again the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill? No! To do something for the McNary reclamation bill, which you killed and which the West desired so much? No. To pass legislation in the interest of the farmers? No. To attempt to do something to reduce taxes and the high cost of living? No. He was going to call the Congress in extraordinary session on the 15th day of November for the purpose of compelling you to write into law the Shipping Trust adjusted compensation bill. He wants to give to the Shipping Trust, to the Standard Oil Co., or to the Steel Trust, or other large shipping corporations which, immediately preceding the war, exacted from the American farmer and manufacturer high and unconscionable ocean rates.

He wants you to meet in extraordinary session on the 15th of November to pass the Shipping Trust adjusted compensation bill that would allow Lasker, one of his closest friends, to sell to whomsoever he pleases, without advertisement, limitation, or restriction, the merchant marine which cost the American people $3,000,000,000. He wants Lasker to sell it at a time when he knows there can not be realized a fair amount on the sale of the vessels. We have all read in the papers where they are offering for sale vessels that cost over $100,000 each, and that the highest offer that is made is about $3,000 each, and yet you are to be called back into extraordinary session by your remarkable President, who is the best repudiator of pledges and breaker of promises that ever occupied the White House, to give to Lasker the power to sell the merchant marine, perhaps to some of his friends and favorites and pets, perhaps to some who will contribute in lavish amount to the present campaign of the Republican Party.

He wants you to meet here on the 15th of November in extraordinary session to pass the Shipping Trust adjusted compensation bill, which will drain the Treasury of $125,000,000 to be loaned to those men and interests and corporations that buy the ships at small prices, to be loaned to them at 2 per cent interest and for 15 years' time, if they want it.

Your President is to call the Congress back in extraordinary session on the 15th day of November to compel you to pass the Shipping Trust adjusted compensation bill, that would drain the Treasury by its terms of $75,000,000 a year for 10 years' time—yea, $750,000,000 in all—to go as a subsidy to the shipping interests of the country who are to receive favoritism at the hands of Lasker.

That is a fine message to take back to your constituents. Not one cent for the American soldiers, but millions for the shipping interests. You repudiate the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill and resurrect the Shipping Trust adjusted compensation measure. The Government is now too poor to obligate itself for the soldiers, but quite rich enough to drain its coffers for the shipping interests. It is a fine record that you are to take back, and as I look into the benign countenance of my good friend, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], I say to him, it is a fine record to take back to the people of Indiana, that he may plead with them to send to the Senate as his colleague Albert J. Beveridge, his erstwhile political—I wonder if the people of Indiana, as I hesitate, would have me to say his erstwhile political friend or his erstwhile political enemy? But when he goes back to Indiana I would like to sit away back in a corner as his wonderful voice penetrated the recesses of the hall, as his magnificent form was exposed to view before the great assemblage of the people, as he exploited and exaggerated and eloquently portrayed the program of his party in behalf of the election of Beveridge to the Senate as his colleague. Then, as I would sit there and hear his voice, some fellow who had been friendly to him from the time he started out as a young man at the bar, on through the House of Representatives, as a delegate to this and that convention, dominating the politics of Indiana, winning for himself a national reputation as a leader of his people in the State and of his party at Washington—some one of those friends who had been so loyal to him would say, "Oh, Jim, don't you remember when Beveridge said you were a "porch climber?"

Mr. WILLIAMS. Beveridge never said that, did he?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; Beveridge said worse than that. The people of Indiana, of course, did not believe him. Of course, at the time they repudiated such statements as that. But all over the State and in article after article through the public press it was Beveridge, who now seeks the undoing of Harding as President of the United States, because you know in your hearts that Beveridge is not only a candidate for the United States Senate on the Republican ticket in Indiana, but he is a candidate now for the Republican nomination for the presidency at your next convention. Why, his friends will work from now on, day in and day out, to undo the chances, big as they may be, of my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the present President of the United States to be the next Chief Executive of the Nation.

Oh, I wonder what the friends of the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana think out in his State when they get the papers and refresh their memories as to the mean things that candidate Beveridge said against the Republican leadership, including Taft and WATSON and NEW, and all the others in that State who have piloted the party to success. I wonder if their friends will relish the thought that he said that the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana was a "second-story man," a "porch climber." I deny such statements as unworthy of the man against whom they were uttered, as unbelievable, and I condemn them in the very strongest language. Why, Mr. President, it humiliates me, it makes my heart bleed, when I think that no Republican Senator will come to the rescue and defense of my good friend from Indiana, the senior Senator from that State, when such unpardonable things are said about him in the public press and by those who seek office in his State. Nothing but my warm friendship for him and the knowledge that I have that it is not true would cause me now to allow any reference to these unpleasant incidents. I know they are distasteful. It is a black spot upon the memory of the State of Indiana that men who have a strong hold on the affections and the hearts of the people of that State should have said about one another what WATSON said about Beveridge and what Beveridge said about WATSON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did WATSON cuss Beveridge as much as Beveridge cussed him? That is a sad situation.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, my good friend the senior Senator from Indiana is so mild-mannered, even-tempered, and big-hearted that he could not cuss anybody or say anything bad about them. That is another thing that makes me riled, to think that such a man as he should have had thrown at him such statements and expressions as were hurled against him by candidate Beveridge in the State of Indiana. I am going to look through the press of that State some time to see whether or not there is anything else that he said about my friend the senior Senator from Indiana that I do not recall now. If I can find anything of the sort and no Senator on the other side of the Chamber will rise to his defense, I shall undertake the job myself, because I am vitally interested in it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, that is the record. The soldiers' adjusted compensation bill was killed in the closing hours of this Congress. The profiteers' adjusted compensation bill was passed just two days before adjournment. There was withheld, I might say, through parliamentary maneuvering, from the people of the West a $20,000,000 appropriation which we had adopted here, and notice is served on the country that immediately after the election in November the Congress will be called upon to pass the shipping trust adjusted compensation bill. How are you going to explain all these things when you go back home? I do not blame some of you Republicans for looking so woe-begone and so disconsolate. It is a horrible record to take back to your people.

In the President's message vetoing the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, the President spoke about the great deficiencies of the administration, and yet, speaking in Massachusetts or somewhere else, we heard the distinguished chairman of the Republican senatorial committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], or the Republican leader of this body, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], talking about the wonderful saving which has been made by the administration. Why, bless your souls, you have passed so many deficiency bills during this Congress that you have gone to changing the name of them. You will not admit now that it is a 1922 deficiency. The deficiency bill which was brought in to-day and which was just passed by the Senate was entitled the first deficiency bill for 1923. You are starting out pretty early. The last day Congress is to hold in session you jam through here the first deficiency bill for 1923, and yet as soon as some of you get back home you will exploit the wonderful work that was done by the Budget system and the great retrenchment that came about through the administration of the Republican Party, because you realize that your constituents will not know that you have passed so many deficiency appropriation bills that you are ashamed of them and that on the last day of the Congress you brought in a bill which you labeled "first deficiency appropriation bill for 1923."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in his seat mumbles something. I do not know what he says, but I am taking his own literature. I read from it, and now if he can correct that statement I will be glad to receive the correction.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not wish to take the time to interrupt the Senator and I do not care what he says——

Mr. HARRISON. I read from the bill itself.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi understands, however, that the appropriations for 1923 begin on the 1st day of July of this year. We have now passed the 1st day of July of this year, and whatever appropriations are now made are made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah is not contradicting anything I have said. He agrees with me. I said we were starting on the last day of this Congress to make deficiency appropriations for 1923; the Senator admits it, and yet he gets up and almost starts at me. He appears to be ruffled. I am merely stating facts, and I have proven them by the Senator's own statement. Making appropriations on September 21, 1922, and saying it is a deficiency already made for 1923. You are starting pretty bad very soon. I am now going to prove some more facts by the Senator's statements.

I read on yesterday in the Washington Star of last Friday—I have the paper here before me, but I do not want to trespass too much upon the time of the Senate, and consequently I shall not read it again—from an article on the first page of that paper, which was printed in big black type, stating that reorganization of the departments was not dead; that the program of the President would be started at the next session of Congress, or words to that effect.

Oh, the deception that Senators on the other side of the Chamber and this administration try to practice, the hypocrisy which it seems always attend your movements! What are the facts touching reorganization? In March, 1921—18 months ago—with a blare of trumphets and flashlights of enthusiasm, the Republican Congress passed a joint resolution. It was passed in this body at the instance of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. That joint resolution gave the Presiding Officer of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives the right to name three representatives each to form a joint commission on reorganization of the Government bureaus in order that efficiency might be worked out, that waste might be eliminated, that useless jobs might be abolished, and that some saving might be effected to the American taxpayer. That, as I have stated, was in March, 1921.

There was a very distinguished and splendid and able gentleman from Ohio high in the councils of the Republican Party. The President, of course, had not been able to take care of anyone from Ohio in the matter of appointments to jobs, and so he sought out this man, Mr. Brown, and asked the Congress to amend that joint resolution in order that Mr. Brown might be made chairman of the commission. That was done. The commission was appointed away back in March or in April last year, 18 months ago. In all it has had no more than three meetings, and at no meeting has any action been taken or measures toward reorganization considered. There has, however, been no meeting of that commission since April or May of this year. The Senator from Utah is a member of that commission and he will bear out my statement of facts. It was at that meeting the President of the United States told us that within about 30 days he would be able to submit his plan to the commission. I have never heard a word, however, from the President or from any member of the commission or from anybody else with reference to the plan or the work of the commission from that night up to this good day.

Under the instructions of the Congress of the United States this commission was directed to perform certain work, but 18 months have elapsed and that work has been held up by the President of the United States. Yes; the President of the United States has held it up, because if the Congress had been permitted to go about this work, as the three Members of the Senate and the three Members of the House of Representatives expected to do, the Government bureaus would have been, in some degree, at least, reorganized, and some saving would have been effected to the American people; but the matter is now up in the air.

Magazines away back 18 months ago wrote about the wonderful reform the commission would bring about. Even the Saturday Evening Post, through its editorial columns, appealed to its subscribers everywhere to write to the commission making suggestions; and yet the whole thing has gone by the board. Yet despite that record—and the Senator from Utah, who knows the facts as I do, will corroborate my statement as to the meeting and what was expected and what little work has been done—there will be men who will go out upon the hustings in the approaching campaign and tell about the wonderful reform that has been effectuated.

I ask Republican Senators to tell the people in their speeches what their President did in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, when he discharged without notice and without cause 43 faithful employees, some of them soldie s of the late war, some of them women who had families to support, some of whom lacked only two or three years before they would be put upon the civil service retired list.

Their official heads, however, were all thrown into a basket by the President of the United States; they were deprived of their jobs. When the Civil Service Reform Commission got in behind the situation and an indignant and aroused public opinion throughout the country began to criticize the President, what did he do? He appointed a board of some kind to make an investigation and to file a report. They made an investigation and submitted a report, and that report still lies on his table. If the newspapers be correct, that report exonerated the officials and employees in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, who had been removed, from every charge that was made against them; it gave them a "clean bill of health"; yet the President of the United States has not made that report public, and he continues to sit idly by and allow the stain to remain upon the record of those faithful employees.

I ask Republican Senators to go back to their constituents and to tell them how their President has ignored an order of the Senate of the United States when months and months ago an aroused people, from one end of the country to the other, asked Senators to demand of the President by what right he could issue Executive orders setting aside the civil service rules and appointing anybody he chose to the post offices and to civil-service positions throughout the country. It is remembered how at Marion, Ohio, in order to put a man in office, he wrote out an Executice order and placed him there, and how, due to this aroused and indignant public opinion, petitioning the Congress of the United States, the Senate by a unanimous vote asked the President to send here a list of such appointments and his reasons for those appointments wherein the civil service laws had been set aside, but from that day to this the President of the United States has failed to respond.

Oh, it is a wonderful record that the Republican majority have made, a splendid record. Let them take it back to their constituents.

Mr. President, so anxious am I to see the amendment which was attached to the bill by the Senate proposing to appropriate $20,000,000 for reclamation and irrigation work in the West that I am going to yield the floor now in the hope that before 2 o'clock to-morrow, when the Congress of the United States shall adjourn, the amendment may be adopted finally in the Senate.

However, Mr. President, before I take my seat I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the unfinished business now before the Senate is the Liberian loan bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was about to make that suggestion myself.

Mr. CURTIS. Before the Senator does that, I was about to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold the suggestion for a moment.

SUPPRESSION OF MOB VIOLENCE.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13, being Calendar No. 822——

Mr. HARRISON. I did not withhold the point of no quorum for that purpose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. But a point of no quorum has been made.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The title of the bill is "to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Dillingham	Nelson	Shields
Borah	Ernst	New	Shortridge
Broussard	France	Nicholson	Simmons
Bursum	Gooding	Norbeck	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Oddie	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Swanson
Capper	Keyes	Ransdell	Trammell
Colt	Lenroot	Rawson	Watson, Ind.
Cummins	McCormick	Reed, Mo.
Curtis	McCumber	Reed, Pa.
Dial	McNary	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Forty-one Senators having answered to the roll call, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

Mr. HEFLIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators having answered to the roll call, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. PEPPER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After a little delay, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The Senator from California has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 13, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I realize, as I am very sure every Senator does, the great importance of this proposed legislation; and upon the very threshold of the few remarks I shall now make I wish to assure Senators individually and collectively that nothing that has occurred this afternoon has disturbed my mind or caused me to feel other than kindly disposed toward any and all who participated in this afternoon's proceedings.

I appreciate that those who oppose this measure base their opposition upon constitutional grounds, as also upon questions of State or national policy. I trust my character is well and sufficiently enough appraised for all to understand that I discuss questions, and shall discuss this one, with unfeigned respect for the opinions of others, with admiration for many, certainly without any feeling of personal hostility to Senators who, under their oaths, in responding to their mature convictions, oppose any position which I may take.

In perfect candor I wish to say, preliminarily, that it was not my intention to enter upon a discussion of the merits of this bill to-day and, with further and full candor I add, perhaps not enter upon that discussion within the next few days; but I have desired, and I still desire, that this measure be brought up, not for hasty or angry or acrimonious consideration, but for the mature consideration, deliberation, thought, and action of the Senate of the United States.

Perhaps in some degree discourteously this afternoon, I made inquiry as to whether this was a senate or an arena. I do not wish that to be remembered, if it was offensive. I have practiced long in the forum, and I think I know the difference between a forum and an arena. This is the Senate. I love to believe that we all appreciate our duty under the oath which was here recorded, and perhaps recorded up yonder; that we are all conscious of that oath, its obligations, and the duty that rests upon us to observe it—not violate it.

The bill is one which, of course, is familiar to every Senator. It is familiar to the country. It is a measure which has been discussed in newspapers, in political gatherings, in church congregations by men and by women, and serious citizens, thoughtful citizens, east and west, south and north, have thought more or less deeply, more or less intelligently, over the questions which are necessarily involved in the bill and by you and by me and by all of us to be resolved and acted upon.

I said, and I repeat, that the Dyer bill, the so-called anti-lynching bill, is in its scope and purpose pretty generally understood by the American people. With me, in considering this question there is no Southland, beautiful, fertile, patriotic as it is. With me on a question such as this there is no Westland, gloriously rich and beautiful as it is, no Northland, no Eastland. With me every foot of our soil is sacred, and with me the rights of every man and woman, whether they be in Florida or Washington, in Maine or California, are equally sacred and to be preserved.

Moreover, as bearing upon this question and introductory, so to speak, I wish to have it here set down and by some people remembered that with me there is but one Constitution of the United States, and that it is like unto some great canopy, sheltering every native and every naturalized man, woman, and child beneath it. I want it understood that in discussing this measure—and I beg gentlemen not to think I am trying here now to indulge in words merely—I have a profound and lifelong, fixed reverence for the Constitution of our common country, and I would not disturb any of its pillars, I would not undermine its great foundation.

Rapidly there passes through my mind, as it does through yours, the formation of our Constitution, the growth of our Republic, the sorrows through which we have passed, the bitter cup which has been put to our lips. I remember it all, as you do. But it is still the same one Constitution, which I must uphold, which you must uphold, and, as Aaron Burr said in the Senate in a room adjoining this in his farewell address—

> The place where liberty will take her last stand in America is here, here in the Senate of the United States.

I venture, paraphrasing those words, to say that if this Constitution of ours is to survive, to perpetuate the liberties of man and woman, and if the rights of States and the rights of the Nation as such are to be preserved, if a battle shall come for the preservation of all that we hold dear, the last stand in the defense of these precious things will be in the Senate of the United States. So feeling, in entering upon this discussion and anticipating much that will be said, I wish it to be understood that I propose to proceed unto the end without any passion, without any unjust reflections upon men or States wherever they may be.

Now, Mr. President, I said, speaking without intention to do so this afternoon, that it was not my purpose to enter elaborately upon a discussion of the questions which are necessarily involved, properly involved, in the bill. But what I had wanted to do was to bring up the bill for consideration, to get it before the Senate so that I could listen, as I shall listen—not out of a sense of compulsion but as a matter of duty and to be enlightened—to the learning of the great Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], for it may not be improper for me to anticipate that he, for reasons which he will advance, is, and will be, opposed to this legislation. It is not necessary for me to say so to meet the requirements of courtesy, but I do say that I respect his views touching the Constitution and the power or the competency of Congress to enact the proposed legislation. What degree of weight he shall give to my views of course I can not, nor do I intend to, anticipate.

But, during the discussion, if we shall bring the bill before the Senate, doubtless there will be many Senators, hailing from different sections of our country, North and South, East and West, who entertain divergent views upon the bill as a whole or as to some of its features. I think I am right in saying that there may be certain Senators here who think that certain sections of the bill are constitutional, whereas they may think other sections are doubtful, perhaps entirely unconstitutional.

I can well anticipate that there will be elaborate arguments. I beg the Senate to believe me when I say that whereas I think the bill is constitutional and that it should become the law of the land, I am so constituted that I shall listen without impatience to the arguments attacking my position, and in order finally to determine whether my views are sound.

All this may seem perfectly obvious and scarcely worthy of statement, but I trespass upon the courtesy of the Senate to say what I have said perhaps by way of excuse or explanation of my earnestness in desiring to have the bill brought before the Senate for consideration. I shall deplore it beyond expression if the discussion shall develop anything in the nature of hostile feeling as between or among Senators or as between or among or against any State or section of our reunited and common country.

Perhaps it may be understood why I say this, because here and yonder, Mr. President, I have seen intimations that the bill was in the nature of attack upon this State or that section. Such a purpose is furthest from my mind, and, I think I am warranted in adding, furthest from the mind of any Senator who favors the legislation. No, no, there is no longer any Mason and Dixon line in America. If there ever was such a line it was taken up years ago and wrapped around the hearts of the American people. In 1898 and in the late great war we proved, if proof were necessary, that whatever had been the estrangements of the past, we were once more a united, one unified, one patriotic, and one liberty-loving and Constitution-loving people, against whom the world can not prevail. In that spirit I wish this bill to be discussed.

Right here let it be understood that I personally very strongly and very earnestly agree to everything that is set down in the concluding lines of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

May I trouble Senators, if it be a trouble, to read a few lines from the concluding portion of the report of the Judiciary Committee on the bill? I believe that what is here said is true as a matter of law and is true as a matter of wise policy for our country, my country. I shall not suffer my mind to dwell upon some proud memories which I cherish. My people, from North Carolina and from Kentucky, obscure as they were, yet loved this Republic. I was not born in the Southland, but I am not ashamed of the State in which I was born; I am proud, indeed, of the Hawkeye State. But I can approach this question with a filial affection for the section and particularly for the State I mentioned a moment ago in referring to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

I ought not to introduce these personal thoughts, but I remember my dear brother John married a Memphis girl who was one of the beauties of that beautiful State. I remember also that certain other of my relatives who cut some figure in Kentucky afterwards moved to Alabama, and that their names will be found in the judicial history of that State. Pardon me for these personal allusions, but it was to emphasize the thought that nothing will occur in the Senate to disturb my feelings, and I trust nothing I shall say will disturb the feelings of Senators who may oppose my views or oppose this measure.

In the concluding portion of their report on the bill the Judiciary Committee said, and which I think was entirely true:

> The committee has devoted much time and earnest thought to the consideration of this bill and has reached the conclusion that as amended the bill is constitutional and should pass. That conclusion is reached by different processes of reasoning and by reliance on different provisions of the Constitution; but whatever process of reasoning is adopted or whatever provisions of the Constitution are relied on, we hold that the proposed legislation is "appropriate legislation" to cure or prevent the evil of lynching wherever in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof that evil exists or is committed.

The learning of Senators, of course, will direct their minds to that section of the Constitution or that portion of the fourteenth amendment which speaks of "appropriate legislation," that provision which gives to Congress the power by "appropriate legislation" to carry out the purposes of that great amendment.

The committee proceeds:

> White or black, "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States," and no State may—

And I would arrest the attention of the Senate to these immediate words—> and no State may by affirmative legislative, judicial, or executive action, or by failure, neglect, or refusal to act, deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The committee undertook to express this thought in that paragraph of the report: The inhibition in the fourteenth amendment running against the several States was, first, as against any affirmative legislative, judicial, or executive action which should deprive any person of life or liberty or property without due process of law. The committee undertook also to state the proposition that the amendment was broad enough and was intended to operate upon a given State and prevent that State, by its failure or its neglect or its refusal to act, from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

In other words, grounding this case upon that section of the Constitution for the moment—and it is not the only section upon which I ground it—my position is that no State by affirmative action or by nonaction can bring about the deprivation of life or liberty or property of the citizen without due process of law. If a State closes its eyes or if the State simply stands idly by, be it my own State of California or any other State, and suffers any human being within the jurisdiction of the United States to be deprived of his life, his liberty, which is a million times more precious than his property, without due process of law, this mighty and just Nation, under the Constitution, may reach out its arm and protect him in his life, in his liberty.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from California has been reading from the report of the committee, I believe?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think it would be fair for the Senator to state that the report was not unanimous.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall do so.

Mr. SHIELDS. The report was made by a majority of one.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall state that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I also wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not losing the floor, I presume, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly not. The Senator is only yielding to me for a question which I desire to ask, and I am certainly not attempting to deprive the Senator of the floor. The report from which the Senator is reading is 32 pages long and contains but two pages of original matter, the remainder being extracts from briefs filed in support of the bill.

I am gratified that the Senator has not joined in and has not approved by copying them into his report—for he submitted the report for the committee—the vicious, unfounded assaults which were made by one Moorfield Storey in his brief against certain Southern States and their governors and their judicial and executive officers.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What my learned brother Senator says is quite true, Mr. President. This is not a unanimous report, and it is made up very largely, as Senators will see, from the report which was submitted by the House Committee on the Judiciary and of certain portions of briefs which were filed, one of which has been mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee; and there is also incorporated what might be termed a brief, which was a letter addressed to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] by Mr. Herbert K. Stockton.

It is also true—which, perhaps, I need not add in order to corroborate what the Senator from Tennessee has just stated—that there have been eliminated from the report certain portions of the brief or communication from the Mr. Storey, who has been referred to, which I thought added nothing to the argument and were only calculated to provoke a feeling which would be hostile and hurtful to a thoughtful discussion and consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am gratified to hear the statement of the Senator from California. I did not read the brief of Mr. Storey, except that portion of it which is copied in the report from which the Senator from California is reading. It is vicious enough there in its assault on the States, and I am glad the Senator from California did not approve it all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, sir; and while it is not necessary to say it, because it would be repetitious and tire Senators, I have such firm belief in the constitutionality of this measure or the power of Congress to enact it, and am so firmly convinced that it would be helpful rather than hurtful to the people of this country, to my State as well as to the States of other Senators, that I wish to keep out of the discussion anything that may reflect upon the character of man, woman, or child. More may be said along that line hereafter, but that is the way I feel; and I hope Senators know me well enough by this time to appreciate that I speak without any mental reservation or intention to deceive.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. We are anxious to have an executive session to-night, and I wondered if the Senator was going to conclude his speech in a few moments or whether he would yield now and let us have an executive session?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It will take me but a few moments to conclude this portion of my address. Let me, Mr. President, finish the reading of the concluding pages of the report of the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not wish the Senator to yield unless it is perfectly agreeable to him to do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand.

Resuming, then, the reading from the report:

> A careful and dispassionate study of the provisions of this bill as amended will, the committee thinks, convince Senators that it is "appropriate legislation," within the competency of Congress to enact, to safeguard and protect those rights to life, liberty, and property which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

I beg those who care to hear to take note of what the committee there says. In a word, those who join the report claim that this is "'appropriate legislation,' within the competency of Congress to enact." Addressing intellectual Senators and addressing those who have devoted their lives to the study of the law and the Constitution of our country, to what purpose do we claim this is appropriate legislation? We claim that it is within the competency of Congress to enact this legislation in order to safeguard and protect those rights to life, liberty, and property which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

I appreciate very fully that right there can spring up arguments which would take much time to elaborate and justify upon the one hand or the other. I make no assault upon the legal rights of the States; I attack no quasi sovereignty of States. I know, if I know anything, that the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the rights of States and the rights of the Federal Government under the Constitution; nor am I an entire stranger to the decisions. I make no attack upon the quasi sovereign rights of individual States. On the contrary, I wish the Government to go to the aid of individual States.

If a State shall be unable to protect the life, the liberty, or the property of any citizen of the United States, or if, which I grieve to think may possibly be so, it shall not incline through those immediately in charge of its destiny to protect the rights of the humblest, the poorest, the meanest, the outcast, then I am saying that the Federal Government can aid the State to preserve its name unblemished; can step in to help it, not to crush it; may step in to save those things for which government is organized according to the immortal Thomas Jefferson and our forefathers and all of those who have toiled and suffered for liberty from Thermopylæ until this hour.

I wish the National Government—my Government, your Government, not a foreign government, not an alien government, but my Government and your Government—for which our boys have but recently died, I wish my Government, my one Federal Government, my one National Government, to go to the assistance of California or of Tennessee or Alabama or Maine, not to invade their territory or to overturn their institutions or to strike down the liberty of their people. When this bill is fully understood and the purposes of it are clearly stated and apprehended, I think Senators will come to realize, first, that it is competent for Congress to enact it; and, second, that it will be wholesome and helpful and beneficial to the individual States. Being beneficial to the individual States, Mr. President, of course it will be beneficial to our common country.

The portion of the report which I have just read, and thus very briefly referred to, proceeds upon the theory that Congress under the Constitution, that the Nation speaking through the Congress, and with due regard to the expressly or impliedly reserved rights of the original thirteen States and the other States which have come into the Union since its formation—that Congress, with due regard to the Constitution and the rights of the States, is incompetent to enact this proposed legislation, in order, as stated in the report, "to safeguard and protect those rights to life, liberty, and property which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States."

Before this debate shall have ended I hope to demonstrate, if others do not—and I know there are others more competent to do so than I am, and I can only hope that they will exercise their minds and demonstrate—that there are certain rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and that where the Constitution guarantees a right Congress has the power to safeguard and protect that right.

Undoubtedly the right to life, emanating from our Creator, is a sacred right; and I shall be surprised if any Senator will contend that the Constitution of the United States does not guarantee the right of life to every citizen of the United States or to every person within the jurisdiction of the United States, and does not also guarantee the right to liberty to every such person, as well also as guaranteeing the right to property. Then, if that be so, if a given portion of our common country, divided as the common country is, into several States and Territories, shall fail to make good that guaranty to protect men in life, liberty, and property, either by affirmative action or by nonaction, then the Federal Government, through laws enacted by the body set up by the Constitution—namely, the Congress—may step in to assist the State in protecting the life and the liberty and the property of the citizen.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, will the Senator state the provision on which he relies?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would rely on the fifth amendment, if I remember it; on the fourteenth amendment, for the moment.

I realize that it is not for us to overrule in express terms a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; but, as I view my place here, I have the constitutional right, as have you, to interpret the Constitution according to my view, paying heed to the interpretations that have been placed upon it by the Supreme Court, and also bearing in mind that, whatever my interpretation may be, it may be found to be erroneous by that other body set up by the Constitution; for I believe with Marshall and with a great line of great judges who have adorned the Supreme Court that it is perfectly competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to say and determine that our conclusions are utterly null and void, that whatever we may think is not the law; but at this stage of matters in legislation I claim the right to consider a question ab initio, and to determine in my mind, and for the Senate to determine, whether Congress has the power to enact given legislation, nor am I to be embarrassed at all by decisions which have gone before me. I bow to them; I respect them, because of the learning and the character of the judges who have rendered them; but in a proper sense I am not embarrassed by them in my interpretation. Though their reasoning may overwhelm me, though their conclusions may be different from mine, yet as a Senator I am not to be foreclosed or estopped by having a decision of the Supreme Court presented before me.

So under our system, with a National Constitution, with our 48 States making up one country, with our Territories part and parcel of a common country, I claim that whether a citizen of the United States shall come from Virginia to California, there to abide, or whether he shall go from New York to Louisiana, there to take up his home, wherever there is a citizen of the United States within the jurisdiction of the United States, the Federal Government has guaranteed to him certain rights—the sacred right to life, the precious right to liberty, the valuable right to property; though I, for one, have grown almost sick here in the Senate in listening to figures touching money, money, money, money. To me, life and liberty are the precious and invaluable things; and, as I view this problem, the life and the liberty of the poorest, the most despised, the hunted, the pursued man within the jurisdiction and protection of the United States is ten million times more precious to me than all the millionaires in America, than all the profiteers of Wall Street.

I do not arrogate to myself any greater respect or reverence for these rights to life and liberty than is held by other Senators; but I have looked on this world some summers and some winters. I respect the rights of property, or the rights of men to that which we call property, for there are no rights of property if you want to talk accurately. Property has no rights. Men have rights to things; men have certain rights to what may be denominated property; but property—inanimate things—has no rights. Men and women have rights to things, tangible or intangible, which we call property.

Those rights to tangible or intangible things which we call property may be very important, and should be guaranteed and preserved. Otherwise we have chaos; otherwise we have utter demoralization, and we at once are headed back toward barbarism. But what is the right to property compared to the right to life and to liberty? What I am trying here to make perfectly plain is: First, that this bill is dealing with the rights to life and liberty of men and women and children; second, that it is not sectional; that it is not intended to invade or overthrow or destroy the legitimate rights of the several States. Indeed, that is the thought which follows in this report:

The proposed legislation is not and should not be considered in any sense sectional.

If it were so I would not be standing here. If I thought that this bill was conceived in hostility to any section of my country, I would not be troubling you with these poor words now. I know that the bill is not sectional in its purposes, its aims. I know that the right to life and liberty is just as precious in Illinois as it is in Texas, and I think that the right is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution to the man or woman in Illinois even as it is guaranteed to the man or woman in every other section of our country. It may be, Mr. President and fellow Senators, that this measure, if it becomes the law of the land, will be used for the protection of the life and liberty of men and women in other sections than one in our country.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does not the Senator think the bill ought to be amended so that it would apply to such cases as the Herrin massacre in Illinois? It does not apply to it now, as written.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answer first, no, Mr. President; and, secondly, I shall be very glad to have the Senator point out, as we proceed, why it does not or may not be made to apply to such cases as he refers to; but he will pardon me for not enlarging upon that now.

Mr. SHIELDS. Very briefly, Mr. President, the bill now applies only to mobs making attacks upon persons charged with crime, or to prevent crime being committed. In the Herrin massacre the poor men who there were seeking to make a living for their wives and children were not charged with any crime, yet this bill would not punish the murderers there.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If that be so, Mr. President, I anticipate an amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The report proceeds, and I repeat:

The proposed legislation is not and should not be considered in any sense sectional. The evil it is designed to cure is not confined to any particular section or State, North or South, East or West. This monstrous evil, which is a disgrace to the Nation, we should strive to wipe out—

I think that is conservative language—

we should strive to wipe out by a firm and just exercise of every legitimate power conferred upon and residing in the Federal Constitution.

I would not favor an attempt to cure an evil by means which were violative of the Constitution. Certainly I would not favor it knowingly, but what we are calling upon the Government to do is, by a firm and just exercise of every legitimate power conferred upon and residing in the Federal Government, to safeguard the right to life, liberty, and property.

I suppose in the order of discussion, naturally and properly, Senators would consider first the question of the power of the Federal Government to deal with the subject matter; then, second, if it should be determined that under the Federal Constitution it is competent for Congress to deal with the subject matter, whether this is appropriate legislation; and then, if those two propositions should be determined in favor of the passage of this measure, there would yet remain a matter for the consideration of all men who love their country and would assist in preserving the peace and the order of every State and the life and liberty of every person within every State.

In other words, there would remain the question of policy, as to whether this legislation would be helpful to the several States, for I can not but believe that the several States will welcome this assistance if they can be persuaded or convinced that the assistance comes in aid and not in hostility. If the States of the Union, North and South, can be made to realize that this is an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to assist the several States, then, granting the competency or power to enact the legislation, I can see no valid opposition to the passage of this bill. But I realize, as all thoughtful and all candid men realize, that we must first demonstrate the competency of Congress to act; second, that this is appropriate legislation; and, third, that it would be wise to exercise the power residing in Congress—in other words, that it would be best or would be helpful to the several States and to the people of the several States which in legal contemplation, in law and in fact, constitute one Nation.

The report proceeds:

The proposed legislation is not an invasion or subversion of the rights of the States, nor is it designed to relieve the States from the performance of their duty to secure to all persons within their several jurisdictions equal protection of the laws; on the contrary, the proposed legislation is in aid of the several States and will be impartially administered by the people of the several States.

I would beg to pause there for just one moment to invite the Senate's attention to this fact, that if this bill shall be passed and shall come to be administered, it will not be administered by a hostile people; it will not be administered by stranger people. In a given State it will not be administered by another State, however cordial and friendly it might be. It will be administered by the people of the given State. The only possible difference would be the forum where the questions at issue would be considered and decided. But whether it be Texas, or Tennessee, or Kentucky, or Virginia, or Maryland, or California, this law would be administered by the people of the given State where the offense was committed and where the right was involved. So the country ought to know that this bill is not designed to invade a given State, to subvert the institutions of a given State, to trample under foot the rights of a given State, to cleave down the liberties of any man, woman, or child in any State.

I remember, as you all do so well, that Patrick Henry opposed the ratification of the Constitution. His tongue of flame, his genius, his mighty influence, were all against the ratification. But when that greater voice went out from Mount Vernon, there at Richmond the convention ratified the great Constitution. Then it was that Patrick Henry, to whom we owe eternal gratitude, and whose words inspire us with admiration and envy, and almost provoke us to silence, when he saw that the Constitution was ratified, said, "I am no longer a Virginian, I am an American." You know his services thereafter, and the love and the confidence Washington reposed in him. You know it; we all know it.

I invoke his spirit. I want this question to be considered a national question, not a State question. There is no foreign Government involved here. The Federal Government is my Government and yours, and through the instrumentalities of Federal grand juries or Federal courts the life and the liberty and the property of men will be guarded, and in a given case the law will be administered by the people of the State wherein the evil exists or the offense has been committed and the right denied.

So let no man, informed or uninformed, here or elsewhere, harbor the idea that any of us, least of all myself, humble as I may be, has designs to march, so to speak, into a given State, invading and subverting its institutions, or interfering with the just administration of the law. Of course, I stand up for law and order and liberty, regulated liberty, not anarchy, and I welcome any law which will protect the life or liberty or the honestly acquired legal right or property of man, woman, and child.

The committee indulged itself in these words:

It is sincerely hoped and confidently believed that the early passage of this bill as amended will have a salutary effect and go far toward assuring that "equal protection of the laws," State and Federal, to which "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" are entitled.

Mr. President, perhaps it is quite unnecessary for me to waste the time of Senators, whose time doubtless is much more valuable than mine, by these rather discursive remarks. I have said, and I want to repeat, not in apology, perhaps in justification, however, that I want this bill brought up for consideration, at which time I know there are Senators who will have prepared themselves to discuss this question from all points of view, reviewing the history of the country, it may be, giving their own views as to the Constitution, reviewing, analyzing; differentiating, it may be, the decisions of the Supreme Court, Senators who favor the enactment of this bill as it is amended, and as it comes before the Senate.

It may be that amendments will be suggested by those not favoring the passage of the bill in its present form. I can realize that there will be very earnest and very scholarly arguments made in opposition to the passage of the bill upon such grounds as have thus in part been rather anticipated by me, for I understand, Mr. President, that there are learned Senators here—and I know they are not confined to sections—who earnestly think that it is not competent for Congress to enact this legislation under the fourteenth amendment, or any amendment, or the original Constitution before being amended. So they will discuss the question, earnestly and with learning, and I am sure with sincerity.

I also realize that we have been in session for some time, a great many days, weeks, and months; but, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to stay right here until this bill, if taken up, is disposed of, however anxious I am to breathe again the air of California, from which State I have been absent until I fear that even my dogs there have forgotten me, though the faithful dog is the last friend on this earth to forget his friend.

I am anxious, indeed, to get home; but it seems to me that if we should agree to take up this bill, and Senators would enter into a gentleman's agreement to discuss it for two or three days, each side, if there be sides, could advance their arguments, not to curtail argument, but could give their views, and that we could come to a vote on the measure certainly within a week. I respect the wishes of the House of Representatives, and what is perhaps the wish of others.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator knows the bill was discussed five weeks in the House, does he not?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think it was discussed for a long time; quite unnecessarily, however.

Mr. SHIELDS. With the Senator's intelligence and comprehension of the condition of affairs in the Senate, when he moved to take this bill up he did not expect it to be taken up and disposed of at this session, did he?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Things change rapidly. I answer the Senator, if it is necessary, that I was very fearful that it would not be disposed of if taken up; that is true. I had hoped to have it taken up fully 10 days ago, but there were other bills and conference reports, the bonus bill, and the tariff bill, which delayed my asking that the bill be taken up. But this is the first time I have felt I had the right to the floor since I came here from California, and I do not want to abuse that right. I am willing to be guided by the wisdom of others. I have made the motion that this bill be taken up, and that we proceed immediately with its consideration, and I have said all I can say, perhaps, in favor of taking it up.

I realize that we could go on with argument as to the merits of the bill, and I should have stated in briefer fashion the purposes of the bill. In any event, I have said enough——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I remember the Senator from Mississippi. For what purpose does the Senator ask me to yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wanted to inquire whether the Senator before he takes his seat is going to ask for the yeas and nays, so that we can vote on his motion?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly, I ask for a vote. I have made the motion.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator realize that if his motion prevails it knocks out the $20,000,000 appropriation which the Senate adopted for reclamation work in the West?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I realize it full well.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from California will yield to me, I would like to move——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For the moment, no, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I would be very glad to have the Senator from Kansas indicate to me his purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I announced to the Senator about half an hour ago that we would like to have an executive session. If the Senator will yield to me to make the motion to go into executive session, I would like to have him do so; otherwise I shall not press the request.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Allow me, as a parliamentary inquiry, to be advised by the Chair, if I should yield for that purpose, would I surrender the floor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see how the Senator is ever going to get a vote on his motion if he does not stop talking at some time.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall stop at the proper time, but that is not the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from California state his inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. My inquiry is, If I should yield for the purpose of allowing the Senate to go into executive session, would the motion which is now pending have to be renewed to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that that would depend entirely upon whether the Senate took a recess or adjourned. If it took a recess the motion would be pending. If the Senate adjourned it would not be pending.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Am I to understand that the Senator from Kansas seeks a recess?

Mr. CURTIS. It was my intention to move an executive session and then we would have to determine later about taking a recess or adjourning. It would depend upon circumstances. If the point of no quorum was made, there is but one thing we could do, and that is to adjourn if no quorum developed. If a quorum developed, we could take a recess.

Mr. HARRISON. May I suggest to the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from California that we take a yea and nay vote on the motion now to take up the bill and get through with it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas for the purpose he indicated?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall not yield to anyone at present, and that with all respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the yeas and nays on the Senator's motion.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. One moment, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has not the Senator from California concluded his observations?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the bill was reported favorably by the committee. The motion is before the Senate and I shall conclude by expressing the earnest hope that the Senate will now vote to take it up for immediate consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	France	Pepper	Sutherland
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Rawson	Swanson
Calder	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Townsend
Cameron	McKellar	Robinson	Underwood
Capper	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Cummins	Moses	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Curtis	Owen	Simmons

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not believe, under the rules of the Senate or the Constitution, that we require a quorum to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is not required for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The announcement has not yet been made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will allow the announcement to be made, but I do not think it is material.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] which I transfer to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

The roll call resulted—yeas 10, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Ashurst	McKellar	Sheppard	Underwood
Borah	Myers	Simmons
Heflin	Robinson	Swanson

NAYS—22.

Brandegee	France	Norbeck	Sterling
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Sutherland
Calder	Keyes	Pepper	Townsend
Cameron	McCormick	Rawson	Watson, Ind.
Cummins	McNary	Reed, Pa.
Curtis	Moses	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—64.

Ball	Glass	McCumber	Reed, Mo.
Broussard	Gooding	McKinley	Shields
Capper	Hale	McLean	Smith
Caraway	Harreld	Nelson	Smoot
Colt	Harris	New	Spencer
Culberson	Harrison	Newberry	Stanfield
Dial	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Stanley
Dillingham	Johnson	Norris	Trammell
du Pont	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Wadsworth
Edge	Kellogg	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	King	Phipps	Warren
Fernald	Ladd	Pittman	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	La Follette	Poindexter	Weller
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Pomerene	Williams
Gerry	Lodge	Ransdell	Willis

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, no business has intervened since the lack of a quorum was demonstrated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Business has intervened; we voted on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 22, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, September 21, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In Thy presence, O Lord, there is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore. We therefore humble ourselves and open our hearts. May they glow with warm gratitude as they feel the mercy of forgiveness. Let Thy blessed Spirit impress us that purity of motives and nobility of mind are evidence enough and are not compelled to prove their rights for what God approves is worthy of the praise of men. In every way encourage us to strive for characters of merit, and in all things let wisdom and prudence temper the spring of zeal. Help us to guard jealously our names and, gracious Father, may they always be written on Thy heart. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 70.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of Congress 80,000 copies of the tariff law of 1922 in pamphlet form, indexed, to be apportioned as follows:

Thirty-five thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, 5,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House document room, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and that the Public Printer be authorized to print for sale such copies of said law as in his discretion may be necessary.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6750. An act for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12377. An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the message announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project of Nebraska, and asking a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, together with the accompanying papers.

The message also announced that the Senate, having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the bill (H. R. 10874) entitled "An act to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill:

Resolved, That the bill do not pass, two-thirds of the Senate not agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11212. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920;

H. R. 10766. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10419. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands; and

H. R. 12377. An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920; and

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization or any subcommittee thereof be authorized to sit in Washington between the adjournment of the second session of this Congress and the convening of the next session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be authorized to sit between the period of the adjournment of this session and the next session of Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization having received permission to sit during the recesses of Congress, would it have the right to sit between the time of the adjournment of this session and the opening of the next session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not pass upon that question now.

WENATCHEE NATIONAL FOREST, WASH.—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up a conference report which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3 and the amendment to the title, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

I. L. LENROOT,
R. N. STANFIELD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

Amendment No. 1 harmonizes said bill with the general forest exchange act of March 20, 1922 (Public, No. 173).

Amendments Nos. 2 and 3 add a small amount of additional lands to the Olympic and Snoqualmie National Forests.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RETURN OF A JOINT RESOLUTION TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will return to the Senate House Joint Resolution 215, as requested by the Senate in the message this morning.

There was no objection.

RETAIL PRICES OF BEEF.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute on the question of the retail price of beef.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute on the retail prices of beef. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the city market in Burnet, Tex., advertises the retail prices of beef in the Burnet Bulletin of September 14, as follows:

[From the Burnet Bulletin, September 14, 1922.]

City market price list:	Cents.
All steaks	20
Roasts	15–20
Stew meats	15
Chili meats	15
Rib roasts	10
Barbecue	25

I call attention to this to let the people of the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States know what great profits are being made now by the retailers of meats.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by giving my observations on the benefits of the eighteenth amendment to our Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the benefits of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROPOSED NULLIFICATION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, each day furnishes fresh evidence of a persistent and determined effort upon the part of certain foes of prohibition to restore the traffic in beverage intoxicants in this country, notwithstanding the fact that the policy of prohibition has been made a part of the fundamental law of the Nation through the adoption of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

A large number of organizations and associations are actively engaged in this enterprise. Their propaganda is evident on all sides.

To a true American, a believer in the Constitution and one possessed of an abiding faith in the genius of the American people for self-government, the fact that prohibition is being assailed is not disconcerting, for all of the arguments now being made against it were advanced during the many years of struggle by which prohibition came to be finally adopted. The alarming fact is the method which is being employed to seek the accomplishment of their purpose. These agitators do not seek the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, which is their legitimate right, but they propose to the American people a nullification of the Constitution by an amendment to the national prohibition enforcement act which will legalize the sale of light wines and beers.

The eighteenth amendment was adopted in the manner provided in the Constitution. It has been ratified by 46 of the 48 States. The Representatives elected by the people in Congress have enacted a law for its enforcement. This law has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. In its opinion in sustaining the eighteenth amendment and national prohibition act the Supreme Court said, in speaking of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, that it did not enable Congress or the States to defeat or thwart prohibition, but only to enforce it by appropriate means. The court declared the definition of intoxicating liquors contained in the present law not to be arbitrary and to be appropriate legislation for the enforcement of the amendment.

The organization known as the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment admits in all of its literature that its purpose is to repeal the national prohibition act. In view of the fact that the Supreme Court has declared that it was the duty of Congress to enact appropriate legislation to enforce it, and in view of the fact that the States have the same obligation to enforce it, how can Congress or the States carry out their obligation of loyalty to the Constitution to enact enforcement laws and vote for the repeal of the only legislation which makes the eighteenth amendment enforceable? Many proposals have also been made for a modification of the existing enforcement code to permit the sale of light wines and beers. Either of these programs constitute sheer nullification of the Constitution.

I propose to show briefly how the present enforcement code was adopted and give some of the reasons why the repeal of the national prohibition act or its modification to permit the sale of light wines and beers would be in direct violation of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The same reasons apply in the States where an attempt is being made to legalize the sale of beer or wine through State laws or amendments to State constitutions.

Prohibition had been tried out as an experiment in numerous villages, townships, counties, and States for half a century. These States and local units had faced the practical proposition as to what legislation was necessary in order to make prohibition effective. In over 30 of the States having State prohibition they had learned that prohibition was not enforceable unless a definite standard was set to determine the kind of liquor prohibited. It was also discovered that if that standard drew the line only against what was actually intoxicating, or what approximates that, the difficulties of enforcement multiplied. Consequently these States concluded that to be enforceable it was necessary for prohibitory laws to define as intoxicating liquor that which approximated one-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content.

A number of States, about 14, had prohibited a less alcoholic content. The average, however, was about one-half of 1 per cent. Congress had to face this fact and use this experience or ignore it. To ignore it and adopt a standard of 1 or 2 per cent beer or other liquor would have produced confusion and encouraged lawlessness. It would not have permitted the sale of beer of a larger alcoholic content in the States which had prohibited one-half of 1 per cent or less. It is manifest, therefore, that since the States maintained certain standards and maintained them because they found them necessary to enforcement, Congress had neither excuse nor justification for adopting a more liberal standard than their average.

EFFECT OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS.

It is a well-known fact that alcoholic stimulants do not act upon different individuals in the same way. The same quantity of a beverage which would prove intoxicating to one individual would not prove intoxicating to the same degree to another. Persons engaged in the manufacture and sale of permitted nonintoxicating beverages under such a definition were constantly confronted with danger of prosecution as the result of a sale of what might be reasonably considered a nonintoxicating beverage, because of the peculiar susceptibility of a particular individual to the stimulating or intoxicating effect of its alcoholic content. This fact, coupled with many attempted evasions of the law which for years characterized every attempt to control the liquor traffic, whether by license, regulation, or prohibition, led the States to seek a more satisfactory definition.

An examination of the successive statutes which have been enacted during this period discloses that the several States solved the first part of this problem by fixing a definite alcoholic content as one of the tests to determine whether a beverage was intoxicating. One-half of 1 per cent had come to be accepted by the several States as the most satisfactory test in this regard.

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON DEFINITION OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, in his opinion in the case of Ruppert v. Caffey (251 U. S. 264), in which the Supreme Court had under consideration the constitutionality of the definition of intoxicating liquors as contained in the war time prohibition act, pointed out this experience in the States and succinctly stated his conclusions, as follows:

> For the legislation and decisions of the highest courts of nearly all of the States establish that it is deemed impossible to effectively enforce either prohibitory laws or other laws merely regulating the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, if liability or inclusion within the law is made to depend upon the issuable fact whether or not a particular liquor made or sold as a beverage is intoxicating. In other words, it clearly appears that a liquor law, to be capable of effective enforcement, must, in the opinion of the legislatures and courts of the several States, be made to apply either to all liquors of the species enumerated, like beer, ale, or wine, regardless of the presence or degree of alcoholic content; or if a more general description is used, such as distilled, rectified, spirituous, fermented, malt, or brewed liquors, to all liquors within that general description, regardless of alcoholic content; or to such of these liquors as contain a named percentage of alcohol, and often several such standards are combined so that certain specific and generic liquors are altogether forbidden and such liquors as contain a given percentage of alcohol.

It was, therefore, to give certainty to the administration of law that a definite alcoholic standard was established. The alcoholic content is capable of determination by analysis. The manufacturer or seller of beverages can determine under such a definition with certainty the legality of the beverage which is offered for sale. In this respect it operates as a protection to the manufacturer. On the other hand, it relieves the Government, in prosecution for alleged violations of the law, from the varying opinions of different juries and tends to uniformity in administration.

REASONS WHY ONE-HALF OF 1 PER CENT WAS ADOPTED.

The ultimate purpose of the eighteenth amendment as well as the purpose of all prohibition statutes is to prevent the deleterious effects of the consumption of alcohol. The practical difficulty of defining actually intoxicating liquor is at once apparent because there are as great differences of opinion concerning what constitutes such a liquor as there are concerning what constitutes intoxication. To some intoxication means only total inability to control the mental or physical operations of the body while to the scientist intoxication begins with any toxic effect produced upon the nervous and mental system from a poison.

VARYING EFFECTS OF INTOXICANTS.

Owing to the varying effects of alcoholic stimulants upon different individuals, differing as they do in age, state of health, addiction to alcoholic stimulants and other conditions which might be mentioned, it was seen to be impossible to effectuate the purpose of the amendment save by fixing a standard which would preclude likelihood of intoxication. A drunken individual is equally dangerous and a menace to society whether he gets drunk on 2 per cent beer or 9 per cent beer.

ADDED QUANTITY OF 2.75 PER CENT BEER GIVES SAME EFFECT AS STRONG BEER.

With a one-half of 1 per cent standard it is impossible to drink a sufficient quantity of the beverages permitted to be sold to produce noticeable intoxication. If the standard had been fixed as high as 2.75 per cent alcohol would be present in salable beverages in an appreciable quantity and those seeking alcoholic effects would endeavor through the drinking of an increased quantity to secure the desired result with attendant detrimental effect to health. A one-fourth larger glass of 2.75 per cent beer has practically the same alcoholic content as a glass of 3.50 per cent beer. This was the percentage in ordinary beer before prohibition.

Experience in the States had shown that one-half of 1 per cent is a safe test. Beyond this was encountered the twilight zone of uncertainty, which realm, if entered by Congress in the exercise of its legislative functions, was certain to hinder the carrying out of the purpose of the law and to the honesty of purpose of Congress in the exercise of its power and duty under the amendment.

BEER AND WINE EXEMPTION CREATES A PRIVILEGED CLASS.

Aside from the basic principle upon which the legislation rests, Congress recognized that it was dealing with a commodity possessed of characteristics which lend themselves peculiarly to evasion of the law. It was necessary to make the line between legitimate and illegitimate beverages clear. There is no justification for a definition of intoxicating liquors which would permit the sale of some so-called soft drinks possessing a "kick" sufficient to make them popular, while other manufacturers of soft drinks whose preparations would not possess this quality would suffer as a result of this discrimination made in the face of the plain mandate of the people expressed in the Constitution. To amend the definition of intoxicating liquors at the instance of the brewers and wine growers would be to create a privileged class at the sacrifice of principle and loyalty to the Constitution.

THE CLASSES ASKING FOR BEER AND WINE AMENDMENT.

A higher standard of alcoholic content would not only violate the spirit of the amendment but actually increase the violations of such law. The demand for the liberalizing comes largely from two classes. First, those who desire to make money in the business, chief among whom are the brewers. Second, those accustomed to drinking liquors and who desire the intoxicating effect. Anything which will satisfy an appetite for alcohol will create the appetite in those now free from it. All the incentives to promote drinking and the means for promoting it will, with the sale of such liquor, be reestablished. We shall be giving such a rebirth to liquor appetite as would speedily defy all restrictions. The principal plea made by the advocates of light wine and beer is the revenue it would produce. It is impossible again to raise money in that way without stultifying the Constitution. It is also impossible to do it without restoring the saloon or its counterpart. With the return of liquor makers and liquor sellers would come a return of the corrupting influence they long exerted in American politics, the partial destruction of which has been one of the most beneficent results experienced under prohibition. The American people have not yet forgotten the activities of the brewery and liquor interests in seeking to control elections and in subsidizing the press for the advancement of their own selfish interests, as disclosed by the investigation conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee of the Sixty-fifth Congress, to say nothing of their connection with the dissemination of pro-German propaganda.

ONE-HALF OF 1 PER CENT STANDARD MOST EFFICIENT.

The one-half of 1 per cent standard is at least satisfactory and is enforceable. A 2.75 per cent standard would satisfy no one and be a shield for flagrant violation. It would provide a sufficient quantity of alcohol to make easier the evasion of the law, invite the return of the brewer and the saloon, to the utter disgust of all believers in constitutional government, and would prove unsatisfactory to those who desire a stout alcoholic kick, because it would be insufficiently strong to appease their appetites. The wet lovers themselves in most of the States have found it incapable of interesting enough people to put up a fight for it and are now for full beer and light wine privileges. This program is sheer nullification.

Congress carefully considered this question of the definition of intoxicating liquors at the time of the adoption of the national prohibition act. It exercised its best judgment and the law has been sustained by the Supreme Court. The same reasons which obtained when the law was originally enacted hold now with even greater force. Any change in the definition would be regarded as a backward step, tend to encourage lawlessness, and make the issues of enforcement again subject to a long period of litigation and uncertainty.

LIGHT WINE AND BEER EXPERIMENT FOUND A FAILURE.

The sale of light wine and beer under prohibition statutes has been tried and repudiated. No State having an enforceable prohibition law has found exceptions compatible with enforcement. Georgia adopted a beer exception and the courts and the people soon reached the conclusion that if prohibition was to be enforced the provision would have to be eliminated, and they adopted a definition of intoxicating liquor even more stringent than the Volstead Act.

Massachusetts tried a beer exception many years ago only to find all the evils of liquor increasing under it. Drunkenness increased; crime increased; poverty increased; the sale of stronger liquors under cover of malt liquors increased; the difficulties of enforcement were vastly increased; and after only three years the beer law was repealed. In all referendum votes in States which adopted prohibition the people have defeated the beer and wine proposal. Michigan adopted prohibition by 68,000 and two years later defeated a beer and wine proposal by 207,000.

Ohio adopted prohibition in 1918; and one year later, when a referendum vote was taken on a 2.75 per cent beer proposal, the dry majority was increased. At the last referendum election in Ohio, when the enforcement code was adopted, the dry majority was 290,000. Similar votes with the same results have been recorded in Washington, Oregon, Colorado, and Arizona.

THE PRACTICAL QUESTION INVOLVED.

Law enforcement is a difficult task for a considerable time after the prohibition law is adopted. This is true even with an enforceable law. If the law is drafted so as to encourage evasions and discourage officers of the law, the task is well-nigh hopeless. When the law is drafted in effective form, the officer knows when he sees an intoxicated person that the law has been violated. There is a chance to ferret out the violation either through the intoxicated person or by other means. If the permitted beverage is in close proximity to that which will intoxicate, the drinker will consume enough more to get the desired effect, or the vendor of the liquor will sell the stronger liquor under cover of near beer. At the trial it is claimed that nothing but the so-called nonintoxicating beer was sold. In other words, 2.75 per cent beer would shield the law violator, discourage the officers of the law in their difficult task of enforcement, and discredit the prohibition law itself. The practical question involved is simply one of enforcement. The sale of 2.75 per cent beer would make the officer's task hopeless.

COURTS SUSTAIN STANDARD FOR DEFINITION IN THE LAW.

The reason for adopting the definition of intoxicating liquor in the Volstead Act has appealed to the people, legislative bodies, and to the courts. It is based on sound reason. The United States Supreme Court at an early day adopted a principle in their judicial decisions which gave not only the reason but the precedent for this action.

Whenever the legislative department of the Government is authorized to prohibit an evil, it carries with it inherently the power to pass such legislation as is necessary to enforce the original law. The courts soon learned that in dealing with intoxicating liquor it was in a class by itself, to the treatment of which there was no analogy in the law.

In Barbour v. State (232 U. S. 700) the court said:

Dealers in alcoholic liquors have never been known to be overnice and delicate in adhering to the strict letter of the law.

In the case of Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch (226 U. S. 192) Justice Hughes, now Secretary of State, showed the Government could within reason prohibit even an innocent act if that was necessary in order to enforce a law against a recognized evil. The decision reads as follows:

It does not follow that because a transaction separately considered is innocuous it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the Government. It was competent for the Legislature of Mississippi to recognize the difficulties besetting the administration of laws aimed at the prevention of traffic in intoxicants. It prohibited malt liquors. In thus dealing with a class of beverages which in general are regarded as intoxicating it was not bound to resort to a discrimination with respect to ingredients and processes of manufacture, which, in the endeavor to eliminate innocuous beverages from the condemnation, would facilitate subterfuges and frauds and fetter the enforcement of the law. Having regard to the artifices which are used to promote the sale of intoxicants under the guise of innocent beverages, it would constitute an unwarranted departure from accepted principle to hold the prohibition of the sale of all malt liquors, including the beverage in question, was beyond its reserved power.

The United States Supreme Court, in sustaining the Federal prohibition code with its one-half of 1 per cent standard, held that the experience in the States and the Supreme Court decisions of the States demonstrated the necessity of such a standard in order to secure capable and effective law enforcement. The court said that this standard in the national prohibition act was not "arbitrary." In the face of the Supreme Court decisions, a beer amendment is indefensible.

CONCLUSIONS OF CHAIRMAN OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE TO WHICH PRESENT CODE WAS REFERRED.

The national prohibition act, on its introduction in Congress, was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House. The chairman of this committee summed up the arguments which led them to frame the measure to enforce the eighteenth amendment so as to prohibit any liquors containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol as follows:

Congress enacted the prohibition code based on the experience in the States.

The legislatures of more than 30 States passed statutes to enforce prohibition. Not one of these statutes permitted the sale of beer or wine that contained more than 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. Only three had the 1 per cent standard; the others one-half of 1 per cent or less.

In taxing intoxicating liquor under the license system the Federal Government followed the rule of one-half of 1 per cent alcohol. So general and universal had this practice been that no one could have the slightest doubt as to what was meant by the prohibition amendment when it was adopted.

Those who seek to destroy prohibition are camouflaging their demands by asking for what they call light beer and wine. The smallest percentage of alcohol in beer that anyone so far has proposed is 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume. To get as much alcohol from drinking this beer as from the ordinary beer sold before prohibition, which contained from 3 to 3½ per cent of alcohol, it would only be necessary to have a glass one-fourth larger.

The principal article sold in every saloon was beer. It represented over 90 per cent of the volume of the trade.

License to sell beer and wine contained in a prohibition law makes it impossible to enforce. It is as indefensible to vote for such a nonenforceable law as it is to vote directly to violate the Constitution. The only defensible position for a Member of Congress is to sustain the law in enforceable form.

BEER AND WINE PROPAGANDA.

In one of the States where this beer and wine propaganda is being freely circulated a friend of mine sent me this summary of the situation as it appeared to him:

The most extensive campaign of propaganda that America has ever witnessed is now being carried on for the purpose of inducing Congress and the States to legalize beer and light wine. The proposition is un-American in the face of the Constitution. What elements are behind the beer and wine propaganda?

SECRET SUPPORTERS.

1. Certain special privileged interests are for beer, expecting to have their taxes reduced by raising $1,000,000,000 annually from the appetites of the poor.

2. Big Army and Navy profiteers are for beer. The present demand for disarmament is because, with the liquor revenue gone, the Army and Navy costs come as a direct tax. They say, "Raise $1,000,000,000 a year from the tax on beer and light wine for the Army and Navy, and not being a direct tax, the opposition would cease."

3. English capitalists, who now own the bulk of American brewery stock, are for beer. It would bring the dollars of the American workingman to the pockets of these English aristocrats and pay England's American debt with American dollars. Some years ago Chicago bankers admitted that 80 per cent of the dividends of Chicago breweries were checked to London stockholders. At that time it was commonly understood that control of one large Wisconsin brewery had passed to London hands. The press recently announced the purchase of one Milwaukee and four Chicago breweries by another London capitalist.

4. French wine interests are for beer and light wine in America. See the letter published in the French "Wine-Growing Review" and signed "Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Telegraph, by R. Fighiere." He expresses sympathy with the American Anti-Prohibition League, basing it on "the indisputable right of protesting against extreme legislation, even when it emanated from a friendly and allied nation."

OPEN SUPPORTERS.

1. Radical organizations, opposed to our Constitution and form of government, are for beer.

2. Wet organizations favor beer. There is an Arab fable of a camel. On a cold night he asked his master for permission to put only his nose into the tent. The master granted the request, and awoke to find himself on the outside while the camel occupied the entire tent.

3. Many officials, from Federal to city, unwilling to or incapable of enforcing the law, or accustomed to depending upon the saloon for election, favor beer.

So insistent is the propaganda and so powerful are the interests behind it that only the most thorough organization by the drys can prevent the increase of percentage of alcohol permitted in nonintoxicating beverages. Since beer constituted 93 per cent of the intoxicating liquors made and sold before prohibition, such a change would amount to 93 per cent nullification or evasion of the American Constitution for the profit of the alien stockholders of the breweries.

THE ATTITUDE OF LABOR.

A determined effort is being made to make it appear that the laboring men are for 2.75 per cent beer and light wine. As a member of an organized labor union, and who has the best interests of the working classes at heart, I have taken occasion several times on the floor of this House to deny this statement and call attention to the fact that the rank and file of the laboring men, like other good citizens, stand for law and order, and are against any scheme to nullify the Constitution of the United States.

In the primary in Pennsylvania, my neighboring State, in the thirty-third district, this issue was raised recently. This district is now one of the great industrial congressional districts in the United States. The Liquor Dealers' Association of Allegheny County raised a large sum of money to defeat Congressman CLYDE KELLY because he stood squarely against this beer and wine nullification scheme. Mr. KELLY himself describes the effort of the beer and wine advocates as follows:

In my own district I saw the power of the outlaws and the power of the people. The Allegheny County Liquor Dealers' Association, whose very existence is an insulting challenge to the Constitution and laws of this country, officially indorsed my opponent and supplied him with large sums of money, levied from license holders and bootleggers. Seventy-five thousand dollars was expended and every method known to polecat fighters was brought into use.

Mr. KELLY, as you know, was nominated on the Republican ticket by almost 3½ to 1, and enough good Democrats wrote his name in on the Democratic ticket to nominate him 3 to 1, and he was nominated unanimously on the Prohibition Party ticket. What better evidence could you desire than this to show that the laboring men are interested more in other legislation relating to their welfare than to this specious plea for beer?

In Portland, Oregon, the beer-and-wine candidate for Congress received only about 5 per cent of the total vote cast in the primary of his own political party. In the capital district of Michigan, which now contains the great automobile factories in Lansing, Flint, part of Detroit, Pontiac, Highland Park, Hamtramck, the beer-and-wine candidate was snowed under by 8,000 majority.

These instances might be multiplied in many sections of the country. It is the ex-brewer who wants to reestablish the beer trade who is most interested in this beer propaganda. Even if the alcoholic content is lowered, he would educate his customers to drink more, and in this way secure the intoxicating effect which comes from alcohol, thus making more profits than ever, and leave the family of the drinker fewer comforts.

FROM THE STATE THE BREWERS CLAIM AS THEIR OWN.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, attorney general of Wisconsin, the State which knows more about liquor production and consumption than any other in the Union, has this to say about the attempt to legalize beer:

The personal-liberty advocate says: "I am willing to obey the law, but give us light wine and beer." Does he imagine that light wine and beer would mean less of heavy wine, heavy beer, booze, and moonshine? Quite the contrary. It would make detection of the sale of booze, strong wine, and strong beer infinitely harder. One-half of 1 per cent beer right now is a vehicle for fraud. This plea for any kind of booze on the ground of personal liberty has no foundation.

"But," says the personal-liberty advocate, "we don't want drunkenness; we only advocate moderate drinking. Absolute prohibition can not be enforced." When God told Moses to give the people the Ten Commandments, he might have said: "Now, Lord, the people are not ready for absolute prohibition of the worship of idols; give them personal liberty and charge them a license fee, low license for worshipping a calf, high license for worshipping a full-grown cow." I am afraid the calf of light wines and beer would soon grow into the full-grown cow of old-fashioned booze. This talk of light wines and beer is pure buncombe. As well talk of legalizing petty larceny and still punishing grand larceny. Petty larceny would grow into grand larceny, and just as surely light beer would become heavy, and we would be right back where we started from. Let us not confuse liberty with license.

Why this sudden hatred of beer against whisky? I never noticed that they were divorced. Did you ever see a brewery saloon that didn't sell whisky? So long as I can remember there has been an inseparable partnership between all branches of the liquor traffic and vice and crime. The brewery wagon was a daily visitor in the red-light district.

NULLIFICATION BY STATES.

The latest scheme upon the part of the nullificationists is the proposal to hold referendum elections in certain States submitting proposed beer and wine measures to the vote of the people. This is a clever ruse designed to deceive. The Constitution of the United States and laws of Congress are the supreme law of the land. Article VI of the Constitution provides:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; * * * shall be the supreme law of the land, * * * anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the case of Feiganspan v. Bodine (264 Fed. 186) the court said:

If the State enacts legislation, whether under the eighteenth amendment or in pursuance of its police power, and it authorizes or permits the doing of anything already forbidden by the acts of Congress (as the State of New Jersey has done since the filing of this bill), such authorization or permission, for the reasons given, will be rendered unlawful ab initio by such contrary determination of Congress, and will afford no protection to anyone who may violate the congressional statute.

This case was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Rhode Island v. Palmer (40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486).

Even were the voters of a State to approve a beer and wine proposal it would not legalize the sale of beer and wine in the State. The holding of such illegal or unconstitutional referendums or straw votes upon petitions filed by the opponents of prohibition is but a clever subterfuge adopted by the opponents of prohibition to secure the agitation of their views at public expense. It means additional burden to the taxpayer for the holding of these elections which can not change the law.

In the State of Ohio, where the people have but recently adopted an amendment to the State constitution prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, these advocates have seized upon the provisions of the initiative and referendum as a means for the exploitation of their views at public expense and have required the secretary of state to submit to a vote of the people a proposed beer and wine amendment to the State constitution which is, on its face, in conflict with the Constitution of the United States and which would be illegal if adopted. A provision of a State constitution which conflicts with the Federal law is as invalid as would be a statute to the same effect. (See Cummins v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 277, 18 L. R. A. 356.)

The action of the majority of the supreme court of the State in requiring the submission of the question in no way sustained the validity of the proposed amendment. The court merely took the view that it could not pass upon the constitutionality of a measure until it was adopted. This use of the initiative and referendum is a clear perversion of its purpose. The adoption of the amendment by the voters would be no more effective than would be the adoption of an amendment to the State constitution to legalize slavery in Ohio.

Similar referendums will be held in California and Massachusetts to defeat State enforcement codes adopted by the State legislatures. In Illinois it is proposed to take a mere advisory or straw vote upon the question.

If these opponents of prohibition are sincere in their avowed allegiance to the Constitution, and honest in their desire for a modification of the law, they will command greater respect from the American people if they will proceed in the legal and orderly manner by attempting to repeal the eighteenth amendment and then seeking the enactment of such legislation as will meet their views and not forfeit the confidence of the public by extending to believers in orderly government an invitation to nullify the Constitution. Such a proposal as presented in Ohio, if followed to its logical conclusion, would ultimately overthrow the very institutions upon which our Government is based.

The efforts which are being made to have Congress disregard its oath to support the Constitution and enact legislation authorizing the sale of beer and wine, coupled with the efforts to secure unconstitutional referendums at the expense of the taxpayer as they are doing in Ohio, indicate the character of the attack which is being made upon our Government. These tactics constitute a challenge to patriotic, law-abiding citizens, believers in orderly government, that they stand squarely by the Constitution, irrespective of whether they favor prohibition as a governmental principle.

This beer and wine proposal constitutes a bold and brazen invitation to the American people to disregard a constitutional principle. If one element of our citizenship can disregard a constitutional provision that is not to their liking, other elements may disregard other provisions, orderly government will be destroyed, and anarchy will reign supreme.

Once again the American people are confronted with the issue, as Lincoln said:

This Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Shall the Constitution of the United States, which has been the pride and bulwark of this Republic, be subverted by avarice and appetite, by those who decline to seek the fulfillment of their wishes through lawful means? No one can doubt the outcome of this issue once the facts are presented to the American people. This is the greatest issue of the day. It challenges the patriotism of every loyal American.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on some of the accomplishments of this administration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on some of the accomplishments of this administration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, from 1913 to 1921 we had eight years of Wilsonism and one and one-half years of war.

Combined they left a legacy of appalling problems.

In the wake of the World War and Wilsonism came waste, woe, and wreckage.

As Lincoln once said: "The occasion is (was) piled high with difficulty."

From November 11, 1918, Armistice Day, until he went out Wilson had 842 days for reconstruction, rehabilitation, and restoration, and did nothing, worse than nothing, wasting time on the discredited League of Nations.

Harding and the Republican Party in 575 days—March 4, 1921, to October 1, 1922—have wrestled with the inheritance left by Wilson.

Truly it has been said: "Democrats create problems; Republicans solve them."

Some things we would like to forget, but ought to remember.

In these days of returned prosperity, of approximate normalcy, busy folks are apt to forget. So in the words of Abe Martin I will ask: "Do you remember?" And to aid the memories of our busy people—the farmer, the merchant, the wage earner, the banker, the clerk, the housewife, and those engaged in professions—I present the following lively parallel, bringing into sharp contrast the achievements of the Republican Party in the 575 days of its control with the inheritance of problems it received from its Democratic predecessor.

The people of Maine at their election last week showed that they have good memories by electing the whole Republican ticket, including the entire congressional delegation, by the greatest majorities recorded in 20 years, except the abnormal vote of 1920.

THE LIVELY PARALLEL.

REPUBLICAN INHERITANCE.	REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENTS.
Eight years of Wilson; 1½ years of war; 842 days after armistice wasted.	Harding and Republican Congress in control 575 days.
AGRICULTURE DEPRESSED.	AGRICULTURE REVIVED.
Agriculture, basic industry, on brink of bankruptcy due to sudden deflation of credits.	Three hundred and forty-seven million dollars made available to farmers and stockmen. Industry put on its feet.
Live-stock and woolgrowers' credits on point of collapse.	Emergency tariff gave prompt relief; strained credit situation relieved.
Farm-product prices in slump and falling rapidly. Farm credits curtailed and farm loans called in.	Deflation checked; farm prices stabilized; prospect of good prices for 1922 bumper crops coincident with revival of general prosperity. Remedial legislation.
Excess of farm labor.	Demand for good farm workers exceeds supply.
APPROPRIATIONS ABNORMAL.	APPROPRIATIONS REDUCED.
Actual cost of running Government, $5,538,040,689.	Reduced to $3,922,372,030 fiscal year 1922, annual saving of $1,600,000,000.
Routine expenses in 1919, $19,000,000,000; reckless estimates by Democratic officials; orgy of extravagance.	Cost in 1920 (by Republican House) cut to $6,150,000,000; estimates slashed, further cut in 1921 to $5,500,000,000; and in 1922 to $3,947,000,000. Rigid program of economy. Ordinary expenses almost normal.
Additional fixed charges: $2,000,000,000, including annual interest, sinking fund, and care of soldiers.	Obligations being met notwithstanding reduction of taxes; interest on public debt lowered. Congress and departments vigilant.
BUSINESS DEPRESSED.	BUSINESS BUOYANT.
Government interference in private business; paternalism encouraged; individual initiative throttled; intimidation and hostility.	Destructive Government interference stopped; individual initiative and enterprise encouraged; socialistic practices outlawed; friendly counsel and advice.
Discount rate of Federal reserve banks 7.5 per cent for gilt-edge loans.	Discount rate reduced to 4.5 per cent.
Budget bill vetoed by Wilson.	Budget bill passed; annual saving of $1,600,000,000; business in Government.
Deposit liabilities of national banks $1,000,000,000 in excess of loans and discounts; pure credit expansion; prospective revenues mortgaged; fiat financing.	Treasury certificate issues no longer compel absorption by bank "credit" deposit currency. Industrial activity, instead, aids Government financing.
Complex tax forms.	Simplified income-tax forms.
Extensive post-war speculation followed by restricted credit for legitimate industrial expansion.	Intelligent deflation of overexpanded credit and currency; heightened production of goods and services; banks give credit preference to essential industries. Stimulation of private thrift.
Rates on merchants paper, 8 per cent, highest since panic of 1893; call money as high as 15 per cent.	Rates on merchants paper and on call money decline to normal.
Federal reserve system dominated by political and sectional influence.	Politics and favoritism squeezed out of Federal reserve system.
Fifty per cent depreciation of American dollar. Fictitious prosperity.	One hundred per cent value restored to American dollar in purchasing power. Sound prosperity.
DEBT INCREASED 2,300 PER CENT.	DEBT DECREASE.
Debt when Wilson came in $965,706,610.	Debt reduced $700,000,000, and refunded at lower interest rate.
Interest, $22,835,330.40.
Debt when Wilson went out, $23,820,073,464.
Interest, $1,001,620,434.
Liberty and Victory bonds selling at 85 cents on the dollar. Depreciation of $2,530,727,905.	Liberty and Victory bonds at par or better—an increase of $3,000,000,000 in value.
Floating debt of $2,500,000,000; Victory bonds and war savings certificates of $5,000,000,000 maturing in 1923.	Redemption from current revenues and refunding proceeds notwithstanding tax reductions. Prompt liquidations.

REPUBLICAN INHERITANCE—Con.	REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENTS—Con.
EMPLOYMENT ARRESTED.	EMPLOYMENT GENERAL.
Five million wage earners idle; industrial stagnation; panicky conditions; reduced production.	A job for every man who wants work; skilled labor in general scarce and unskilled labor practically absorbed; floating element or "traveling help" disappears; farm labor scarce; supply of domestic help only 44 per cent of demand; public work handicapped by lack of common labor at contract prices, because of advance of 10 cents per hour in wages.
FOREIGN COMPLICATIONS.	FOREIGN GOOD WILL.
American motives suspected; moral influence impaired; discredited and friendless among nations.	Good will and influence restored; Washington conference promoted peace and amity, reduced naval armaments and taxation, and substituted arbitration for war.
Petty, selfish, war breeding jealousies in European politics.	No entangling alliances. Without compromise of national independence effected peace in the Pacific region "by open covenants openly arrived at."
League of Nations no relief from extravagant expenditures, deficits, depreciation of currency, trade depression, land and sea armaments; rancors and old enmities exist and new hatreds engendered; Genoa and Geneva conferences failures; Wilson and Cox still want to "go in."	Self-reliant America furnishes $7,000,000,000 new European credits; Washington conference in 12 weeks does more than League of Nations in three years to restore international good will, limit armaments, reduce taxes, remove menace of war, and more for peace and against war.
Russian sovietism and sabotage getting foothold in America.	Soviet government not recognized because of failure to regard private and public contracts. Governments of Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania recognized.
GOVERNMENT AUTOCRACY.	GOVERNMENT RESTORED TO PEOPLE.
Dictatorship of one man.	Executive autocracy ended.
Constitutional government and national sovereignty imperiled.	Respect for Constitution restored; national sovereignty preserved.
Autocratic war powers continued long after war by Wilson veto.	Repealed vexatious war legislation; removed arbitrary and inquisitorial control over life of the people in time of peace.
Executive usurpation of legislative and judicial functions.	Cooperation and coordination of constitutional functions.
Country shifted for itself while Wilson kept us out of peace. Hopeless floundering.	Speedy resumption of activities. Definite policies. People again took reins of their own Government.
Government for some, instead of for all of the people; unrest, suspicion, strife.	Country on highway to unprecedented prosperity, proud of its past, sure of itself and of its institutions and looking forward with confidence to the future.
INDUSTRIAL SLUMP.	INDUSTRIAL AWAKENING.
Peak of unemployment.	Unemployment conference called by President Harding.
Flood of immigration threatened.	Immigration restricted to 3 per cent of various nationals already here.
Flood of foreign-made goods under free-trade tariff.	Protective tariff to preserve home market for labor, agriculture, and industry.
Public confidence destroyed; distrust and hesitation universal.	Confidence restored; country enters upon biggest business boom in history.
Housing shortage; unsatisfactory housing accommodations general.	Unprecedented building operations.
Idle men, idle mills, idle money.	Men, money, and mills working.
Labor troubles; 446 strikes; other strikes and lockouts threatened.	Settlement of 90 per cent by conciliation and mediation, affecting 657,000 wage earners.
Scarcity of farm labor.	Eighty thousand harvest workers recruited outside grain belt.
Department of Labor handicapped by insufficient appropriations.	Appropriations for Department of Labor increased $1,462,000, functions and activities enlarged, including maternity and infancy welfare work.
Iron and steel industry depressed, affecting other industries.	Iron and steel industry revives; wages increased 20 per cent. Increase in other industries (cement industry, 50 per cent) in a season of normal seasonal trade depression. "Buyer's market" and competition for orders.
High cost of living at peak.	According to labor bulletin, clothing of all kinds decreased 39 per cent in cost and food 36 per cent.
Surplus of rolling stock, 300,000 idle cars.	Car shortage. Thousands of new cars and hundreds of locomotives building. Cost for new equipment in eight months three times greater than in 1921.
Wasteful, extravagant, and inefficient operation of railroads. Cost $2,650,000,000 and higher freight rates.	Railroad systems rehabilitated under private operation. Freight rates reduced.
Incompetent and extravagant administration of telegraph and telephone lines.	Telegraphs and telephones returned to private control. Efficient operation.
Artificial prosperity due to inflation, snuffed out by sudden deflation. Cheap money; diminished purchasing power.	Prosperity on a sound basis; scientific financing; no more bungling; inflation stopped; deflation gradual. Value restored to dollar; increased purchasing power.

REPUBLICAN INHERITANCE—Con.

LOANS UNCOLLECTED.

No attempt made in 842 days after war to collect foreign loans of $11,000,000,000; in violation of law, $300,000,000 loaned to nations not allies and $1,300,000,000 after the war. Interest payments deferred. No positive evidences of debts, interest rates, or dates of maturities. Cox favors wiping out loans.

PEACE DELAYED.

Peace delayed and technical war prolonged. On war-time basis long after war. "He kept us out of peace."

Complete unpreparedness for peace.

SOLDIERS NEGLECTED.

Veterans of World War neglected; Federal agencies break down; lack of cooperation; red tape; delays; gross incompetency and mismanagement; hardships; brutal indifference; no hospitalization.

TAXATION STAGGERING.

Staggering burden of taxation; unsound methods of war financing. No attempt to reduce taxation during 842 days after war. Diminishing revenues; springs of revenue drying up. War hang over; expense estimates raised.

WASTE—WILSON AND WAR.

War money grossly wasted; aircraft scandals; cantonment graft; millions squandered in cost plus 10 per cent contracts; railroad supplies bought, not needed, and never used; artillery, ordnance, and munitions contracted and not delivered; docks built at which ships never tied; and ships built, never used, and sold for junk.

Waste in war contracts	$7,250,000,000
Illegal loans to foreign countries	1,300,000,000
Shipping program waste	3,300,000,000
Operation of railroads	2,950,000,000
Total waste	14,800,000,000

Blanket power to settle with contractors; 30,000 settlements without auditing.

Muscle Shoals problem: Plant built by diversion of funds; $25,000,000 spent after armistice; bad contracts, inefficiency, and waste.

Immense stocks of property, food, and supplies on hand. Not declared surplus and not sold to American people to reduce cost of living.

No attempt in 842 days after war to prosecute frauds; public records "mislaid," scattered, or destroyed. Secretary of War (Baker) appoints whitewashing committee.

Increase of 2,184 Federal employees after armistice.

Government in magazine business for political propaganda.

REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENTS—Con.

LOANS TO BE REFUNDED.

Commission created by Congress and now at work to confer with representatives of debtor nations and work out a solution to refund loans on a commercial basis.

PEACE DECLARED.

Peace effected without compromise of national independence. Country once more on peace basis.

General reconstruction and restoration policies.

SOLDIERS CARED FOR.

Soldier agencies combined and coordinated; Veterans' Bureau established; "clean-up campaign"; every needy man reached; work in 99 hospitals in every section, costing $800,000,000; training and rehabilitation work expanded and conducted scientifically; appropriations of $1,840,000,000 expended for compensation, allowances, and allotments, insurance, vocational training, hospitalization, and administration. Current appropriations $418,053,843—greater than for any other function of government.

TAXATION LOAD LIFTED.

$900,000,000 of taxes lifted in 1921 and 1922. Income taxes, by exemptions, reduced on incomes of 90 per cent of the people. Nuisance, freight, parcel post, express, transportation, and excess-profits taxes repealed. Surtax reduced. Expenses cut to the bone; reduction of public debt. New enterprises; new sources of revenue. Economy not a theory, but a necessity.

WATCHFUL PRUDENCE AND ECONOMY.

Investigation by congressional committees discloses waste and frauds. Obstructions by minority. Three thousand five hundred lawsuits pending in civil courts from Shipping Board operations; $62,000,000 of claims in Court of Claims. Foundations being laid for great merchant marine. Thousands of lawsuits growing out of railroad operations; $85,000,000 of errors and overpayments discovered.

Auditing vigorously prosecuted; vast sums being recovered from contractors; 10 per cent of cases actually overpaid; $484,000,000 found paid without contract or accounting.

Attempts to prevent reentry of American goods sold to France blocked by minority.

Democratic Secretary of War made by Republican House reluctantly to place goods on the market for benefit of American people. War Department sells surplus at 53 per cent of original cost; aggregate value, $1,074,087,238.

Congress votes $500,000 to uncover frauds; special grand jury returns 10 indictments.

Work of prosecution delayed by missing papers; 276 cases started, involving $192,000,000; probably $1,000,000,000 involved altogether.

Army of useless Federal employees demobilized.

Two hundred and sixty-six Government periodicals discontinued and their cost saved. Government Printing Office saves $4,000,000 last fiscal year.

CHICAGO RIVER.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 436.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 436.

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to conduct hearings on the subject matter of bills pending before said committee proposing to declare nonnavigable certain portions of the Chicago River, and to take testimony in the city of Chicago. Said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses and to sit during any recess of Congress.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. No consent has been given. The Chair simply recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, in the very midst of the commercial center of the city of Chicago there is a river which under the status given it by law is regarded as a navigable stream. It is probably more or less of a sink hole, and some claim that it is a public nuisance and that it ought to be abated. There are, however, property interests and municipal interests involved in the consideration of it to such an extent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have felt it unwise to accept anybody's statement as to the wisdom of granting the right to call portions of the river nonnavigable without a definite inquiry. It seemed as if the question was of such importance to the very great interests involved that we ought to have a subcommittee go there and make an investigation before going through the form of either approving or disapproving of the undertaking. So we ask that we have the power set forth in this resolution, which means that a subcommittee which will be composed of two members will go there and take testimony and bring back a report to the Interstate Commerce Committee. It is a matter small in itself but apparently of very great import to the commercial and municipal interests of the city of Chicago.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The sanitary condition of this matter is such that it is a menace to the public health of the community. This part of the river is not essential to navigation any longer. In fact to continue to attempt to make navigable the channel referred to by the gentleman would be ridiculous; but the importance of the whole subject relates to the health of millions of people, and I hope consent will be granted to have the investigation suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if the Illinois delegation could not investigate this matter during the interim and report to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and furnish the same class of testimony that the gentleman's committee would get and save all the expense.

Mr. WINSLOW. I will develop the gentleman's inquiry. I think the Illinois delegation could do it as well as our committee could and no better; but it happens that we have appointed on the subcommittee, subject to the passage of this resolution, two Illinois members of the committee. Now, whatever committee may have charge of the investigation will require clerical and stenographic assistance in taking the testimony and preparing its report, and another resolution, which has had the approval of the Committee on Accounts, will be reported by the acting chairman of that committee asking for $500.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the only expense we may look for is for clerical assistance?

Mr. WINSLOW. Clerical, including stenographic and typewriting.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that the Illinois delegation have investigated this matter. We are all in favor of it, but we do not want the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House to take our word for anything. We want them to go there and make an official investigation in order to see that we are not misrepresenting the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is already in favor of this, and the whole Illinois delegation are in favor of it, what is the necessity of spending the $500?

Mr. MADDEN. We do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. WINSLOW. There are municipal interests there, represented by the municipality of Chicago, which are asking for a chance to be heard. There is also some sort of a highway-construction project involved there which has a different angle to present. It becomes a rather unusual and involved case, and we are constrained to consider these various property rights and interests as well as the fact of the sinkhole; so that it clearly is in the interest of the community to have this investigated and reported upon carefully.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is any question raised as to whether or not this is a navigable stream?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is denominated under the law as a navigable stream, but they want to have a certain portion of that stream declared nonnavigable, which is a rather unusual proceeding, although it does happen now and then.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Are there certain commercial interests that want a part of the stream declared to be nonnavigable?

Mr. WINSLOW. It has to be determined to be nonnavigable by act of Congress before anything can be done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will yield to me, the city of Chicago has taken the initiative in this matter. A delegation from the city council was here a few days ago and conferred with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and as a result they made this recommendation. Of course, if you should leave it to us from Chicago, we would immediately recommend it. I know this location. It is a stench hole. It is nothing but a lot of refuse that is gathered in this fork of the Chicago River.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. As a matter of fact, is there any navigation?

Mr. WINSLOW. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no navigation whatever.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The real purpose of this investigation is in order that the committee may obtain the facts and recommend to Congress that it be made nonnavigable?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; this is a little fork of the Chicago River.

Mr. WINSLOW. There are other interests involved here, and it was thought that we ought to have an investigation before we declared it nonnavigable and waive aside the interests of other people without careful consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The proposed investigation has reference only to a little fork of the river and no reference to the main channel, which was improved many years ago. I remember when the great engineering work of improving the river was done, and I think the engineer in charge was Mr. Randolph, a native of my own State.

Mr. MADDEN. No; we would not tolerate any disturbance of that. This place ought to be filled up.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask, has there been any money expended by the Government on this place?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Everybody, it seems, is agreed that the stream ought to be declared nonnavigable. What is the necessity of a committee going out there and making a report?

Mr. WINSLOW. There is some opposition to it.

Mr. MADDEN. There are a lot of conflicting property interests, and we do not want to take a snap judgment.

Mr. WINSLOW. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], who will be one of the subcommittee if this resolution passes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, I want to state that we had communications from several gentlemen, property owners, who object to this being declared a nonnavigable stream. I will state further that the State government itself has some objections to its being declared nonnavigable. The director of public works seems to think that the State's interests are involved in the matter and that this branch of the river may some time be needed for terminal purposes. Therefore there seems to be a conflict of important interests that ought to be investigated.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Are there any docks or wharves there owned by private persons?

Mr. DENISON. I am unable to say, and that is another reason why we ought to have hearings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I can answer that in part. There are no docks or wharves, in the ordinary sense, along the banks of the river, but they have used the banks of the river for loading and unloading. But this particular fork is now utterly useless for any such purposes. It is filled with refuse, with offal, that has been accumulating there for years. It is called "the bunghole" in that part of the city.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The real purpose is to close this up and fill it up.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am somewhat reluctant, Mr. Speaker, to object, and yet I am not satisfied that there is any necessity for this investigation. The Chicago delegation is here and it is a very able delegation, and quite able to present its case before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or any other committee of the House. This is a matter that will carry some expense, I judge.

Mr. MADDEN. Not over $500.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will be more than $500—there will be the railroad fares of the committee——

Mr. DENISON. Let me say that as far as I am concerned, I will pay my own railroad fare.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman is a member of an official committee, he ought not to pay his own railroad fare; the Government should pay it. If it is important enough to be done, he ought not to pay his fare.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The subcommittee, while members of the Illinois delegation, are not from Chicago. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DENISON, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. GRAHAM, are both from that portion of Illinois outside of the city.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does not matter to me. If the House provides for the appointment of a committee, of course their expenses ought to be paid. I am not complaining about the expense; the only question is whether there is a necessity for this committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that the suggestion for an investigation by a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee came from me. There is a great deal of pressure being brought to bear by the people of the community for the closing of this portion of the river on account of the insanitary situation caused by the stagnant water.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this fork of the river an interstate stream or is it wholly within the State?

Mr. MADDEN. It is wholly within the city of Chicago. It is not interstate. While I was personally strongly in favor of the bill that is pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee, I thought it would be unfair to the committee itself to ask them to act upon it without having some one go and look the thing over. So the suggestion was not to have a special committee appointed by the House but a subcommittee of those Members who live out there to go and sit down with the people and hold hearings, go over the ground and come back and report the facts from a personal view of the situation and hearing the case in order that nobody may feel in the end that there has been any injustice done.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not object. There are some very important questions involved in this matter. It is not the ordinary case of a country creek or swamp being declared nonnavigable; this river is in the heart of a very large city and there are conflicting interests apparently. Here is a branch of the Chicago River in the city of Chicago, and a bill pending to declare it nonnavigable. The State of Illinois claims to have an interest in the matter and they are apparently opposed to it, but the city of Chicago is very much interested in it and wants it done. People that have property adjoining are either for or against it, and the committee is unable to act intelligently without some one going there and seeing it and taking the testimony of witnesses.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Do they want this done to do away with bridges?

Mr. DENISON. By declaring it nonnavigable it can be filled up and thereby avoid the necessity of four or five bridges.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. That is the purpose of it, is it?

Mr. DENISON. I think that is one of the purposes of it. They can not do so as long as the Federal Government has jurisdiction over it; Congress must first declare it nonnavigable.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Why should a committee go there; what necessity is there for it to go and investigate?

Mr. DENISON. The whole matter came up one day before the committee when I was not present. Interested parties were asking for hearings, but it was thought that there should be a subcommittee appointed to make an investigation and have hearings; it was the judgment of the committee that a subcommittee should go to Chicago, see the river, the conditions surrounding it, take the testimony of witnesses and report the facts to the whole committee, in order that Congress might act intelligently on any legislation that might be reported. I am convinced that the committee and Congress ought to be in possession of all the facts before we consider the pending bill to declare that part of the Chicago River to be nonnavigable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF CERTAIN HEARINGS IN CHICAGO.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 435.

Resolved, That the expenses of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and of any subcommittee thereof in holding hearings in the city of Chicago on bills relative to declaring certain portions of the Chicago River nonnavigable, are hereby authorized to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee or subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, in an amount not to exceed $500.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to go into a detailed explanation of this resolution, because of the very full discussion that has already been had by the gentlemen of the House. I would simply say that this is a natural consequence or sequence of House Resolution 436, to which the House has agreed. I simply desire to insert in my remarks a letter which was sent to me by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on this question.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
Washington, September 21, 1922.

Hon. A. P. NELSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: I am referring to House Resolution 435, which I introduced September 19, 1922, and which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

I trust you will find it possible to call this resolution up to-day, for the following reasons:

Three bills have been referred to our committee to declare portions of the Chicago River to be nonnavigable.

Our committee undertook to hold hearings on this matter in May, but in view of the conflicting testimony coming from both sides of the subject it appears the only way to satisfactorily convince the committee as a whole is to have some of the committee members go over the ground and hold hearings thereon.

The portions of this river sought to be declared nonnavigable constitute a total of 7 miles in the tract of the most densely populated parts of the city of Chicago. The propositions are opposed vigorously by the State of Illinois.

It has been deemed to the best interests of the Government to have the Illinois members of our committee undertake this work during the prospective adjournment of Congress.

This matter is urgent—on one side at least; that is, for the proper sanitation of the city of Chicago—and as the hearings will occasion considerable expense in the way of transportation, stenographic and clerk hire, the small amount asked for is deemed necessary at this time.

Very truly yours, SAMUEL E. WINSLOW, Chairman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 437.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 437 (Rept. No. 1251).

Resolved, That the appointment of the page detailed to the office of the Clerk of the House is hereby continued during the recess of Congress at the rate of compensation now authorized to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution becomes necessary in order that the Clerk of the House may be able to have the proper assistance during the interim of Congress for the next two months. I have a letter from the Clerk of the House [Mr. Page] which I present, giving the basic reasons why this resolution should be passed.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1922.

Hon. A. P. NELSON,
Acting Chairman, Committee on Accounts,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: I inclose draft of a resolution which I would thank you to bring to the attention of the Committee on Accounts at the earliest possible moment, with a view to favorable action thereon.

This resolution merely continues the employment during the recess of Congress of the page detailed to the office of the Clerk of the House. He is indispensable to the work of my personal office and if his employment is cut off at adjournment my work will be handicapped.

The office will be open daily during the recess and there will be much work notwithstanding the House will not be in session. We will be in receipt of hundreds of letters from Members and others inquiring about bills and many other things, and also in receipt of campaign publicity statements. There will be a great deal of work for this page to perform during the months of October and November.

Very truly yours,

WM. TYLER PAGE.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, the committee considered the matter carefully and unanimously voted that this be favorably acted upon by the House. I think the letter is sufficient explanation giving the evidence as to why this resolution should be passed.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Did the gentleman inquire into whether or not this employment of the page during the recess has been customary during the past?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. It has. It is the same page who is there now. It is the same page who is now in the personal office of the Clerk and who will continue there during the interim of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. A. P. NELSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress and the present administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, Congress is adjourning to-day, and the various Members will soon be engaged in the biennial contest for seats in this body. It will be the first campaign since 1902 that either my father or myself has not been a candidate.

In 1902, as a result of the congressional election of that year, my distinguished father, the Hon. Campbell Slemp, was duly elected a Member of this body. The event to him was a happy one, representing as it did the culmination of a life's ambition. It was inspiring to that element in the district and State who desired to see two political parties established in Virginia, and the result was accepted in good spirit by the great body of Democratic voters. There was an attempt to steal the district by altering the returns from certain counties; but the supreme court of the State prevented this outrage, and Colonel Slemp was awarded the certificate to which he was justly entitled. This was 20 years ago. Since that time there have been 10 congressional contests, in all of which the Republican Party has been successful at the polls. The Democratic Party has put forth its best material.

Hon. J. C. Wysor, the talented orator of the constitutional convention; Senator Robert P. Bruce, a descendant of the Bruces of Scotland and possessing many of their knightly qualities; Senator J. C. Byars, whose pleasing personality made him a popular candidate; Ex-Gov. Henry C. Stuart, cattle king, owner of 40,000 acres of fertile land, possessor of great wealth, also a free spender, but withal a man of great force of character and executive ability; Gen. Rufus A. Ayers, former attorney general, the pioneer in the development of the coal resources of southwest Virginia—member, without opposition, of the constitutional convention; Hon. R. Tate Irvine, a great organizer, interested in many financial enterprises, talented lawyer and speaker; Hon. E. Lee Trinkle, present Governor of Virginia, popular speaker; Lieut. Bolling Handy, soldier of the World War, each and all went down to defeat before the avalanche of Republican votes.

These various contests under varying conditions, involving every type and character of political warfare, demonstrate that in sentiment and attitude the ninth district of Virginia is Republican.

This is further attested by the fact that most of the county officials are Republican.

PROPOSED GERRYMANDER.

Last year the Democrats seemed to have abandoned all hope of regaining this now historic district and appealed to the Legislature of Virginia, which was overwhelmingly Democratic in both branches, to dismember the district. It was proposed to tie Wise County by a long, thin shoestring to the city of Lynchburg, some 300 miles away and whose surrounding territory is wholly dissimilar to the great mining section of southwest Virginia. It was proposed to tie Lee County, butting up against the Cumberland Range, to the city of Roanoke, also some 250 miles away. The proposal was so shocking to the sense of fairness and justice of a great people that it was denounced by the press of the State, privately almost universally condemned, and not approved by either of the United States Senators. Thus fell this hope.

NATURE OF THE PRESENT CAMPAIGN.

Then it was that the present campaign to capture the district was inaugurated. It involves the use of an excessive amount of money and the improper use of election machinery. To accomplish the result it was felt necessary that the poll taxes of all possible Democratic voters be paid. George C. Peery was the Democratic district chairman, the head of the Democratic organization in the district, and therefore the moving spirit in its policies at the time this campaign was started. He was and is a close friend of Harry Byrd, the Democratic State chairman, having placed the latter in nomination for that honor. Apparently he felt his organization was unequal to meeting the financial burdens involved in qualifying the Democratic vote, so he assembles his district committee, calls an early convention, and has himself nominated for Congress on March 21. All other Democratic candidates for Congress in the State were nominated in August, as also their candidate for the United States Senate, Mr. SWANSON. The campaign has gone on for six months. It would have been supposed that during this time Mr. Peery would have gone on the stump, appealed to the reason of the electorate, and laid the basis for election on public approval of man and policy, but his first speech was made on September 11, nearly six months later. During all that period he was busy perfecting the details of his campaign. The character of his activity is shown by the following public interview under date of March 30:

PEERY'S INTERVIEW.

Reports coming in from various parts of the district show that the Democrats of the ninth are in a militant mood. The spirit of the Bristol convention seems to have followed the delegates to their homes. Some counties have already held their organization meetings. They were marked by a spirit of enthusiasm and determination. The workers feel that this is to be our winning year. Other meetings have already been called in other counties and will be held at once.

My nomination carried with it the obligation on my part to exert my best energy and efforts to win. It carried a like obligation on the part of the Democratic organization to put forth its supreme effort for victory.

THE VITAL THING.

The one vital thing immediately in hand is to get our vote qualified by May 6. It is the most important work of the campaign. To do it thoroughly means a long step toward victory.

CARICO ADVISES VIOLATION OF THE LAW.

This interview is important and interesting because it shows Mr. Peery's intimacy with "reports from all parts of the district," also is an acknowledgment of his obligation to do his best and stresses "the one vital thing," that is, "to get our vote qualified by May 6." It demonstrates beyond a doubt that Mr. Peery was familiar with every phase of poll-tax work. I quote also news item of April 26, showing that one month later Mr. Peery was still active in poll-tax work and expected to be in Bristol frequently:

PEERY VISITS WYTHE COUNTY—DEMOCRATS GET VOTE QUALIFIED—SITUATION IN RANKS OF REPUBLICAN PARTY IN NINTH AROUSES INTEREST OF PEERY LEADERS.

Getting the vote qualified is now the main thing before the Democrats of the ninth Virginia district, and with that in view leaders all over the district are bestirring themselves to great activity in behalf of the Democratic candidate for Congress, George C. Peery, of Tazewell. Mr. Peery was nominated at the big Democratic convention held in this city about a month ago.

Mr. Peery has been in Wythe County for the last couple of days, where he held conferences with the county leaders there and went over the political situation. He expressed himself as being well pleased with what he found there and in other parts of the district he has visited.

Mr. Peery is expected to be in Bristol frequently for conferences with local leaders, who have been very active in his behalf. Local headquarters of the Democrats have been deluged with favorable reports from every part of the fighting ninth and leaders are greatly encouraged over the outlook.

Large sums of money were expended in the payment of poll tax, and Democratic workers were directed to pay the poll taxes of women voters, whether they desired it or not. The law plainly requires a personal payment of poll tax, as shown by the following extract of the Virginia constitution. The requirements of the voter are as follows:

That he has personally paid to the proper officer all State poll taxes assessed or assessable against him, under this or the former constitution, for the three years next preceding that in which he offers to register.

I ask especial attention to the directions of E. C. Carico, secretary of the Democratic committee, as disclosed in the following letter to Democratic workers, which speaks so plainly for itself:

NINTH DISTRICT COMMITTEE,
Bristol, Va., April 26, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I have just been advised that in some sections of the district the Republicans are taking advantage of our activities and are getting various parties to claim they are Democrats in order that we will pay their poll taxes and that they may be successful in registering before a Democratic registrar. This situation must be watched closely, as we do not want to qualify anyone that will immediately go to work against us as well as vote against us.

Reports coming to this office show beyond the question of a doubt that we will be able to qualify enough new Democratic voters in this district to overcome the Republican majority. Won't you renew your efforts and be prepared to say that we have a 100 per cent qualification at your precinct?

At some points I have found a few Democratic women who did not want to register. In my opinion we should pay their capitation tax, and then we will have six months in working up the registration. I had much rather pay the tax for a good Democratic woman and have her not register than to have them come around after the 6th day of May and say: "I wish my tax had been paid so I could register." I believe if their taxes are paid when the campaign starts up in full force that every one of them will register.

Yours very truly,

E. C. CARICO, Secretary.

This letter is an actual and specific invitation to violate the law.

Mr. Carico also admits there is a Republican majority in the district.

Hon. Harry Byrd, Democrate State chairman, after visiting the ninth district, gave out a public interview, in which he stated:

The organization we have effected is a wonderful example of a systematic plan by which every Democratic voter has paid his or her poll tax and will register and vote the Democratic ticket in November.

Note that Mr. Byrd says that every Democratic voter "will register" and vote the Democratic ticket, and this without reference to meeting legal qualifications.

Yes; wonderful system! But simple, after all. First, pay the poll taxes; second, use the registration machinery to register the proposed voter; and, third, use the judges of election to vote him. It should be remembered that in the Paul-Harrison contest shocking frauds and irregularities were shown in the town of Winchester, the home town of Mr. Byrd, and where he presides over the destinies and policies of the Democratic workers.

The Committee on Elections, in its report to the House, said:

In the latter city (the city of Winchester), the home of the contestee, the violation of the constitutional provisions in regard to registration, the secrecy of the ballot, and the indiscriminate giving of assistance in the preparation of their ballots to persons not entitled thereto was especially flagrant. The evidence clearly discloses the fact that for years the registrars in that city had entirely disregarded the mandatory provisions of the constitution requiring applications in writing and had filled their books with the names of persons who had never made any written applications at all.

It is impossible for me to know the full amount of money thus expended, nor do I know the source of the money. I do have evidence that on May 6 Democratic workers paid poll taxes as follows:

ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF MONEY EXPENDED.

Buchanan County (estimate)	$1,600
Lee County (estimate)	2,200
Scott County (estimate)	1,200
Washington County (estimate)	2,000
Giles County (estimate)	750
Tazewell County (estimate)	2,500
Wythe County (estimate)	1,100
Smyth County (estimate)	1,000
A total of	12,350

The expenditures in Russell, Bland, Pulaski, Dickenson, and Bristol City could easily swell this amount, on the basis of the above, to over $20,000, possibly $25,000.

The following is Mr. S. R. Hurley's letter on the subject, which he says will be followed, if desired, by a sworn statement. While I have referred to their expenditures as estimates, I have other statements of a similar nature showing amounts paid, to whom paid, and by whom paid on this poll-tax work:

SEPTEMBER 18, 1922.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 9th, with reference to the amount of poll taxes paid in Buchanan County by the Democrats, the treasurer informs me that he received at one time from the Democrats more than $1,300. That is, on May 5 or 6, and they paid into this office on May 6 nearly $300, making a total of about $1,600 paid by them in bulk.

If there is any other information along this line or any other line you desire, do not hesitate to write me, and if you want sworn statements to this effect I can furnish them.

Yours truly,

S. R. HURLEY.

That Mr. Peery was cognizant of these expenditures I neither affirm nor deny. He was district chairman when he was nominated. He urged this poll-tax activity and he was a frequent visitor at headquarters and in the various counties while this work was being done.

Under the Federal law no candidate can expend more than $5,000, not embracing certain expenditures such as telegrams, telephones, stationery, and traveling expenses. An investigation would doubtless disclose a situation in the ninth district far worse than the charges brought against Senator NEWBERRY, whom Mr. Peery piously condemns. It was not claimed that Senator NEWBERRY actually made the expenditures, but that he was cognizant of them. The average expenditure per congressional district on behalf of Senator NEWBERRY was about $10,000. There has apparently already been expended on behalf of Mr. Peery perhaps double this amount, with many expensive features of the campaign yet to be met.

PEERY CAN COMPARE WITH SENATOR NEWBERRY.

The excessive use of money in this instance is far more culpable than was the case of Senator NEWBERRY as relatively more money is spent, and instead of its being confined to the attitude, say of one family, it is the policy of a political organization. During the Newberry campaign Senator NEWBERRY spent the entire time out of his State in the State of New York and may not have known about the expenditures, but in our case Mr. Peery remained in the district, received reports from all parts of the district, as he says in his interview, and praised the work of the office. Yet Mr. Peery denounces Newberryism. He should have prevented this expenditure as he was in a position to do so. The public can not presume he was ignorant of what went on, nor can he escape public condemnation.

TWENTY THOUSAND MORE TO BE EXPENDED.

But this is only the preliminary expenditure. The Democratic State chairman is reported to be collecting money in various parts of the State for use in our great district, and it is likely that an additional $20,000 will be expended before the close of the polls on election day.

At the last meeting of the Democratic State committee in Richmond, Mr. Harry Byrd, State chairman, I am informed, stated to the committee that he needed $30,000 for use in the ninth and seventh districts, and after asking for subscriptions stated that the assurances he had received were satisfactory. * * * I have proof in writing of what I say about this meeting.

And this in free America where the poor man is supposed to have an equal chance with the rich, where it is our boast that a rail splitter became President, and where every political tendency is toward the elimination of corruption in our political life.

REGISTRATION.

Now, as to the registration. There is one registrar for each precinct. Our law permits only one, and he is invariably a Democrat. Among these registrars there are many who are fair to all parties, and some who are not. I would have no objection to a Democrat serving as registrar any more than I would to a judge who is of that faith but who administers the law with even-handed justice, nor to a postmaster who serves with equal fidelity all classes of the community. It is the discrimination practiced under the law to which objection can rightfully be made, and that is just the criticism that is offered to the Democratic campaign in regard to the registration this year.

Suppose a postmaster, a public official, gave Republicans their mail first, then closed the office, and the Democrats were told to come back next day, how long would public sentiment of either party permit the retention of such an official? Yet it is this kind of official treatment that many registrars are offering to Republicans in the ninth district, and to such an extent that it must be a part of the Democratic campaign in the district.

It may not be technically illegal for a registrar to take his books, go along the streets, pass every Republican by, and enter the home of every Democrat and put that Democrat on the registration book and then absent himself from town so that a Republican voter can not find him and will then be disfranchised. But it is unfair, dishonest, outrageous, and un-American. It takes us back 25 years in our politics. It makes the ninth district of Virginia the victim of methods long since condemned by public conscience, and particularly so since many of our soldier boys who fought to liberate the world can thus be denied the right to register and vote. This unfair practice, denying registration by absenting himself, stealing by indirection, is what the Republican Party has to meet at many places.

Nothing but their deep and profound love of party, and sustained by the spirit of crusaders, martyrs, and patriots, has enabled the Republican voter in many precincts to get his name on the list. This use of registration machinery, regarding the registrars as officials of the Democratic Party, and not of the public, is even more to be condemned than the use of money. It creates a distrust in the agencies of the law and brings it into disrepute. People are entitled to equal rights under the law, and the political organization that attempts to triumph through unfair practices should be condemned by the voters, and in the last analysis a candidate who profits by such methods should not be permitted to have a seat on this floor.

Let us take the registrar at Gate City, for example, a town, say, of some 1,500 people, a wonderfully pleasant place to visit, the home of good schools, churches, and a college. The registrar lives 2 miles from town and nearly half a mile from a highway and on a ridge, so that the Republican voters will have the greatest difficulty in getting there, and after arriving the registrar may be reported absent and the trip has to be taken over again. For the Democratic voter it is only necessary for it to be known that he is a Democrat, and he goes on easily or almost automatically. The same conditions exist at Castlewood, another charming little mountain village, where the registrar lives 3 miles away and impossible to reach in a car.

APPALACHIA.

I shall not encumber the record with a recitation of details of this character; only a sufficient number to demonstrate the general nature of this movement. Take Appalachia, a thriving town of some 3,000 people. A new registrar was appointed, and he began by actually denying registration to two Republicans. They appealed their cases to the court and were placed on the books by order of the court.

There are 156 Republicans, I am told, yet to register at this precinct. After this action of the court the registrar, I am told, in great part absents himself, so that these 156 people, many of whom have tried unsuccessfully to find the registrar, or a great part of them, may thus be deprived of their right to vote by being denied registration, either directly or indirectly. In another place the registrar has stated that he will not register a negro, whatever his qualifications may be. That it is the settled policy of the Democratic committee, and presumably with the indorsement of Mr. Peery, who, as everyone knows, is in intimate touch with his campaign, to regard these registrars as officers of the Democratic Party, rather than of the public.

DEMOCRATIC LETTER.

I ask attention to the following letters sent out to the Democratic precinct committeemen and to the registrars by the Democratic district chairman, where the registrars are asked to meet with the committeemen, and, what is more astounding, to visit the homes of voters and take their application to register:

LETTERS TO REGISTRARS.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith copy of letter I am writing to our precinct committee at your place, and also copy of letter which I am writing to the precinct chairman.

We trust that you will meet with the committee at the meeting suggested in these letters and that you will cooperate with them in seeing that our vote at your place is qualified at once.

Yours very truly,

E. R. COMBS, Chairman.

P. S.—Twenty-eight more days within which to register and transfer.

BRISTOL, VA., September 9, 1922.

DEAR SIR: We have now a very short time within which to complete our registration and transfer work, and I am writing to urge upon you the importance of this work and to request that you at once inquire into the present status of this work at your precinct.

I would suggest that you have a meeting of your precinct committee one day next week with the registrar for your precinct, and carefully check your registration books with the Treasurer's certified list of voters and make up a list of Democratic voters who have not registered or transferred, and at the same meeting inquire for young men and women who have become 21 years old since February 1, 1921, who may still pay taxes and register. Any person who has become 21 since February 1, 1921, can pay $1.50 poll taxes, register, and vote in this election. They must, however, pay and register at least 30 days before the election.

This is a call from the Democratic Party for service, and I wish I could see each one of you in person and go over the work in detail, but this is impossible. I am sure that you will realize that this work is of the utmost importance, and may we not depend upon you to see to it that this work is thoroughly done at your precinct?

Please get in touch with your precinct chairman and registrar at once and fix a date for a meeting of your precinct committee.

Yours very truly,

E. R. COOMBS, District Chairman.

P. S.—Twenty-eight more days in which to register and transfer.

BRISTOL, VA., September 8, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I herewith inclose copies of letters which I am writing to registrars and to precinct workers. I do not think we can place too much emphasis upon the importance of registration and transfer work at this time. It is absolutely imperative that our voters are fully registered and transferred at once, and I hope you will keep in close touch with this work in your county until you know the work has been thoroughly done.

We are very anxious at headquarters to get the names and addresses of voters who will probably desire to vote by mail, and I hope you will arrange to get this list from your county to me at once. I expect to write each one of these voters a letter, inclosing full instructions on voting by mail. Please get this list to me at once without fail.

Yours very truly,

E. R. COMBS, District Chairman.

Among other things he says:

BRISTOL, VA., September 9, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I would suggest, therefore, that you fix an early date for a meeting of your precinct committee with your registrar and carefully go over the work yet to be done at your precinct, and arrange with your registrar to go to the homes of voters yet to be registered and take their applications. We are finding in all parts of the district many young men and women who have become 21 years old since February 1, 1921, who can still pay $1.50 poll taxes and register and vote, and I would suggest that you inquire for voters who can qualify under this head at your precinct.

* * * * * * *

Yours very truly,

E. R. COMBS, District Chairman.

What unblushing audacity this is. Instead of urging the registrar to publicly announce that he will be at his office at certain hours available to all the public, he is urged to visit privately the homes of voters where he will be available only to those he may select, which, of course, will be Democrats.

A great many of these registrars are good men and are not responsive to these appeals; but I am sorry to say that there are some who are responsive.

RICHLANDS.

Another instance is that of Richlands precinct, that has a large Republican majority if the Republicans can register. It is near where Mr. Peery was born and reared. It is a hustling little town, with schools, churches, banks, brickyard, and a railroad-junction point, reaching the coal fields some 5 miles away. The surrounding country is beautiful and fertile. The registrar was W. T. Boggiss, one of the prominent merchants of the town, registrar for 20 years. He was summarily removed from office and the brother of Mr. Peery's brother-in-law, I am informed, appointed in his stead, and the Republicans had to secure a mandamus in court to even inspect the registration books, though the law plainly states that these books shall be open at all times to public inspection.

GRAHAM.

Likewise at Graham, John E. Boyle, a Christian gentleman, prominent merchant, leading citizen, and Mason, registrar for 20 years, was removed and another appointed in his place, whose life is not beyond reproach, and who, it is reported, is exercising unfair practices toward the Republican Party. How is this possible in enlightened Tazewell County? The secretary of the electoral board, I am informed, when George C. Peery was nominated for Congress was Chapman H. Peery, brother of George C. Peery. He resigned the secretaryship for the sake of appearances, but had his brother-in-law, I am informed, appointed instead.

POCAHONTAS.

The actions of the registrar at Pocahontas, who admits in writing that for a long time he had not taken a written application for registration, should be the subject of investigation, as the law plainly requires application in one's own handwriting before registering. This is a part of the educational qualification of the voter. If this statement of the registrar be true, the great body of votes at Pocahontas would be illegal and would be rejected by Congress if cast.

Here are three cases in the great county of Tazewell. And there are many similar ones in the district. The condition may be summed up by the statement that it is easy for the Democrats to be placed on the registration books; it is difficult, sometimes impossible, for the Republican voters to be registered. This discrimination is not contemplated by law, does not have the approval of the public, and should not be sanctioned by Congress.

HASSINGER'S RECORD AND LIFE.

While these methods are to be condemned as a matter of abstract principle and justice, they are especially to be deplored because they are being exercised against the particular individual who is the Republican nominee, Hon. John H. Hassinger. If there is a pure-minded soul in the ninth district of Virginia, it is Mr. Hassinger. If there is a life in this great district that is the subject of emulation, it is the life of Mr. Hassinger. Coming into our midst some 20 years ago, he has identified himself with our people in a modest, unassuming way to the great good of his neighbors and the communities in which he has lived. There is no good work in which he has not participated. Historic Emory and Henry College has been speeded on its way by help from the Hassingers. Likewise King College, at Bristol, Martha Washington, and Stonewall Jackson. The sick who are brought to the beautiful hospital at Abingdon are thankful that his munificence largely created this institution. Likewise the Negro hospital at Bristol. Wherever the Hassingers go, good works abound. Schools, churches, colleges, hospitals, community houses, good roads, good wages are all the subject of his care and attention, and they are open to all the people alike. The schoolhouse he built is open to Republican children and Democratic children on equal terms. If he was registrar and visited the Republican homes to register them, he would also visit the Democratic homes to register them. It is my own belief that when these facts are known the people themselves will repudiate the methods adopted to elect Mr. Peery, as should be done; and I am placing these indisputable facts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that other States and other congressional districts may know of the methods adopted by certain Democratic politicians to take away this loyal district in the South from the Republican Party.

Certain it is that the good women of the district, whose entrance into politics is welcomed as a purifying influence, will not indorse such methods or such policies, by whatever party they are put forward.

The election day is November 7, more than one month from to-day; and the people may look for other wrongs to be perpetrated by and before that time, but of these we can not speak with definiteness. We can only surmise, and that is that the Democrats are spending and will spend more money than has been spent since Mr. Stuart attempted to capture the district in 1910. And there is no form of political wrongdoing that at some place or other may not appear.

This is to be an election at which a Representative in the Congress of the United States is to be chosen; and as the House of Representatives is the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its Members, I feel justified in using the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to present these preliminary facts and features of a campaign that may possibly have its aftermath in the body of which I will not then be a Member.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the many allegations made on the floor of this Chamber by Democratic Members, together with the energetic publicity campaign now being carried on by the Democratic Party, criticizing and condemning the administration of the Republican Party, I feel compelled in all fairness to myself, and especially to my constituents for whose welfare I labor, to briefly call attention and consideration to the indefatigable labors, earnest application, and unparalleled achievements made by the Republican Party during the period of its present administration, as well as to certain facts and conditions existing at the close of the Democratic administration.

When the Republican Party came into power on March 4, 1921, it inherited as a partial legacy resulting from the folly, gross inefficiency, and maladministration of the Democratic Party the following:

A public debt of $24,000,000,000.

Industries at a standstill and 5,000,000 workmen out of employment.

The farming and live-stock industries facing ruin.

Thousands of cruelly neglected ex-service men.

Improperly protected foreign loans amounting to over $11,000,000,000, the repayment of which the Democratic administration was endeavoring to have indefinitely postponed, and even looking toward their ultimate cancellation.

The ghastly wreck of a shipbuilding venture costing the people of this Nation over $3,000,000,000.

Liberty bonds selling for 85 cents on the dollar.

A disastrous revenue system in operation, and the doors of our country open to the trade and cheap labor of the world.

An unnecessary personnel in the Army, Navy, and Federal Government.

Our participation in the great World War can not justly be advanced as a logical explanation or excuse for such a deplorable situation. The fruits of war are always bitter and the cost and burden heavy and severe for many years following, but the incomparable wastes, inefficiencies, and nonsensical procedure during the Democratic Party's eight years in office should not and can not now be clothed with a mantle of virtue under the guise of war.

Mr. Speaker, a moment's folly will oftentimes upset the hard and faithful endeavors of years of toil and sacrifice. On March 4, 1921, Republican leadership, ingenuity, and resource faced the necessity of checking and correcting not the folly of a moment's passion or unthoughtfulness, but rather the innumerable blunders and errors unthinkingly or unwisely made during the eight long years of Democratic Party control of the National Government.

That the people of this Nation did not err in placing their confidence and faith in the Republican Party is evidenced by the record of its achievements during the brief period of its exclusive control of all departments of the Government. Some of the things accomplished thus far are as follows:

The public debt has been reduced by over $1,000,000,000, and public expenditures have been reduced by over one and a half billion dollars.

Confidence has been restored in industrial circles; and notwithstanding the confusion and unfortunate handicap imposed by the coal and railroad difficulties, the wheels of industry are turning with ever-increasing momentum and the vast army of unemployed has been reduced to a minimum.

Never in the same length of time has Congress given more thought to or passed more helpful legislation in behalf of the farmer, and justly so, for the farmer is the Nation's greatest and most vital producer. Two factors largely contributed to the serious and grave situation of the farmer at the time when the Republican administration came into power: First, an increasingly large quantity of agricultural imports from various foreign countries admitted by the Democratic Underwood Tariff Act; second, the sudden and unwarranted restriction of credits to the American farmer in the summer of 1920 by the Democratic administration.

At the special session of Congress called by President Harding April 11, 1921, the emergency or farmers' tariff previously vetoed by President Wilson was promptly reintroduced and became a law May 27, 1921. The benefits thereof were immediately evident.

The War Finance Corporation act was amended so as to provide proper financial relief, without which aid many farmers would have been ruined.

An act legalizing cooperative marketing associations was passed.

The Federal farm loan act was amended, providing an additional fund of $25,000,000.

Appreciable reductions in freight rates on agricultural commodities have been effected, and the Republican Party will continue its efforts and labors in behalf of the interest and welfare of the American farmer.

Congress has readily passed all legislation providing for the relief and rehabilitation of ex-service men who were disabled or suffered injury as a result of their service to their country. It has been diligent in working for the welfare of the ex-service men. It has supported and will continue to support the adjusted compensation or so-called bonus measure.

The foreign debt refunding act was passed, creating a commission of five members to arrange with our foreign debtors as to the terms of payment of both principal and interest of the more than $11,000,000,000 which they owe us.

Every effort is being made to devise a method of salvaging the wreck of our shipbuilding venture, but the many problems created by past errors and blunders are difficult to solve.

Restored national confidence under Republican administration has brought the Liberty bonds above par.

Material reductions have been effected in the Army and Navy personnel, as well as in that of the Federal Government. The Army reorganization act, supplementing the national defense act, was passed. This is by far the greatest and most advanced step ever taken in military legislation. Greater national security has been provided thereby, although the personnel of the Army has been reduced from 240,000 to 125,000, with a proportionate reduction in the number of officers. The menace of universal military training, advocated by the Democratic administration, was also thereby done away with.

The National Guard was also reestablished.

The immigration restriction act was passed, thereby safeguarding American labor from the great influx of cheap foreign labor and war derelicts, which would otherwise have taken place. Also, the following summary quoted on page 76 of the Report of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to the forty-second annual convention lists briefly the laws enacted by the present Congress favorable to labor:

1. Limiting immigration until June 30, 1922, to 3 per cent of the number of foreign born of any nationality in the United States according to the census of 1910. (Public No. 5.)
2. Extending the expiration of the 3 per cent immigration law to June 30, 1924.
3. Increasing the number of years to five instead of one that foreigners must live in Canada, Cuba, or Mexico before entering the United States.
4. Penalizing steamship companies that bring more than the quota of any nationality provided in the immigration law.
5. Appropriating $5,000,000 for purchase of seed grain and of feed for farmers in crop-failure areas of United States. (Public No. 177.)
6. For relief of distressed and starving people of Russia. (Public, No. 117.)
7. Authorizing associations of producers of agricultural products. (Public, No. 146.)
8. Appropriating $75,000,000 for construction of rural post roads. (Public, No. 87.)
9. Public protection of maternity and infancy. (Public, No. 97.)
10. Establishing Veterans' Bureau in Treasury Department. (Public, No. 47.)
11. Increasing force and salaries of Patent Office employees, etc. (Public, No. 147.)
12. Authorizing extension of time for payment of construction charges on reclamation projects, etc. (Public, No. 185.)
13. Amending act for retirement of employees in classified civil service. (Public, No. 142.)
14. Bringing all persons in classified civil service under retirement act. (Public, No. 182.)
15. Providing that water tenders, oilers, and firemen shall work 8 hours instead of 12 whether in port or at sea.
16. Appropriation of $225,000 for United States Employment Service of Department of Labor.
17. Appropriation for Women's Bureau of Department of Labor increased from $75,000 to $100,000.

Some idea of the immense labors of Congress is forthcoming when we consider the fact that during the present session over 16,000 bills were introduced and referred to the various committees of the House. After careful consideration, and in many instances exhaustive study, 545 of these were enacted into law, of which 405 were public bills in behalf of American labor, American industry, the American farmer, and the American people as a whole. Among the most important of these remedial measures are found—

The Budget system, checking and restricting wastes, duplication, and needless expenditures in the various departments of the Government.

The peace resolution, permitting the reestablishment of normal peace relations with Germany and Austria.

The disarmament conference agreement—doing away with the international race in the manufacture of implements of war, thereby lightening the heavy burden of taxation and successfully completing the greatest single move ever made toward the ultimate establishment of lasting peace among nations.

The Veterans' Bureau act—providing proper care and hospital treatment to all disabled or otherwise injured ex-service men.

Appropriation for the investigation and prosecution of war frauds.

The Federal highway acts—in the interest of good roads and of direct benefit to the farmer and the American people as a whole.

The maternity and infancy act—providing for the conservation of the greatest wealth of any nation, namely, "human resources."

The antigambling in grain futures act—regulating the transactions of grain exchanges and the prevention of gambling operations which disastrously affect the prices of grain and foodstuffs.

The Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. During the time intervening between November 11, 1918, the day the armistice was signed, and May 27, 1921, the day the Republican emergency tariff act became a law, statistics show that over 20,000,000 bushels of corn, 45,000,000 bushels of wheat, 200,000,000 pounds of beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork, and 750,000,000 pounds of wool were imported from foreign countries. American farmers and live-stock interests were facing ruin until the passage by a Republican administration of the emergency tariff act, which had been previously vetoed by President Wilson. Immediately improved general conditions justified the passage of this act. Now, after many months of toil, exhaustive research, and careful deliberation, we have passed a permanent tariff act protecting the American farmer, American labor and industry, and, therefore, necessarily the American people, against the great influx of cheap foreign goods and produce, which would have undermined our individual and industrial prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, the record speaks for itself, and no amount of petty criticism can detract therefrom. Great strides have been made within a short period, and there still remains much to be done before this Nation is again brought back safely into the path leading ultimately to the great destiny reserved for it, but just as surely as history repeats itself, so will the progressive, resourceful, and wise leadership of the Republican Party eventually straighten out the messes and muddles bequeathed to it by an inefficient Democratic administration.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that it is desirable that this should be done on account of the deficiency appropriation bill and——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And another bill from the Committee on Ways and Means that will probably come over to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, as I understand, is a bill unanimously agreed upon by the committee, and it is a mere matter of administration?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is a transfer of statistics from the Treasury Department to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not a controversial matter?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; both the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce are in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there will be no attempt to take up any other matters under suspension besides the conference report?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Matters of suspension lie with the Speaker, but I feel quite sure that I can say for the Speaker that there will be no motion to suspend the rules to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COLE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on law and enforcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldier bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], who is a member of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President, I ask unanimous consent for him to extend his remarks on the corrupt practices act and the expenditure of money in elections.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldier bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, the situation in Congress is rather peculiar, to say the least. We have the peculiar circumstance of the President of the United States, a Republican, on the advice and counsel of his Secretary of the Treasury, vetoing the soldiers' compensation act. We have the Republican leaders of the House favorable to passing the bill over the veto of the President, as are the Republican leaders of the Senate. But in the House two Democratic leaders, both alleged candidates for the Speakership, Mr. GARNER of Texas and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, are in accord with the President to the extent that they want to defeat the bill, while in the Senate the Democratic leaders, backed up by a leading Democratic Senator, a former Secretary of the Treasury, are fighting to defeat adjusted compensation.

I am glad to be a Member of the House where by a vote of nearly 5 to 1 we have demonstrated we have not forgotten our obligations to the ex-service men, and I am proud to be a member of the Kansas delegation. Every member of the delegation in the House at every opportunity voted for the compensation bill, and so have both of our Senators, and are all willing to be recorded as favorable to the passage of the bill, even though it be over the veto of the President of our own party. I feel sure that I voice the sentiment of the entire delegation in Congress from Kansas. We are now and shall continue to be for the adjusted compensation for the soldiers of the late war. I shall continue so long as I remain in Congress to oppose any proposition looking to the cancellation of the British war debt, and I shall continue to advocate and support a measure to compensate the services of the soldiers of the late war. I made speeches during the war boasting of the appreciation of our country for our service men, and I have in no way changed my mind with regard to adjusted compensation, nor have I changed my mind concerning the indebtedness to our Nation.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Government barge service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On what?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. On general principles; on the administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this being an off year in so far as a presidential campaign is concerned, the Democratic leaders have not hesitated to praise President Harding in order to make more readily believed their charges against Congress, which are made to affect the coming congressional elections. These leaders have joined with a number of persons, made dissatisfied by a rapid return toward "normalcy," in carrying on an expensive and well-organized propaganda characterizing the present Congress "a do-nothing Congress." To substantiate their claims, they assert that great differences exist between the Executive and Congress.

The hoplessness of the situation in which the Democratic Party finds itself has prompted its leaders to make charges which are both false and inconsistent.

Little more than a month after President Harding took the oath of office he called the Sixty-seventh Congress into extraordinary session—extraordinary indeed, because, as the President said in his message at the joint session:

> We face our tasks of legislation and administration amid conditions as difficult as our Government has ever contemplated.

When the Republican Party came into power on March 4, 1921, it inherited, as a partial legacy resulting from the folly, gross inefficiency, and maladministration of the Democratic Party, the following:

A public debt of $24,000,000,000.

Industries at a standstill and 5,000,000 workmen out of employment.

The farming and live-stock industries facing ruin.

Thousands of cruelly neglected ex-service men.

Improperly protected foreign loans amounting to over $11,000,000,000, the repayment of which the Democratic administration was endeavoring to have indefinitely postponed, and even looking toward their ultimate cancellation.

The ghastly wreck of a shipbuilding venture costing the people of this Nation over $3,000,000,000.

Liberty bonds selling for 85 cents on the dollar.

A disastrous revenue system in operation, and the doors of our country open to the trade and cheap labor of the world.

An unnecessary personnel in the Army, Navy, and Federal Government.

This Congress has been in session 330 legislative days. It has been the hardest working Congress in the history of our Government and has enacted more legislation than any previous Congress in the same length of time.

No less false are the charges that great differences exist between the President and his party in Congress. Throughout the most trying times of readjustment these two branches of Government have functioned more harmoniously than ever before, as will be seen by a comparison of the recommendations and approvals of the President and the accomplishments of Congress.

A Republican President, together with a Republican Senate and House, is steadfastly and successfully carrying out the Republican platform and program.

Recommendations of the President, as contained in his messages, and in their order.	What Congress has done in conformity with the recommendations of the President.
RETURN TO NORMAL.
Return to normal conditions.	Many laws passed to this end.
Most astonishing results have been made toward the return to "normalcy." Every department of the Government, by direction of the President, has exerted every effort to this end, and the result is being accomplished much more quickly than anyone had dared hope.
EXPENDITURES REDUCED.
"No more pressing problem than to restrict our national expenditures within the limits of our national income and at the same time measurably lift the burdens of war taxation."	There has been saved in economical administration $1,600,000,000. The war debt has been reduced $700,000,000. Taxes have been reduced $900,000,000.
TAXES LOWERED.
Not only was $900,000,000 lifted in taxes, but by enlarged exemptions the income taxes of about 90 per cent of the people were reduced.
"A prompt and thoroughgoing revision of the internal tax laws, made with due regard to the protection of the revenues."	Revenue law, Public No. 98, approved November 23, 1921. Internal taxes reduced as much as the necessary running expenses permitted.
TARIFF REVISION.
"Emergency tariff measures necessary to protect American trade and industry."	Emergency tariff, Public No. 10, approved May 27, 1921; and Public No. 91, approved November 16, 1921.
The President said:
There is a storm of conflicting opinion about any tariff revision. We can not go far wrong when we base our tariffs on the policy of preserving the productive activities which enhance employment and add to our national prosperity.
Permanent tariff law.	Public No. 318, approved September 21, 1922.
To provide for the unsettled conditions in foreign trade, in this new tariff law the President, at his suggestion, has been authorized to raise and lower rates within certain limits. This is the first step looking toward a scientific adjustable tariff, and also toward the taking of the tariff out of politics.

Referring to the sections carrying this grant of authority, President Harding, in attaching his signature to the new act, declared that "if we succeed, as I hope we will succeed, in making effective the elastic provisions of this bill, this will prove the greatest contribution toward progress in tariff making in a century."

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.
"Legislation providing for the National Budget System."	Budget Law, No. 13, approved June 10, 1922.

Not only has the Budget Bureau, under the efficient management of its first directors, in harmony with the views of the Chief Executive, asserted a most helpful and beneficial influence over the estimates presented to the Congress, but the director, with the constant and unfailing support of the President, has exerted a mighty influence for economy over the departments and bureaus and independent establishments of the Government, resulting in the saving of many millions of dollars out of appropriations made before the Budget was established. The Congress, and particularly the House of Representatives, which, after all, is the final arbiter, trimmed the appropriations below even the reduced estimates of the Budget.

As a result of economy and good business management of the Nation's affairs the total gross debt of the Nation was reduced, between May 31, 1919, and June 30, 1922, almost $3,000,000,000, or, to be exact, $2,953,492,388. The reduction in expenditures by years has been as follows:

Fiscal year 1919	$18,514,879,955.00
Fiscal year 1920	6,560,467,535.13
Fiscal year 1921	5,538,209,189.30
Fiscal year 1922	3,795,302,499.84

Leaving out of consideration the enormous reduction of more than $12,000,000,000 between the expenditures for 1919 and 1920, the most remarkable showing ever made of Government retrenchment in time of peace is to be found in the reduction of expenditures for the fiscal year which closed the 1st of last July of nearly three billions below the expenditures for the fiscal year 1920.

BUSINESS IN GOVERNMENT.
The President promised to take the Government out of business and to put more business into the Government, which promise he immediately started to fulfill, and has been consistently working toward that end with remarkable success.
TRANSPORTATION AND DISTRIBUTION.
"The great interest of both the producer and consumer—indeed, all our industrial and commercial life from agriculture to finance—in the problems of transportation will find its reflex in your concern to aid reestablishment, to restore efficiency, and bring transportation cost into a helpful relationship, rather than continue it as a hindrance to resumed activities."	Commission to report property of railroads, Public Law No. 233, approved June 7, 1922. Financing of railroads by amending transportation act passed House and has been reported in the Senate. Reparation for damage claimed through unjust rates, Public law No. 149, approved February 24, 1922. A number of bills are under consideration in relation to the railroads.
The Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, after a long and careful survey, has issued a comprehensive report on the losses in transportation and distribution, which will be the basis of legislation.
GOOD ROADS.
"Transportation over the highways is little less important, but the problems relate to construction and development and deserve your most earnest attention, because we are laying a foundation for a long time to come, and the creation is very difficult to visualize in its great possibilities."	Good roads construction program with Federal aid to roads, Public, No. 87, approved November 9, 1921. Additional sums for construction and repair of post roads are provided for in the Post Office appropriation, Public, No. 244, approved June 19, 1922.
The Federal highway act, which became a law November 9, 1921, as an amendment to the Federal road aid act, carried out the President's recommendations with regard to needed and essential changes in the Federal road aid act, particularly with a view to centralizing authority in the States and insuring the upkeep of Federal aid roads. The act made an appropriation of $75,000,000 for Federal aid in road building for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922. Appropriations for highways were authorized in the sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $65,000,000 for 1924; and $75,000,000 for 1925.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

"Linked with rail and high way is the problem of water transportation."	Rivers and Harbors, Public, No. 362, approved September 22, 1922. Other bills pending.

RADIO.

"It is proper to invite your attention to the importance of the question of radio communication and cables."	Radio stations, Public Resolution No. 48, approved April 14, 1922. Other radio legislation pending.

AVIATION.

"Aviation is inseparable from either the Army or the Navy, and the Government must in interest of national defense encourage its development for military and civil purposes."	Appropriations for further development of the airplane were made in both the War Department and the Post Office Department appropriation bills.

SOLDIERS OF THE WORLD WAR.

"The American people expect Congress unfailingly to voice the gratitude of the Republic in a generous and practical way to its defenders in the World War."	The American people through their Congress are doing more for their soldiers than any nation in the world. In addition numerous bills are now being considered.

Continuing its policy of making every needed provision for the care and comfort of the sick and disabled veterans of the World War, Congress passed the act of April 20, 1922, which authorized appropriations in the sum of $17,000,000 in aiding the Director of the Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional facilities and to furnish medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion. These funds are in addition to the $18,000,000 provided for similar purposes near the close of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it is believed that with the sums now made available abundant hospital facilities will be provided for all of the veterans who may seek them.

Among the many laws passed of interest to war veterans, and in addition to those herein considered, may be mentioned the following:

> For the purchase of land for cemeteries for American military dead in Europe; for congressional medal of honor and distinguished service cross to be awarded unknown American buried in Arlington Cemetery; for the transportation home of the wives and children of destitute soldiers discharged in Europe; for the subsistence and travel pay to place of enlistment of honorably discharged soldiers; authorizing the absence of wounded soldiers from homestead entries; several laws amending the act providing hospital facilities for patients of the Veterans' Bureau; providing that pensions apply to soldiers not covered by the war risk insurance act; providing for the monthly payment of pensions of Civil War veterans and their widows.

PUBLIC WELFARE.

"During the recent political canvass the proposal was made that a department of public welfare should be created."	This proposition is now being seriously considered in connection with the reorganization of the executive departments.

MATERNITY AND CHILD WELFARE LEGISLATION.

"I assume the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly."	Maternity and infancy law, Public, No. 97, approved November 23, 1921.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIEN WOMEN.

My colleague, Hon. JOHN L. CABLE, introduced a bill, which was enacted into law, authorizing the naturalization of alien women independent of the naturalization of their husbands, and for the retention by American women of their citizenship, notwithstanding marriage to an alien, so long as they desire to remain residents of the United States. It provides against the automatic loss of an American woman's citizenship by her marriage to the alien, and for the restoration to citizenship of such women who have lost their citizenship by such marriage.

ANTILYNCHING.

"Congress ought to wipe the stain of barbaric lynching from the banners of a free and orderly representative democracy."	Antilynching bill passed the House January 28, 1922, and has been favorably reported in the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

"It is needless to call your attention to the unfinished business inherited from the preceding Congress."	All appropriation bills which had not been completed by the Senate in the preceding Congress were passed.

> The appropriations for 1922 were $4,065,000,000 and the estimates were $5,600,000,000, showing an approximate reduction of $1,600,000,000. These estimates were submitted by a Democratic administration and the appropriations were made by a Republican Congress.

REDUCTIONS OF ARMAMENT.

"The Government is in accord with the wish to eliminate the burdens of heavy armament."	Large reductions were made in the cutting of War and Navy Departments' appropriations.

PEACE WITH THE WORLD.

"Nearly two and a half years ago the World War came to an end, and yet we find ourselves today in the technical state of war, though actually at peace."	Peace resolution was early enacted. Public Resolution No. 8, approved July 2, 1921.

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION.

"The after-war distresses of two great and fundamental activities have been riveting the anxious attention of the country. One is the restoration of agriculture, the other is the distress of our railway transportation system."	Railroad funding bill has passed the House and has been reported in the Senate. A great variety of bills have been introduced to aid the agricultural situation. A general summary follows:

> A Republican Congress passed an emergency tariff bill in an attempt to stem the deluge of imports. Wool had become so cheap that it was substituted for cotton. One of the first acts of the new administration was to reenact the emergency tariff law and wool at once advanced.
> The Russian relief measure stimulated the upward trend of foreign and grain prices.
> The War Finance Corporation act was amended in order to extend credits to those marketing farm products.
> Another law increased the interest rate on farm loan bank bonds so as to make the sale of the bonds possible, but without advancing the rate to the farm borrower.
>
> A law diverting $25,000,000 from the Federal Treasury for additional working capital for the farm loan bank.
>
> A law amending the Federal reserve act so as to make provision for placing a "dirt" farmer on the Federal Reserve Board.
> The packers and stockyards act prohibits packers from engaging in unfair practices, from giving preferences, from engaging in any act in restraint of trade, or from creating a monopoly.
> The futures trading act outlaws gambling in farm products on the stock exchange.
> The "filled milk" act makes unlawful the sale of milk substitutes.
> The good roads bill made $75,000,000 available for road construction work, with special provision for farm-to-market highways.
>
> A law taking farmers' cooperative marketing organizations from the antitrust provisions of the present law. The bill will enable the farmers through their own organizations to market their produce, stabilize the market, and guarantee a fair price.

PEACE CONFERENCE.

Peace conference for the limitation of armaments.	Congress requested the President to call such a conference.

The results of that conference were so well set forth by my colleague, Hon. S. D. FESS, that I quote:

> There in the Capital of the Republic sat for three months representatives of the powers of the world. One by one these questions were proposed, discussed, and voted on, with our Government calling the roll of the world. We note every proposal submitted and voted upon in the plenary conferences had been submitted by some one of the American delegation. Every proposal voted upon was adopted. But the most significant of all facts is that not a single proposal received a single adverse vote from any nation. Here, by unanimous agreement, armament on the sea is limited, rivalry on the sea is ended, use of poisonous gas is abolished, the submarine is limited under international law; the magna charta of China is guaranteed; the "open door," for which we have ever contended, agreed upon; our rights in the Pacific admitted; treaty provision for adjustment of Pacific problems arbitrated; Shantung restored to China; Anglo-Japanese alliance canceled; all in all an achievement pronounced by European opinion, no less than Lloyd-George and Paul Hymans, a recent president of the League of Nations, as the greatest work for world peace in the history of the world. It was all done without show or noise. It is with pardonable pride that out of this caldron of almost universal warfare, with every relation more or less strained by both actual war and the unhappy confusion to follow after the war, this Nation has emerged with its sovereignty untouched, its independence intact, its rights all conserved, its disputes generally composed, its rivalries allayed, its friendships with all nations strengthened, its moral leadership universally conceded, the wrongs of China corrected, and the way opened for composure in the Orient. I challenge the record to produce a greater achievement in the history of diplomacy.

FUNDING OF WAR DEBTS.

"There is pending a grant of authority to the administrative branch of the Government for the funding and settlement of our vast foreign loans growing out of our grant of war credits."	Refunding Law No. 139, approved February 9, 1922, and the commission is now negotiating with the debtor nations with a view toward settlement of this difficult problem of world finance.

HOME MAKING.

"Home making is one of the greater benefits which government can bestow. Measures are pending embodying the sound policy to which we may well adhere."

Public Resolution No. 36, approved January 21, 1922, provides for preference rights of homestead entries for 90 days to ex-service men. Other homestead legislation enacted.

RUSSIAN RELIEF.

"Unreservedly I recommend the appropriation necessary to supply the American Relief Administration with funds for Russian relief."

Russian relief, Public Law No. 117, approved December 22, 1921, providing for grain for food and also seed for planting.

TO MAKE ALL BONDS TAXABLE.

"Many of us belong to that school of thought which is hesitant about altering the fundamental law. I think our tax problems, the tendency of wealth to seek nontaxable investment, and the menacing increase of public debt, Federal, State, and municipal—all justify a proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds."

A number of joint resolutions proposing such an amendment have been introduced in this Congress and have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which committee has favorably reported on House Joint Resolution 314 with a view of carrying out this recommendation.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Report on St. Lawrence River.

Referred to the committee and is being considered.

MERCHANT MARINE.

"The proposed aid of the Government to its merchant marine is to have its chief source in the duties collected on imports. I propose that we shall collect all import duties, without discrimination as between American and foreign bottoms, and apply the heretofore proposed reduction to create a fund for the Government's aid to our merchant marine."

The message of the President containing these proposals was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. A bill for the purpose was soon introduced and referred to this committee, which reported it favorably to the House, and is now on the calendar.

One of the most important measures which has been considered by a House committee, and which now awaits action by the House, is the shipping bill. In the early history of the Republic we were the possessors of as fine a merchant fleet as sailed the seas, and our brigs and clipper ships carried our flag to the ends of the earth. At one time and another legislation to aid in the reestablishment of a first-class American merchant marine has occupied the attention of the Congress, but always the question was, "What shall we do to build and equip a merchant fleet?" The question now before us is an entirely different one. It is, "What shall we do with the fleet we have already builded at a cost of three and a half billions of the people's money?" Shall that vast expenditure be a total loss or shall we out of it, and through it, reestablish American shipping on a generous scale and restore our merchant flag to its rightful place in the shipping business of the seven seas? A measure aimed to accomplish this highly useful and patriotic purpose has been reported, and in the no distant future it will be our duty, as Representatives of the American people, to give earnest and unbiased consideration to the solution of the problems which our war-built ships and our national need for shipping present to us.

TO CELEBRATE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

"It seems appropriate to call the attention of Congress to the fact that July 4, 1926, will mark the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. I am sure the Congress will agree that such an epochal event, which has meant so much to our own Republic and has provided such a stimulating example to liberty-loving peoples throughout the world, should have fitting commemoration."

This suggestion met the hearty approval of Congress, and a joint resolution looking to such a celebration at Philadelphia was enacted. Public Resolution No. 69, approved August 29, 1922.

FUEL FACT-FINDING COMMISSION.

"I am asking at your hands the authority to create a commission to make a searching investigation into the coal industry, with provision for its lawful activities and the bestowal of authority to reveal every phase of coal production, sale, and distribution. I am speaking on behalf of the mine workers, mine operators, and the American public. It will bring protection to all and point the way to continuity of production and the better economic functioning of the industry in the future."

Such a commission to consist of seven members and clothed with authority, as suggested by the President, has been provided. The commission is to report promptly, and it is believed that the information which it secures and presents in its report will be most helpful and useful in the consideration of the many questions and problems which require study and solution in connection with the industry, in the interest of those engaged in it and of the general public, which has so lively an interest in the matter of fuel supply. (Some of us supported an amendment requiring the appointment of coal operators and coal miners on this commission.) Public Law No. 347, approved September 22, 1922.

FEDERAL COAL DISTRIBUTION.

"If it may have your approval, I recommend immediate provision for a temporary national coal agency, with needed capital to purchase, sell, and distribute coal which is carried in interstate shipment. I do not mean that all interstate coal shall be handled by such a Federal organization; perhaps none will be necessary; but it will restore its capital to the Public Treasury and will be the instrumentality of guarding to the public interest where private conscience is insensible to a public need."

The Congress has promptly responded and placed upon the statute books legislation which it is believed will go far toward preventing the exorbitant prices for coal which have been threatened. The Government has no authority to directly fix prices, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has authority to provide for the allotment and allocation of cars and the legislation which has been enacted provides for a Fuel Director, whose duty it shall be to study conditions and make recommendations to the Interstate Commerce Commission with regard to car allotments and allocations, with a view to distributing coal in accordance with immediate needs and of discouraging the charging of exorbitant prices by withholding car allotments. After all, it will be found that the supply of coal cars and transportation will be the controlling element in price fixing.

Public Law No. 348, approved September 22, 1922.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

Congress passed 592 bills. All were signed by the President except five. Four of those were not approved because the President thought the existing laws were sufficient. The adjusted-compensation veto was the only one disclosing any substantial difference between the President and the Congress. It is evident that the executive and legislative branches are in substantial and hearty accord. It is confidently believed that an adjusted compensation bill will be passed soon that will meet the approval of the President. The difference is not in principle but rather in the method of financing.

Not only has the Congress been working continually along the lines recommended by the President, but the President has acceded to all the requests of Congress.

It will be seen that the executive and legislative branches have been in accord in practically all matters legislative. It might be attempted to argue that these two branches are at variance on the matter of adjusted compensation for the soldiers. Both the President and Congress agree as to the purposes, but the President maintains that he can not give his approval to such compensation until the means of payment is provided.

In addressing a joint session of Congress, the President said in part:

Ours is a popular government through political parties. We divide along political lines, and I would ever have it so.

Continuing, the President said:

Granting that we are fundamentally a representative popular Government with political parties the governing agencies, I believe the political party in power should assume responsibility, determine upon policies in the conference which supplements conventions and election campaigns, and then strive for achievement through adherence to the accepted policy.

It has been demonstrated in our form of government that the executive branch and both Houses of Congress should be of the same political faith.

The Republicans in Congress have policies and a program and are working toward the accomplishment of those policies and that program. The only policies the Democrats can lay claim to is that of persistent and carping criticism. It is the prerogative of the minority to criticize. Both having made good in their respective functions, it will no doubt seem wise to the electorate to continue the Republican majority and the Democratic minority.

"Uncle JOE" CANNON, who is voluntarily retiring from political life after having served 50 years in the Congress, said:

The problems before this Congress have been as hard as any that I have encountered in my half century in legislation. I marvel how well we have been able to solve them.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, it has been stated in the Senate in opposition to the tariff act signed by the President:

That before the tariff act had been in force a year the consumers would be "paying more taxes indirectly in the way of increased prices than were collected out of the people during the year of the World War, when this country was maintaining 4,000,000 men on foreign soil and had to finance not only itself but its allies." It will cost the American people from $3,000,000,000 to $3,500,000,000 at the start and double that amount at the end.

The man does not live who can with the slightest degree of accuracy determine in advance the cost to the American people justly attributable to any tariff act. Trade accommodates itself to such acts along the lines of least resistance, and unconscionable traders make undue prices because of it. All such statements are purely speculation and political buncombe. They are and can be no more than wide guesses. It is astonishing, to say the least, that gentlemen holding high, responsible positions will, speaking with the authority and impressiveness of that position, put out to the country such wild and unfounded declarations. The statement says that the people will be "paying more taxes indirectly in the way of increased prices" than three and one-half billion dollars, and probably double that amount. The taxes estimated to be indirectly collected by this bill do not exceed $400,000,000, certainly not more than $500,000,000.

The same prophetic authority has ever since the bill reached the Senate deluged the country with these inaccurate and indefensible statements. I challenge their accuracy and defy their author to prove the same. I challenge any man to give even approximate figures supporting this statement. The public interest and the high trust of a Member of the Congress of the United States demand fair and accurate statements, regardless of political effect, as to the effects of legislation. But conceding this wild guess, asserted as a truth, to be correct, to all true Americans it is an argument for rather than against the act. It assumes that the American people in the next year are going to have the money and will actually purchase goods affected by the dutiable provisions of the act to the value of more than three and one-half billion dollars. The argument implies that without the act these goods would be bought in foreign and not American markets, or, to the same effect, be expended here for foreign rather than domestic goods. Without the act, these three and one-half billion American dollars will be spent abroad or be expended here for goods made abroad; with the act, that money will be spent in our country for goods made or produced here by our labor. Every red-blooded American ought to applaud the act which compels so great an expenditure, or any considerable portion thereof, in our country for our productions rather than abroad or for foreign productions. It means our mills, our farms, and our labor will receive this money rather than foreign mills, foreign farms, and foreign labor. That vast sum, or a considerable part thereof, will be kept and expended at home for home products, and each and every American thereby will be enabled to pay the higher price for what he eats and wears. When our mills and farms are kept busy and our labor employed, they can afford to pay higher prices for what they consume. When not employed, they can not afford to pay any price whatsoever. If every factory hand in the East is working at high wages, he is buying the meats, flour, eggs, and fruits and wearing clothes produced by the farmer of the West. If the farmer and laborer of the West can sell his products to the laborer of the East, he has the money to pay higher prices for his clothes and everything he uses.

Under this act in order that the American public shall, as claimed, pay three and one-half billion dollars more for their wares American producers and laborers must produce many times that much more and be paid therefor higher profits and higher wages. It must be many times that much more, for certainly any amount of increase in costs made by any such act is only part of the value of the goods as sold. When paid higher profits and higher wages our producers and farmers will have better and higher markets for their produce and will be able to pay higher wages to their labor. In other words, the argument of the distinguished statesman is that this act will compel three and one-half billion dollars more of production in the United States, and that our people will be compelled to consume three and one-half billion dollars more in values of our products, because of shutting out foreign goods, and that there will be three and one-half billion dollars more expended among our people, rather than sent abroad, or expended here for foreign goods. God speed the day! Lincoln truthfully, in effect, said no nation can always buy without selling, and no nation can always sell without buying. But under the free-trade policy of the past nine years this Nation was rapidly drifting to a buying nation only. Imports from cheap producing countries were gradually but surely closing our factories and our mills and underselling our farms. How long could we thus exist, with our factories and mills closed and their labor thrown out of employment, with our farms sustaining themselves by increased mortgages, and with our importing and retailing interests alone profiting? It was but a question of how long our national wealth could be sent abroad to turn the wheels of foreign mills and feed and clothe foreign labor making huge profits in our markets. If this act turns the course of this stream of three and one-half billion dollars, or a considerable portion thereof, from the foreign mill, farm, and laborer to turn the wheels of our mills, speed the plows of our farms, and feed the mouths of our labor, as it will, it means prosperous and happy America and American labor. [Applause.]

There is not the slightest necessity that this bill should to any considerable extent increase costs to the American consumer. Already American prices are extraordinarily high. Already, as has been clearly shown by hundreds of exhibits made to the Senate and the House, foreign goods are selling in our markets at profits of from 100 to several thousand per cent. Three and four hundred per cent profit is a common thing. This bill simply calculates to divert at least a small part of those profits from the foreigner and his representative in this country to the United States Treasury.

From January 1 to December 31, 1921, the total imports into the United States were $2,509,025,403. From January 1 to July 31, 1922, foreign imports into this country were $1,671,535,975, or, at the same ratio, for the whole year, January 1 to December 31, 1922, $2,867,890,243. These figures are based on foreign wholesale selling prices. All know that these are ridiculously low. There has been shown the tremendous profits the American consumer pays over and above these invoice prices. One hundred per cent profit alone upon these imports for the current year would represent payment out of the pocket of the American public for foreign goods, to employ foreign mills and feed foreign labor, the vast sum of $5,735,780,486. The estimated benefit to the Government in duties on that vast amount of money paid out by the American people for foreign goods in 1922 would be but $423,131,448, or 7 per cent of the price realized therefor from the American consumer, and probably much less. On the exceptionally low profit estimated of 100 per cent on and above the invoice price the American consumer in 1922 will pay for foreign goods imported into the United States under the Underwood and Simmons law but 7 per cent; that is, foreign goods marketed at retail in the United States to the extent of at least $5,735,780,486 pay into our Treasury—and our manufacturers are protected therefrom—to the extent of 7 per cent only. In view of the tremendously high costs of labor and materials in the United States to-day, and the exceedingly low cost of the same in foreign countries, who can say that 7 per cent is a sufficient rate of duty to protect our industries and our labor; or, by the same figures, confining the estimate to the actual entered values alone, that 14.87 per cent, the rate actually collected for that period under the Underwood and Simmons bill, is sufficient for this protection?

Value of imports into the United States and the duties collected thereon.

Why should not the American people, already overburdened with taxes, require that the foreigner's profits contribute more thereto? Why should not the American manufacturer, farmer, and laborer share more in the production of this vast quantity and the tremendous values of our consumption?

This act reaches out to gather in more of the foreigner's outrageous profits in reduction of the taxes of our people. This act reaches out to divert some of the billions of our money from foreign channels in aid of American manufacturers and producers and labor, rather than the upbuilding of the foreign factory and aiding the foreign producer and feeding foreign labor. In view of present high prices and enormous profit in foreign goods sold in our markets there is not the slightest ground for an appreciable increase in retail prices in any goods foreign or domestic, and whoever so does increase prices will be a profiteer pure and simple. Any such unjustifiable acts should be met, not by a repeal of this American measure but by stringent laws making profiteering a crime and misrepresentation of the tariff increment in sales prices punishable as obtaining money under false pretenses.

The proponents of this act believe in American institutions, in American industry, in American labor, in American men and women, and by this present to the country a purely American act. To those who believe in flooding our markets with cheap foreign goods, closing our mills, throwing our labor out of employment, and mortgaging our farms, while the foreign mills run overtime, the foreign farm thrives, and foreign labor prospers this act is, as proclaimed by them, "infamous" and "outrageous," but to those who believe in American prosperity, in American institutions, and American labor this act is "salvation." [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a unanimous request that I be permitted to extend my remarks briefly in the RECORD on the legislation of the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the legislation of the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on a more or less personal matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, when the question of the President's veto of the bonus bill came up, I raised the point that, according to my recollection, the Constitution of the United States provided that we should proceed to vote without debate upon receipt of any veto message from the President. I admitted that I had not read the Constitution for a good many years and that I might be mistaken. I have investigated the matter and I find that I was mistaken. I used to serve occasionally in the Kentucky House of Representatives, and when I made the point yesterday, I had the Federal Constitution confused in my mind with the Kentucky constitution. I do not regret that I made the point, even though I was in error, because the developments show merely how much more progressive Kentucky is than the Federal Government. [Applause.] The fact that the previous question was immediately ordered, cutting off all debate, was an example of the practicability of the inhibition against debate on the President's veto, and which I think would be a decided benefit over the present practice.

Speaking of matters progressive, I am reminded that my attention has been called within the past day or so to a copy of a paper entitled "Labor," in which is a column headed "Political question box." In that question box I find—unless it is a fake inquiry, which frequently happens—that a constituent of mine at Hazard, Ky., requested the gentleman who answers these questions to print "some information as to the stand of JOHN W. LANGLEY, of Kentucky, on labor."

I take it for granted, if it was a genuine inquiry, that some enemy of mine submitted the inquiry. At the same time, he is my constituent and is entitled to ask the question. I insist, however, that the gentleman who answers it has no right to lie about it. I do not happen to know what distinguished person answers these question-box inquiries, but he saw fit to answer this particular inquiry as follows:

LANGLEY has been 100 per cent wrong on every progressive measure that has come before Congress in recent years.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, permit me to say in reply that the gentleman who answers these questions, whoever he is—and I do not happen to know his identity—is a 100 per cent liar. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen of the House, I was born and reared on a farm [Applause.] I worked on that farm—hoeing corn, plowing, and doing everything else that a farmer does—until I was nearly 21 years of age. Since that time I have been working in other lines of work, but I have always been a worker, and I have never been a loafer. I have never been accused by anybody of being a fool, so far as I have been advised, and I think my associates in this great body, where I have served for 16 years, who have served with me long enough to know me, regard me as having at least ordinary common sense—certainly sense enough to know the purport of a bill. I want to say that never in my life have I voted for a measure which I thought was inimical to the best interests of the laboring people of this country; and anybody who says it, says something that he ought to know is not true, and which I believe he knows is not true. My venerable friend, Uncle JOE CANNON, who is sitting in front of me, has been through it and knows exactly what I mean.

I say that whoever this gentleman is—I care not how distinguished he is—when he, in these times of great national distress, when this country is laboring under profound industrial disturbances and labor difficulties, seeks to make the impression that the constituted authorities of this Government are not doing the best they can to meet the situation, and who with a flippant wave of his hand seeks to make the people of this country believe that a patriotic public servant, who has spent his life in endeavoring to help his country and to do what he could to relieve it of its difficulties and distresses and who has faithfully worked to that end guided by the information he possesses, attempts to mislead the distressed people of this country, is little less than a traitor to his country, and I should like to see him prosecuted as such. [Applause.] Having said this much, gentlemen of the House, I do not desire to detain you longer, and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD in order to prove that whoever this gentleman is, he is a 100 per cent liar, and that I am fully justified in every word that I have said in these brief remarks. I am proud of my record, and I want to say that these aspersions upon it are a deliberate attempt to mislead a distressed and disturbed public, which no patriotic American citizen would do. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, again I request that I may have unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in order to substantiate every word that I have said. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this session of Congress, which is now about to close, and the session which preceded it, have not been characterized by a course of courageous action on the part of the majority party. Most of the things the Republican Party promised to do have been left undone, and most of the things they did were better left undone.

The President of the United States, with great emphasis, in a message delivered in person to the House of Representatives in accordance with a custom revived by his predecessor, in effect announced that the paramount purpose of his administration was the permanent establishment of a great merchant marine, and in pursuance of that suggestion the so-called subsidy bill was prepared. So earnestly does the President favor this so-called subsidy bill it was announced he would reconvene Congress in extraordinary session if an adjournment were taken without considering the measure. We are about to adjourn, but there is a rumor which appears to have basis that we are to be called back about November 15. So fearful of the effect on the Nation is the majority party that it is not to be frankly announced now that this so-called adjournment is in effect a recess until November 15, when, as everyone expects, we will be reconvened to consider the President's pet measure, the subsidy bill.

Why not be frank about your purpose? The President is for the subsidy bill and this House will be called upon to vote that measure up or down before Christmas, probably before December 1. Perhaps Republican managers on this floor consider their burden already too heavy without the added burden of the subsidy bill.

The tariff bill, about which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has been talking, is nothing less than a legislative crime. The gentleman from Michigan talks about protecting this country against Europe, and it has only been a few months back when we were appropriating money to keep the people of Europe from starving. It is a matter of common knowledge that nearly all of the nations of Europe are already bankrupt. We have been appropriating money to feed them. Three-fourths of Europe is not dreaming of contesting the industrial supremacy of America, but the people of that three-fourths of Europe will be reasonably content if they can be asssured of enough to eat during the coming winter.

But this tariff bill must tax all the people of America in order to make the favored few prosperous and thereby equip them for a contest with peoples who are thinking mostly about something to eat. What an utter farce the tariff bill would be if it were not fraught with tragedy for so many people in America who must also earn and pay for their daily bread.

It has been customary after each census has been taken to pass a reapportionment bill. The reapportionment bill was drawn. It was reported to the House and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on July 29, 1921; but characterized by that same lack of courage the Republican majority is about to take an adjournment and the reapportionment bill has not been passed.

The Constitution provides that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, and so forth, and this report solemnly reminds the House that each and every Representative takes an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. For some reason or other it seems the majority are even afraid to pass any reapportionment bill, and in failing to act they are doing my State an injustice. We gain a Member under the proposed bill, whether the number of Members of the House is increased or whether it is not increased. You are depriving the old State from which I come of a Member to which that State is entitled under the Constitution. I suppose you are afraid that instead of having 10 Representatives, all Democrats, as we will have, we would have 11 Democrats. But however that may be, my State has gone forward by leaps and bounds in manufacturing, in population, and in agriculture. We are entitled to this additional Representative, and you are depriving our people of one Representative in the face of the plain provision of the Constitution.

I thought it not improper to call the attention of the House to this failure of the majority to legislate. It may be that you are proud of the record that you have made here during this session of Congress. If you will read the independent press of the country you must realize that you have lost the independent vote. The truth is that this session of Congress and the preceding session have been characterized by a lack of courage certainly without parallel during my length of service. You have been afraid to act. You are afraid to pass the apportionment bill for fear it will hurt your party. You are afraid to pass the subsidy bill for fear it will hurt your party, and you are going to adjourn admitting that you have failed to act in accordance with the Constitution, because you have decided it is bad party politics to pass a reapportionment act.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. And the corrupt practices act also.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. I agree with the gentleman that this Congress ought to pass a reapportionment bill, but the gentleman is criticizing the Republican Party for failing to pass that bill. Does the gentleman not know that the majority of the Democratic members of the Census Committee have opposed the reporting of the apportionment bill?

Mr. POU. I do not know how that is. Probably what the gentleman says is true; but I know that it is a time-honored principle disputed by no one that the political party which has in this Chamber a majority of 170—that is, your party—is responsible for action, and not our party. [Applause.] With an overwhelming majority of 2 to 1 you have been afraid to pass measures that you took oath to consider under the Constitution, because, as I charge, you are afraid it would hurt your party if you did.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Referring to what the gentleman from California said a while ago, and aside from the merits, is it not a fact that an apportionment bill was brought in here and considered on two occasions, and on both occasions recommitted?

Mr. POU. Yes; it was recommitted, as it should have been. The point I am making is that there has been no legislation of any kind in spite of custom and the plain mandate of the Constitution.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Did not the gentleman himself vote to recommit the bill?

Mr. POU. I think I did.

Mr. DOWELL. And the gentleman from California also voted to recommit the bill.

Mr. POU. I am not sure how he voted. However, that is beside the question. The bill reported should have been recommitted, because it increased the membership of the House. I would vote to recommit the same bill again, because I think the membership of this House is already too large in number. But you gentlemen boasted when you organized this House that responsibility for action was yours and that you were not going to shirk it, that you were going to march up to your duty as legislators, and I charge that you have not had the courage to do what you promised. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of how private claims are considered by Congress.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN GERMANY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago in casting my eyes over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday's proceedings I found an extension of remarks by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], one of the ablest and best beloved Members of this body. It seems that his remarks, as I have been able to run over them hurriedly, are made up of an interview that he gave to the administration court organ, the Washington Post, on September 15. I will read a few extracts from that interview. The Post is not only the court organ, but the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] is recognized as one of the ablest leaders of the Republican Party in this House. It is generally conceded that there is no man who has greater influence in the councils of the Republican Party of this House, although sometimes it is thought that our good friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] may have more influence, but I doubt it. I think they are on a par. I think it is neck and neck between those two gentlemen.

It seems that our friend the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] went to Europe. A great many people go to Europe for different reasons. He was discussing the situation in Germany. I want you to bear in mind my discussion of the gentleman's interview in the light of some remarks I made the other day, at which time the gentleman from Connecticut was put to the front to kind of smooth over some obvious facts to which I directed attention. So in this interview he says:

> The feeling of the German people toward America and Americans is gratifying and testifies to the high character of the service our representatives there have rendered and are now rendering. It is apparent the German people have reached the conclusion that America is, after all, about the best friend they have left. At any rate, they see that we have no ax to grind, desire no European territory, and are sincerely in earnest in our desire for real and lasting peace.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is true, and I think it is true—it ought to be true—I believe the German people are intelligent, and they ought to realize that we have no selfish motives. If that be true, why, in the name of common sense, continue to quarter our troops on the German people? If the German people feel that way, why is it necessary that we should have a military force over there? Well, the gentleman evidently anticipated that, so a little further along in this wonderful interview he talks about the value of the United States troops over there. He says:

> Another tremendous influence for good in bringing order out of the postwar chaos and reestablishing proper relations with Germany is our military representation, which since the war has been and now is occupying the key position of the Rhineland at Coblenz.

Of course, everybody knows that is the key position, and that the military forces absolutely dominate the key position of the Rhineland, the heart of the German people.

> Gen. Henry T. Allen, now commanding the small American force on the Rhine—

I am still reading from my friend's interview—> is one of the most efficient and useful diplomats in all Europe to-day. The number of officers and men under him is small, but their influence is great—out of all proportion to their numbers.

> They are in no real sense a military force, on account of their numbers, but they hold the balance of power in a very real sense and use it for the best interest of world peace.

Why, Mr. Speaker, you gentlemen howled yourselves hoarse in the last Congress, when you were getting ready for the 1920 campaign, about how Mr. Wilson had special representatives.

In this same interview the gentleman from Connecticut eulogizes his old colleague, our ambassador to Germany, Mr. Houghton, and yet in the next breath he says the real force, the real diplomatic representative of the United States is not the man who goes there with diplomatic credentials in civilian clothes, but that the real diplomatic representative of the United States in Germany is a general in uniform, with a military force occupying the key to the Rhine, the very heart of the German Empire. Is that the policy of the Republican Party, that you will have military diplomats; that the civilian representative of the United States shall be superseded by an Army officer? If everything is peaceful, if the German people recognize our pure motives, then why should we continue to quarter troops on them? But the gentleman from Connecticut seeks to defend their presence there by saying that the officer in command of them is not there as a military man but that he is there as a diplomat. Why, you told the people that if they would elect a Republican administration in the last campaign you would absolutely sever all connections from Europe and that we would not have any unofficial diplomatic representatives over there. Yet here you boast that you have got over there a military genius who is the controlling factor; that the military are the real governing force; that they are the stabilizing force; and that the sole object you have in keeping them there on the Rhine is to maintain peace in Europe and try to bring order out of chaos there. Yet in the last campaign you cussed out the Democratic Party because we took the necessary steps in connection with our allies in the signing of the armistice and in the writing of the peace treaty. You went out to the American people and misled them.

In certain sections of the country you attributed to us wrong motives for what we were doing and sought to arouse prejudice in the minds of the people from the Rhineland and the old home country. You did not tell the truth about it. You were not candid about it. When the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] pressed the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], he had to admit that the Democratic administration did not err; but you howled, and you promised, and your candidates promised that the quickest way to get all your soldiers out of Europe would be to elect a Republican Congress; that the President would convene an extraordinary session, and you would get them out just as soon as the peace resolution was passed. But two years have passed, and another election is coming on and still American soldiers keep their watch on the Rhine; and you seek to justify your failure to carry out that pledge to the American people by saying that the American forces are not over there as a military force, but that they are over there purely as diplomats, exerting their controlling influence in the affairs of Europe. And yet you boasted that you were going to get out of Europe. The truth of the business is that you have kept just two promises that you made in the last campaign. One is the promise you made to the profiteers that you would relieve them of taxation. You have done that. The other was that your President said, "I have seen the difficulty of Roosevelt and Wilson leading and directing Congress, and if you will elect me President I will play hands off and let a group of 'leading minds' in the Senate run the country"; and he has kept that promise, and that group of leading minds, in spite of the high position that they hold, have got the country into the mess which confronts you at this hour, which causes you gentlemen on the Republican side to wonder whether it is better for you to go home, whether it is better for you to have a recess, or whether it is better for you to have a special session.

I do not know, and the President does not know, because two groups are pulling at his coat tails, one on one side and one on the other, and it is a wonder that our poor President is not distracted. The quicker he finds out he is the titular leader of the Republican Party and takes charge of this disordered, wiggly-woggly Republican organization in Congress the better it will be for him, for his party, and for the country. [Applause.]

Their excuse for doing nothing is that the Democrats would not let them. Why, the gentleman from Iowa said to the gentleman from North Carolina awhile ago, "Didn't you vote against it?" The Republican excuse is that 130 Democrats in this House tied the hands of the 300 Republican Members and that you could not carry out your promises. That is your excuse for your impotence, that is your excuse for your helplessness. No wonder the country is disgusted and Republican newspapers and Republican Cabinet members criticize you.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Is that the way the gentleman's mind works?

Mr. WINGO. There is one thing about my mind, unlike the gentleman's mind, it works. [Laughter.] I do not know what State the gentleman is from, because his face is not familiar, though I recall seeing him wandering through the Hall a few times like an unhappy ghost. [Laughter.] My mind works; I have the courage of my convictions. When my party was in power we were able to do things; your excuse is that you can not do things because the Democrats will not let you; you say "they have hog tied us."

Mr. FAIRCHILD. But we have done the things.

Mr. WINGO. What have you done? You can not say. You have done practically nothing, and everything of value has been done by a few Republicans joining the Democrats in overriding the Republican leaders. The RECORD shows that a minority of Republicans joined the Democrats, and that is the only way the people have got relief in this Congress, except the profiteers. You Republicans did that alone. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, September 22, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SWING: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 12138. A bill for the relief of Frank A. Jahn; without amendment (Rept. No. 1252). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURTNESS: A bill (H. R. 12777) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 12778) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Mount Pleasant, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 12779) to assist disabled veterans of the World War in becoming established on the land; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 12780) granting extension of time for repayment of construction charges on the Uncompahgre reclamation project, Colorado; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 12781) giving civilian clerks, Signal Service, at large the same military status as Army field clerks; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 384) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12782) to correct the naval record of Thomas A. Mechin; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 12783) for the relief of Clarence C. Cadell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 12784) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Starr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12785) granting an increase of pension to Nancy A. King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOIGT: A bill (H. R. 12786) granting a pension to William Mennecke, jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 12787) granting a pension to Angie H. Skinner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6386. By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of field clerks, Signal Service at large American Expeditionary Forces, for legislation granting status to that organization; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6387. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Broadway Association (Inc.), New York City, N. Y., relative to the Post Office Department leasing buildings; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

6388. By Mr. VARE: Petition of Kiwanis Club, of Philadelphia, in opposition to the Government regulation of coal mines; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, September 22, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we look unto Thee this morning gratefully recognizing the goodness and mercy vouchsafed, and we do ask that in these days of anxiety Thy grace shall be made sufficient for each emergency and duty. When the moment comes for temporary separation, we ask for journeying mercies, we ask for blessings in each home here represented, and pray that abundance of blessing may always be had in every event and circumstance of life. And so remember all the interests of our country. Bless the President and his official family, and cause the healing hand to be still more and more manifest to his loved companion. We ask everything in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

INVESTIGATION OF CROP INSURANCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Acting under the provisions of Senate Resolution 341, to investigate the subject of crop insurance, adopted by the Senate on the 9th instant, the Chair appoints the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] as the committee to conduct the investigation.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; and that Mr. MADDEN, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they presented to the President of the United States enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On September 21, 1922:

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes; and

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920.

On September 22, 1922:

S. 3540. An act fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions;

S. 3620. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at or near Tilton, Lawrence County, Miss.; and

S. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution providing for an additional investigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DU PONT:

A bill (S. 4023) granting a pension to Jesse K. Baylis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4024) granting military status to field clerks, Signal Service at large, American Expeditionary Forces (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 11, 12, 14, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 16, 17, 19, and 20; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "two assistant registrars at $5,000 per annum each" and insert in lieu thereof "assistant registrar at $5,000 per annum," and in line 15, strike out "$33,125" and insert in lieu thereof "$29,375"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the words "and directed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
CHAS. CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
PATRICK H. KELLEY,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, there was some confusion in the Chamber, and I could not distinctly hear the reading of the conference report; but, if I heard it correctly, the bill as it came from the House restricted the registrars to two and the salaries to $5,000, and as agreed on the report places no restriction on the number. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if that is correct?

Mr. WARREN. I could not hear the Senator. I will ask him to please repeat his question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. How many registrars can be appointed under this report?

Mr. WARREN. One principal registrar and two additional registrars were provided for as the bill was presented, and the conference report provides for one principal registrar at $7,500 and an assistant at $5,000. It was proposed that the salary be $10,000 for the principal registrar and $5,000 each for two assistants, but as it is now the bill provides for one at $7,500 and one at $5,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, may I inquire of him what these registrars are for? I do not know that I quite understand what they are. There are registrars under the farm loan act and other registrars.

Mr. WARREN. The China trade bill, which was recently passed, provides for Americans and others doing business in China, and it is expected that large fees will be derived from those who are granted licenses to engage in business. It is expected more than to pay for itself; but it is new in the sense that we are providing for the registrar, the assistant registrar, two clerks at $2,500 each, one clerk at $2,000, and one at a smaller salary. The entire expense is about $30,000 a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. In what department will it come?

Mr. WARREN. It will perhaps be considered as in the Department of State, but the bill that was passed was reported from the Judiciary Committee, and now we have this call from the Budget Bureau, through the President, under the law. It is to carry out the provisions of a law already passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 71), as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of September, 1922, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am in favor of this concurrent resolution, and I shall occupy the time of the Senate only about two minutes.

Mr. WARREN. I hardly think the matter is debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. This concurrent resolution is debatable, as I understand. I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for three minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this Congress closes in a shroud of disappointment. Its failure to solve vital and pressing problems is pathetic. Democrats are not hilarious, because they have the interest of the country at heart. It is a case of disappointment, sympathy, and chagrin more than delight. The Congress ends with a record of increased taxes on the already burdened masses. It ends with increased costs of living to the consumers. It ends with a failure to carry out pledges to the valiant soldiers of the late war. It ends with reorganization and efficiency in Government untouched. It ends with stronger guaranties and broader freedom to the protected interests to extort in greater degree higher prices to enslave and rob the many. It ends with the assurance to the laboring man that the Republican Party will continue to favor the employer against him, and to disregard his every interest with respect to reasonable hours, fair wages, and humane consideration. It ends in an orgy of extravagance and a reckless disregard of economy. It ends with an utter repudiation of civil service and preferential rights to the heroes of the late war. It ends as the most reactionary Congress since the time of Aldrich, and the most subservient to Executive dictation since the days of Roosevelt. It has proven itself to be spineless, leaderless, without courage, program, or purpose. It adjourns in a blaze of broken promises, with a silent and disconsolate procession of mourners returning to their respective constituents with their morale broken, their lines divided, and their hopes dissipated. A sad reception awaits you—an insurmountable task of explanation confronts you.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as in open executive session, I ask permission to report certain nominations favorably.

While we were in executive session a short time ago I was unable to poll the Committee on Foreign Relations, the secretary of which committee has just handed me about 30 or 40 nominations which are promotions in the diplomatic service. Since that time I have polled the committee, and a majority favor reporting them favorably. There are five of them to which the Senator from Mississippi has noted an objection, and I will not ask for the present consideration of those, but ask that they may go to the executive calendar, and that the others may be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from North Dakota specify those who are not included in the request?

Mr. McCUMBER. They are indicated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota if these nominations met the approval of the Democratic members of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. A majority of the entire committee have approved them, with the exception of the fact that the Senator from Mississippi objected to five of them, and I will ask that they simply go to the calendar. If there is objection to any of the others they will take the same course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nominations referred to will be placed on the executive calendar. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota that the nominations to which there is no objection shall be considered? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will report the nominations.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The following-named person for promotion in the Diplomatic Service of the United States:

Ray Atherton, of Illinois, from secretary of embassy or legation of class 3 to secretary of embassy or legation of class 2.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The following-named person for promotion in the Diplomatic Service of the United States:

Herschel V. Johnson, of North Carolina, from secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 to secretary of embassy or legation of class 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The following-named person for promotion in the Diplomatic Service of the United States:

Copley Amory, jr., of New Hampshire, from secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 to secretary of embassy or legation of class 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Leon H. Ellis, of Spokane, Wash., to be secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Laurence H. Norton, of Cleveland, Ohio, to be secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Gerhard Gade, of Chicago, Ill., to be secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

John Harrison Gray, of Syracuse, N. Y., to be secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

John Sterrett Gittings, jr., of Baltimore, Md., to be secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

The following-named person for promotion in the Diplomatic Service of the United States:

Orme Wilson, jr., of New York, from secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 to secretary of embassy or legation of class 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be confirmed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President will be notified.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration, as in open executive session, of several nominations of postmasters in California which were delayed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations will be considered as in open executive session. The Secretary will read the nominations.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

George M. Russell to be postmaster at Beverly Hills, Calif., in place of G. M. Russell. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Norman F. Densmore to be postmaster at Laton, Calif., in place of A. G. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Charles M. Smith to be postmaster at Lomita, Calif. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

Charles W. Reinking to be postmaster at Point Arena, Calif., in place of Charles Reinking. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1922.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 382, authorizing the payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 355), and it was considered by unainmous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore, to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to notify the President of the United States that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CURTIS and Mr. UNDERWOOD members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

YEA-AND-NAY VOTES ON TARIFF BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 356), which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and is hereby, authorized to expend not to exceed $500, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, for the preparation of the yea-and-nay votes in the Senate, with suitable index, on H. R. 7456, the tariff bill and amendments thereto; that said compilation be printed as a Senate document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair refers the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the foregoing resolution favorably without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PENINSULA OF PRESQUE ISLE, ERIE, PA.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I report back favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 10144) conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I object, until somebody else has a chance to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I beg to make in one sentence the statement that when a vote was reached on the question as to whether the veto of the President of the soldiers' bonus bill should be overridden, I was struggling between life and death with asthma, and had no chance to arrange a pair or to vote. Had I been present, I would have voted to override that veto.

LIZZIE ASKELI—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3034) for the relief of Lizzie Askeli, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
PARK TRAMMELL,
F. R. GOODING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. On September 11 the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] submitted a resolution reciting certain allegations and reports with reference to the conduct of the Shipping Board. Those were very serious suggestions, and the resolution was printed in the RECORD. I have a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board answering the statements in the resolution very fully and completely. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the Senator from Utah may be printed in the RECORD, and in connection with it the answer of the chairman of the Shipping Board.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Resolution 348.

Whereas it is alleged that the chairman of the Shipping Board has announced in the newspapers that the board intends, in the event that the impending ship subsidy bill be enacted into law, to advance to private parties $25,000,000 to finance the construction of a ship of 70,000 tons burden, and that the board desired to expend at least $400,000,000 of public moneys to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties; and

Whereas it is reported that officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board, under the guise of hearings and otherwise, are carrying on a propaganda in favor of the ship subsidy bill, and are spending large amounts of public moneys in various ways in the furtherance of such propaganda: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the chairman of the Shipping Board be required and directed to report to the Senate whether or not the board intends to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties, and, if so, to report to the Senate the details of such plan and the money it intends to advance for such purpose, and, further, to report the amount of any and all moneys that have or are being expended for newspaper articles in advertising, traveling expenses, hearings, lectures, addresses, or other means of propaganda to promote the passage of said ship subsidy bill, together with a statement of the activities of the officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board with respect thereto.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, September 13, 1922.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR JONES: There has just come to my desk a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 12, wherein, on page 12392, is printed a resolution introduced by Senator KING, of Utah, relating to the Shipping Board, followed by some remarks by the Senator.

Permit me to take the liberty of giving you the answers to the questions propounded in the resolution, with the request that when Senator KING discusses same further on the floor you may there and then, in behalf of the Shipping Board, reply in full to his resolution.

First, in the preamble, Senator KING says:

"Whereas it is alleged that the chairman of the Shipping Board has announced in the newspapers that the board intends, in the event that the impending ship subsidy bill be enacted into law, to advance to private parties $25,000,000 to finance the construction of a ship of 70,000 tons burden, and that the board desired to expend at least $400,000,000 of public moneys to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties."

Let me say that I never made any statement that the Shipping Board intended to advance private parties $25,000,000 for the construction of a ship, nor did I ever make any statement that anyone could, in good faith, construe to mean any such thing. Only a complete perversion of what I did say could possibly remotely give ground for any such report as has evidently reached the Senator from Utah.

In reply to inquiries from newspaper men as to whether the Shipping Board had any requests for loans for construction purposes, I stated that we had no formal requests, but that in an informal way a new company that was being projected on paper (but for whose ultimate formation I could in nowise stand guarantor) had asked whether they could borrow as much as $25,000,000, providing they put $45,000,000 of their own money into building new ships, of which two would be 70,000-ton ships; in other words, if out of the construction-loan fund which the Shipping Board is authorized by law to create, the Shipping Board was prepared to lend $25,000,000 for which we would get as security $70,000,000 worth of ships, two of which would be the mightiest ships in the world, and which two ships would do much to balance America's sadly unbalanced merchant marine.

Of course, I could make no reply to the tentative question. I explained to the persons making the informal inquiry that they would have to formally organize their company, pay in their money, submit the definite plans of the ships, and at such time the matter would be taken up with the entire Shipping Board for consideration.

I am happy to state to you, though, that I was much impressed by the stability of the people who made the tentative inquiry, and feel that they are serious in their desires to build ships that will be crown jewels in our merchant marine. Whether or no they will proceed as they stated, will depend on the fate of the pending bill to aid merchant shipping, but in the interim they are having plans drawn for their ships.

The most encouraging moment in the history of America's merchant marine will be that moment when private parties actually subscribe $45,000,000 of their own money to put into $70,000,000 worth of ships, and the Government will receive full security for its advance. The ships we own were built with immense waste and at immense loss to the Government. Ships built under the loan fund will prove to be a great national asset and will never cost the Government one cent out of its Treasury.

Thus you will see that whoever informed Senator KING that the board "intends, in the event that the impending ship subsidy bill be enacted into law, to advance to private parties $25,000,000 to finance the construction of a ship of 70,000 tons burden," utterly misstated the facts.

As to the second part of the preamble, "that the board desired to expend at least $400,000,000 of public moneys to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties," the first we ever heard of this is in the resolution, and whoever brought that information to Senator KING was laboring under a summer hallucination. I only wish that there were such a demand for money for ships under the American flag; I would feel much more secure for the prosperity and safety of our common country; but I have not much hope, during my lifetime, to see any such fortunate condition exist.

The resolution further reads:

"Whereas it is reported that officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board, under the guise of hearings and otherwise, are carrying on a propaganda in favor of the ship subsidy bill and are spending large amounts of public moneys in various ways in the furtherance of such propaganda: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the chairman of the Shipping Board be required and directed to report to the Senate whether or not the board intends to finance the construction of additional ships by private parties; and if so, to report to the Senate the details of such plan and the money it intends to advance for such purpose; and further to report the amount of any and all moneys that have or are being expended for newspaper articles, in advertising, traveling expenses, hearings, lectures, addresses, or other means of propaganda to promote the passage of said ship subsidy bill, together with a statement of the activities of the officials, agents, and employees of the Shipping Board with respect thereto."

I know nothing of any sums in contemplation for the financing of construction of additional ships. The incident narrated above does not cover contemplated advances by the board, for, as I explained, it was merely a tentative proposal. The board can only contemplate what it will do when the proposal becomes a definite one. However, the present law provides that the Shipping Board may put aside $25,000,000 a year out of its liquidation as a loan fund for construction for each year over a period of five years. The new proposed law contemplates that the Shipping Board may, as quickly as possible, put $125,000,000 into the construction loan fund out of liquidation.

I am sorry to state that no application from anyone has been made for any loan out of our construction loan fund, though at the present moment we have $25,000,000 in that fund which was recovered for that purpose from last year's liquidation. It is most discouraging that we have no such application, for it is utterly essential to the preservation of the art of shipbuilding in our country that American shipyards be stimulated, particularly at this time when happily our naval building is being restricted. It is for this reason among others that I so ardently hope the pending bill for aid to American merchant shipping will pass quickly at the coming session, because it is the hope and belief of the board that if that bill does pass we will get applications for loans from the construction loan fund and that there will as a result be constructed ships of types which we, with all our ships, are now so sadly lacking, that will add to America's enrichment in time of peace and to America's security in time of war. Without the passage of that bill I have no hope that any great sum, unfortunately for America, will ever be asked for out of the construction loan fund. I trust I am wrong.

Specifically answering the last part of the resolution, I want to state unequivocally that the board has never spent one cent of money "for newspaper articles, in advertising, traveling expenses, hearings, lectures, addresses, or other means of propaganda to promote the passage of said ship subsidy bill."

For my part, speaking personally, I have only made two addresses on the ship subsidy bill, both in the city of Washington. One was an extemporaneous address before the American Merchant Marine Association; the other was an address that took, perhaps, 20 minutes to deliver, before the United States Chamber of Commerce. There was no expense entailed to the Government thereby. I have had innumerable requests to make addresses on the ship subsidy; my only regret is that my duties in management of the operations of the ships of the emergency fleet demand my being in Washington, for I would happily, had I the time to spare from ships' operations, tour the country to speak on aid to American shipping, believing and knowing that all the public needs is honest enlightenment on the subject for it to be overwhelmingly in its demand for the passage of the bill. I only regret, so far as I am concerned, that Senator KING is completely in error.

I know of no members of the board who have traveled for the purpose of making propaganda for the pending measure. On a few occasions—maybe a dozen—one or two members of the board have spoken in communities which asked us to address them on the subject of the American merchant marine. Of course, we responded to such invitations, for the Shipping Board itself is operating 400 American-flag ships competing with ships of foreign flags whose owners naturally are doing their utmost to prove the superiority of their service over American-flag ships. As good business, it is a fine opportunity when chambers of commerce and like bodies ask board members to address them on American shipping, for by that opportunity to speak to the business men we get a chance to project the advantages of shipping on American bottoms, and every ton of cargo we can add to American bottoms builds up the American merchant marine and diminishes the losses of the Shipping Board.

Of course, when discussing the subject it would be an eloquent omission if the speaker failed to make any reference to the pending legislation, for it would appear that such speaker, being a member of the Shipping Board, was not in harmony with the pending bill, which the administration believes will insure a permanent American merchant marine and lead the Government out of its shipping losses, whereas the Shipping Board (four Republicans and three Democrats) are unanimous in the general principles connected with the legislation.

It would be unfair to the foes of the bill as well as its friends for the members, when speaking to solicit cargoes for the ships we are operating, to be silent on the pending legislation. I say unfair to the foes of the bill, because it would appear as if, through insinuated intimidation, the members feared to discuss that which on occasion they must obviously discuss.

There have been two men—not members of the board—whose passion is the establishment of an American merchant marine, who have gone about, of their own volition, soliciting cargoes for the Shipping Board. To the extent of a few hundred dollars the Shipping Board has paid their expenses, but all within the legal per diem, and it has been the cheapest cargo solicitation we could get. By the expenditure of a few hundred dollars through these men who so thoroughly understand the subject and who so patriotically contribute their time, we have created in one community after another a desire to ship in American bottoms. I have always gone out of my way to caution these men that they must not, while soliciting business at Government traveling expense, get into any controversy as to pending legislation, save as they might be forced into an informal discussion.

Therefore, you see, some one with pernicious intent has purposely misguided Senator KING and handed him information maliciously false without the remotest basis in fact. I am sure no Senator will be happier than Senator KING to have the record cleared of this misinformation; and I rely on Senator KING'S sense of justice, of which I am very certain, to expose the sinister forces that came to him with these untruths.

In his remarks Senator KING says:

"As Senators know, many ships were sold by the Shipping Board a few years ago at war-level prices, or slightly below such levels. Part payment was made by the purchasers, who in most instances have endeavored to operate the ships for the purpose of developing an American merchant marine. With the great slump in world prices for ships, and with the great shrinkage in ocean traffic, they have encountered most serious difficulties. It will be impossible for them to pay for the ships according to the contracts entered into.

"In my opinion, it is not only imprudent and unwise but unjust for the Shipping Board to attempt to enforce these contracts. They should be rewritten and the purchase price scaled down and fair and just terms offered to the purchasers. It is of no benefit to the Government to destroy these contracts and deprive the purchasers of the ships, and then sell them for from $25 to $30 per ton to some syndicate which may be formed for the purpose of controlling or attempting to control our merchant marine."

It is with the greatest pleasure that I read such a generous approval of the Shipping Board's course from so ardent an opponent generally of its policies as is Senator KING. I have never anywhere seen so well stated the policy of the board as in the opinion Senator KING expresses. The board feels, with Senator KING, that "it will be impossible for them"—most of those purchasers—"to pay for the ships according to the contracts entered into"; and that "it is not only imprudent and unwise but unjust for the Shipping Board to attempt to enforce these contracts. They should be rewritten and the purchase price scaled down, and fair and just terms offered to the purchasers." That is exactly what the Shipping Board has done in every instance.

If Senator KING desires to meet with me at any time, I will gladly give him the detailed information, and he will quickly become convinced that by no possible turn of mind could anyone but say that the Shipping Board had to the fullest extent and to the last degree adopted as its policy in connection with pioneer purchasers just that which the Senator voices and for the very reasons that the Senator projects. On the subject of pioneer purchasers Senator KING seems to be well informed, and his correct information there leads him into full concurrence with the board's action.

Senator KING, in his remarks on his resolution, says:

"Mr. Lasker, as we all know, is engaged in the advertising business, and it would seem as though he has employed many avenues to exploit his views concerning the ship subsidy bill and to carry on a nation-wide campaign in behalf of the bill which, it is understood, he helped to frame and then 'wished' on the present administration."

I wish to emphatically deny that I have employed any avenue to exploit the shipping bill save to write articles on the subject for many important newspapers who requested that courtesy from me; and I would have been unmindful of my duty as a public official had I refused so to do. I want to take this occasion to express my keen disappointment that those interested in American shipping have done but little to enlighten the public on the pending legislation.

In his remarks Senator KING says that he has "been advised that some members of the board who have been conducting hearings under one particular section of the act have been quite interested in advocating the ship subsidy plan and have obtained testimony in support of that view."

I personally have not been a member of the one committee that has been conducting hearings around the country. That committee consists of such distinguished men as Senator CHAMBERLAIN, Admiral Benson, and Mr. Thompson on the Atlantic and Gulf hearings, and Senator CHAMBERLAIN, Admiral Benson, and Mr. Lissner on the Pacific coast hearings. I know of no such incident to which Senator KING refers; I have never heard of anything that could come within that purview; but it is perfectly obvious to me and understandable that in the course of those hearings the subject of the pending legislation might incidentally arise in connection with what effect it would have on the matters being investigated if enacted into law.

In certain ports, after the hearings adjourned, luncheons or dinners were given by leading men of the community to the commissioners who had been holding the hearings. This is the usual custom, as everyone knows, when responsible officials make official visits for any purpose. Particularly would it be so where members of the Shipping Board make their first visit to interested ports, for the actions of few Government agencies are as important to those ports as those of the Shipping Board, and naturally the citizens of the community desire opportunity informally to put their views and claims before the Shipping Board; it would be an unforgivable act of discourtesy for the members of the board to refuse such invitations.

The purpose for which the committee met was to hold hearings in connection with section 28 of the existing merchant marine act, as the law provides, and what was said and done at these hearings are matters of stenographic record and can not be changed. The board will be glad to submit them to Senator KING or any other Member of Congress, for these records will prove that Senator KING has been grossly misinformed.

At the informal luncheons or dinners, when members of the Shipping Board were asked to speak on the future of American shipping, it was natural that every question connected with the merchant marine should be discussed, whether those questions covered existing law or contemplated law. Senator Chamberlain informs me that, as a matter of fact, the subject matter of the addresses that the board members made was usually suggested by the local committees. It is unthinkable that, when members of the Shipping Board, after they have attended to their official duties, meet in the manner indicated with leaders of ports, such citizens would not ask their views on the pending legislation, which is of the first importance to these respective ports. When shipping men meet or shipping subjects are discussed, the pending legislation being of first importance to American shipping, it would be impossible and un-American for it to be purposely excluded from discussion. I can not believe that the opponents of the measure fear proper light being thrown on same; they should welcome whenever, in good taste and in right spirit and under right circumstances, the matter is brought up.

I do not answer Senator KING'S remarks on the continuation of the M. O. 4 contracts, for that has been thoroughly and voluminously covered in hearings before the various Appropriation Committees and also before the joint hearings of the Senate and House committees on the merchant marine.

I wish Senator KING would give us opportunity to fully inform him on all other subjects, for I am sure the same good logic that leads him to agree with us in the major matter of the pioneer purchasers, on which he is informed, would lead him to agree with us on the general policies which we have adopted.

I should be very grateful to you if, when the matter is brought before the Senate, in fairness not so much to the board but to the American merchant marine, you would read into the RECORD this reply, for only in this way can the facts be brought before the country.

With high esteem, I am, sincerely yours,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

RELIEF OF DISABLED VETERANS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, with amendments, House bill 8062 increasing the allowance under the war risk insurance act to totally disabled, blind, legless, or armless veterans, or those in constant need of the attendance of nurses; and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the title of the bill for information.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New York reports favorably from the Committee on Finance House bill 8062, an act amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is meritorious. I am doubtful, however, whether the limitation fixed on the amount to be paid attendants will enable the beneficiaries to secure the services of attendants. I wonder if the committee looked into the question as to whether an attendant could be procured for $20 a month.

Mr. CALDER. In reply to the Senator's statement, I may say that there are at this date 336 people each receiving an allowance of $20 a month for the employment of an attendant. We increased the amount to $50 a month under the terms of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The object of the bill is to increase the present allowance from $20 to $50?

Mr. CALDER. Yes. It affects only 336 people.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am in sympathy with the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, in line 7, to strike out "$50" and insert "$20," and at the end of the bill, after the word "reasonable," before the period, to insert a comma and the following:

And if the disabled person is blind, legless, or armless and is in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(5) If the disabled person is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $20 per month, as the director may deem reasonable, and if the disabled person is blind, legless, or armless and is in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable."

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me ask the Senator from New York a further question. As the bill was read, it appears in the first instance that the amount paid an attendant is $20, but if the person to be attended is blind the amount may be increased to $50.

Mr. CALDER. If he is blind, legless, or armless.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the way I understood the reading of the bill when it was first read. How does the Senator expect an attendant to be procured for $20 a month as provided in the first part of the measure?

Mr. CALDER. When the bill first came to the Senate from the House it provided that every veteran who was helpless and needed an attendant should have the allowance for the attendant increased from $20 to $50. Upon inquiry, the committee discovered that there are about 300 of the 336 who are legless, armless, or blind. Some thirty and odd have some other disability. Personally I believe we should have given $50 to all those who need attendants, but the committee determined that we should confine the increase from $20 to $50 to those only who are blind, legless, or armless. Those who are paralyzed or otherwise disabled will not get the increase.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the way I understand the reading in the first instance, and my question is now repeated. Can those persons who require attendants secure them for $20 a month; and if not, why make a provision for attendants in those cases where it is known they can not be secured within that limit? If it is the purpose of the State to provide attendants in all those cases, why do we not authorize the payment of such sums as may be necessary to secure them?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me just a word?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. There are all degrees of disability, and even ability to take care of one's self without assistance. In many cases the party has the care of members of his own family and he is allowed $20 a month extra for that. Now, we feel certain that in cases where they are armless or blind or legless they require an attendant all the time, and no constant attendant can be procured for $20 a month. So, we thought we had better increase the allowance.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the matter now. It is expected that those persons who are not legless or blind or armless will not procure the help of an attendant outside of their families, but that the $20 a month may be paid to members of their families for such services as they may be able to render to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; they have that extra allowance.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not have any objection to the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that many veterans will not be in need of such nurse or attendant all the time.

Mr. CALDER. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not understand why a person who is paralyzed does not get the benefit of the legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that there are any such.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There might be in the future.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, in the future they can be taken care of.

Mr. CALDER. There are 336 men now affected by the legislation. This will increase the allowance for about 307 or 308. Twenty-five or thirty of the 336 will not get an increase, but they will still get the $20.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator know whether there are any who are paralyzed who do not get the benefit of the legislation?

Mr. CALDER. I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee seems to have information with reference to those who are armless or legless.

Mr. CALDER. The committee inquired of the Veterans' Bureau and were informed that about 310 of the 336 would get the increase, and it was believed by the committee, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota, that the rest are men in whose cases the money goes to some member of the family who helps to take care of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think people who are paralyzed should be excluded from the benefits of the measure, but I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2872) to amend section 800 of the revenue act of 1921 and ask for its immediate consideration. Briefly, the bill extends to associations known as veterans of foreign wars the same exemption from taxation from the revenue bill as is extended under the law to the American Legion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "(a)" and insert "(A)"; on page 2, line 5, strike out "(b)" and insert "(B)"; and, in line 6, to strike out "(c)" and insert "(C)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (b) of section 800 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to (1) any admissions all the proceeds of which inure (A) exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, any post of the American Legion, or the women's auxiliary units thereof, any post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States or the women's auxiliary units thereof, societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or societies or organizations conducted for the sole purpose of maintaining symphony orchestras and receiving substantial support from voluntary contributions, or of improving any city, town, village, or other municipality, or of maintaining a cooperative or community center moving-picture theater, if no part of the net earnings thereof inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; or (B) exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States; or (C) exclusively to the benefit of persons who have served in such forces and are in need; or (2) any admissions to agricultural fairs if no part of the net earnings thereof inures to the benefit of any stockholders or members of the association conducting the same, or admissions to any exhibit, entertainment, or other pay feature conducted by such association as part of any such fair, if the proceeds therefrom are used exclusively for the improvement, maintenance, and operation of such agricultural fairs."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR KELLOGG.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in 8-point type, a very interesting address made by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] at Walnut Grove, Minn., on August 7 of the present year upon the subject of "Agriculture and problems of the day." It is nonpolitical and of great interest to the farmers of the country.

Mr. HEFLIN. Can it be possible that a speech made by a Republican Senator who is now up for reelection was nonpolitical?

Mr. McNARY. Entirely so.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that I shall take the word of the Senator from Oregon that it is not political. If that statement had not been made I should have objected to the matter being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McNARY. I assure the Senator it is nonpolitical.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

AGRICULTURE AND PROBLEMS OF TO-DAY.

[Address by Hon. FRANK B. KELLOGG at Walnut Grove, Minn., August 11, 1922.]

I was invited to come to Walnut Grove and to deliver a speech to the farmers. I have gladly accepted that invitation, as it gives me an opportunity to lay before you my views upon the great problems we have had to deal with and what this administration has done for agriculture.

I stated to the farmers and the people of Minnesota six years ago that, if elected to the Senate, I should resign all my positions and devote myself exclusively to my duties in the Senate. I have done so. I can not review that entire history, but I propose this afternoon to talk exclusively upon agricultural problems.

I say, in no spirit of boasting, Minnesota is a great State, with wonderful resources in iron and timber and with great manufacturing centers; but, after all, the foundation of its wealth, its basic industry, is farming, and I made up my mind when I came to the Senate that I should give first and most careful consideration to the problems confronting the farmer. I have been a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and have taken an active part in the great struggle through which we have passed and in the treaties and other foreign relations since the war closed.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

There never was a time in the history of this country when our foreign relations were so important and difficult as since the close of the war. That great conflict left all Europe devastated or bankrupt, industries paralyzed, and racial jealousies and hatreds intensified. We are intensely interested in the stabilization and peace of Europe. It is of especial interest to the farmers, for it is principally there he finds a market for the surplus of his products. I can not in this speech review all the work of the last two years in this field. It is sufficient to say that a peace treaty was made with Germany and Austria which ended the war without injuring our allies or detracting from their influence in the settlement under the Versailles treaty. There was held in Washington a disarmament conference, which for the first time in the history of the world accomplished real limitation of naval armament and which has been followed by restriction of land armaments to some extent, saving to the people of this country and the world hundreds of millions of dollars and relieving them from the intolerable burdens of taxation. Furthermore, this limitation of armament is a step toward peace because competition in the building of navies and land armaments is sure to bring on another war as it has in the past. That conference also settled the most difficult problems in the Pacific and the Far East, which were not settled by the Versailles treaty and had been a menace to the peace of the world ever since the close of the Great War. The sovereignty and independence of China was recognized, the open door and the right of every nation to trade on equal terms was established, which is of vital importance to this country as a nation. It has been one of the principal policies since the day of Theodore Roosevelt and John Hay. I might briefly mention other accomplishments, the settlement of the dispute between Panama and Costa Rica, which threatened war near the Panama Canal; the settlement between Chile and Peru, which has improved our relations with all South American Republics; but I believe the most vital problems which lie at the foundation of the Nation's prosperity and future greatness are those pertaining to agriculture, for all history shows that a nation founded upon an intelligent, independent, and prosperous farming community, where the people are proprietors of the soil, secure in their rights, and with hope of progress, is a nation rising in the tide of civilization.

FARMING THE BASIC INDUSTRY.

I do not mean that we should thereby neglect other activities of life. Our mineral resources, manufacture, transportation, and all other activities must be developed with those of the farmer, but, as I have said before, his is the basic industry. He produces the food of the Nation. He takes the greatest risks, and to-day I believe his returns are the smallest, though his position in the world is secure. But for the mobilization of the production of this country, and of all the allied and neutral nations during the war, our armies would have been powerless and our arms would have been paralyzed. After the war came readjustment. The excessive demand from foreign countries ceased. The high prices of all products began to fall. The farmer was first and most drastically affected. Because they are the least organized and most numerous, the farmers have to produce and sell their products. Farming is not handled by large corporations, and therefore when the stimulus arising from the war ended during 1920 the farmers' prices dropped more rapidly than their cost of living, and when this administration came into power the farmers of this country were facing ruin, which meant disaster to all industries. Something had to be done. The President made up his mind to study the agricultural problems and to make that subject one of the principal activities of his administration. He delivered a great agricultural speech at our fair in St. Paul in 1920. He called an agricultural conference last winter. In his messages and in his conferences with Senators and Representatives from the agricultural States, he has constantly urged legislation and executive action to stabilize and assist this your great industry.

CONTRAST ADMINISTRATION POLICIES.

I am not going to make a partisan appeal. I realize that during the war everything was sacrificed to win it, but I did not believe then, and do not now, that the farmer received his fair share of profit. During President Wilson's administration Congress was asked to pass a law fixing the prices of wheat and authorizing the Government to buy it, the ostensible purpose being to increase the price so the farmer would produce the maximum. As a matter of fact, it reduced the market price, and though I do not deny the price was good, it was not equal to what was being paid in other countries or was being paid in the market when the law was passed. The law made a minimum price only. The President fixed both the minimum and maximum, and the farmer was compelled to take $2.25 a bushel for wheat that was selling in the market before the Executive action for $2.50 to $3 a bushel. I for one protested against it, and I think it would have been better to let the farmer get his market price; but that is a thing of the past.

ACHIEVEMENTS.

Let me for a few moments review the legislative and executive action of this administration in aid of the farmer. The following are some of the laws which have been passed during this present administration:

(1) The emergency tariff law for the benefit of agriculture, which placed a tariff duty on farm products.

(2) The law extending the powers of the War Finance Corporation, so as to relieve the credit situation among the farmers and provide a foreign market for their products.

(3) Law appropriating $35,000,000 to aid the Federal farm loan banks to sell bonds at 5½ per cent without any increase in the rates of interest to the farmer.

(4) Cooperative marketing bill authorizing the farmers to organize cooperative marketing associations in order to reduce the cost of marketing.

(5) The packer control law.

(6) The law regulating future trading in grain.

(7) Bill authorizing the President to appoint a representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve Board.

(8) Federal aid in the construction of highways, from which Minnesota has been benefited to the extent of many millions of dollars, thus relieving rural taxpayers of a considerable burden.

Some of these most important measures I had the honor to introduce or have charge of in their passage through the Senate, and I have supported all of them. I have not the time to discuss the details of all this legislation, but wish to review a few matters which I think have been of vital interest to agriculture.

FARM CREDITS.

One of the prime necessities of the farmer is cheaper credits. The fact that his business is small, as compared with the whole, makes it more difficult for him to readily obtain cheap credits to carry on his business, and the great banking machinery which we have adopted and the Federal reserve system were not adequate to take care of rural credits. Therefore, the President recommended an agricultural conference, which was held last winter, and a joint agricultural committee of the two Houses made an inquiry and reported in favor of a rural credit system for personal credits to farmers. We have also passed legislation to increase the amount of money which the Federal farm-loan banks might loan to farmers on real estate throughout the country.

When President Harding came into office the Federal farm loan banks were practically at a standstill for want of funds. We appropriated $35,000,000 to be deposited in the farm loan banks, and we provided that these banks might sell their bonds at 5½ per cent without increasing the rate of interest to be charged to the farmer, and, in fact, the Government can now sell these bonds at much less than 5½ per cent, and is doing so. While, of course, every individual farmer has not had the benefit of this law, it has so greatly relieved the money market that the farm loan banks are now loaning to the fullest capacity of their organization, and if they continue to operate at their present rate of speed they will in the course of another five years have absorbed practically all of the farm loans that are eligible, or about two and one-half billions of dollars of loans in this country. It has had the effect also of greatly reducing the rate of interest which other associations and individuals are charging farmers for loans. In Minnesota alone, since the farm loan bank resumed business in June, 1921, $7,179,700 has been loaned, and $3,597,450 by the joint-stock land bank.

One further law is necessary, and that is to create a branch of this farm loan bank in the nature of a reserve bank, to take care of short-term credits for farmers, in the same way as the Federal reserve bank is taking care of short-term credits for all other banks. That is now pending and being considered by the Congress.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

You will remember that in the summer and fall of 1921 the market for farm products was so bad and the prices so low that it was impossible for the farmers to obtain even the cost of producing them, that the banks in the farming districts were loaded up with farm paper which could not be paid, and a national disaster was threatened if conditions were not improved. The President appealed to Congress for immediate temporary relief in order, first, to furnish a foreign market for our surplus, and, second, to carry the farm products until they could be orderly and regularly exported. The bad financial condition of European countries and the inability of our farmers and local banks and exporters to carry the products made it necessary that the Government come to their relief in this great emergency. I do not believe, as a principle, in the Government doing the business of the country. I think the people are turning too much to the Government every time their business is not good, hoping for legislation to pull them out of the hole. But this was an exceptional condition following the war, affecting the great agricultural interests of the country. The President appealed to Congress. I introduced in the Senate and there was passed and enacted into law what is known as an amendment to the War Finance Corporation act. The War Finance Corporation had been created during the war to finance export products of this country, and it had ceased business under the order of President Wilson and was closing up its activities. The bill which I introduced and which became a law extended the life of the corporation for one year, which has since been made two years, and provides in substance that in order to create a market for the sale of farm products and to carry such products until they can be sold, and to provide adequate banking facilities, the War Finance Corporation is empowered to make advances not exceeding one year and to renew such advances not exceeding three years, these advances to be made to any person engaged in dealing in or marketing any such products, or to any association of farmers or producers for the purpose of assisting such persons or associations to carry such products until they could be exported or sold in an orderly manner. Advances were authorized also to banks and bankers who had made advances to the farmers in order to enable the local banks to carry the farmers until their paper could be paid. No bank was authorized to charge more than 2 per cent in excess of what the War Finance Corporation received. This bill was intended to, and did, meet a critical emergency, for there was no way to carry farm products until they could be exported. The result was that a financial panic was prevented. We exported more grain and flour than in any previous year except one or two during the war, and, as I will show you, the prices of farm products have improved. The War Finance Corporation had a capital of $500,000,000, and it was authorized to borrow up to a billion dollars more. It took several months, of course, to get the machinery in operation and the maximum efficiency developed, and while during the fall of 1921 it prevented a general smash in banks, its full effectiveness as to prices to farmers was not felt until winter. The cotton market was affected as early as July. The corn market began to turn in November, and sheep, corn, and hogs began to feel the influence of restored financing facilities in the latter part of December and in January and February.

TWELVE MILLION DOLLARS TO MINNESOTA.

The total loans up to the 1st of July by the War Finance Corporation were $284,874,582. In Minnesota alone there has been advanced for these purposes $11,912,730. I have received letters from some farmers complaining that under this law loans were made direct to farmers. This is true, and could not of necessity be otherwise. The object of the bill was to meet a great emergency at the earliest possible moment in order to furnish a market for farm products, and it was not possible, if wise, for the Government to set up machinery to make loans directly to farmers throughout the Nation. The only practicable way was to furnish capital to move the crops, to find a market, and to relieve the local banks so additional credit could be given the farmers. If the Government had undertaken to create an agency to deal directly with all the individual farmers of the country, it could not possibly have been done within the time necessary for relief and would not be wise in any event. The Government should do no business which the people themselves can do and do better. Farmers must and should, in the main, rely for their credits on banks and financial institutions in the local communities, and it is only the province of government to aid these, to make them efficient, and see that reasonably cheap farm credits are assured. I have also heard complaints that in some cases the banks charged excessive rates of interest. The War Finance Corporation enabled them to charge from 5 to 5½ per cent, and if any bank charged more than 2 per cent in addition to this it violated the law. This 2 per cent was allowed the local banks for taking the risk and handling the business, as it was not possible to reach the individual farmer in any other way. The Government, of course, could not regulate the rate of interest the State banks should charge for funds otherwise than those furnished through the War Finance Corporation. I think every one will tell you that this measure met a great emergency, without which there would have been a general financial smash among the country banks which would have reacted disastrously upon the farmer.

FARMER ON RESERVE BOARD.

More or less connected with this subject of farm credits and finances is a measure which I introduced and which was passed through the Congress during the last session in the winter of 1921. That bill authorized the President to appoint a representative of agriculture upon the Federal Reserve Board. As you are aware, the Federal Reserve Board has general control over the Federal reserve banks which rediscount paper for member banks throughout the country. It has been the policy of the Government to have representatives of various business institutions as well as banks on this Federal Reserve Board—men who are familiar with various parts of the country, the business and credit conditions. We thought it very desirable that the farmers should have a representative on this board, not necessarily a man solely engaged in farming but a man who is familiar with the needs of the farming communities and with farm credits. The bill was signed by the President, and it is expected that very soon he will make an appointment. He is endeavoring to find a man of the highest standing, character, and experience, and I have no doubt will do so. As the Federal reserve system and the member banks throughout the country must of necessity be the great reservoir of credits as well for farmers as merchants and manufacturers, it will undoubtedly add to the efficiency of the board to have such representation.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING.

One of the most important bills passed by the last Congress in aid of the farmers was the cooperative marketing bill. I had the honor of having charge of this bill in the Senate. It had been before the Congress for two years and had passed in different forms in the House and in the Senate, but the conferees of the two Houses could not agree. I finally moved in the Senate to adopt the House bill, which I thought fully met the necessities of the case and had the approval of the farm representatives. I know of no movement of greater importance to the farmers than that of cooperative marketing. In many of the products of the farm, especially those not handled in the great markets, the difference between what the farmer receives and what the consumer pays is, in many cases, exorbitant and unreasonable. Furthermore, the indiscriminate marketing, without intelligent cooperation, tends to glut the market and depress prices, without a corresponding benefit to the consumer. It also tends to waste, and is not, therefore, in the interest of national economy. There are in this country 6,448,343 farmers. It was claimed by the opponents of this bill that it was not in the interest of the public to allow the farmers to create a great national trust. When you stop to think of the number of farmers and the different communities which they serve, the different products they raise, the different market conditions they meet, the different climate conditions, the conditions of transportation, it is absurd to think that the farmers can create a great trust and oppress the public. If there was any danger, the bill protects the public, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to institute proceedings if any monopolies are created. Again, the farmer can not curtail his production to meet the public demands. He can not let his land lie idle, but is compelled to cultivate it. Much can be done in selecting the crops if there is adequate knowledge of the demand for his products.

I need not remind you of the great benefits which have been derived by the farmers in Minnesota through their cooperative creameries, elevators, and other cooperative activities. I know of no State where more has been done to inaugurate this system than in the State of Minnesota, unless it be in California, where the fruit growers' cooperative marketing agencies have saved the farmers from bankruptcy.

President Harding recommended such legislation in his message of December 6 last, and advocated it in his speech to the farm conference held in Washington during the winter. It takes time, of course, for the farmers to develop thorough systems of cooperative marketing, but I have that confidence in their business ability that with wise laws and ample protection it will be made one of the most effective means for the benefit of agriculture. It is, of course, not as easy for them to cooperate as it is for the great manufacturing and other industries which are fewer in number. Those manufacturers, in many instances, are consolidated into very large corporations, but this is impossible in the farming business. Each farmer is a proprietor, and must of necessity be independent. The hope and stability of the Nation is based upon the independent proprietorship of the land. This inculcates an individual spirit of initiative and enterprise, which is the very foundation of all progress, and, I am happy to say, from the great farming communities of the Nation was drawn the bone, sinew, and brains which is developing our twentieth century civilization.

There are only two fields in which the farmer can cooperate. One is in marketing and the other in procuring cheap credits. This later has developed in some countries to a greater extent than with us. Much, of course, can be done by individual farmers in more scientific agriculture, rotation of crops, better live stock, greater diversity of products, and along other lines, and while the Government can aid with proper and just laws, after all, the foundation of national prosperity and progress must rest with the individual himself.

EMERGENCY TARIFF ACT.

When the Republicans came into power on the 4th of March, 1921, practically all farm products were upon the free list, placed there by the Democratic Congress in the Underwood bill of 1913. It had been the Republican policy prior to that time to furnish the farmer reasonable protection for his principal products, but this policy was reversed in 1913, and while affording a considerable degree of protection to the manufacturing and other industries of the country, farm products were not protected. Thus the home market was thrown open to the products of Canada, with its virgin soil and cheap land; to Argentina, with its cheap land and cheap labor; to Cuba; and other countries. In 1912, before the Underwood bill was passed, only 47.47 per cent of our imports from Canada came into the United States free of duty.

In 1914—a year after the Underwood bill was passed—80.97 per cent came in free of duty; in 1919, 88.73 per cent; and this condition existed until the emergency tariff bill was passed in May, 1921. I am not in favor of exorbitant rates of duty, which will burden the American consumer. I am in favor of a reasonable protective policy which will enable American industries to keep their home market against the cheaper labor and production of other countries, and I am also in favor of the farmer having his fair share of that protection. I have not advocated high duties in the tariff bill now before the Congress. I think I may say without exaggeration that I led the fight for free lumber and shingles in June of this year, and the Senate adopted it by a very large majority. I am in favor of free coal, free farm machinery, free iron ore, and other products which are a necessity to the American people and where our home producers do not need protection. I joined in the advocacy of a lower rate on cotton goods, some iron and steel products, and woolen goods, and there are other schedules for which I shall advocate lower rates. But because the farmers are not organized, because they must produce, and because they find a market for their surplus in foreign countries, is no reason why they should not have local protection, for, after all, the United States is their great market, and it is demonstrated beyond question that in many countries grain, cattle, and butter can be and are being produced cheaper than in this country.

A fair illustration of what happened under the Underwood tariff bill is the following:

During the war there was an embargo on all shipments of farm products into the United States from Canada, those farm products being taken by the Canadian Government for the use of the allied nations and the armies. This embargo was lifted on the 1st of November, 1920. From 1909 to 1913, before the Underwood bill was passed, the average importation of wheat from Canada was 940,000 bushels per annum; of flour, 132,000 barrels. In the first four months of 1920, after the embargo was lifted, to wit, September, October, November, and December, there was imported into the United States either in wheat or its equivalent in flour, 35,074,676 bushels, and in the first three months of 1921, 14,267,095 bushels—making substantially 50,000,000 bushels. In addition to this, 41,000,000 bushels were shipped into the United States in bond and shipped through to foreign countries. It is idle to say that this did not affect the local American market and the farmer. The figures show it did. After the embargo was lifted and Canadian products entered the United States free, wheat sold in Winnipeg on an average of from 20 to 35 cents a bushel higher than in Minneapolis. Beginning with the marketing of the crop of 1921, after the emergency tariff, wheat sold at from 10 to 25 cents a bushel more in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg, and the imports of grain very largely decreased.

It has been said that what the farmer is interested in more than anything else is a foreign market, and unless we can import foreign goods we can not find a market for our farm products. This is true to some extent, but there always will be very large importations of some classes of goods into this country, and it is not the policy of the present Congress to prevent this. In spite of the emergency tariff, the exports of grain, flour, and meat products were greater in 1921 and 1922 than ever before, except during the emergency in the war, when European countries could get their products no other place.

I believe it is a fair statement of the case that the aid given to marketing by the War Finance Corporation, and the protection of the emergency tariff, together with the other activities of the Government were, to a large degree, responsible for improvement in prices of farm products. I do not claim it is all attributable to legislation, but it is the opinion of the Bureau of Markets and of the Department of Commerce that these activities of the Government have very largely aided in restoring prices to the farmer. On this subject of the need of protection to the farmers, I quote from a report of the Bureau of Markets, made at the time the emergency tariff was pending before the Congress:

"There is a great surplus supply of meats and meat products in the United States, and prices of live stock have been driven to a decline much more rapid than the decline in cost of production, while imports of meats have further depressed the market. This constitutes a menace to the live-stock industry. Live-stock operations—before the war frequently precarious and unprofitable—did not during the war build up a reserve of profits sufficient to offset the present losses due to the current marketing of war-stimulated production at less than its cost."

Then the Bureau of Markets, a Government agency, proceeds to give these statistics and says:

"On the other hand, following the putting of meat on the free list in 1913, imports began a rapid development, which was cut off only by the war, and in 1919–20 show a marked tendency to resume. These facts need to be considered in conjunction with the fact that the Chicago packers control from 50 to 60 per cent of the meats shipped from South America to world markets. With our exports practically no greater than 1910 and with a strong potentiality for increase of imports, the American farmers urgently need protection for their cattle and sheep products. Imports of muttons and lamb for the years 1917–1919 averaged about 6,000,000 pounds; in 1920 they were 100,000,000 pounds, and had a far more depressing effect on sheep and lamb prices than on consumers' prices of the products."

IMPROVEMENT OF PRICES.

In any event, prices of farm products have very largely increased in 1922. It is true that during the summer and autumn of 1921 prices which had commenced to go down continued to decrease in most products, but it is also true that the War Finance Corporation's activities did not begin to take effect until the beginning of the year 1922, and between January and the present time prices of the principal farm products, including wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, hogs, cattle, sheep, and wool, have very greatly improved. In some of these products there has been a very great advance; in others less.

I do not say that the proper relation between farming products and other products has yet been reached. It is true that under the effects of the enormous demand during the war farm products decreased more rapidly in price than other products, so that the purchasing price of wheat, hogs, and cattle in the market was less than most other products of the markets; but a proper relation is rapidly now being restored, and I believe that in the near future the prices of farm products will be brought nearer a proper relation to the prices of other products.

TRANSPORTATION RATES.

One of the vital needs of the farmer is cheaper and better transportation. Railroad rates are too high, and they are, of course, a burden upon all the business of the country, and primarily upon the farmer, because he can not add his freight rates to the price of his products. He receives for his products in the great central markets the market price less the freight rates. The manufacturer sells his products at the mill at the market price plus the freight rates.

I think there is a good deal of misunderstanding as to the cause of the very high freight rates to-day. When the Government took over the railroads on the 1st of January, 1918, freight transportation was the best and freight rates were the cheapest here of any country in the world. I did not believe it was necessary to take over the railroads, and my belief has been strengthened and confirmed by what has transpired. I do not believe a political organization can efficiently operate a great business like the railroad transportation of the country. It can not be managed by central bureaus in Washington, and it is for that reason that I am in favor of private ownership, under strict Government regulation, and in favor of preserving the regulation of intrastate matters by the States, which is nearer to the people and can deal more effectively with the local problems than can the Federal Government. You can not run 260,000 miles of railroad efficiently under a bureaucratic system from Washington. In 26 months the Government lost from $1,800,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 in the operation of the railroads, increased the freight and passenger rates 40 to 65 per cent, and increased the operating expenses of the roads so as practically to take up every dollar of the increased rates, leaving the roads without any net income whatever, and when the roads were turned back to their owners, although $1,500,000,000 had been added to the gross income, it was entirely absorbed by the additional operating expenses, and the roads, as a whole, were not earning anything on their bonded debt, stock, or value. Since September, 1920, there has been considerable improvement.

Freight rates have been reduced about 11 per cent, amounting to about $500,000,000 per annum. Operating expenses of the railroads have been reduced about a billion and a quarter dollars, and while the railroads are now earning only about 3 per cent upon their value as fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, I believe that, unless there is a general railway strike, the operating expenses will be still further reduced and there will, at an early date, be reductions in freight and passenger rates.

We are gradually getting back to normal conditions. It is not my purpose to discuss the railroad problem, but simply to point out that everything should be done to aid in the reduction of railroad rates without crippling and destroying the railroad properties, because money will not be invested in railroads unless there is some fair remuneration.

DEEP WATERWAYS.

I think, in connection with this, we must do everything possible to develop our water routes, for water transportation, after all, is the cheapest. I made a speech in Duluth the other night pointing out the benefits which will accrue to the western country from the construction of a deep waterway reaching to the head of Lake Superior at Duluth. I think it is a great project for this country and that an ocean waterway open to the very heart of the agricultural producing district of Minnesota would be of inestimable value to all the farmers in this State and in the West.

SEVEN MILLION DOLLARS FOR MINNESOTA ROADS.

At the time when the first bill appropriating Federal money for the construction of rural highways was being considered, it was impossible for Minnesota to accept money from any source to be spent upon its roads, for our constitution then forbade the expenditure of money by the State for "internal improvements."

But there was then pending an amendment—which was adopted in 1920—allowing the State so to expend money, and I, cooperating with Senator NELSON, prepared an amendment to the appropriation bill setting aside Minnesota's share and holding it in the National Treasury for our people, in anticipation of the adoption of this constitutional amendment.

When finally the amendment was ratified by the voters of this State, there immediately became available a sum of nearly $7,000,000. This amount forthwith was turned over to Minnesota and has been used in the construction and improvement of its highways.

This was a great saving to the taxpayers of the State, as you will readily see.

In 1919 an assault was made by certain influential eastern Senators upon the existing method of apportioning Federal aid for road construction among the States. The plan proposed was that the money should be divided in proportion to the various amounts paid by the different States for internal revenue taxes, and disregarded the territorial extent of the respective States and the length of highways therein.

This would have given such States as New York and New Jersey, where many great corporations have their headquarters, a great and an unfair advantage over agricultural States like Minnesota.

I had the honor of taking a leading part in opposing this scheme, which was defeated only after a fight which lasted several days. Through the course of years this victory over the East will save for you many, many millions of dollars.

I am as proud of what I have done for the betterment of our highways as I am of anything I have accomplished in my lifetime, for having been born and raised upon a farm, I fully appreciate the benefits which result directly, not only to the farms but to the cities and villages where their products are marketed, from such good roads as those over which I have just traveled on my trip to your beautiful and prosperous community.

One of the heaviest burdens you have to bear is the expense of the transportation of the products of the farm to the market, and I assure you that I shall always do all in my power to assist you in the realization of your ambition to provide yourselves with cheaper and swifter transportation.

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS.

President Harding wisely said that we should have more business in Government and less Government in business. This is a wise rule. I do not wish the farmers of Minnesota to think that I believe Congress or State legislatures can immediately find a remedy for all the economic or social evils which from time to time arise and which the people must be ever on the alert to combat. I think at the present time people are too apt to go to Congress for relief which can be wisely given only through their own individual or cooperative exertions. It has become the fashion, when credits are scarce and money is high, to demand that Congress shall immediately appropriate money to be loaned in business. If business is poor the Congress shall legislate to better it. If prices of products are low the Government shall go into the business of buying and selling. If times are hard we shall immediately issue money and inflate the currency. These are economic fallacies which have been proven to be fallacies over and over again in the history of the world. Congress and the legislature can do much to aid in procuring adequate and cheap transportation and a good financial system, encourage better marketing, more scientific farming, and foreign markets; but, after all, the prosperity and progress of the Nation under wise and equal laws rests with the people themselves. We might as well be honest with ourselves. There are demagogues going up and down the land, and I think they are more numerous during this readjustment after the war than before, who are trying to stir up class prejudice and hatreds, who will tell you that the Government is run in the interest of the trusts and the plutocrats and predatory wealth. These are their favorite expressions—that legislation is in the interest of big business; that the farmer is the prey of all the other classes of the community—and yet you will not find any of them offering any constructive remedies for the evils which they magnify and appraise. It is true that some of them advocate Government ownership of railroads, banks, mills, grain elevators, public utilities of all kinds, and what they call essential industries; but wherever this has been tried it has been found disastrous. The great farming industry, the manufacturing and transportation industries, the scientific discoveries which have made modern progress the wonder of the ages, have been made possible by the individual enterprise and brains of a free and independent people. It is true that the Government must see that the people have transportation facilities and that these facilities are not interrupted or destroyed; that certain essential industries, like the production of coal, must be carried on and not be interrupted or destroyed; but proper regulation of these great industries, combined with a reasonable degree of freedom and enterprise, will work out the solution of these problems.

One thing must be understood in this country—that the law is above every man and order must be preserved, and that every individual must be protected in his right to labor and enjoy the fruits of his industry. No class of men, whether capitalists, farmers, or laborers, have a right to set the law at defiance or by conspiracy to compel the people to bow to their mandates.

STATUE OF "SERENITY."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a statue by José Clará personifying "Serenity," and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McCORMICK. Reserving the right to object, will the Senator kindly explain the character of the statue?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly. I ask that the joint resolution be read to the Senate for its information. Then, there is a letter from the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and I ask that it may be read in explanation of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to Charles Deering for the erection, as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, the Mall, and the White House, of a Carrara marble statue of "Serenity," by José Clará: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, that it shall be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the statue.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether it is proposed to erect the statue of "Serenity" in the Senate Chamber?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it would be very well to do it. I would vote for it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Before there is a vote on the proposition, am I to understand that the statue of "Serenity" is to be erected at the public charge or is to be given to the District?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had the joint resolution read for the information of the Senator, but he was engaged in conversation with other Senators and did not listen to it after I had asked to have it read. The joint resolution distinctly provides that the United States is to be put to no expense in connection with the matter. I asked that a letter from the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds be read, but I do not insist upon it, and merely ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. If anyone wants to hear the letter read, he can call for the reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, CORPS OF ENGINEERS,
OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., August 31, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Library,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Mr. Charles Deering, of Chicago, has expressed to this office a desire to have placed in one of the public parks of this city, as a gift to the people of the United States, a marble statue of "Serenity," by José Clará, a Spanish sculptor. He proposes to furnish and erect this without expense to the United States, and it is believed to be desirable to accede to his request.

There is, therefore, submitted herewith a resolution authorizing the Chief of Engineers to select a suitable site and to grant permission to Mr. Deering for the erection of this statue. If you approve of this proposition, it is respectfully recommended that steps be taken to introduce the resolution. Colonel Sherrill is expected to return to Washington in a few days from his vacation, and will be available for any detailed information you may desire to secure from him.

Very truly yours,

D. L. WEART,
Major, Corps of Engineers,
Executive Assistant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE HOUSE COLLECTION OF CHINA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2212) for the future safeguarding of the White House collection of the presidential china, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to receive, on behalf of the Government of the United States, gifts, whose authenticity has been established, of presidential heirlooms in the form of table china, glass, or plate, such gifts to be made a part of the permanent collection of china now installed in the cabinets of the collection room of the White House: Provided, That said collection shall be maintained in the present White House collection of presidential china and shall remain in perpetuity the property of the United States in the White House under the care of the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 353, submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] on the 20th instant, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Joseph S. McCoy the sum of $2,000 for extra services as expert actuary and statistician rendered to the Senate Committee on Finance during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

PAY OF SENATE PAGES.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee on Contingent Expenses, to which had been referred the resolution (S. Res. 352) submitted by Mr. ASHURST, September 18, 1922, reported it with an amendment in line 3 to strike out the words "beginning of the third session of said Congress" and to insert the words "31st day of October, 1922, inclusive," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That during the period between the end of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress and the 31st day of October, 1922, inclusive, the pages of the Senate provided for by law, resolution, or otherwise, be paid the regular compensation at the rates they have been receiving.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONDEMNATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD'S DEFLATION POLICY.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type an editorial from the Manufacturers' Record, also an excerpt from an article in the Wall Street Journal, and a part of an article from the New York Evening Post, and two or three letters or short documents which I have on the subject of the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from Alabama tell the Senate the subject of the matter which he desires printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. The subject is the drastic and destructive deflation policy inaugurated by Republican leaders and directed by——

Mr. McCORMICK. W. P. G. Harding?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. By William "Poison Gas" Harding. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

FRENZIED EFFORTS OF FINANCIAL DICTATORS TO FORCE GOVERNOR HARDING BACK INTO FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

It is as true to-day as it was yesterday that 2 and 2 make 4.

The Wall Street Journal, speaking editorially, declares that although it was a principal object of the establishment of the Federal reserve system "to deprive New York of its financial leadership," "New York and not Washington is the real center of the reserve system."

That is the Wall Street view, and that is why, perhaps, the governor of the New York Reserve Bank, Mr. Benjamin Strong, whose apparent influence over W. P. G. Harding has long been notorious, traipsed to Washington not many days ago and put himself to work. Was he there on professional duty, earning the munificent salary paid him, and was it with the Federal Reserve Board that he transacted business? We hear it said that rather he was moving about the corridors of the Capitol, buttonholing politicians, whispering strange promises in the ears of listeners, sending messages into the White House itself, not in connection with pure finance but in an effort to cajole or bulldoze the President of the United States into returning to office and power Mr. W. P. G. Harding.

We say that 2 and 2 make 4 to-day as always, and the flat declaration of the Wall Street Journal that "New York is the real center of the reserve system," added to the work of Mr. Strong at the Capital, makes with mathematical certainty this fact patent to all: New York is playing politics with the system. These influences, which have dared to accuse reputable men of demagogy in connection with criticism of the maladministration of the reserve system, and who cry "keep politics out of the system," are putting politics into the system. Indeed, by politics they have so prostituted it that it is in disrepute throughout whole sections of the Union. They are sunk to the neck in the mire and yet dare cry out that the hands of others are black!

Why is Senator CARTER GLASS passing from Senator to Senator asking them if they will not agree to vote for the confirmation of W. P. G. Harding if he is again named governor? Is he keeping the reserve system out of politics or is he trying to establish a poll that can be shown the President to convince him that if he does appoint Harding the nominee will be confirmed?

The whole fraternity of Governor Harding's defenders with one voice declare that the Federal reserve system, like the Supreme Court, should be above suspicion and beyond the criticism of the day. But who is it that has made the board a storm center, and who is it that has brought the reserve system itself into disrepute and tarnished it with selfishness and inefficiency? Is it not W. P. G. Harding, whom Bourbons now seek to reestablish in power? A lot they care for the permanence of the system or its good repute, soft though their words be, unless New York can control the reserve system, as suggested by the Wall Street Journal. Else why do they insist on the reappointment of the one man in the whole United States whose retention would be absolutely certain to keep the whole system in politics and assure inevitably a new Jackson and a new Jacksonian campaign to destroy utterly a revived financial dictatorship and tyranny?

Indeed, so desperate have some of the Harding followers become and so fixed in their attitude that it is common gossip, though necessarily difficult of proof, that they have had the effrontery to lay down as a condition precedent to the raising of further funds for the Republican Party the reappointment of Harding. So widespread is that rumor and so general is the belief in it that if the President should appoint Harding, not thousands but millions of Americans will believe that there is something rotten in Denmark, smelling to high heaven. Indeed, by their tactics Governor Harding's advocates have made it impossible for the President even to consider the renaming of their man without subjecting himself and his administration to grave suspicion.

Senators, if they wish, may leave the Senate Chamber and the newswriters may retire when Senator HEFLIN, week after week, rises and tells again his story of W. P. G. Harding and the wrecking of national prosperity. But Mr. HEFLIN happens to be backed by a great wall of truth. His charges are not denied, his integrity is not impeached. They may laugh at him, they may ridicule him, they may say they are tired of him, but they are not half so tired of him as the people of the United States are tired of W. P. G. Harding; and when the voting comes it may astound learned Senators to discover that the great masses are just as determined to have honesty and efficiency in the administration of national credit now and are just as opposed to tyranny and financial dictatorship as they were in the time of Andrew Jackson.

And when we say dictatorship we know what we are talking about. Indeed, it may be doubted if even the minutes of the meetings of the reserve board are an accurate picture of how absolute that dictatorship is.

How long has it been since failure commanded reward in America? As the whole structure of national prosperity was toppling over in 1920 and Mr. W. P. G. Harding was tearing down the pillars of the temple, did he not cry from the housetops that there must be what he called "orderly marketing," which meant that every farmer must sell his products as he brought them to market? Would he dare say that now? On the contrary, all the experts agree, and the President, too, that it is economic "murder" to follow such a course and that a credit structure must be erected which will enable the farmer to distribute his sales over a period. The policy of Governor Harding, which in those days spread ruin everywhere, is not even defended to-day by any responsible man, not even by himself, we believe. That is the kind of "genius," the type of "efficiency" which Strong and GLASS and the others say must be rewarded.

And who was it who introduced and defended the graduated rate? Why, Governor Harding, and about the first thing the President learned when he took office was that even metropolitan bankers, sponsors for Harding, realized the sin of an agency that utilized such a ruinous, immoral, and dastardly method.

Who was it who forced Government securities out of the banks, even in repudiation of the solemn pledges of the Government, giving as a sole excuse a theory that financing of the war had been "unwise"? And who did drive these securities out and force Liberties down to approximately 20 per cent below par? No need to ask, for wherever there was anything sinister in finance, there, as fate would have it, was Governor Harding's management also.

His mistakes, colossal as they have been, have not made him great. He has not blundered into godship. But he, the apostle of deflation, when confronted with similar deflation of his own power and authority, does not want to be "deflated." He wants to be "inflated" still more. Unwisely put into office by one administration, he wants now to be tossed back by Mellon and President Harding, to be the pet of two administrations, and as he works his vengeance on those who dared oppose him, hopes to smile from the vantage point of support by both major political parties, invulnerable and invincible. His dream is greater than his ability. If the two major political parties alike fell into his clutches that would solve no problem except to assure the formation of a new political party, out of his control, which would quickly enough become supreme. A leading banker lately wired President Harding that Governor Harding was building up such a financial oligarchy that if reappointed it would be necessary for the country to destroy the reserve system in order to get rid of this financial oligarchy.

Let Mr. Strong and all his confederates who are playing politics with the reserve system be warned that they are in the quicksands. If they won the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding their very victory would overwhelm them. If they prove, by securing that reappointment, that the New York Reserve Bank is in fact, as the Wall Street Journal intimates, the head and control of the whole Federal reserve system; that it has been able to overrule the purpose of Congress to take that leadership away from New York; that it has become more powerful than the Government and can dictate appointments, then that proof will be the signal to the country to put on its battle armor, for liberty knows and will tolerate no master.

The appointing authority is itself on trial.

FEDERAL RESERVE CRITICIZED IN WEST—DEMOCRATIC POLITICIANS CHARGE REPUBLICANS CAUSED SEVERE DEFLATION—FARMERS ASSERT THAT THEY WERE DISCRIMINATED AGAINST.

[Special Correspondence of the Evening Post.]

DES MOINES, Iowa, September 14.— * * * Farmers here assert that steps taken by the Federal Reserve Board at Washington in 1920 to deflate the currency of the country hit them a blow from which there has been no recovery to date. Condemnation of the board's action is heard in every rural community. Farmers without regard to politics blame the board for their present predicament. * * *

They belive the make-up of the board should be carefully looked after in the future and demand the appointment of a real farmer member on the board. * * *

The deflation processes which aroused so much indignation here started early in the summer of 1920, the farmers assert. They were severe and they were speedy, and the methods by which they were applied were arbitrary, according to the views held here. Credit was cut off for a multitude of reasons—most of them invalid, according to the local view—and the board of this district, acting under orders from Washington, apparently went out of its way to enforce all the drastic mandates.

Farmers say the effect of the action at Washington fell upon them most heavily. Indeed, they insist that it fell upon others only lightly and in some cases not at all. Farmers were forced to take much lower prices for their products while the things they had to buy were sold to them without appreciable reduction. Farm buying was necessarily curtailed, and in the end this brought financial distress to many country merchants. The retailers carried farmers on their books for long periods and were deprived of capital they needed in their business. And at the same time their current trade receipts were reduced. This proved to be another troublesome factor in the West.

LOOKED FOR THE REASON.

From the outset leaders of the agriculturists sought relief from the strict orders of the board. And as they did so they sought to get at the fundamental idea of the board in making such proposals as it did. The quest was fruitless, however. The harder the mandates were enforced and the more frequent and drastic they became the more aloof the board became to advances and inquiries, so the farmers say.

* * * * * * *

HOW IT CAME ABOUT.

Now, however, there is some light being thrown upon the affair which is putting a new face on it. Following Senator HEFLIN'S lengthy speech in the Senate recently, and as a development of Senator HITCHCOCK'S war cry to the Democratic State convention of Nebraska, meeting at Omaha, the farmers are wondering just how much blame ought to attach to the Democrats and how much to the Republicans. The tendency here is to relieve the Republicans, if it is possible to do so; but the Democrats are coming forward with some interesting historical data that are opening the eyes of folks. The Democrats charge the Republicans with demanding deflation just before their national convention met at Chicago, and of accomplishing it, to the great detriment of the farmers, after the overwhelming victory at the polls in November that year.

Senator HITCHCOCK'S charges, which are being circulated here by Democrats and some nonpartisan or independent agencies, to whom they appeal with force, are embodied in these words:

"Republican responsibility for drastic deflation began in the Republican platform adopted in June, 1920. That platform denounced the 'gross expansion of our currency and credit.'

"That was plain talk and a direct notice to the Federal Reserve Board of what the Republican managers demanded. The Republican Senate only three weeks earlier had by resolution called upon the board to report what it proposed to do to reduce 'currency and credit inflation.' Undoubtedly, therefore, the policy of the board was influenced then and afterwards by the demands of Republican leaders for deflation.

"The result was a drastic and damaging curtailment of credit, a reduction of currency, and a fall in prices."

ALLEN ASSAILS REPUBLICANS.

Tom S. Allen, chairman of the Nebraska Democratic State Committee, issued a statement this week in which he continued the attack on the Republicans, saying:

"Keep it before the people that the policy of deflation that almost wrecked American agriculture is Republican policy. It was demanded by the Republican Senate in May, 1920. It was facilitated by a Republican law authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to increase the rediscount rate. It was demanded by the Republican national platform adopted at Chicago in June, 1920. It was demanded by Mr. Harding, the Republican nominee for President, in his speech of acceptance in July, 1920. It is indorsed in the Nebraska Republican platform in its praise of the 'achievements' of the Harding administration, of which this is one of the most notable.

"The Republican candidates in Nebraska this fall stand unreservedly on this platform.

"A Republican vote in November will be a vote to indorse this policy. A Democratic vote will be a vote to return the Federal reserve system to the service of the plain people."

In support of their campaign contentions, the Democrats quote this from President Harding's speech of acceptance July 22, 1920:

"Gross expansion of currency and credit have depreciated the dollar. Deflation on the one hand and restoration of the 100-cent dollar on the other ought to have begun on the day after the armistice. We pledge that earnest and consistent attack which the party platform covenants. We will attempt intelligent and courageous deflation and strike at Government borrowing, which enlarges the evil."

They also say that "between May 28, 1920, and January 25, 1922, there was a contraction of credits by the 12 Federal reserve banks amounting to $2,005,149,000, and a contraction of Federal reserve notes in circulation amounting to $923,020,000—a grand total of nearly $3,000,000,000 or $30 per capita for the entire population of the country.

"The result is that wages were brought down and are still being brought down.

"The prices of farm products and of land were brought down and are still being brought down."

Likewise, they declare that in 1919 a trust company tied up the Federal farm loan banks in the spring court so those institutions could no longer function.

They also assert that in the spring of 1920 the Republican Congress passed an amendment to the Federal reserve bank law empowering the Federal Reserve Board to increase the rediscount rate, a step which reacted directly upon the farmers.

BEGINNING OF DEFLATION.

Then followed, according to the Democrats, the McCormick resolution, the declaration of the Republican National Convention and Harding's speech of acceptance—and after these the policy of deflation was begun.

The Democratic leaders have not waited until this moment to speak on the matter, for in the platform of 1920 adopted at the San Francisco convention was this declaration:

"One vital danger against which the American people should keep constantly on guard is the commitment of this (Federal reserve) system to partisan enemies who struggled against its adoption and vainly attempted to retain in the hands of speculative bankers a monopoly of the currency credits of the Nation. Already there are signs of an assault upon the vital principles of the system in the event of Republican success in elections in November."

The Democratic contention rests on the above history, and the facts which are being set before the farmers of the West now are interesting many of them and are causing anxiety in the Republican ranks.

Mr. President, the Wall Street Journal of September 13, 1922, which for many months has been one of the controlling spirits over the Federal Reserve Board, contains a statement from a bank in Tennessee giving as its reasons for withdrawing from the Federal reserve banking system that the promise to loan them money on Government bonds had not been lived up to and that deception had otherwise been practiced upon them under the tightwad policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The Wall Street Journal had asked why it had withdrawn. I am doing everything in my power to have the Federal reserve banking system so honestly and fairly administered that no charge of deception, favoritism, or inefficiency can be established against it. I know that this great banking system is capable of supplying to all the people all the time all the money and credit necessary to meet the demands of their business.

The crying need of the hour is for the people to wake up on this all-important question and demand that the Federal reserve banking system be permitted to function as it did before Wall Street got control of it.

As long as Wall Street controls the currency and credit supply of the country just that long will the masses of America be the serfs and slaves of the money lords of the East.

Money and credits are the life blood of business. When they circulate freely, business is good and the people prosper. When they are not permitted to circulate, business stagnation comes and the people are literally held up and robbed. I contend that to withhold the currency and credit aid necessary to meet the business needs of the people and prevent ruin to their business is cruel and criminal.

To permit currency and credits to be withheld from millions of patriotic people while the speculators and financiers of Wall Street grow rich and fat upon their toil and investments is nothing short of a scandal and national crime.

Let no one be deceived. There was no necessity or legitimate excuse for the drastic, destructive, cruel, and criminal deflation policy that so afflicted and cursed our people in 1920 and 1921. It was begotten by Republican leaders and born in Wall Street. It was inexcusable and indefensible. It robbed millions of people in the United States to enrich a few thousand men. It destroyed national prosperity to provide a Wall Street feast for mammon. It denied loans on Liberty bonds, struck down property values, charged usurious and prohibitive interest rates, destroyed the purchasing power and debt-paying power of the people, and left distress, discontent, and debt hanging like crêpe on the doorpost of millions of American homes.

Let every American worthy of the name register a vow that he or she will work and vote to restore our great Federal reserve banking system to the honest and helpful purpose for which it was created.

I will insert here a resolution introduced by me and never reported by the committee of which Senator CALDER, a Republican of New York, is chairman:

Senate Resolution 350.

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that while deflation was being conducted under the direction of Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, that he permitted the Federal reserve bank officials of the regional bank of New York to appropriate funds of the bank for the purpose of erecting palatial banking quarters for the Federal reserve bank in New York City, the total cost of which was estimated in the Federal Reserve Board's official report to the Senate of October 31, 1921, as shown on pages 21 to 23 of said report, at the sum of $25,646,410, including land, building, and structures; and

Whereas the cost for banking quarters of 4 of the 12 reserve banks was estimated in the reserve board's report to the Senate of October 31, 1921 (pp. 21 to 23), at $49,878,914, which is nearly five times as much as the average expenditures for the past 20 years on all appropriations made by Congress for all public buildings, post offices, courthouses, and customhouses in all 48 States of the Union; and

Whereas the reserve banks have already in the calendar years 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921 charged against the net earnings of the banks over $10,000,000 on account of alleged depreciation, etc., on their bank premises, while said premises were still under construction or unfinished, and thereby greatly reduced the amount which would otherwise have gone to the Government for franchise tax; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the officials of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City to use the enormous earnings made during the period of drastic deflation to greatly increase their own salaries and the salaries of the clerks and other officials of said banks, increasing such other salaries from $1,320 to $10,000, from $2,500 to $15,000, from $3,600 to $25,000, and from $6,500 to $30,000 a year; and

Whereas, as a result of the huge increases in salaries, 25 of the 40 officers of the New York Reserve Bank, on October 1, 1921, were drawing in the aggregate salaries which amounted to 594 per cent of the salaries which they drew when they first came to the New York Reserve Bank or immediately prior to their employment by that bank, and the total amount paid in salaries by said New York Bank has increased from $1,298,474, in the calendar year 1918, to $4,937,597, in the calendar year 1921; and

Whereas it has been charged in the Senate that the said Governor Harding permitted the bank officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their salaries for the year ending June, 1922, over the salaries paid for the year 1918 more than $15,000,000; and

Whereas that increase alone is three times as much money as it cost the Government of the United States to pay the annual salaries of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, all the Members of both branches of Congress, all the members of the Supreme Court of the United States, the President and his Cabinet, the members of the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy; and

Whereas neither the then governor of the Federal Reserve Board, W. P. G. Harding, nor the officials of the Federal reserve banks have denied said charges; and

Whereas the failure to challenge and disprove these grave and serious charges has had the effect of creating in the public mind apprehensions and suspicions of a serious nature regarding the alleged conduct of said officials in these matters; and

Whereas the allegations in said charges involving the wanton extravagance with and the brazen misuse of funds belonging in part to the Federal Government are of such a character as to call for an investigation on the part of the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators, composed of Democrats and Republicans, five from the majority party and four from the minority, be appointed by the Vice President to investigate and report on said charges, and said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses upon said investigation and to pay the expenses incurred out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PROHIBITION IN ICELAND.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the chairman of the committee of the Presbyterian synod, which is composed of the ministers and elders of the Presbyterian churches of Washington, Alaska, and northern Idaho, asking me to present to the Senate a petition relating to certain matters. The letter includes matters of a personal character which I do not care to put into the RECORD, but the petition recites the fact of the pressure which has been brought by Spain upon Iceland, to force Iceland to modify her prohibition law. The petitioners state that it is reported that Spain is now seeking a loan from this country. I have myself heard nothing of such an effort, though the report may be true. Those who have written the letter, however, have adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we petition Congress, through Senator W. L. JONES, not to grant a loan to Spain until she has fully made amends to Iceland for her unprincipled coercion.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to submit certain information in connection with some matters which have been presented to the Senate regarding proposed ship subsidy legislation. I wish to offer a short communication from the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, of Des Moines, Iowa, and another from T. C. Atcheson, the Washington representative of the National Grange, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DES MOINES, IOWA, August 31, 1922.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your inquiry of August 22, regarding the referendum vote in Iowa on the subject of the ship subsidy bill, will say that the ratio stood 37 to 1 against the bill. That vote would indicate that the farmers were very largely against ship subsidy.

Yours very truly,

IOWA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
By C. W. HUNT, President.

NATIONAL GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
Washington, D. C., September 6, 1922.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find copies of several resolutions received recently from Michigan granges on the subject of ship subsidy, as requested by you in letter of recent date.

Yours sincerely,

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington Representative.

Resolution relating to ship subsidy bill.

Resolved, That Victory Grange, No. 1099, go on record as opposing the ship subsidy bill now pending in Congress and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Representatives at Washington.

Adopted by Victory Grange, No. 1099, August 12, 1922.

W. E. LUMSDEN, Master.
Mrs. W. E. LUMSDEN, Secretary.

Resolution relating to ship subsidy.

Resolved, That Mason County Pomona Grange go on record as opposing the ship subsidy bill now pending in Congress, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, one to Representative JAMES MCLAUGHLIN, and one to T. C. Atkeson, Washington, D. C.

Adopted by Mason County Pomona Grange in meeting assembled this 1st day of August, 1922.

W. E. LUMSDEN, Master.
CHAS. BITTEL, Secretary.

J. IRVING BROOKS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there are two little bills upon the calendar which were passed by the House of Representatives some time ago that I should like to have considered.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I have a bill on the desk the consideration of which was interrupted by an objection which has since been withdrawn. It will take but a moment to dispose of the bill to which I refer.

Mr. SWANSON. And it will not take a minute to dispose of the bills for which I desire consideration.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Virginia proposes to call up a bill from the calendar while the measure to which I refer was passed on by the other House, and it is now on the desk and has been reached.

Mr. SWANSON. Both the bills for which I desire consideration have been passed by the other House, and they are now on the desk. The first bill to which I refer is the bill (H. R. 367) for the relief of J. Irving Brooks. It involves the sum of only $35, being a case in which a post-office automobile with defective brakes, which had been used for several years, collided with this man's car.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Virginia to state that the sum of only $35 was involved?

Mr. SWANSON. Only the sum of $35. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 367) for the relief of J. Irving Brooks. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to J. Irving Brooks, of Essex County, Va., $35, in full compensation for damages done to his automobile, caused by negligence on the part of the employees of the United States in the operation of a mail truck owned and operated by the United States Government on December 30, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the other bill for which I desire consideration is the bill (H. R. 8264) for the relief of Thomas B. Smith.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming.

PENINSULA OF PRESQUE ISLE, ERIE, PA.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10144) conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill, as requested by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I wish to be recognized as soon as it is laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

ADMINISTRATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. SMOOT. On August 21, 1922, I received a letter from Mr. John Skelton Williams. Later a portion of that letter was printed in the RECORD, at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. On the next day Mr. Platt, of the Federal Reserve Board, asked me if I would send him a copy of the complete letter. I did so, and he prepared and forwarded to me an answer to that letter. On September 16 I wrote a letter to Hon. John Skelton Williams advising him that after I had sent a copy of his letter to Mr. Platt I had received a letter from Mr. Platt in answer to the letter written to me by Mr. Williams. I then received a telegram from Mr. John Skelton Williams in answer to the letter addressed to me by Mr. Platt, and asking if any of the correspondence were printed in the RECORD that it all might be printed. I then received a letter from Mr. Platt in answer to the charges contained in the telegram of Mr. Williams.

I wish to be perfectly fair; I have no intention whatever of entering the field occupied solely by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], or to take sides in connection with the charges made on one side or the other. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that all of the correspondence to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Has the Senator the letter which John Skelton Williams wrote to him replying to the Platt letter?

Mr. SMOOT. I have them all.

Mr. HEFLIN. Has Vice Governor Platt written any letter replying to that?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not know anything about that, and Mr. Williams does not know anything about it. I should like to see that letter and have an opportunity to reply to it here. So I will make the request that if there shall be printed in the RECORD the letter to which he has referred, in order to be fair to Mr. Williams, I may have permission to print for him his answer to Mr. Platt's letter, in connection with the correspondence presented by the Senator from Utah. That is perfectly fair. Then the whole record will go in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not care how much matter the Senator from Alabama may print in the RECORD which Mr. Williams asks him to have printed, although I think the RECORD has been full of such material nearly every day for months past. I have no objection to having inserted in the RECORD another letter, but, of course, it will have to be prepared and put into the RECORD before October 2, as the last issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be on that date.

Mr. HEFLIN. That will be done; it will be done just as soon as Mr. Williams can see the letter of Mr. Platt.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Utah and the request of the Senator from Alabama will be granted, no objection being made.

Mr. HEFLIN. The request has been granted, then, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEW. Before consent is given to have the correspondence printed in the RECORD, do I understand that consent is asked for the publication in the RECORD of a letter which has not as yet been written?

Mr. HEFLIN. The situation is this, if the Senator from Utah will yield to me: Mr. Williams wrote a letter to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]; Mr. Platt replied to that letter; Mr. Williams replied to Mr. Platt's letter, and Mr. Platt has replied to that. Now I want Mr. Williams to have an opportunity to reply to the last letter of Mr. Platt, and the Senator from Utah does not object to that. I think it is but fair.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Alabama wants Mr. Williams to have the last word; that is all. He has had a spokesman in the Senate every day for the last two or three months, and I have no objection to him having the last word.

Mr. HEFLIN. Nobody here or elsewhere has been able to disprove anything that I have said or that Mr. Williams has said on this subject. We are right, and therefore entitled to have the opportunity to reply to this eleventh-hour epistle.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think it is a most unusual and extraordinary course to ask for the publication in the RECORD of a letter which has not as yet been written and of the prospective contents of which the Senate itself is necessarily in ignorance. I suppose it may be taken for granted, of course, that there will be nothing grossly improper in the letter, but I hesitate to consent to that sort of procedure.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think I can communicate the letter of Mr. Platt to Mr. Williams and have Mr. Williams's answer here by morning and printed following these proceedings.

Mr. NEW. In the morning would be too late.

Mr. HEFLIN. I could get it here to-night, probably.

Mr. NEW. But the session is to adjourn in a very few moments.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Indiana that I do not think the letter of Mr. Platt calls for any answer, but I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana will not object to the request because this correspondence ought all to go in. It is a very big question which we are considering here.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if I had the time I could go into the whole matter. I think a mountain has been made out of a mole hill.

Mr. NEW and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not withdraw my objection. The Senate is to adjourn sine die in less than half an hour. I can not agree to the publication in the permanent RECORD of something that no Senator has had a chance to see and consider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. President, I regret to do it, but I shall have to object to the request of the Senator from Utah to print in the RECORD these other letters. I do not intend that the Federal Reserve Board shall print letters in this RECORD without giving those who speak for the American people an opportunity to reply to them. I have not seen the last letter of Mr. Platt; Mr. Williams has not seen it, and I object to printing it in the RECORD unless all of it can go in so as to present both sides of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that objection has been made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to save time I will not read the first letter to me, of August 21, 1922, by Mr. John Skelton Williams, because that has already been printed in the RECORD.

The next letter is dated September 16, 1922. On that date I wrote to Mr. John Skelton Williams as follows——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the business before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate is reports of committees.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. The question before the Senate is the consideration of a House bill. Unanimous consent was requested for its consideration, and it was granted.

Mr. WARREN. It can be passed in a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in error. The question before the Senate is House bill 10144.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, evidently the Senator from Alabama does not want any defense of the Federal Reserve Board to go into the RECORD; and as it is only a few minutes before 2 o'clock, and I recognize that he could call for a quorum——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator does not represent me correctly in that statement. I want everything that is truthful to go in——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to read the letters.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I shall have to ask for a quorum in order that the Senator may have a good audience. Unless he consents that I shall put in my letter, I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to read the letters.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; that settles it.

CUBAN SUGAR CROP.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say further that some time ago the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] tried to startle the American people and make them believe that the blackest pages of American history had been written because of a letter that I wrote to General Crowder in relation to the limitation of the Cuban sugar crop. We were led to believe that the idea originated here in the United States and that I was connected with General Crowder in first suggesting it and virtually forcing it upon Cuba. I have here a copy of the Economic Bulletin of Cuba for September, 1922, and I want to read from that bulletin just what Cuba says in relation to it, and I want the Senators to understand, and they will understand, that the question originated in Cuba. Therefore, I ask now that the Senator from Mississippi give me his attention.

This is the leading editorial in the paper:

Many persons therefore advised a forcible reduction of the coming crop. An elaborate bill was presented to the House of Representatives on the 12th of December, proposing that this Government expropriate 1,200,000 tons of sugar of the 1920–21 crop "in order to make them disappear from the market, either by destroying them or by transforming them into alcohol or other secondary products." On November 8, a bill had been introduced providing that a tax of 2 cents should be levied on every pound of sugar produced before the 1st of February and after the 20th of May, 1922; in other words, that the harvesting period should be limited to from February 1 to May 20, which was tantamount to the proposal to reduce the crop; and on December 12 that proposition was made in a bill providing that any sugar mill that turned out over 65 per cent of its 1920–21 output should pay, on each pound of sugar in excess of said 65 per cent, a tax of 2 cents per pound.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Does the Senator want to put that in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. What I have read is in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I know, but there is quite a good deal more of it, I imagine.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there will be any objection to it. I have here a letter from the President of the Senate of Cuba that contradicts just what the Senator is now reading, and I shall be very glad to give unanimous consent——

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care what the Senator puts in. He can put that in if he wants to. I have no objection; but the bills were introduced in the Cuban House or Senate; there can be no question as to that notwithstanding the denial the Senator refers to. The facts are as I have read.

These proposals to limit the 1921–22 crop were not made with any relation to the duty to be levied on sugar in the United States, their aim being to reduce the stocks in Cuba to normal proportions.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate, because the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] desires to speak; but I am going to call attention to this further fact, as recorded in this article:

It has, however, recently been stated or made to appear that it was General Crowder who urged this measure upon the President of Cuba, using a letter written by Senator SMOOT and threatening that the rate on sugar would be increased in the permanent tariff bill, so that Cuban sugar would have to pay 2 cents a pound duty, unless Cuba reduced its crop. But there is no basis whatever for this statement.

Of course there is not, because there was nothing in my letter to that effect.

We have questioned prominent members of the Cuban Congress who took part in the conference called by President Zayas and in drawing up the report in which the proposal to limit the crop was rejected, and they have all declared to us that they knew nothing at the time of the letter written by Senator SMOOT to General Crowder; that President Zayas did not request them to decide in favor of the limitation; did not, in fact, take part at all in the discussion; and that they felt perfectly free to make whatever recommendations they thought fit on the matter. Those of them who at the time held private conversations with General Crowder have stated to us that he never mentioned Senator SMOOT'S letter to them nor in any way recommended or urged upon them to accept the proposal. No coercion was, therefore, brought to bear on the members of the commission by the President of Cuba, by General Crowder, or anyone else, and no basis whatever exists for the assumption that General Crowder attempted to force upon Cuba the limitation of the sugar crop or that he acted as an advocate of the beet-sugar interests in any plan against Cuba or against the American consumer.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask unanimous consent that all of that article go into the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I have no objection to the whole article going into the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that all of this article go into the RECORD, as well as the communications that I have received during the last few days from the President of the Senate of Cuba, answering this proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever. I do not care what the communication the Senator has may state. The bills were introduced in the Cuban Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from the Economic Bulletin of Cuba, September, 1922.]

THE PROPOSAL TO LIMIT THE CUBAN SUGAR CROP.

The action of the United States Senate in increasing the already high duty on sugar has given rise to a discussion of the proposal which was laid before the Cuban authorities in February last to limit the 1921–22 sugar crop.

It is well to recall certain facts in connection with this proposal, as it would seem that they have been overlooked.

The proposal to limit this year's sugar crop was one of the various measures recommended in Cuba for bettering the situation of the Cuban sugar industry, and at one time was looked upon with favor by many persons connected with the industry.

Toward the latter part of 1921 everyone became greatly discouraged, prices for 96° Cuban sugar, c. and f. New York fell steadily from 3 cents in September to 1.81 cents at the close of December, and the unsold stocks in Cuba were 1,000,000 tons over normal. Many persons therefore advised a forcible reduction of the coming crop. An elaborate bill was presented to the House of Representatives on the 12th of December proposing that the Government expropriate 1,200,000 tons of sugar of the 1920–21 crop "in order to make them disappear from the market, either by destroying them or by transforming them into alcohol or other secondary products." On November 8 a bill had been introduced providing that a tax of 2 cents should be levied on every pound of sugar produced before the 1st of February and after the 20th of May, 1922; in other words, that the harvesting period should be limited from February 1 to May 20, which was tantamount to the proposal to reduce the crop; and on December 12 that proposition was made in a bill providing that any sugar mill that turned out over 65 per cent of its 1920–21 output should pay, on each pound of sugar in excess of said 65 per cent, a tax of 2 cents per pound.

These proposals to limit the 1921–22 crop were not made with any relation to the duty to be levied on sugar in the United States, their aim being to reduce the stocks in Cuba to normal proportions. The situation was critical and, as Secretary Hoover has recently stated, something had to be done to stabilize conditions; everyone was aiming to find a way of doing so, and among the solutions—no less than 15 proposals, says Mr. Hoover, were made to the Department of Commerce of the United States and given consideration—the limitation of the 1921–22 Cuban crop was one of the most favored.

Nothing was done, however, during 1921 to carry out the proposal made in Cuba by various persons to limit the crop, and the Cuban Congress did not take up the bills dealing with this subject. But when the crop, which normally begins in December, was already under way and arrangements had been made by the great majority of the planters to cut their cane, the proposal to limit the crop was placed in a formal manner before the members of the Cuban Congress at a conference called by President Zayas about the 12th of February. This proposal was related to the duty on sugar under consideration in the United States Senate and to other concessions to be made to Cuban sugar by legislative action in the United States. It was therefore independent of the propositions referred to before, which had emanated from Cubans and had had no reference whatever to the duty levied on sugar in the United States.

It may, however, be assumed that the beet-sugar interests in proposing the reduction of the Cuban crop were influenced to some extent by the disposition which had been manifested in Cuba, some time before, to limit the crop, and although their proposal did not come before the members of the Cuban Congress till the middle of February, the beet-sugar interests already had this plan in mind in December, about the same time that the bill providing for a 35 per cent reduction of the Cuban crop was submitted to the Cuban House of Representatives, since in addition to other proofs it has been disclosed by Mr. Rubino, in his statements to the New York World, that on the night of December 19, Mr. W. L. Petrikin, president of the largest beet-sugar company in the United States, suggested the limitation of the coming Cuban crop to 2,500,000 tons as one of the means of helping the situation of the beet-sugar industry, whose "very existence was threatened, among other things, by the tremendous surplus of Cuban raw sugar."

It is well known that shortly afterwards, in the same month of December, Mr. C. C. Hamlin, in representation of the beet-sugar interests of the United States, came to Habana to try to reach an agreement with the Cuban producers to reduce the Cuban crop of 1921–22 to about 2,500,000 tons. At this time the idea of limiting the crop by legislation or by any artificial means had practically been abandoned in Cuba, because the season was too far advanced, preparations for the crop having been made by the majority of mill owners and cane growers. Nevertheless the proposal of the beet-sugar interests, with its offer of certain definite and appreciable advantages to Cuba, found favor with some persons, the most prominent among them being the Secretary of the Treasury, Sr. Gelabert, and Sr. Aurelio Portuondo, a very capable and well informed cane planter, who had taken a leading part in the negotiations with Mr. Hamlin in Habana, and had been called to Washington to continue the conferences there. The proposition was given very serious consideration and it should be noted that a number of the members of the Cuban Congress who took part in the conference called by President Zayas to study the matter seemed to be inclined at first to accept it, as will be seen from the following statement made by the Heraldo de Cuba in its issue of February 16: "When the members of Congress were retiring from the President's palace yesterday we asked them their personal opinion with respect to the sugar problem, and we reached the conclusion that the majority was favorably disposed toward the reduction of the crop." Three days before, the Mercurio published an information on the subject, the headlines reading: "It is strictly a Cuban solution to reduce the crop. It is not an American formula."

Before going further it is necessary to refer here to the statements on this matter contained in the official report made to President Zayas by Sr. Sebastián Gelabert, Secretary of the Treasury, dated March 18, 1922, with respect to his mission in Washington. This report has been published by the Cuban Treasury Department and on pages 32–38 reads as follows (translation):

"December 7, 1921.—Held conference with Mr. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce. The Cuban minister and Sr. Despaigne went with me. I informed you in a confidential cablegram of the result of this conference.

"Mr. Hoover gave us a copy of the statistical data compiled in the Department of Commerce, showing the probable world production and consumption of sugar for the year 1922 (present crop) based on the results of the preceding years. In view of the change favorable to our interests which Mr. Hoover's attitude indicated and in order to be able to inform him with respect to the general opinion of the sugar producers of Cuba and the disposition in which they were at this time, I requested you to send Sr. Aurelio Portuondo, who had represented the sugar-mill owners and sugar planters in the Commercial Mission and whose brilliant exposition, inserted in our memorandum to the State Department on the harmful results of the Fordney bill, showed how thoroughly conversant he was with the sugar problem in Cuba and its bearing on our trade with the United States.

"On the 30th of December a conference was held in the legation with Messrs. Harris, Havemeyer, W. Petrikin, and Wallace, who represented a majority of the Western beet-sugar producers (78 per cent) and Messrs. Rionda (nephew) and H. Rubens, who represented the sugar industry of Cuba, to try to reach an agreement which would facilitate the adoption of a less rigorous tariff measure on Cuban sugar than that proposed in the Fordney bill.

"Mr. Havemeyer stated that he considered it a 'cardinal error' to attempt to limit the exportation of sugar from Cuba or the entry of the same into the United States; and that it would be equally harmful to place restrictions on commercial transactions in sugar, for inasmuch as the United States could only absorb for their consumption about two and a half million tons of Cuban sugar, any limitation would be a notice in clear tones to the European countries that the balance of the crop (if it should not be limited) was at their disposal for the price that they might choose to offer; and this would hinder the carrying out of the plan which he submits, as will be seen further on.

"He expressed the view that it was urgent to put into effect the measure restricting the Cuban crop before the new crop sugar, produced at a much lower average price than the previous crop (which according to Rionda cost 4 cents per pound) should change hands—that is, should enter the market at the prices now prevailing (12 cents per pound); and that an agreement and a close cooperation was necessary between the producers of sugar who naturally compete in the American market, namely, western beet and cane sugar of Louisiana, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, and the Cuban producers. He was convinced that the production of beet sugar in the United States had reached the highest figure that it could attain—that is, from 800,000 to 1,000,000 tons—because suitable lands were not abundant, with an adequate climate for the intensive cultivation which this plant requires (and also because the freight rates were unfavorable).

"According to the information which he had, the sugar-cane crops of Louisiana, Porto Rico, and Hawaii would have a decrease of 10 per cent, while Mr. Petrikin estimated that this reduction would be 20 per cent in the case of beet sugar.

"Mr. H. Rubens spoke next in favor of reaching an agreement and making mutual concessions, and Mr. Havemeyer summarized his own proposition in the following terms:

"That Cuba limit its production to 60 per cent of its preceding crops—that is to say, to 2,500,000 tons—by means of a tax on production of 3 cents per pound over the excess of said proportion.

"If to these 2,500,000 tons are added 1,200,000 tons surplus from the previous Cuban crop, we get a total of 3,700,000 tons, which is the most that can be taken from Cuban production for world consumption. But he insisted on the urgency of reducing the Cuban crop, which if it were agreed to would benefit the producers of the island who have no connection with the refiners of the United States, who, we believe, will absorb all the sugar that their mills can produce with detriment to the Cuban producers who have not established relations with said refiners and who, being unable to make their sugar with probabilities of selling it, would inevitably be ruined.

"January 9: Señor Aurelio Portuondo arrived and informed us of the conference with Hamlin in Habana, as below explained.

"January 10, 1922: Held conference at the legation with Mr. H. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce. The Cuban minister, Portuondo, and Despaigne were present.

"Portuondo related the points discussed and agreed to in Habana between the Cuban sugar producers and Mr. Hamlin, official representative—as he stated—of the beet-sugar producers of the United States, and which were summarized as follows:

"(a) Limitation of present Cuban crop to 65 per cent of the average output of the last three crops by means of a tax as a condition precedent for the American beet-sugar producers to support the entry with reduced duties to perhaps 1 cent, as we are asking, of the production so obtained, estimated at 2,550,000 tons, or at least for the 2,500,000 tons necessary to complete the total of 4,500,000 tons which is estimated to be the consumption of the United States in the present year; and (b) the entry free of duty under bond of 1,000,000 tons, balance of the preceding crop, in order to refine it for export.

"The estimates made in Cuba for these operations are:

	Tons.
1921–22 crop	2,650,000
Balance of preceding crops	1,200,000
Available in 1922	3,850,000
Domestic consumption	150,000
Total in Cuba	3,700,000
For United States consumption	2,500,000
Balance	1,200,000

which for the most part would be refined in the United States or exported in crude form, which, in view of the exports of the last years from the United States and Cuba is not too high an estimate.

"Mr. Hoover told us that the proper thing to do was to reach an agreement with the beet-sugar producers who the day before had held a meeting in Chicago to decide with respect to the points agreed upon in Habana with Hamlin; since an understanding with them might facilitate the approval by Congress of the necessary legislation.

"He inquired if we knew the results of that meeting of the 9th of the beet-sugar producers, and we replied that we had not yet had any information about it.

"That night Mr. Hamlin visited us and talked extensively, but in uncertain terms, of the Chicago meeting, and stated that on the 11th they were going to meet in Washington.

"January 11, 1922: Before joining their colleagues, Messrs. Hamlin, Petrikin, Carlton, and Wallace came to see us. The conference was a long one, many particulars were discussed, and the result was not very satisfactory. With the exception of Mr. Petrikin, the others were not disposed to grant us anything worth while, but they did insist that Cuba limit its crop.

"Their arguments were answered, and they were told that if on our part we agreed to recommend a limitation of the crop in view of the benefit to all concerned from this measure in obtaining better prices, especially so for the American producers, that it would be precisely on the condition that they should join their forces to ours for the purpose of obtaining a reduction in the import duties on Cuban sugar, which they declined to do, but promised to see us again after the meeting which they were going to hold with the other beet-sugar producers.

"We were informed by Mr. Rubens, who had it from Mr. Manuel Rionda, that at the meeting on the 9th at Chicago, the majority of the beet-sugar producers had rejected the preliminary agreement of Habana. In the voting on this point the majority of the voters, who represented only 22 per cent of the domestic production, defeated the minority of those present, who, nevertheless, represented 78 per cent of that production.

"That same night, after holding their meeting, the beet-sugar producers, Petrikin, Carlton, and McCormick, came to see us, and in a conference which lasted more than two hours no concession could be obtained from them. They nevertheless continued to insist on the limitation of the Cuban crop, without consenting to a reduction of the duty in favor of Cuba, and, on the contrary, pointing out to us that the tendency of the other beet-sugar producers was to obtain an increase of the duty to 2½ cents per pound, making the rate for Cuba 2 cents; they asked if it would be advantageous to us to adopt the proposition of the Louisiana producers—that is, a sliding scale in inverse progression to the price of sugar, until the duty reached 1.6 cents per pound below which it could not go, which was of course rejected. They seemed confident of obtaining sufficient votes in the American Congress to fix a high duty on imported sugars.

"The disadvantage of this tariff measure was pointed out to them from the point of view that public opinion might prove to be adverse to the high duty, and that in the forthcoming elections in November this issue would be raised, to which they replied evasively.

"We agreed among ourselves to maintain a firm stand in the demand for lower duties, without which concession we would not bind ourselves to recommend the limitation of the Cuban crop, which, to judge from the expression of public opinion, did not seem to meet with much favor in Cuba, although in fact it would be beneficial to the Cuban producer.

"The only beet-sugar producers who seemed inclined to support our petition for a reduction of the duty were Mr. Petrikin and Mr. Havemeyer, as we afterwards learned.

"January 14, 1922: General Crowder arrived and sent us word to meet him the following day at noon.

"January 15: We went to the conference with General Crowder. Señor Portuondo and Señor Despaigne went with me, and we found Mr. Hamlin there. Both parties informed General Crowder with respect to what had occurred and of the situation resulting therefrom. Mention was made of the proposal to allow the entry of 2,500,000 tons of Cuban sugar with reduced duties, since that amount would not compete with American sugars, and would make up the total of 4,500,000 tons at which this year's consumption was estimated; Mr. Hamlin expressed the opinion that the beet-sugar producers would not look with favor upon any reduction of the duties to less than 1.60 cents, which is the rate now in force on our sugar, but that in exchange for the limitation of the Cuban crop the beet-sugar producers would be disposed not to insist upon the increase which they desired. Such a proposition was, of course, inadmissible.

"The plan was discussed of permitting 1,000,000 tons of Cuban sugar to enter under bond to be refined and exported, and it was said that the War Finance Corporation might finance that operation without large expenditures.

"January 16: Portuondo and Despaigne held a conference with Senator SMOOT, a prominent and active member of the Finance Committee of the Senate. They were introduced by General Crowder.

"Senator SMOOT explained his ideas and aims with respect to sugar and his firm intention of sustaining and upholding the beet-sugar industry in the United States, without it being on this account his purpose to injure Cuba. He expressed the opinion that the sugar crisis, so harmful for all the producers, was due to the excessive, although in part and at one time necessary, production in Cuba, and considered that the first measure that should be adopted, the most logical, the most elementary, was to limit the present crop in Cuba, in order to equalize production and consumption; but he did not see the possibility of granting a reduction in the existing duty of 2 cents per pound, which is equivalent to 1.60 for Cuban sugars; but that he was not disposed either to propose or to defend a higher duty, and the refusal to do so, he said, had already made him somewhat unpopular among the people of the West.

"With respect to the entry under bond of a certain quantity of sugar to be refined and exported, he thought this could be obtained, since he and his colleagues had under consideration a bill to permit the entry of sugar to any amount in American territory for those purposes. He pointed out that one of the amendments to the Fordney bill would authorize the National Executive to increase or diminish up to 50 per cent any of the rates established in the new tariff, in certain and justified cases, and that in this way a means was given to the President of favoring our petition by lowering the general duty on sugar to a rate which, with the 20 per cent reduction which the treaty allows us, would represent a preferential duty of 1.4 cents per pound instead of 1.6 as at present.

"He thought that the War Finance Corporation might advance the funds necessary for bringing into the United States refining and exporting the surplus sugars in Cuba, provided the importers complied with the requisites that the law had fixed.

"With regard to the further development of these negotiations I have informed you in a confidential report which I have delivered to you."

It is clear from the above that there was a very strong desire on the part of the beet-sugar interests to obtain a limitation of the 1921–22 Cuban crop, and finally they made a proposition to this end to Señor Sebastián Gelabert, secretary of the treasury, and to Señor Aurelio Portuondo, as representatives of the Cuban Government and of the sugar industry of Cuba, respectively, a proposition which both of them submitted to President Zayas, who thereupon called a conference of members of the Cuban Congress to consider it. In the report made by the commission appointed at this conference (see text in this Bulletin, February, pp. 72–75), the fact is recited that the proposition that was laid before the commission was made in Washington to Señor Gelabert and Señor Portuondo by parties representing the beet-sugar industry.

It has, however, recently been stated or made to appear that it was General Crowder who urged this measure upon the President of Cuba, using a letter written by Senator SMOOT and threatening that the rate on sugar would be increased in the permanent tariff bill, so that Cuban sugar would have to pay 2 cents a pound duty, unless Cuba reduced its crop. But there is no basis whatever for this statement.

We have questioned prominent members of the Cuban Congress who took part in the conference called by President Zayas and in drawing up the report in which the proposal to limit the crop was rejected, and they have all declared to us that they knew nothing at the time of the letter written by Senator SMOOT to General Crowder, that President Zayas did not request them to decide in favor of the limitation, did not, in fact, take part at all in the discussion, and that they felt perfectly free to make whatever recommendations they thought fit on the matter. Those of them who at the time held private conversations with General Crowder have stated to us that he never mentioned Senator SMOOT'S letter to them nor in any way recommended or urged upon them to accept the proposal. No coercion was, therefore, brought to bear on the members of the commission by the President of Cuba, by General Crowder, or anyone else, and no basis whatever exists for the assumption that General Crowder attempted to force upon Cuba the limitation of the sugar crop or that he acted as an advocate of the beet-sugar interests in any plan against Cuba or against the American consumer. He knew, of course, about the proposal, and if he thought at the time, as did Señor Gelabert, Señor Portuondo, Señor Despaigne, and other prominent Cubans, that it would be for Cuba's benefit to limit her crop this year, it must be recognized that he thought so in perfectly good faith, and that he allowed the Cubans, through their representatives, to decide the matter for themselves, entirely free from all pressure or persuasion on his part.

We think that the truth on this point should not be obscured, as some one is sure to come along and point to the proposal to limit the Cuban sugar crop "as an instance of the bad faith of the United States in dealing with Cuba," when there was nothing of the kind.

The following are communications submitted by Mr. HARRISON:

[Translation of Spanish telegram.]

AUGUST 19, 1922.

Your protest to the American Senate and the world campaign regarding a reduction on the Cuban sugar crop passed with speculative intentions prejudicial to American consumers and Cuba responds to the realization of this odious matter without precedent in the political relations of Cuba and the United States. President Zayas called together at various times numerous Cuban legislators asking for legislative measures to facilitate such reduction. In suggestions made to the Government, which though informal are not less imperative, the names of Hoover and Crowder were mentioned as official mediators of the American Government in this matter, and pressure was brought through the threat which now seems effective, of an increase in the tariff if the proposition was not accepted.

I attended these meetings called by Zayas in my character as president of the Senate of Cuba, protesting against so extraordinary a proposal, especially because we are assured that the American Senate was controlled by the beet-sugar interests. This I could not credit in honor to the American people. It has seemed my duty to forward this message of thanks for your defense of Cuba in defending manfully and honestly the true interests of America.

AURELIO A. ALVAREZ.

[Translation of Spanish letter.]

SEPTEMBER 5, 1922.

Repeating my cable of yesterday re your action in the matter of increase in duty on sugar:

You may be sure that the Government of Cuba was induced to attempt to obtain from Congress here a measure for the reduction of our past sugar crop. Moreover, the Government not only warmly suggested the matter in various conferences with members of Congress but it formally recommended such a measure to Congress in the message of last February.

In these meetings Gelabert, secretary of the hacienda, and Portuondo, on their return from Washington reported that they had spoken concerning the matter with officials of the American administration, who recommended such reduction.

President Zayas said he had suggestions too weighty not to be considered, and although he later sent a message to an agency of information, in that denying the matter, his correction was not based on the truth respecting what happened at that time. His action was, in my opinion, due to solicitation of interested parties.

As a simple demonstration of the struggle we had here to prevent the reduction of the crop, I inclose copy of a report given me by the congressional commission intrusted with the duty of investigating the matter.

I sincerely believe the tariff which is being attempted will be prejudicial to the interests of the American people and grossly harmful to Cuba; it will be solely beneficial to one class.

The beet growers who were bringing pressure to bear and the impression of Gelabert and Portuondo made known to us that the American Congress was controlled by said industry, a matter of regret to me, a sincere admirer of that great country.

Here General Crowder is orienting an uncertain economic policy in trying to make secure a foreign loan, etc.

If you are interested in Cuban affairs in relation to your country, I should gladly keep you informed.

AURELIO A. ALVAREZ,
President of the Senate.

To the commission appointed to inquire into the advantages or disadvantages likely to arise for Cuba from a reduction of her sugar production:

Appointed to a membership in the commission, I have not declined the honor, although standing unalterably opposed to the reduction through coercive measures of the present sugar output, because I wished to avail myself of the opportunity thus offered me to restate the reasons on which I base my conviction, believing that the proposed measure is inimical to the economic interests of the country, although loyally recognizing that the proposal was made with the best of intentions.

In their brilliant exposé of the question, the President of the Republic and Messrs. Gelabert and Portuondo advocate that the volume of the production be limited to about 2,500,000 tons; it is claimed that we could thus obtain the withdrawal of the Fordney bill, whereby not only would our sugar be free from duty but, what is still more profitable, its value would increase, for the simple reason that demand would grow because of the reduced output. A reduction would work no hardship on us, we are told, because the higher price which would be obtainable on a curtailed production would, as a consequence, compensate the resulting loss if a low price had to be placed on the full production. It is claimed, furthermore, that what would be left of it (if it amounted to a million tons or more) we could introduce duty free on the American market to be refined "on tolls" [in English in the original] for reshipment to European markets, which implies the prohibition to produce more than the predetermined amount which, it is estimated, the American market can absorb and precludes any exportation to Europe of our produce because such exportation, if we are not careful, would injure the interests of American refiners by suppressing refining, which would go in the hands of their European competitors.

Such is the way the question is presented to us, to be resolved decisively by means of a law providing for a conditional reduction, subject to the supposed advantages we should through such means derive from such measures as may be adopted by the American Congress, influenced by the agricultural bloc, which include the beet-sugar manufacturers of that great Republic and which controls Congress. Such is, briefly stated, the problem presented to us.

Let us see now if it can be solved in the form proposed.

THE QUESTION IS NOT WELL PREMISED.

It is said that the Government of the United States is behind the measure requested, and that it was suggested officially or officiously. If this be true, the matter must have been taken up officially by our foreign affairs department, so as to ascertain the full scope and consequences of the suggestion by considering it from a practical rather than from a hypothetical angle and from the uncertainties of the unknown.

If no such official or officious (private) suggestion demanding the measure has been made on the part of the United States, and on a matter such as this which requires definiteness and clearness, and, if as established, in the course of our conversation with the President of the Republic, it appears that the suggestion deals only with (or in behalf of) private negotiations of beet-sugar producers, those negotiations ought to be realized (made) by all Cuban producers in a united defense of their interests.

THE OUTPUT IS ALREADY REDUCED PER SE.

Without a proper basis on which to calculate the figure of the present sugar crop, the proposed measure would be, at best, risky and unadvised, as appears, furthermore, from the following extracts, which I copy from a letter which I have at hand written to me by Gen. Eugenio Molinet, an expert on questions and present administrator of one of the largest sugar refineries in Cuba:

"In the first place, I will mention the project of law on the reduction of the sugar output, a project which I consider pernicious and which, though not likely to be passed by the House, might conceivably succeed later on in being debated, and perhaps even passed.

"As you know, the so-called overproduction of sugar does not exist. We manufacture now less sugar throughout the world than three or four years ago, which resulted in reducing consumption for many reasons, among which is the prevailing high cost which it reached and the financial crisis affecting the whole world.

"Doubtless if less sugar is produced, it will fetch a higher price on the market; but the reduction will come unfortunately, and it will affect the whole world.

"Now, in the United States they are preparing less ground for the future beet-sugar crop, and in some other countries the same thing is occurring. In Cuba the reduction will take place for many reasons, among which are the following: First, new seeds are very scarce; second, the cane that was not in a very good condition has been completely abandoned, because it would not pay for its cultivation, and many fields in good condition have not been cultivated and others have been badly cultivated, facts which will bring, consequently, a considerable reduction in the sugar crop; but this fatal and inevitable reduction will influence the weakest and worst prepared fields.

"If there is added to this reduction another by 'order and command' of 30 per cent, it will weigh alike upon those who reduce their crop for the reasons previously indicated and on the better prepared, and will result in the wastes being greater than the hoped-for crop, and the rest of the sugar producers, seeing reduction tied to Cuba, or be it to the country best prepared to manufacture sugar (the sugar producers) will get their second wind (new breath) and instead of reducing their sowing will increase it, while Cuba, the chief competitor, would herself, in the height of her lack of foresight, limit her production."

THE REDUCTION OF THE SUGAR CROP WOULD ENDANGER THE FUTURE AND INJURE THE PRESENT.

Our sugar crop must not be reduced by artificial means looking more to the future than to the present, which it will endanger without any doubt. Indeed, if we should reduce the volume of the sugar crop in order to attain momentarily an increase in price, there would remain in our fields millions of tons of cane, without cutting and without cultivation, taking from our people who are in agricultural work their only element of subsistence, and from the monetary circulation of the country the only really effective thing that increases it as a result of the sugar crop—that is, the money which the sugar industries spend in the elaboration of each sugar crop.

The less the sugar crop of each sugar refinery, the less, consequently, the quantity of money which would circulate, and which, on the other hand, would come to increase the circular stream, as has been said before, translated into the amount which the work in the operation of each mill amounts to. This, as far as it refers to the present, would be of fatal consequences, bringing not only the evils mentioned but, because of the unusual case, would cause blindness to the fact that the only fountain of life of the laboring population is at stake, in the very moment when the serious preoccupation of the Congress and the Government should be the lack of work which makes the crisis greater for the working population of Cuba.

As far as the future is concerned, we would incur again the inconceivable error already incurred by the financial commission of withdrawing Cuba from the world sugar market, animating the production in other countries when we must exert ourselves to increase our productive capacity more each time, in the hope of always finding markets for our basic product, given the advantageous conditions under which we can produce in relation to all our competitors. We must not and we can not forget that the consumption of sugar, as that of all merchandise in general, is regulated by the acquisitive power of the consumers, and that, of course, consequently the greater the consumption the smaller the price at which the merchandise can be acquired. Reducing our production would increase the foreign production, as has been said, and the amount of this foreign production would to-morrow close to our producers markets that to-day are not at their height on account of the instability of the exchange and where they would surely be able to obtain access once the money market of the world has become normal, being abnormal to-day as a consequence of the past international war.

To reduce the present sugar crop to 2,500,000 tons would be equivalent to reducing it in a way impossible to determine for successive years, inasmuch as the greater part of the fields which would remain without cultivation would end by destroying themselves, and thus the sugar industry and its possessors would be ruined.

THE MEASURE WOULD CREATE A HOTBED OF DIFFICULTIES.

To reduce the volume of the sugar crop would be equivalent to creating a hotbed of discord between the workmen and masters of the cane and the proprietors of the sugar refineries, because necessarily, and not impossibly, there must have escaped from the keenest foresight a great number of details which, not being able to be foreseen, would have made the measure which would have been adopted unprofitable and unjust. But there is more, although all would never have been able to be foreseen in reality, the application of the result would be true, because the proprietors of refineries would manage to grind their own cane or that of those planters who would be indebted to them for quantities made easy in order to thus obtain advantages for their native country in detriment to respectable interests which would be ridiculed.

THERE WOULD BE THE DUTY OF INDEMNITY FOR THE DAMAGES WHICH THE MEASURE WOULD CAUSE.

The resolution which would order the reduction of the sugar crop would bring such a large amount of abnormality in the greatest and most important trade of the Republic and whose contracts would not be able to be filled, that this single aspect of the question is annihilating to such a degree that it is impossible to suppose that the Congress would be disposed to go against so much fundamental interest as it would damage without at the same time adopting that other resolution which naturally follows, which would be to repair the damages caused, inasmuch as it would be inexplicable, at least in the honorable course of affairs, that those of whom the fulfillment of a contract should be asked, of which contract they should have a legitimate use (that those) should not have the damage caused repaired.

SENDING SUGAR "ON TOLL" TO AMERICAN REFINERS FREE OR NOT WITH DUTY WOULD BE HARMFUL TO THE CUBAN SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The reduction of the sugar crop must not be done, in view of the possibility of our being permitted to introduce into the United States free of duty a million or more tons of sugar to be refined "on toll" with Europe as their destiny; because this, in my judgment, far from benefiting us, would harm us, at the same time as the American refiners would then have at their disposition the quantity of sugar which we would send them under such conditions in order to satisfy the needs of their refineries, without risking any capital, with which we would, moreover, give up all incentive to competition and speculation which, when developed among foreign elements, results in benefit, without a doubt.

THE MEASURE WOULD BE IN CONTEMPT OF LAW AND DISCOURAGING.

The reduction in the sugar crop would constitute an abuse of power which would in the end bring about the ruin of owners and tenants who by the contribution of their capital, credit, and energies have been able to afford important assistance to the country in the midst of economic depression which seemed on the point of devastating it. It would not be just to reply to this great and fruitful effort of the productive classes by measures which disorganize them, placing enfeebling restraints upon their spirit, at this time, when they require more than ever before at least to be permitted to develop without obstacles, since it has not been possible to afford them assistance in this most difficult period they are passing through and from which they are resolved to emerge with a magnificent manifestation of effective action most profitable to Cuba.

THE MEASURE WOULD BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND WOULD BE AGAINST THE BASIC PRINCIPLES OF THE STATE, CONSIDERED AS A JURIDIC FAMILY.

The crop can not and should not be limited by a legislative measure, because it would be unconstitutional if it faced the problem directly, since it would be an attack upon the right of property, of free business, and freedom of contract. And if the measure were not unconstitutional by the deceptive form it assumes—establishing taxes, indicating a shipping date, a milling period, or whatever subterfuge may accomplish its purpose, applying once more these words that have served the purpose of these lawless ones, "the end justifies the means"—this would be even more serious, because if against laws that violate the organic act of the State are applied the recourses provided by constituted law in the legitimate defense of interests which consider themselves injured by unconstitutional laws, against the excesses of a power which premeditatedly and deliberately dictates laws that scoff at the basic principles of the state, considered as a juridic family, nothing would be possible but the disintegration of the social aggregate.

It was said by some one in reply to these or like remarks made by me in the last meeting we held with the President that in order that the measure might not be unconstitutional it could be drawn with a fiscal character in some of the forms already noted and criticized. The damages that would result to Cuba from a reduction in the crop established in such form would be so grave that it would be well to inquire if in such event the hour had not come for everyone with capital invested in Cuba to liquidate it and invest in other places where such enormities are not witnessed.

THE FORDNEY TARIFF IN ITS STRICT APPLICATION MORE PREJUDICIAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE THAN TO THE CUBAN.

The reduction of the sugar crop need not come under the threat of the American beet-sugar interests being able to be of more weight than those of the American people, which would be those which definitely would be harmed if the Fordney bill becomes an act, because the greater the tax imposed on sugar the greater the price at which said people will have to pay for an article of subsistence of first importance; it being impossible to suppose that the American people would resign itself for long quietly to such a sacrifice, especially the private interests of the sugar industry, physically compelled to supply the necessities of national consumption, in which extremity one may be sure that the protectionist politics of the governing party in that country will be split.

OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.

That the aforesaid condition of renunciating the sale of sugar to Europe would be imposed upon us through the harm which that would produce, especially on the American refiners, is inadmissible for reasons so elemental that they are not worth the trouble of refuting them.

It does not seem logical that the proposition of reducing the sugar crop is intended to be carried further, without first having heard the landed men and farmers of Cuba, whom the measure will affect most deeply, with so much the greater force, in so much as so far not one voice favorable to the measure has been heard, except that of Mr. Portuondo, very commendable and respectable, but who speaks for himself, without being able to find an echo among his colleagues.

Different chambers of commerce, and especially that of Santiago de Cuba, have taken resolutions contrary to the intention of reducing the sugar crop; and it would be worth the trouble to analyze the bases on which have rested these resolutions of institutions which necessarily have to be very really interested in the prosperity of the country.

The reduction of the sugar crop should not be made from a moral point of view, because in the actual circumstances, within the crisis which affects the economy of the world and when all the countries manage to revive their fountains of production, in order to satisfy the demand of work and to mitigate the general extreme poverty, to reduce the sugar crop in order to obtain a fictitious momentary price would be equivalent to keeping the elements of subsistence from those who otherwise would have the capacity of earning through the small price of merchandise without detriment to industry through this.

It has been brought forward that the measure would be provisional and transitory only for the present year and for the present sugar crop, but it is certain that that argument was brought out in order to control the last two sugar crops realized, with the sad results which we all know and whose disgraceful consequences we still feel, when science, daughter of experience, has already shown us how stupefying is the result of official action in questions which should only be regulated by the free determination of the contracting parties and especially where they refer to the development of commerce and of industry.

There should be taken into account the inopportunity of the intended measure, insomuch as many sales of sugar have been made, having involved others at a price of 2 and 2¼ centavos, cost and maritime freight, for shipments until the next coming April, in which case some privileged persons would be the only ones who would be able to benefit from the reduction besides our competitors.

Called upon to interfere in a matter of such importance, I wished to leave a notice of my action in declaring myself against the intended measure, remembering that in conferences analogous to those which now have given rise to the nomination of this commission, which took place between Congressmen and the President of the Republic, at the root of constituting its own Government in June of the present year, in order to study the economic problems which then, as now, were vital, I advocated in vain the immediate reduction of public expense, and through the increase of the income of the State, the only means possible to free us from the ill-named floating debt and the only possibility of making our property normal. There was, then, the obsession of the taxes at home and abroad, and all that which would not lead to its realization was considered fantastic and unprecedented. To-day one may be assured that if we had accepted that program, the only proposition except the taxes to which we aspired as our program of economy, we would have made a saving of approximately 3,000,000 pesos per month, or what is equivalent to 18,000,000 pesos, as what we could save by practicing economy; besides what the taxes would have been able to produce, taxes which I also asked to have established to increase the income, and taxes which the chamber were considering, all of which made ineffectual the economic policy—a mistaken policy, in my judgment—which the Government was at that time following with difficulty.

If unquestionably I have wandered from my proposed theme in making the previous digression, it will be excused by my desire to justify the solicitude which I have given to these questions and the grief which is sure to come to us in realizing forces which are lost then in the void, without being directed to the end which stirs us all in the defense of public interests, because in the long run plans traced beforehand are accepted, even should these be the most absurd, in an indifferent state of mind or with inconceivably fatalistic resignation.

Finally, in order not to tire further the illustrious attention of this commission, I should suggest the convenience of resolving in such a way that there would be left no possibility of doubt, if the project of law suggested and which now occupies us, has been solicited from our Government in official or even officious form, by that of the United States of North America, or by its representative in Cuba; and that in such case it should be asked of said Government of the United States or of its representative, if meditating seriously and serenely upon that which is fitting to the interest of Cuba, they would insist that all the principles and interests of material and moral consideration which are involved in this problem should be ignored, ridiculed, and trampled upon in order to give in every way satisfaction to their demand.

Very truly,

AURELIO A. ALVAREZ.

HABANA, February 16, 1922.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had expected to occupy some of the time of the Senate to-day in rehearsing the accomplishments of the administration for the last two years, but that is entirely out of the question, for it is but a few minutes before adjournment. Perhaps it will be just as well for me at this time to read the headlines of what I intended to speak upon. Furthermore, I notice that yesterday, in the House, Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL delivered a speech covering about the same subject matter that I intended to speak upon to-day; so I will content myself by just reciting the subject matter, without any further discussion. There are a great many of them here that I should like to discuss in detail, and many that I have not enumerated.

The Congress has completed 18 months of constructive legislation which is without parallel in the history of this country. No Congress ever came into power facing such chaotic conditions calling for deliberative and constructive efforts.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, is it in order for the Senator from Utah to be reading a eulogy on the defunct administration?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not yielded to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought, perhaps, we had an order of business, and that without unanimous consent the Senator could not preach a funeral sermon.

Mr. SMOOT. We have an order of business.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] spoke three minutes by unanimous consent. The Senator from Utah has not asked anybody's consent.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am speaking in my own right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Then I raise the point of order that the Senator has no right to speak when there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I am speaking upon the bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The subject before the Senate is House bill 10144. The point of order is overruled. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. The Republican Party was pledged to give the country constructive legislation. No Congress has ever enacted a greater percentage of legislation promised by its party. Consider its record:

First, and of vital importance, it has enacted no destructive, no sectional, no class legislation.

To put more business in government, it enacted the Budget law, under which the economy program of this administration was made possible.

It reduced the public taxes $818,000,000 a year, the bulk of which is lifted from the family and individual of average income. That taxes might be still further reduced, it unsparingly cut public appropriations.

It found 5,000,000 men idle. To prevent further aggravation of the unemployment situation, it enacted the restrictive immigration law.

It found agriculture facing ruin. To relieve the situation it revived the War Finance Corporation and furnished it with a million-dollar revolving fund to loan the farmer in his emergency. It passed the farmers' emergency tariff, which stopped the flood of imports that was contributing to agricultural distress. It increased the funds of the Federal farm loan bank in the sum of $25,000,000.

The result was the revival of agriculture, which brought the farmer, who purchases 40 per cent of the manufactured products of the country, again into the market, thus giving employment to idle men.

It enacted a permanent tariff, which insures industry and agriculture alike protection from destructive foreign competition and the workingman steady employment at a good wage.

It enacted the Sweet law, which created the Veterans' Bureau, consolidating all Government agencies dealing with ex-service men and facilitating the work of relieving disabled war veterans. It appropriated for the use of that bureau more money than was appropriated for any other purpose except payment of the public debt and interest thereon.

It found the country officially in a state of war with Germany and Austro-Hungary, and by a joint resolution reestablished peace with these two nations.

It enacted that great piece of humanitarian legislation asked by the women of the country, the maternity act, to safeguard the welfare of infancy and maternity.

It created a refunding commission to place our foreign loans on a businesslike basis and formulate conditions for their payment.

It authorized the formation of cooperative-marketing associations, which will be of mutual benefit to the producer of food and to the consumer. It enacted the packers and stockyards act for the live-stock interests, and the grain futures act for the farmer.

To promote our foreign trade it amended the Edge Act to facilitate the organization of corporations engaging in export business.

It provided for the reorganization of the Philippine financial system and an extension of Philippine credit in order to save the islands from bankruptcy, which they were facing as a result of eight years of government under the Democratic régime.

It came to the relief of drouth-stricken areas in our own country, extended the time of payment due on irrigation and reclamation projects, granted liberal aid for public roads, extended relief to the starving millions of Russia, reorganized the Indian Bureau, strengthened the enforcement of the Federal prohibition amendment, provided for the creation of more Federal courts in order to relieve the congestion of business and expedite justice, and created a commission to investigate the coal industry.

In addition, the United States Senate in less than 30 days ratified seven treaties formulated at the Arms Conference, which moved the world toward peace and committed the nations to a reduction of naval armament and a consequent reduction in taxation.

Mr. President, I could stand here for one solid hour and rehearse what has been accomplished by this administration, and I say, without a question of doubt, that no legislature that ever met has passed so many beneficial laws as has the present Congress under this administration.

Mr. President, I told the Senator from Tennessee that I would yield the floor in order that he might have 10 minutes, and therefore I now yield, carrying out my promise.

PENINSULA OF PRESQUE ISLE, ERIE, PA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 10144, conveying to the State of Pennsylvania the peninsula of Presque Isle, and there was no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLITICAL ISSUES.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what I have to say was not intended as an answer to what the Senator from Utah has just said, but I think it will prove an answer to his statement.

The President in his message vetoing the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, among other things, said: "The pressing problem of the Government is that of diminishing our burdens rather than adding thereto." This sentiment is most highly to be commended. The burdens of taxation are great and should be lowered. It is a great pity that the President has not advocated and applied this policy generally. It is a great pity that he limits this policy solely to the ex-service men. He did not apply it to the various pieces of legislation under which sums were granted to the transportation interests, largely in excess of those provided for in the adjusted compensation bill for the ex-service men. Nor did he apply this policy to the readjustment of the compensation of the war contractors, many of them commonly called profiteers. Nor did he apply this policy to the compensation of the civilian employees of the Government. Nor has it been applied to any other activity of the Government. It is a policy that he has limited solely to the ex-service men.

Under his administration and with his approval the transportation interests have gotten theirs, the war contractors have gotten theirs, the profiteers have gotten theirs, the tariff barons have gotten theirs, the Sugar Trust have gotten theirs, the Steel Trust have gotten theirs, the Wool Trust have gotten theirs, the Dye Trust have gotten theirs, the Powder Trust have gotten theirs, and all the other hundreds of special interests have gotten theirs at the hands of this administration, with the approval of the President; but when it comes to the ex-service men, they are denied even a just compensation for their actual work—a compensation that the President himself says is "pitiably small"—on the plea of economy.

It is true that the shipping interests have not gotten theirs yet in full, but the President has recommended that our merchant marine, which cost us about $3,000,000,000, shall be turned over to the shipping interests for comparatively nothing, and then give those interests a subsidy or bonus estimated at something like $75,000,000 a year for at least 10 years, amounting in full to some $750,000,000. While our merchant marine cost us $3,000,000,000, it is estimated that if the ship subsidy bill goes through the Government will not realize $200,000,000 for all of them. It is said that the President even expects to call an extra session in November to give this vast bonus or subsidy to the shipping interests. The proposed bonus to the shipping interests alone will be vastly greater than the proposed increase in pay to the soldiers.

Again, Mr. President, the President has already approved two bills giving $24,000,000 to the people of Russia. Nobody ever knew whether the people of Russia were any more in need of this gift than were the people of the United States at the time. There were doubtless many out of employment in Russia and maybe some hungry there, just as there were in this country many out of employment and doubtless some hungry. But, no doubt, promises had been made in the 1920 campaign which produced votes for the Republican Party, and these promises for votes had to be met. So $24,000,000 were given to the people of Russia. I do not know whether they even thanked us for it or not. After Congress voted the $24,000,000, that seems to have been the last of it, and nobody seems to have heard that there were any more people in distress over there. If the President had been such an economist, surely he would have vetoed this gift.

Again, the President has recommended a loan or gift of $5,000,000 to Liberia and, as I understand it, wants the bill passed now. The people of Liberia do not vote in this country, but there are many colored citizens who do and who did in 1920, and this promise must be sacredly kept although it costs the Government $5,000,000 and nothing will ever be returned on that account. This would seem to be somewhat extravagant. There is no reason for it. We are under no obligations to the people of Liberia of any kind or description, but in the eyes of the Executive, apparently, it is a sacred matter, much more sacred than any policy of economy.

Again, if I correctly recall the facts, when it was proposed to economize in our Military Establishment the President urged a much larger one and one which would have cost the Government thirty or forty million dollars more.

Again, when the Navy bill was before the Congress the President urged a much more expensive Navy, though much ado had been made by the administration about reducing armaments. Economy was not the watchword then.

Again, Mr. President, though much ado was made by the administration about the economy of a Budget system, still we find that already deficiency bills are before the Congress notwithstanding that the fiscal year is less than three months old. It is estimated that notwithstanding the Budget, which was within itself a great expense, there will be something like $650,000,000 of deficiencies this year. The chances are before the year is over it will be nearer a billion dollars. There have been vast increases in salaries. The salaries of the officials of the Shipping Board, for instance, have been so greatly increased and so often referred to that they have become a stench in the nostrils of the people. In every department salaries have been increased and expenses have been increased until the Government has become, under this administration, a veritable riot or orgy of extravagance. The lone and single attempt of economy by this administration has been in the pay of the common soldiers who fought during the war.

Again, the Congress has passed and the Executive has given his approval to a tariff measure that imposes additional burdens, or at least six billons of dollars, upon the American people, and which gives him authority if it is constitutional, it is estimated, to increase those burdens to ten billions of dollars, and all this not for the purpose of raising revenue for the Government but for the purpose of protecting a comparatively few of the favored interests in this country. Besides this legalized graft the burden of the bonus bill dwindles into insignificance.

The Underwood tariff law has brought into the Treasury about $300,000,000 a year on an average for the past three years. Even the advocates of the just enacted tariff law do not claim it will bring in over $400,000,000 a year and an addition of $100,000,000 a year to the Government. It is generally believed it will not bring an additional $50,000,000 a year to the Government, and yet it imposes an additional burden on the people of the United States of from six to ten billion dollars, of benefit to the favored few and of great injury to all the people, but to the benefit of those who contributed to the election of the President and a Republican administration in the last campaign. That debt to these favored interests, to these special interests, is considered binding upon the consciences of the President and his party; but the promise of the President and his party to readjust the compensation of the ex-service men is treated as a mere scrap of paper, on the ground of economy that has been practiced in no other law passed by the Congress.

Mr. President, the opponents of the adjusted compensation bill speak of the entire cost of the measure as if the $4,000,000,000 required therefor would have to be paid out immediately. As a matter of fact, it is spread out over 20 years—an average of $50,000,000 a year for 20 years—and in comparison with the burdens of the tariff law and of the proposed ship subsidy law, both of which are warmly espoused by the President, it is comparatively no burden at all. The President's figures are inaccurate. The Actuary of the Treasury Department has given the accurate figures.

More than this, the payment of interest on our foreign obligations will begin in part in October and be amply sufficient to meet the payments required under the adjusted compensation bill if it is passed. It is certainly remarkable how anyone can take the position that this bill should be vetoed on account of economy, and at the same time take the position that we ought to turn our merchant marine over to the shipping interests and give them a subsidy which will prove quite as large as the compensation of the soldiers, and again at the same time approve a tariff bill which taxes the American people from six to ten billion dollars a year. The position of the President can only be upheld by the old adage that "consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds," because he says not only that the ex-service men merit a better compensation but that the compensation proposed is "pitiably small," and his principal effort at economy is against the ex-service men. If it is right to readjust the compensaton of the ex-service men, it should be done. If it is not right, it should not be done. That is all there is in the question. The Government is able to do it. I believed it was right to readjust the compensation, and I therefore voted to pass the bill over the President's veto. We should economize in other matters. Not in this alone.

I respectfully submit that on the question of economy the history of this Congress shows it to have been a deplorable failure.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CURTIS and Mr. UNDERWOOD appeared, and Mr. CURTIS said:

Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to join a similar committee on the part of the House to communicate to the President that the Congress had completed its work and was ready to adjourn unless he had a further communication to make to it, beg to report that they have called upon the President, and the President advises the committee to inform the Congress that he has no further communication to make.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3300) granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed by the Chair to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session, and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

And that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. OLDFIELD the committee on the part of the House under the above resolution.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3540. An act fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions;

S. 3620. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at or near Tilton, Lawrence County, Miss.;

H. R. 6750. An act for the inclusion of certain lands in the Wenatchee National Forest, the Olympic National Forest, and the Snoqualmie National Forest, all in the State of Washington, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12704. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution providing for an additional investigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska; and

H. J. Res. 382. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

SUPPRESSION OF MOB VIOLENCE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to protest strongly against any adjournment of the Senate until action has been had upon the bill (H. R. 13) commonly known as the Dyer antilynching bill. I am, as are others, personally interested in the outcome of the pending elections, being a candidate for reelection before the people of my State, and regard it as important that I should go to West Virginia for the purpose of carrying on a campaign. I believe, however, that it is of more importance to the Nation that this bill should be enacted into law than that I should have the opportunity to present my case to the electorate of West Virginia, or that others of this body similarly situated should do so.

Mr. President, if there is any one thing which is distinctly a blot upon our boasted civilization, it is the crime of lynching. I am aware that there are many unspeakable crimes committed which cause red-blooded men and women to cry for immediate vengeance, and that the desire to prevent the appearance in court of victims of these outrages is one of the reasons given by citizens of this country for taking the law into their hands and themselves violating the fundamental law of the land. If we are to admit that crimes of whatever character are to be punished by individuals without submitting the case to judge or jury, as guaranteed by the constitution of every State in the Union and by the Constitution of the United States, then we are indeed striking at the very foundations of law and order.

Every outburst of this character in defiance of the orderly procedure of the courts is a blow at right and justice and in violation of the fundamental principles of government. It begets a contempt for law and breeds a disposition upon the part of those inflamed by passion, even on account of minor offenses, to commit murder under the guise of wreaking vengeance for the protection of society. If we admit this principle, how can any one of us or our families be safe? It is perfectly evident that drastic measures must be taken in order to prevent the recurrence of these crimes, and the pending measure seems to offer an effective means for their prevention and to inflict penalties upon communities which do not afford adequate protection to their citizens against the fury of mobs.

Mr. President, as has been well pointed out by the Senator reporting this bill from the Judiciary Committee, the able Senator from California, this bill is by no means sectional in its application. There is hardly any section of our country that has not at times been the scene of these crimes, and the victims of these crimes are not confined to those of any race or color. The pending bill is broad in its application and is designed and will tend to prevent the commission of those crimes against any and all classes of citizens in every part of our country.

The constitutionality of the act will no doubt be fully argued by the able lawyers in this body on both sides of the question and I shall not attempt any defense of the bill upon that point. I have, during the nearly 10 years I have been a Member of both Houses of Congress, heard able lawyers inveigh against pending measures on the ground that they were unconstitutional, only to have these measures reviewed by the court of final resort and declared to be constitutional. For my part, after the careful consideration given to this bill by the able lawyers upon the Judiciary Committee, I am willing and anxious to vote for it and let the question of its constitutionality be passed upon in due course of time by the Supreme Court.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I will quote the three final paragraphs from the report of the committee reporting this bill:

The proposed legislation is not an invasion or subversion of the rights of the States, nor is it designed to relieve the States from the performance of their duty to secure to all persons within their several jurisdictions equal protection of the laws; on the contrary, the proposed legislation is in aid of the several States and will be impartially administered by the people of the several States.

It is sincerely hoped and confidently believed that the early passage of this bill as amended will have a salutary effect and go far toward insuring that "equal protection of the laws," State and Federal, to which "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" are entitled.

American citizenship is indeed a badge of honor; it should be, and this bill seeks to make it, a shield of protection to every American citizen, man, woman, and child, native and naturalized, who stands on American soil, hedged round and guarded, as they are, by the Constitution of the United States.

CAUSES OF RECENT INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit for the RECORD, to be printed in 8-point type, a statement which I have prepared on the causes of the recent industrial depression.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF ROBERT L. OWEN, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM OKLAHOMA, WITH REGARD TO THE CAUSES OF THE RECENT AND EXISTING INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION—REPUBLICAN PARTY LARGELY RESPONSIBLE FOR DEFLATION OF CREDIT AND CURRENCY AND THE SEVERITY OF THE INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION.

The Federal reserve act was intended to give stability to credits, industry, and commerce and to prevent unwarranted inflation or unwarranted deflation. As chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate, which framed and passed this act, I am justified in this statement.

When the United States entered the war in 1917, and purchasing agents with unlimited money were turned loose to buy war materials without limit on cost, it caused commodity prices to rise in an unprecedented manner, these prices going up two and three hundred per cent.

When the war ceased and the purchasing agents were discharged and the surplus war materials put on the market by forced sales and the nations of the world went back to peaceful processes, millions of men again became productive, the volume of commodities increased, and the urgency of the demand diminished, and therefore there took place, of necessity, a great fall in commodity prices, causing heavy losses through inventories which had to be rewritten. This had a natural tendency to bring about an industrial reaction.

But it was a process which was accomplished somewhat slowly and only began to make itself felt in the fall of 1919.

No man and no party should be held responsible for this natural reaction from the high prices of war; but if the powers of the Federal reserve act had been wisely employed, an industrial depression could have been largely avoided and its effects mitigated.

In the election of 1918 the tremendous discontents due to our war activities were successfully employed by the Republican Party leaders, and they elected a majority of Republicans to the House of Representatives, and by a gigantic effort, and obtained through the lavish use of money in many States, and especially in Michigan, were able, by Senator NEWBERRY'S vote, a single vote, to organize the United States Senate. They therefore organized and controlled the Sixty-sixth Congress, which met May 19, 1919.

Immediately the influence of the Republican control of the two Houses of Congress made itself felt on the Federal Reserve Board, whose membership, nominated by Secretary W. G. McAdoo, with a single exception, was reactionary and ultraconservative.

Gov. W. P. G. Harding, under this Republican influence, and representing the Federal Reserve Board, thereupon determined upon a policy of deflation. About the 1st of July, 1919, as governor of the reserve board, he went to New York City, called the leading bankers together, and notified them that they would have to cut down their loans on stocks and bonds, which at that time amounted to about nineteen hundred millions of dollars.

With this Government support and this Government demand, the New York banks promptly began a policy of deflation, which they made effective by raising interest rates, charging more and more for money and credit. The call rate, which had been at a very reasonable point, began to rise to 5, 7, 10, 15, 20, and as high as 30 per cent by November, 1919, with the apparent approval of the Federal Reserve Board, who did nothing effective to stop it, in spite of a demand that they should do so. The running up of the rates to 30 per cent on call in New York shocked the confidence of the country, drew money violently from various industrial centers to New York, and broke the stock market, resulting in losses eventually running into thousands of millions in the value of stocks and bonds.

Along in December, 1919, the Reserve Board, under the Republican influences to which I have referred, began to consider raising the rates of the Federal reserve banks and, over my vigorous personal protest made in person to the members of the Federal Reserve Board and then by writing, they did raise the rates of interest. Then on the floor of the United States Senate I protested against the ruinous deflation policy.

In the meantime the Kansas City Title & Trust Co. tied up all the loans of the Federal farm loan banks by a suit intended to test the constitutionality of the farm loan act. (Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., 255 U. S. Sup. Ct., p. 180.) The banks of the country followed the bad example of the Federal reserve banks in contracting credits.

In the spring of 1920 the Republican Congress passed an amendment to the Federal reserve banking law empowering the Federal Reserve Board to increase the rediscount rates without limit, and under this act the board permitted the Federal reserve banks to run the rates up in a manner to violently affect the stability of credits in the United States, in one egregious case the rate going over 80 per cent per annum and in many cases going up to 12, 15, and 20 per cent.

Unable to influence the Federal Reserve Board in favor of lower interest rates, I wrote a letter to the President on February 13, 1920, but his unfortunate illness made it impossible for him to consider it.

On February 16, 1920, I raised my voice on the floor of the Senate against this destructive policy and put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my letter to the President explaining how speculation and hoarding could be prevented and controlled without these excessive interest rates and without deflation of credit. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2937. Exhibit A.)

Again, on March 8, 1920, on the floor of the Senate (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 4001), I raised my voice against this destructive policy and high interest rates, but the protest was unavailing with the Republican leaders of the Congress.

Again, on April 21 Senator MCCUMBER, now chairman of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate, urged that the Federal reserve act should be modified so as to compel contraction (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 5936) of the currency, and he complained about the greatly inflated currency and attributed the high prices of war to an "inflated" currency. He urged a contraction of the currency.

The Federal Reserve Board, under these Republican influences, put great pressure to bear on the banks to compel them to sell Government bonds which, under high interest rates, had fallen severely in market price, and again I protested against the high interest rates on April 30, 1920 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 6337) and showed how speculation and hoarding could be controlled without raising the rates of interest and without deflation of credit or currency, and I put in the RECORD on that day a letter which I had written to the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, April 27, 1920, protesting against raising the interest rates, and I said to him (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 6337. Exhibit B):

"The Federal Reserve Board can not permit itself to be held responsible for the consequence that will ensue if it persists in this policy of raising the interest rates as a remedy for speculation."

The board asserted they were raising the rates and deflating credits to check speculation.

I explained to him in this letter how speculation could be controlled without raising the interest rates, and I urged the board to pursue a policy that would give stability to credit and avoid the dangers that would ensue if the powers of the board were used to break down confidence and credit in the United States. Unhappily the Federal Reserve Board, under the influence of the Republican leaders, refused to listen to my pleading.

In the interest of those who had dollars they seemed determined to make the dollars buy more by a policy of indiscriminate deflation and currency contraction.

I urged that the dollars could be made more valuable by increasing the volume of commodities through industry and prosperity rather than to make the dollars more valuable under industrial depression by the hammer of the auctioneer and reducing the cost of commodities below the cost of production.

On May 3d, 1920, the governor of the reserve board replied to my appeals, but did not change the policy of the board. He said, however (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 6556), that:

"During the year 1919 the board tested the policy of attempting to control the credit situation by admonition and warnings without raising rates."

The board did far more than use admonitions and warnings to bring about deflation and "control the credit situation." It issued its bulletins and gave its counsel and advice and issued rules and regulations, all of which went to carry out the policy of indiscriminate deflation, all of which had the purpose to limit credits throughout the United States and to reduce the volume of currency required and had the effect to break values ruinously and to create a terrible industrial depression and ruin tens of thousands.

On May 14, 1920 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 7039), I replied to Governor Harding's letter, insisting that the Federal reserve system was intended to give stability to credit, that it was not a money-making institution, and I pointed out:

"The Federal Reserve Board is thinking much these days of deflating credit. The idea has been much exploited recently that it is a good thing to deflate credit."

And against this policy I entered my vigorous protest, fully set forth in the RECORD, and I put in the RECORD a letter dated May 14, 1920, to Governor Harding (Exhibit C), so that there might be no doubt that my appeal to the Federal Reserve Board for liberality in treatment for the country was made and was unavailing. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 7042.)

The Reserve Board declared automobiles and various commodities nonessentials and advised the banks to refuse credits on automobiles and on many other things, including commodities in storage.

The answer which the Reserve Board gave me in answer to my letter was Senate Resolution 363, submitted by Mr. MCCORMICK, leading Republican Senator from Illinois, to the following effect:

"Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal reserve system to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices," and so forth.

The Republican Senate passed this resolution, which was expressly intended to be a notice to the Federal Reserve Board by the Republican Party that they were expected to deflate "the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices," attributing to inflation the high prices instead of to the results of the war.

On May 18, 1920 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 71993), I again addressed the Senate on this question and protested against the resolution of the Senator from Illinois and I warned the Federal Reserve Board and I warned the country that an industrial depression would result from the policy of forced deflation (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7200). I pointed out that the earnings of the Federal reserve banks were running up to nearly 200 per cent per annum. I charged the Republican Party then and there with being responsible for the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board. Mr. MCLEAN, who was then chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, defended the high discount rates (May 18, 1920).

But, Mr. President, the responsibility of the Republican Party for the policy of indiscriminate deflation was fully assumed by the leaders of that party at the Chicago convention in June, 1920, in the following plank:

"The prime cause of the high cost of living has been first and foremost a 50 per cent depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar, due to a gross expansion of our currency and credit. We condemn the unsound fiscal policies of the Democratic administration. As the political party that throughout its history has stood for honest money and sound finance we pledge ourselves to earnest and consistent attack upon the high cost of living by rigorous avoidance of further inflation in our Government borrowing and by courageous and intelligent deflation of our overexpanded credit and currency."

They deliberately declared in favor of a deflation of credit and currency and brazenly called it courageous and intelligent. They could only do it through the Federal Reserve Board as they had already been doing it by the Federal Reserve Board.

On July 22, 1920, Mr. Harding, Republican nominee for President, in his speech of acceptance, said:

"Gross expansion of currency and credit have depreciated the dollar. * * * Deflation on the one hand and restoration of the 100-cent dollar on the other ought to have begun on the day after the armistice. * * * We pledge that earnest and consistent attack which the party platform covenants. We will attempt intelligent and courageous deflation, and strike at Government borrowing, which enlarges the evil."

And there is not the slightest doubt, therefore, about the Republican responsibility for the drastic deflation which took place in their determined policy to deflate credit and currency. Its terrible effects upon the country are well known.

I was not alone in my efforts to prevent this drastic deflation policy pursued by the Republican leaders, acting through the Reserve Board and Governor Harding, of the Reserve Board, because Hon. John Skelton Williams, then Comptroller of the Currency—the best the Nation ever had—also vigorously protested against the high rates of interest, as will appear from his statement made September 11, 1920, and printed in the Report of the Comptroller of the Currency of 1920, page 82.

On September 11, 1920, the comptroller made public the following additional statement in regard to interest rates in New York, which explains itself:

"SEPTEMBER 11, 1920.

"A leading New York paper, in its financial columns to-day, criticizes the statements made this week by Senator OWEN relative to the excessive interest rates which have been charged by certain banks in New York City during the past year, and says that bankers 'point out that when Senator OWEN charges that $500,000,000 has been loaned at rates up to 30 per cent he is speaking without the record.' Continuing, the press article says:

"'That high figure obtained on the stock exchange for about 10 minutes one afternoon the middle of last November, and probably as much as $1,000,000 was loaned at that rate.'

"That criticism by the unnamed 'bankers' is misleading, and in justice to Senator OWEN it is proper to say that the Senator's public statements on this subject, as printed in the press dispatches which have been brought to my attention, are substantially correct, and in view of actual facts are moderate and conservative.

"During the past year the burdensome and oppressive interest rates to which the Senator refers have been exacted, not in 'one or two possible insignificant instances,' as one New York paper expressed it, and not as the 'high figure' as another paper expressed it, 'for about 10 minutes one afternoon the middle of last November,' but in thousands of instances, at numerous times, and upon call loans aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars.

"The information on this subject called for as of August 5, from all of the New York City banks has been supplied by nearly all of them and is now being compiled; but in anticipation of a more complete statement which will be available later, it may be interesting to the public to know that the amount of demand loans, upon which two or three of the banks, only (exclusively of various others which were charging the same rates), were exacting 20 per cent or more per annum interest (in some instances as high as 25 and 30 per cent) was—

On November 13, 1919, about	$50,000,000
On November 14, 1919, about	40,000,000
The new call loans at the rate of 25 per cent per annum made by one of these banks at the end of 1919, on December 29, 30, and 31, aggregated about	20,000,000
On January 2, 1920, these same two or three banks were lending at 18 per cent, 20 per cent, and 25 per cent interest, about	75,000,000
On January 3, 4, and 5, at 18 per cent interest from $60,000,000 to	70,000,000
On February 6, 1920, at 20 per cent and 25 per cent interest, over	40,000,000
On February 9, 1920, at 20 per cent interest, about	40,000,000

"As late as the end of June it appears that interest as high as 14 per cent per annum was being demanded by these banks on millions of dollars of call loans.

"These illustrations are from the official records of only two or three of the thirty-odd national banks in New York City, but they are sufficient, I think, to show the unfairness and incorrectness of the criticisms of Senator OWEN'S just condemnation of the excessive interest rates which for some time past have been a distinctly disturbing factor in the business and financial situation.

"I am pleased to confirm the statement I made some time ago that although the aggregate amount upon which unjust and oppressive interest rates have at times been exacted by some banks is very large, a majority of the national banks in New York City have made a comparatively small proportion of their loans at these indefensible rates."

The comptroller denounces these high interest rates in his report from pages 79 to 105.

The result of this drastic deflation of the Republican Party was that there was a decrease, from September, 1920, to September 6, 1921, of $2,191,104,000 in the deposit of the national banks; a decrease of $1,042,186,000 in the deposit of the State banks; a decrease in the loans and discounts of the Federal reserve banks of $1,621,630,000, and a decrease of Federal reserve notes in circulation of $957,371,000; a decrease in Federal reserve bank notes of $131,085,000; the loans and discounts of the national banks decreased $1,446,858,000, and other banks' loans and discounts decreased $481,882,000—a total contraction of credits amounting to over five billions in the space of one year.

On May 28, 1920, the outstanding credits of the Federal reserve banks were $2,938,031,000; on January 25, 1922, the outstanding credits of the 12 Federal reserve banks had fallen to $932,882,000—a total contraction in 20 months of $2,005,149,000.

Besides this gigantic deflation, private individuals from one end of the land to the other were frightened into following the same policy and in their relations with each other outside of the banks the same cowardly and injurious policy was followed, creditors pressing debtors for settlement to the ruin of the debtors.

Of course this resulted in the ruin of hundreds of thousands of farmers; of men engaged in cattle raising and in sheep raising and in animal industry. It ruined many merchants, manufacturers, and business men, and even ruined very many bankers. Of course it brought wages down and was intended to bring wages down.

Of course it paralyzed business until the process was completed. It caused the great strikes of the country.

The prices of the things, however, that the farmer and wage earner and great consuming classes have to buy, being controlled by the trusts and monopolists and by profiteers, still remain at a figure much too high.

To prevent the possibility of foreign competition with domestic extortion, the Republican Congress has now enacted the highest tariff protection bill in the history of the country.

The responsibility of the Republican Party for the great industrial depression we have suffered is thoroughly well established and must be acceded by every man with an open and a just mind who loves the truth first and party success second.

A few great bankers who think alone in terms of dollars and the purchasing power of dollars demanded the deflation of currency and of credits to increase the purchasing power of their dollars.

The Republican Party accepted the advice and carried out the policy. God save the American people. Torn and misled by a million grievances arising against the Democratic Party because of the autocracy and abuses of war, the people voted for a change. They got a change from wonderful prosperity in 1918 to a terrible depression in 1921. It is time for another change. The Republican leadership is controlled by reaction. The country is truly progressive and liberal, and to this spirit the Democracy must appeal.

EXHIBIT A.

FEBRUARY 13, 1920.

Subject: Interest rates.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I deem it my duty to call your attention and the attention of your administration to the importance of moderate interest rates and stability therein in the United States and the important part which the influence of the Government can exert in accomplishing these ends through the Treasury Department, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Reserve Board.

Before the Great War Belgium had a fixed, stable rate of 3 per cent for 50 years and the rate in France was practically the same, and United States Government bonds with the circulation privilege were sold at and above par when they bore only 2 per cent interest.

During the World War London merchants have enjoyed a 3½ per cent rate on acceptances.

Our manufacturers, our merchants, our business men are entitled to reliable, stable, reasonable rates of interest.

The productive and distributive processes so essential to restore the equilibrium of the world depend upon such rates in order to function most efficiently.

I call your attention to the unreasonable manner in which the interest rates on the stock collateral loans in New York have been fluctuating from normal to 25 and 30 per cent, with the most unhappy consequences upon interest rates, injuriously affecting our commercial business throughout the United States.

The Federal Reserve Board has been induced to raise the rate of discount of the Federal reserve banks to a high point as a supposed check on the extraordinary speculation which has been taking place on the stock exchange.

These artificially unreasonable high rates of interest charged by the banks in the central cities on stock collateral call loans have had the effect of drawing to these cities from different parts of the country funds which ought to be exclusively used in commerce, and this process went to a point where recently the amount of stock collateral exchange loans on call or short time reached a volume in New York City of $1,900,000,000, withdrawing for speculative purposes these credits which should be used in the industrial and commercial life of the country.

The investing and speculating public has been attracted to the stock exchange by the policy of narrow margins and low rates of interest; but after the public has taken on these speculative purchases the interest rates are raised to a high point and the margins are increased from 10 per cent to 20 and 30 per cent, with the effect of squeezing out the people who, in the language of the day, "can't hold on."

These loans, which were $1,900,000,000, 60 days ago, have now been reduced to $1,000,000,000, and the stock market has gone through a very severe depreciation; and this is the second upheaval of this kind within two months. I inclose an exhibit showing the violent fluctuations which have taken place contrary to a wise public policy, to the ruin of many weak and foolish speculators; but, above all, to the injury of the manufacturers, merchants, and business men who are entitled to have stable, moderate interest rates.

The manufacturers, merchants, and business men are entitled to stability. They can not otherwise transact the business of the country with safety; and in their name and on their behalf I respectfully and very earnestly insist that the Government shall establish a policy which will give stability to interest rates, prevent these violent fluctuations, and lead to lower interest rates.

Will the question be asked, How can it be done? I venture to answer:

First. That the influence of the Comptroller of the Currency and of the Federal Reserve Board be exerted to require a limitation upon loans made by member banks or banks engaged in interstate commerce, so that only a reasonable percentage of the deposits of such banks shall be permitted to be used for the accommodation of those who are buying stocks for speculative purposes.

Second. That a margin of not less than 25 per cent shall be required in such transactions.

Third. That an interest rate not exceeding 8 per cent shall be permitted in such transactions.

Fourth. That the reserve board shall charge a special rate of interest to those banks who are using the accommodations of the discount privileges with the reserve banks in excess of their rightful proportionate part of such accommodation, so that the normal discount rates of the Federal reserve banks shall not exceed 4 per cent, but the special rate for banks desiring to use more than their rightful proportion of the reserves with the reserve banks shall be at a progressively higher rate. In this way banks that put up Liberty bonds for the purpose of getting more than their proportionate part and lending this money out on very high rates of interest will find it less profitable to engage in such a policy.

The discount rates of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, for example, effective January 23, 1920, included the following:

	15 days and under.	16 to 90 days.	91 days to 6 months.
Member banks:	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Secured by United States certificate of debt	4½	.....	.....
Secured by Liberty bonds	5½	.....	.....
Secured by eligible paper	6	.....	.....
Secured by War Finance Corporation bonds	7	.....	.....
Rediscounts:
Customers' notes—
Secured by United States certificates of debt	4½	4½	.....
Secured by Liberty bonds	5½	5½	.....
Secured by War Finance Corporation bonds	7	7	.....
Trade acceptances	6	6	.....
Commercial paper	6	6	.....
Agricultural or live-stock paper	6	6	6

You will observe from these discount rates that eligible paper—that is, the notes of manufacturers, merchants, and business men engaged in production and distribution—would be compelled to pay around 8 per cent if the member bank is permitted any margin over and above what they themselves have to pay the reserve bank. This is true even on trade acceptances, which in London have a rate of 3½ per cent. In other words, our manufacturers, merchants, and business men engaged in production and distribution are compelled to pay by this policy twice as much as they do in London, charging the interest, of course, upon the cost of the goods, and thus raising the cost of living. Against this policy I enter my resolute and solemn protest.

I heartily approve the evident purpose of the Federal Reserve Board to reduce the excessive speculative loans on the stock market and divert such credits to the benefit of commerce; but this can be accomplished without raising the rate of interest by requiring larger collateral margins and by limiting stock collateral loans to a reasonable part of the reserves of the member banks, and all loans to a proportionate part of the reserves with the Federal reserve banks.

LIBERTY LOAN AND VICTORY LOAN BONDS.

When the American people were engaged in the war the Treasury Department organized Liberty and Victory loan drives, and every citizen was urged to buy these bonds; if necessary, to sell his property and buy the bonds; to borrow money and buy the bonds. The bonds were sold at par. It was a patriotic duty to buy the bonds, but the high rates of interest which have resulted from the unrestrained speculation on the stock exchange, and the high rates of interest which the reserve banks have established, have had the effect of having these bonds appear as a poor investment, and these bonds have shrunk so that in the case of the bonds which have not the nontaxable feature they have fallen off in value almost 10 per cent, inducing many persons who are poor and who borrowed money to carry these bonds to sell them at a loss, and many more will be induced to sell them at a loss, contrary to a wise and just public policy.

If the normal discount rate of the Federal reserve banks were put at 4 per cent and the banks were discouraged from abusing the privileges of the reserve banks for stock-speculative purposes in the manner which I have pointed out, these bonds would come back to par, and they should be brought back to par. The people who bought these bonds ought not to suffer a loss, and the credit of the United States ought to be preserved by the policy which I have taken the liberty to suggest to you and to your administration.

The result of these speculative stock loans has been such that the New York Federal reserve bank has had its reserve very seriously impaired, so that the New York reserve bank has been borrowing money on a large scale from other reserve banks who do not suffer from this strain.

There is no adequate reason why the rates of the reserve banks should not be uniform; why they ought to be higher in one part of the country and lower in another part of the country. The loans are as reliable in one part of the country as in another, and every part of the country is entitled to a uniform rate.

The high cost of living demands for its solution stability in interest rates in order to encourage production and distribution, and to reduce the high cost of living demands a moderate rate of interest.

The Federal reserve banks were not established as money-making institutions, but for the purpose of giving stability and a reasonable stable interest to the productive enterprises of the Nation.

The Federal reserve banks last year made a profit of about 100 per cent of their capital; but this in no way measures the added expense on the cost of living, because the high rate of interest charged by the Federal reserve banks is reflected upon loans and discounts of other banks running into the billions, since it affects the interest rates in all parts of the country.

I regard this matter as a matter of national importance, and I would not feel that I had discharged my duty to the country if I had failed to call your attention to it in these explicit terms.

Yours very respectfully,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

EXHIBIT B.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
April 27, 1920.

Hon. W. P. G. HARDING,
Governor Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have been intending to call to see you and beg of you and of the Federal Reserve Board to consider the injurious effects of raising the interest rates in America in its relation to adding to the high cost of living and in its relation to bearing down the market value of Government bonds.

I have just received a telegram from the president of an important national bank. He explained to me that his bank had bought and underwritten a much larger volume of Government bonds than they would have done normally because of important Government works put up in his city. Thousands of employees who were compelled to buy Government bonds unloaded them on the bank when the war suddenly ended, and he has been unable to sell these bonds on a falling market, and the market is falling because the reserve board has raised the rate of interest and set the example to the banks of the United States and justified them to their own conscience and to their customers in raising the rate approximately 2 per cent throughout the Union. For your consideration I quote the telegram:

> Can nothing be done to give Liberty bonds some standing? The Federal reserve bank is pressing us unmercifully to sell what we have, and has served notice that they will rediscount no commercial paper until we do so, and as you know this can only be done in the New York Exchange at panic prices, it makes a serious and very embarrassing situation which might be very far-reaching.

The reserve banks should be cautioned in pressing the banks too far to sell these bonds on a falling market. This particular bank, I invite you to observe, would receive a great injury, and you will be unable to repair it afterwards.

The Federal Reserve Board can not permit itself to be held responsible for the consequences that will ensue if it persists in this policy of raising the interest rates as a remedy for speculation. This remedy is worse than the disease.

This remedy is not necessary because there are other available remedies whose consequences will be harmless. I venture to suggest several:

First. That the banks be advised to require loans for speculative purposes to be gradually reduced;

Second. That the banks be required to demand increased margins on such loans;

Third. That the banks be invited to raise the rate on such speculative loans, and not raise the rates on loans upon which the manufacturer, the commercial, and industrial life of the Nation depend; and Fourth. That the banks be invited and required to refuse new speculative loans on investment securities.

My dear Governor, the bondholders of the United States have already suffered a loss in the market value of their bonds of over $2,000,000,000. Bonds which they bought as a patriotic duty; bonds which they bought on borrowed money; bonds which they bought at a sacrifice.

The Government should not through its own agencies destroy the value of these securities by pursuing a policy of raising the interest rates, and I beg you, and I beg the board through you, to change this policy.

Moreover, my dear Governor, I call your attention to the unpardonable and scandalous practice of the usurious charges current in New York City, where on call loans, the stock-exchange collateral, the rates have been running as high as 30 per cent. I enter my solemn protest against this, and on behalf of the people of my State and the people of the United States I call upon the Federal Reserve Board to put an end to this nefarious practice which sets a false standard to the people of the United States in the matter of interest rates, and which has been used to justify the Federal Reserve Board to raise the rates on the whole country for the avowed purpose of stopping speculation when no such remedy was necessary.

Yours, very respectfully,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

EXHIBIT C.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
May 14, 1920.

Hon. W. P. G. HARDING,
Governor Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I thank you for your letter of May 3, answering my letter of April 27, in which I urged the Federal Reserve Board to lower the interest rates of the reserve banks as a means of helping to restore Liberty bonds to par.

The Secretary of the Treasury and every agency of the Government, including the reserve banks and the member banks, cooperated in a strenuous drive to induce the American people to buy Liberty bonds. The people were told to buy the bonds until it hurt. They sold their property, they borrowed money, they mortgaged their homes to buy these bonds on the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury that there was no better security, and they had a right to believe that these bonds would be maintained at par. But, my dear Governor, if you permit these high rates of interest, of which I have justly complained, the inevitable consequence will be that these Government bonds must go still lower than they are now instead of reacting to par.

The violent fluctuating high interest rates on the New York Stock Exchange which go from 8 to 30 per cent, advertised throughout the country in every important paper in the land, together with the high interest rates of the Federal reserve banks to member banks at 6 and 7 per cent, and the consequent higher commercial rates daily advertised in the public press of 8, 9, and 10 per cent, not to mention commissions on the side and discounts, are jointly impairing confidence and creating an atmosphere of suspicion, distrust, and widespread talk of pending industrial depression and industrial panic.

I have insisted that the powers of the Government should be exercised through the office of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Comptroller of the Currency to remove these causes, which, if persisted in, may cause a serious industrial depression and make Liberty bonds go still lower.

The claim of the New York Stock Exchange that these high and violently fluctuating interest rates on call loans are necessary for the purpose of preventing speculation is indefensible, because they do not prevent speculation. The professional operator immediately speculates in a bear market, which inevitably must follow these artificial high interest rates. The speculator can afford to pay high interest rates, but legitimate business can not. Moreover, the employment of bank credits for speculation can be prevented by harmless methods: First, by the banks refusing new loans for speculative purposes; second, by requiring gradual liquidation of old loans employed in speculation; and, third, by raising the margin on speculative loans.

The remedies I suggest are harmless to the general public. The remedy employed of high interest rates on call loans running up to 30 per cent is destructive of public confidence and threatens industrial depression.

When the Reserve Board raises the rate to 6 and 7 per cent it has the effect not of stopping the speculator but of stopping legitimate business, and putting the brakes on manufacture, commerce, agriculture, on production and distribution.

You quite misunderstand the point when you speak of my contention that the Liberty bond market recently fell because the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate of interest, which you think is disproved by the fact that the bonds fell in April, 1919, to 95 before the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate of interest. My contention is that the high rates of interest on the stock exchange and the high rates charged by member banks on commercial loans based in part on the high rates of the reserve banks, are all factors producing this result, and when the Reserve Board recently raised the rate these bonds went down much lower than they had been before, and they must go lower still if the board persists in this policy. What I contend is that the Federal Reserve Board in raising these rates, and thus adopting the unwise policy of the stock exchange, is depreciating the market value of all securities, including Government bonds.

I understand the Reserve Board desires to deflate credit by raising the rates of interest. Assuredly raising the rates of interest will deflate credits, even the credits of the United States, of which I complain, but I am anxious the Reserve Board shall only deflate those credits that require deflation and not deflate credits of the Government and of legitimate productive business, which ought not to be deflated.

The United States was compelled to expand its credits, and issued $26,000,000,000 of war bonds. The war resulted in an increase of $20,000,000,000 of bank deposits, a total increase of expanded credits of $46,000,000,000. No substantial part of these credits should be deflated at this time. The only deflation of credit justified is the deflation of credits employed in speculative loans on investment securities, on real estate, and on commodities for hoarding by profiteers.

My dear governor, it seems to me that there is some serious misconception existing in the country with regard to what is inflation and what is not inflation. I am certainly opposed to inflation, but I am strongly in favor of the extension of business, increasing production, and improving distribution by extending credits on a stable low-interest rate.

The expansion of credit for such purposes is justified, but, of course, the expansion of credit beyond the available resources, even for the most important of purposes, is not justified. The Bank of England, conducted by the wisest merchants in the world, has not hesitated to extend credits for productive purposes even when the gold reserve was thereby seriously diminished. As you very well know, they went to a very low gold reserve during the war without ever denying credits to their business men who were engaged in legitimate industry. The London merchants had 3½ per cent acceptance rates all during the war, when the British Government paid 5 per cent.

If the people are frightened by the talk of industrial depression, by high interest rates, it has the effect of preventing production and putting the brakes on manufacture and on our entire industrial life.

I do not agree with Secretary Leffingwell that the present depression in Liberty bonds is due to the owners of Liberty bonds spending the bonds recklessly as spendthrifts. People who bought Liberty bonds do not deserve such a classification, although, of course, some individuals out of a very great number are spendthrifts. But the spendthrift quickly parts with his bonds to other people. The spendthrift theory does not explain the terrible depreciation.

If money was cheap and credits were available at low rates, it is perfectly obvious that these bonds would go to par, and just in degree that the banks of the country raise the rates to very high artificial figures to that degree the Liberty bonds and Victory bonds will assuredly fall in market value.

You advise me that the Liberty bonds "can not be brought back to par by artificial methods." They can be depressed by universal high rates of interest artificially fixed by the banks, and that is precisely what has happened and to which I earnestly object.

I do not say that the Federal reserve banks can restore these bonds to par by lending a part of their resources on these bonds at a low figure. What I do say is that the value of these bonds is depressed by the action of the Government in countenancing the scandalous interest rates on the New York Stock Exchange, the unreasonable interest rates by the member banks of the country, and the unfair interest rates by the reserve banks to the member banks.

You very justly say, my dear governor:

"There is a world-wide demand for capital, and the demand for bank credit in this country in agricultural, commercial, and industrial purposes is heavier than has ever been known before; investment demands for new construction, for the maintenance and equipment of railroads, and for the financing of our foreign trade are very great."

Are these just demands to be met by denying the credits, or are they to be repressed by raising the rates to prohibitive points, and thus retard enterprise and production, the employment of labor and capital in creating commodities?

You say the reserve banks would have been "overwhelmed with applications for loans" on Government securities if the reserve banks had continued to offer a low discount rate on paper secured by Government obligation.

I am not advocating the reserve banks lending beyond their resources at any rates or on any securities. I am protesting against the reserve banks setting a bad example to the country by raising the rates of interest on legitimate business engaged in production and distribution. I am objecting, my dear governor, to the reserve board taking advantage of this condition and raising these rates merely because the demand is urgent, when the proper function of the Federal reserve bank is to stabilize the interest rate, keep it at a reasonably low figure, and set a wise and just example to the member banks.

The member banks pay from 2 to 4 per cent for deposits and normally let their money out at from 5 to 7 per cent, with a margin of about 3 per cent. The reserve banks pay no interest on deposits, and 3 per cent is a rate high enough to enable them to make all the money they are entitled to make out of the public. On a 4 per cent rate the Federal Reserve Bank of New York last year made 110 per cent, and I suppose on a 6 and 7 per cent rate they will make this year about 160 per cent. This is precisely what I am objecting to. The Federal reserve banks should not be put in the attitude of profiteering or of setting the example of profiteering to member banks. The powers of the Government are not being properly exerted to stop the scandalous rates of interest on the New York Stock Exchange.

I was advised that six months ago the New York banks had nineteen hundred million dollars loaned on investment securities and the commerce of the country was suffering for credit. I believe, with the board, that these credits on investment securities and speculative loans should be diverted, as far as practicable, to productive purposes, but to raise the rates to 6 and 7 per cent upon all banks alike does not accomplish this end. It merely penalizes all business of every kind and character, regardless of whether they are using their credits for speculative or productive purposes.

What I earnestly desire to call to the attention of the board is that credits ought to be extended at a low rate to the extent of the capacity of the reserve banks for productive purposes; that member banks should be urged to do the same thing, and that the powers of the Government should be exerted against the excessive, violently fluctuating rates on the New York Stock Exchange.

Hoping that the suggestions which I have the honor to make may be of some service to the deliberations of the board and to the country, I remain,

Very respectfully, yours, ROBT. L. OWEN.

OPERATION OF PROHIBITION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for insertion in the RECORD, in 8-point type, the report of Mr. Gifford Gordon, of Australia, on the operation of prohibition in the United States. He reports the result of one of the most careful and painstaking investigations ever made here by a foreign visitor.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as follows:

HOLD FAST, AMERICA.

(By Gifford Gordon.)

Has the prohibition amendment in effect since 1919 accomplished what its proponents expected? Have living conditions in the great Republic improved as a result of the operation of the law which prohibits the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages?

A little over a year ago I was sent to the United States by the Victorian Anti-Liquor League, of Melbourne, Australia, to study the prohibition situation. My mission has taken me to every part of the country. I have traveled 25,000 miles, and visited almost every large city and many of the smaller cities, and pursued my investigation in typical rural communities. The responsibility resting upon me was very heavy, because upon what I should find rested the entire future of the organization I represented.

In my travels I have interviewed hundreds of leaders in every walk of life. I have talked with great employers of labor and with labor leaders, with criminologists, physicians, alienists, Federal, State, and city officials, and private individuals. I have interviewed "the man on the street." I have studied the newspapers and magazines. I have neglected no source of information.

Now, after 12 months of thorough investigation, I am convinced that prohibition in the United States has succeeded. Moreover, I have collected facts and statistics and direct testimony which supports this verdict, and which, I believe, will be accepted as conclusive by any fair-minded, impartial judge.

FACTS VERSUS GOSSIP.

When I landed in New York my first impression was one of doubt and discouragement. I found many excellent Christian people who believed that prohibition had not achieved its purpose. The cause of their discouragement soon became evident when I read the newspapers and listened to the talk of groups of average citizens, men and women, who had made no attempt to learn the facts and whose only source of knowledge was idle gossip.

I went to a great editor and asked him why the newspapers had so much to say about violations of the law and the apparent failure of prohibition, and little or nothing about the beneficial results of its operation. This is what he told me:

"Violation of law is news. Observance of the law is not news. For example, a prominent citizen may lead a life of exemplary virtue, and the newspapers will not comment upon this fact. But let him fall from grace, let him break the law, and he becomes a subject for newspaper headlines."

In my travels I have been amazed to find the lack of knowledge about the operation of prohibition which existed in every part of the country. Not only a lack of knowledge, but a distorted belief due to newspaper accounts of "bootlegging" and deaths due to drinking poisonous liquor. Whenever I have delivered my message the people have flocked about me. "Mr. Gordon," they said, "the people of this country do not know these facts. Most of them have no idea that prohibition has been so successful. You can do no greater service to the prohibition cause than to publish the results of your investigation."

THE WORLD IS WATCHING AMERICA.

I agree with them, and for that reason have written this report to leave behind me in America for the encouragement of those who are working for the final triumph of prohibition here. For the whole world is watching this experiment of yours. As goes prohibition in America, so will prohibition go in Australia, and eventually all over the world.

America, hold fast to that which thou hast! Let no man or set of men rob you of your prohibition crown.

I did not come to America to find out whether prohibition absolutely prohibited. I knew that it did not. No one expected that it would. I came to find out if prohibition, in the face of tremendous handicaps, had justified itself. I wanted to know if it had decreased drunkenness, reduced crime, improved living conditions, encouraged industry, helped the submerged classes, and been a blessing to the great mass of the people.

After a year's careful investigation I can assert that it has done all of these things—perhaps not in full measure, but certainly to the extent that it has overwhelmingly justified the enactment of the antiliquor constitutional amendment.

PROHIBITION AND DRUNKENNESS.

Has prohibition decreased drunkenness?

You would not think so if you lived in a foreign country and obtained your knowledge from the American cable dispatches. You would not think so if you listened to the loose talk that is abroad in this country to-day. But what are the facts? Here are just a few:

Arrests for drunkenness.

New York:
	1915	22,635
	1921	8,169
	Decrease	14,466
San Francisco, Calif.:
	1919	17,354
	1921	5,817
	Decrease	11,537
Los Angeles, Calif.:
	1916	17,510
	1921	6,839
	Decrease	10,671
Portland, Oreg.:
	1915	6,655
	1921	2,904
	Decrease	3,751
Detroit, Mich.:
	1916	17,409
	1921	7,220
	Decrease	10,189
Des Moines, Iowa:
	1914	4,428
	1921	1,949
	Decrease	2,479

Do the figures of these cities represent conditions in the country at large? They do. I have the assertion of Judge Gemmill, of the municipal court of Chicago, who has made a study of this question. In a letter to me, Judge Gemmill says:

There has been a decrease in the number of persons arrested in America for drunkenness of over 600,000 per year. This figure is estimated, of course, but it is based upon the figures I have in my possession for all of the largest cities in the United States. In most of these cities the decrease is from 100 to 400 per cent for the number of persons arrested for drunkenness.

When you consider these statistics remember this important fact: That under the old saloon system a man was seldom arrested merely because he was drunk; he had to be absolutely drunk, a danger to himself, a menace to society; but under the new system he is arrested if he shows the least signs of intoxication.

PROHIBITION AND ALCOHOLISM.

People will tell you that since prohibition went into effect there has been a great increase in alcoholism throughout the United States. I can scarcely blame those who believe this, because since prohibition a death or violent illness from alcohol poisoning has been raised to the dignity of first-page news. But here again it is best to get the facts, and the men who can supply the facts are the physicians in charge of institutions where cases of alcoholic poisoning are treated. Here are the figures given me by Dr. William H. Guilfoy, registrar of records of the Department of Health of New York City:

Deaths from alcoholism and alcohol poisoning.

Years.	Alcoholism.	Wood alcohol.	Alcohol poisoning.
1916	687	2	1
1921	119	14	8

The statistics in other cities tell the same story. Doctor Doane, medical director of the Philadelphia General Hospital, informed me that admissions into alcoholic wards in that institution have decreased from 2,326 in 1918 to 702 in 1921.

EXIT THE ALCOHOLIC INSTITUTES.

To learn what effect the new amendment has had on the prevalence of alcoholism I went direct to the men who operate these institutions. The first I interviewed was Doctor Wallace, of the San Francisco Neal Institute. "Mr. Gordon," he said to me, "there were 68 Neal institutes throughout the United States. Twelve years prior to prohibition these institutes treated more than 125,000. After two years of prohibition they are all out of commission."

Doctor Neal, whom I interviewed in Los Angeles, confirmed Doctor Wallace's statement.

But Neal Bros. do not regret that their business has gone. They are glad to be relieved of the heartache and misery caused by liquor. If anyone knows the evils of the liquor traffic, they know it.

Journeying to Chicago, I stopped at Dwight, Ill. I wanted to see what used to be the largest Keeley Institute, not only in America but in the world. It is a beautiful building, but since prohibition it has proved far too large for the number of patients. Now it has been leased to the United States Government for five years, and is being used as a hospital for soldiers. Doctor Oughton, head of this institution, told me that there used to be 50 Keeley institutes in America. To-day there are only 12, and most of these are very small. The building now being used by Keeley Cure in Dwight is a small brick cottage and has only 30 patients.

In Chicago I stood before the old Washingtonian Home on West Madison Street. This institution was established in 1863 for the care of inebriates. In 1917, 995 patients were admitted there. On March 1, 1920, Washingtonian Home closed its doors, and since then it has been sold for other purposes.

Dr. Horatio Pollock, statistician of the State Hospital Commission for the State of New York, wrote me a letter, in which he states:

> There are now no institutions in this country solely for inebriates. Restrictions on the liquor traffic during the war period undoubtedly hastened the extinction of these institutions.

I realized the truth of this statement when I visited the old "Inebriate Home" in Knoxville, Iowa. There were five great buildings, but they no longer contained alcoholic patients. The buildings had been purchased by the Federal Government for use as a hospital and home for disabled soldiers.

These facts speak for themselves.

PROHIBITION AND CRIME.

You have heard it said that prohibition is responsible for a great increase in crime. There was only one place to go for information on that subject, and I went there. I visited the jails and prisons.

In Birmingham, Ala., I walked through a jail that cost $100,000 to build. It was practically new, having been in use only a few years before Alabama voted dry. For a long time it stood empty, and now it is used as a juvenile court and receiving home.

In Pittsburgh, Pa., I was taken through the county jail by John McNeil, the assistant warden. "Mr. Gordon," he said to me, "we have 840 cells in this jail, and in the days before prohibition we often had as many as 940 prisoners. To-day 315 of our cells are empty."

Another jail I visited was in Seattle, Wash. (You see I am picking my cases from widely separated parts of the country.) The Seattle authorities told me that this building would accommodate 300 prisoners. On the day I visited it there were only 95 prisoners there.

In Salt Lake City I was taken through the State prison. Here again I looked into many empty cells. Warden de Vine gave me these figures:

	Prisoners.
In 1916	297
In 1921	129
Decrease	168

Here is some remarkable testimony from Chicago:

In 1917 the Bridewell Prison there housed ——— prisoners	17,748
In 1921 the commitments were only ——— do	9,653
A decrease of	8,095
In 1917 the daily number of inmates averaged	2,090
In 1921 the average was	1,302
A decrease of	788

Bridewell Prison, Chicago.

Adultery and fornication:
1917	65
1921	24
Decrease	41
Assault and battery:
1917	73
1921	47
Decrease	26
Assault with deadly weapon:
1917	237
1921	162
Decrease	75
Breach of peace:
1917	10,467
1921	5,490
Decrease	4,977
Larceny:
1917	2,046
1921	1,568
Decrease	478
Wife and child abandonment:
1917	661
1921	1
Decrease	660

This, mind you, in Chicago.

Let me again refer to my letter from Judge Gemmill, who has been collecting prison statistics for the past seven years:

> Twenty per cent of the jails in the United States have been without prisoners since prohibition went into effect, and in 80 per cent of them the number of prisoners has been reduced anywhere from 15 per cent to 80 per cent.

PROHIBITION AND INDUSTRY.

The industrial leaders of America are virtually unanimous in declaring that the effect of prohibition on business has fulfilled all expectations. I have given you the reports of physicians and public officials and statisticians. Now I will present the testimony of representative business men. I have a letter from Mr. H. L. Badham, president of the Bessemer Coal, Iron & Land Co., of Birmingham, Ala., which I reproduce in full. Under date of November 26, 1921, Mr. Badham wrote me as follows:

> You ask regarding prohibition, Does it prohibit? Not entirely so, but if you had known the life of Birmingham and our mining camps before the enactment of prohibition laws and see it now, you would say that no matter how much "moonshine" was disposed of it is not a drop in the bucket compared to former conditions.
> Local trains on week-end pay days now make their regular runs without guards to protect the passengers from drunks who had been to town to spend their hard-earned wages. Now the miner stays at home, patronizes the local stores, and has not only improved the living conditions of his family but has added to their health and comfort.
> You will be able to gather all of these facts, and I do not think it is necessary to go into details, but there are a thousand reasons for the maintenance of prohibition laws, and you can say to the world that America will never again stand for the open saloon.

What Mr. Badham told me has been supported by the heads of other great steel, iron, coke, coal, oil, and cotton companies whom I interviewed. These men declare that "blue Monday" in the great manufacturing regions is a thing of the past; that accidents have decreased remarkably; that their workmen show higher efficiency and greater production; that, above all, the home life in the industrial settlements has improved. The workingmen's houses, once almost bare of furniture, with children in rags, have been transformed. Now these same homes have many modern comforts. The children are neatly dressed and shod, with plenty to eat, going to school every school day in the year. Instead of spending their time in saloons, the fathers are seeing more of their families.

About the same time that Mr. Badham wrote to me I received a letter from a great American merchant, Mr. S. S. Kresge, head of a great chain of 5 and 10 cent stores, whose home is in Detroit. This is what he said:

> After seeing prohibition tried out in some of our States for a number of years, and now for almost two years under national law, I am convinced that it is the only practical solution to the problem of intemperance.
> Drunkenness has greatly decreased. A drunken person, as you can see for yourself, is no longer a common sight on our streets. Arrests for drunkenness for the first 12 months in Detroit under prohibition were 64 per cent less than for the preceding period.
>
> Business conditions are better, especially has there been a notable increase in savings accounts. Three billion dollars which formerly found its way across the bar now finds its way into legitimate trade. Many business men who formerly opposed prohibition are now favoring it. It is good business.
> The demoralizing influences of the open saloon and the legalized liquor traffic are gone. The illegal traffic, which, I wish to remind you, we had even before prohibition went into effect, is now being attacked in an effective manner and will gradually disappear.

Mr. R. B. Patterson, president of the Spokane Dry Goods Co., told me that beneficial effects of prohibition in trade circles were noticed almost at once after the enactment of the law and that after several years of the law's operation most of his friends who had originally opposed prohibition were now heartily in favor of it. "Quite aside from the improved moral conditions," says Mr. Patterson, "prohibition has promoted thrift, increased the earning power of labor, and put more money into circulation in the regular channels of trade. In short, it is a great economic gain."

In Denver, Colo., Mr. Leslie Huffman, one of the leading realty men, told me that if prohibition were put to a vote to-day, 90 per cent of the business men who had opposed it would be in favor of it.

PROHIBITION AND THRIFT.

One of the surest indications of community prosperity in the United States is savings bank deposits. Throughout the country bank officials assured me that the increase in deposits since prohibition had been remarkable. I need only quote a few of their statements. Mr. Bird W. Spencer, president of the People's Bank & Trust Co., of Passaic, N. J., said:

I know it to be a fact that a great deal of money that was spent in saloons is now deposited in savings accounts. I know this also to be a fact, that the savings deposits in this city last year increased $1,500,000.

Mr. F. N. Briggs, president of the Interstate Trust Co., of Denver, said:

Prohibition has had a wonderful effect in turning into the savings banks money formerly spent for liquor. Savings deposits have increased more than 33⅓ per cent. Families are better cared for, homes are better taken care of, women and children are better dressed, men are saving their money and becoming better citizens.

It is the same story all over America.

PROHIBITION AND LABOR.

I can not leave the subject of industrial conditions without touching on the opinions of the laboring men themselves. I know it is a general impression that most men who work with their hands are opposed to prohibition. But, much to my surprise, this belief was not supported by interviews with these men. Most of the opposition one hears talked of comes from laborers of foreign birth, who resent being deprived of the wines and beers to which they have been accustomed all their lives.

Mr. James Duncan, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in Seattle, Wash., is one of the labor leaders who stands ready to confirm this assertion. Mr. Duncan declares that Mr. Samuel Gompers, in his attitude opposing the Volstead law, does not represent the 3,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor, which he heads. If the prohibition question was put to a vote to-morrow, Mr. Duncan believes that it would receive a big majority vote from the laboring men of the country.

This statement is supported by a canvass of labor leaders in March, 1920, made by the Literary Digest. The results show that 345 leaders believed that prohibition was a benefit to the laboring man, 143 that it was no benefit, while 31 were doubtful, and 7 said that prohibition had not been given a fair trial.

PROHIBITION AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

One result of prohibition which has received too little attention in the United States is the decrease in the death rate since prohibition took effect. The mortality statistics issued by the Census Bureau show a decrease in deaths from all causes and at all ages of 190 individuals per 100,000 population during the decade 1910–1920. The figures are: 1910, 1,496; 1920, 1,306. This difference is most marked between the ages of 45 and 74, where it amounts to 301. In the deaths resulting from the so-called "degenerative" diseases due to dissipation and wrong living, there is a decrease of 10 per cent. Deaths from accidents during the same period decreased nearly 18 per cent. Comparing the two years 1910 and 1920, the Census Bureau finds a lower death rate in every period of life. While the Bureau of Vital Statistics has no means of knowing that this decrease was due directly to prohibition, I have seen statements from that bureau suggesting at least that prohibition was a contributing cause.

I have in my possession a letter from the statistician of the New York Anti-Tuberculosis Society which places prohibition first as one of the four causes for a marked decrease in tuberculosis in the Empire State during the past few years. Let me quote:

There is, first of all, the advent of prohibition, with its accompanying results of less misery and more money available for food, clothing, and shelter. This cause must have a marked effect in promoting good health.

What is true of New York is true of other parts of the country, and especially true in the large cities.

Under this topic, let me add the testimony of one of the greatest American physicians and health reformers, Dr. John Harvey Kellogg, head of the great Battle Creek Sanitarium. Under date of January 11, 1922, he wrote me as follows:

Prohibition has been of the greatest possible benefit to America, and is rendering more service every day. It was not to be expected that every old toper could be reformed by prohibition. The slaves of liquor will exhaust every resource to continue their soul and body destroying practice, but the open saloon and the free traffic in liquor are gone forever in America. The liquor traffic is thoroughly discredited; it is illegal. To sell liquor is a crime. The booze devil is hobbled, to say the least, and as the years go on the evils of intemperance will grow less and less. The hospital wards formerly devoted to the care of men suffering from delirium tremens and acute insanity due to liquor are practically empty. The number of persons committed to insane asylums because of liquor has decreased enormously. The number of arrests for drunkenness and crimes committed through the influence of liquor has decreased so much in many sections that jails have become empty and, in a few instances, have been converted into boarding houses.

Every intelligent and informed person knows that the country has been marvelously benefited.

PROHIBITION AND FAMILY WELFARE.

Among my evidence there is no document I count more important than a survey of the effects of prohibition conducted by the American Association for Organizing Family Social Work, of New York, and by the Boston Family Welfare Society. The family is the unit of society, and any influence which improves the general family welfare is a great blessing. The organizations referred to above made this survey to show the comparative number of families receiving aid from various charitable organizations in 17 typical large cities in 1917 and 1921. While there has been no decrease, as a rule, in the number of calls for aid, the number of families under the care of these institutions in which drink was a factor has shown decreases averaging 75 per cent. Here is the survey:

PROHIBITION AND THE AMERICAN CHILD.

Of all the results of this beneficent law in the United States none is more important than the improved condition of American child life. As a result of the suppression of the liquor traffic the children of America, always fortunate in their wide opportunities, are bound to have a far better chance for life and happiness.

Think of the thousands of children born with the posion of alcohol in their helpless bodies because of alcoholic parents! Think of the little ones born with feeble minds due to the indulgence of hard-drinking fathers and mothers! Think of the thousands of orphans in American asylums due to drunken parents!

Every child has the God-given right to be well born, well fed, well clothed, well educated, and alcohol has robbed thousands—yes, millions—of American children of this privilege. One day I stood upon the streets of Kansas City, Mo., and saw a thrilling sight—20,000 Kansas City boys marching past in a parade of the Rotary Clubs. What thrilled me was the thought that these 20,000 children would never know the temptation of the open saloon. There are millions like them in America. Just think of what this will mean to the future of your great country.

Prohibition will show its greatest benefits in future generations. The children of the future will know nothing of the taste of liquor or the temptation of the saloon.

The present generation of children has already begun to feel these benefits. Never before have the schools and colleges of the United States been as crowded as they are now. In every city and town new school buildings are being erected to take care of the increasing demand for education. It seems to me that I did not enter a city without seeing new school buildings in course of erection.

What does this mean? It means that since the fathers, the breadwinners, have been released from the slavery of alcohol the children have not been obliged to leave school at a tender age to help support the family. Due to prohibition, tens of thousands of boys and girls under 16 years of age have been able to go back to school to complete their educations. Teachers tell me pupils seem brighter; that they are making better progress in their studies; that they come to school better clothed and better fed, and take greater interest in their lessons.

The enactment of the prohibition amendment was the greatest piece of humanitarian legislation ever put through by any government.

THINGS THAT ARE NOT TRUE.

Now let me catalogue and answer some of the things that are said against prohibition by those whose selfish interests are causing them to work for its repeal.

They say that the prohibition amendment was "put over" before the American people fully realized what was happening.

How can this be true when under the laws of the United States this amendment could not become a part of the Constitution until it had been ratified by three-fourths of the States? The prohibition amendment has been ratified not only by three-fourths but by all the States in the Union excepting two. Moreover, when the amendment passed the National Congress prohibition was already in effect in 33 of the 48 States.

To me, an outsider, it looks as if the American people were very much alive to this question and knew exactly what they were doing.

They say that the prohibition amendment went into the Constitution on the crest of war-time excitement.

This can not be true, because the Congress that voted for the submission of this amendment was elected before America entered the war. Is there not reason to believe that the prohibition question entered into the election of these legislators? Of course there is. Congressmen and candidates for Congress knew all about the progress of the prohibition movement long before America entered the war.

CRIME WAVES.

They say that prohibition is responsible for the so-called "crime wave."

But haven't you read of crime waves in England, France, and Germany? I read cable dispatches before leaving Australia and since coming to America about crime waves in the Old World. Prohibition was not responsible there. The fact is that had not the saloons been closed the wave of crime in the United States would have been far more severe than it has been.

DRUG ADDICTS.

They say that prohibition is responsible for the increase in the use of narcotic drugs.

Again I refer you to England. Reading of the appalling increase in the use of drugs there I ask whether prohibition can be held responsible for this increase, when last year Great Britain's drink bill was over $2,000,000,000.

And yet the opponents of prohibition are holding up their hands in horror over an alleged increase in the number of drug addicts in America. They are saying, "We told you so. You take drink away from the people, and they will resort to drugs."

With strange inconsistency these same people in the next breath will tell you that there is just as much drinking now as before prohibition, and that "you can get it anywhere." Ye gods, what logic!

When Col. O. G. Forrer, assistant administrator of the narcotic division in Washington, D. C., was asked whether prohibition caused an increase in the number of drug addicts he replied: "The truth is that victims of the drug habit in practically every instance are young men and women, often in their teens. Rarely are they alcoholics."

Miss Cora Frances Stoddard, executive secretary of the Scientific Temperance Federation, who collected data on this subject from all cities of over 80,000 population, agrees with Colonel Forrer. The reports she received justified the conclusion that the removal of alcohol is not responsible for the increased use of drugs, because the great proportion of drug users were found to be young people.

The New York City Health Department asked 1,403 drug patients how they acquired the habit, and only 12 of them said they were driven to it by the desire for alcohol.

In Los Angeles I was told by the narcotic clinic that out of over 500 patients only 4 had been users of alcohol.

I wrote to Doctor Doane, medical director of the Philadelphia General Hospital, asking him this question. He replied, "It has not been proved that prohibition has been responsible for the increase in drug addiction."

So you can just pass up this charge, together with other baseless assertions of the foes of this mighty reform.

LIGHT WINES AND BEER.

They say the liquor problem in the United States could have been easily solved if prohibition had only extended to spirituous liquors and had not touched light wines and beers.

We know that is not true, because this method was tried out before the national amendment and failed.

Georgia voted prohibition in 1907, and only a few months later legalized so-called "near beer." The results proved disastrous, because real beer and spirituous liquors were sold under the guise of near beer. Things got so bad that in 1915 a special session of the legislature was called, which passed a law prohibiting the use of alcohol in any form.

Let me quote the case of Michigan. It is not an actual "wine" and "beer" tryout case, but it forcibly illustrates the attitude of a great State toward such a proposition.

On November 7, 1916, Michigan voted dry by a majority of 68,624. This vote became effective May 1, 1918.

The liquor forces continued to fight, and in 1918 submitted an amendment to the State constitution to allow the manufacture and sale of all vinous and malt liquors.

The vote was taken on April 7, 1919, and the amendment was defeated by 207,520.

I am informed that 92 per cent of the liquor traffic in America was a beer business. If that be true, what would happen if beer came back? Why 92 per cent of the old liquor trade would be revived. Beer would have to be sold somewhere, and whether you called the place a saloon or gave it some other name the effect would be the same.

But why all this talk about light wines and beer? Surely the one-half of 1 per cent alcohol now permitted should be light enough for anybody. The advocates of wine and beer will not be satisfied unless they get something with a "kick" in it, and anything with a "kick" in it is no longer "light."

These people say they do not want the saloon back. Oh, no! They would not think of advocating its return. And yet these men know well that the introduction of wines and beers containing the amount of alcohol they wish would practically nullify the eighteenth amendment.

Americans, do not let this talk about light wines and beers and modification lead you astray. There is only one solution of the present problem of prohibition enforcement, and that is strict enforcement.

PROHIBITION AND AMERICANISM.

During the year I spent in the United States I have heard no phrase more often than this, "100 per cent American."

But how can a citizen be 100 per cent American when he defies the Constitution of his country? The true American will uphold the sanctity of his country's laws.

It is a fact little understood by the great majority of the better class of citizens that the chief violators of the prohibition amendment are not American citizens but foreigners, aliens. What is the sanctity of the American Constitution to them? Judges assure me that 80 to 90 per cent of all violations of the Volstead Act are committed by foreigners. This is bad; but it is not nearly as serious as the fact that many otherwise loyal citizens condone these violations.

HAS PROHIBITION HAD A SQUARE DEAL?

My own emphatic opinion, gained from a year of careful investigation, is that it has not.

How can prohibition have a fair trial when judges deliberately refuse to convict "bootleggers" caught with the goods in their possession, when newspapers lend their columns to ridiculing the Volstead Act, when vaudeville theaters and picture houses seem to be in league to make a joke of the whole thing. Yet in spite of these handicaps, think what prohibition has accomplished, and then think what it might accomplish if the police did their duty, if judges were stern in their convictions, and if many of the newspapers heralded its triumphs as vividly as they describe its violations.

Prohibition does not absolutely prohibit. No one expected that it would. No other law upon the statute books absolutely prohibits crimes against which it is aimed. But no one is asking for the repeal of these laws for that reason. Why then ask for the repeal of the Volstead law because it is not 100 per cent effective?

And who are those who are demanding the repeal of prohibition? Are they not for the most part men who have defied the law, broken the law, cursed the law, lied about the law, men who have never raised a finger to help the enforcement of the law? Those who violate other statutes have no standing in court. Why should the violators of the prohibition law be tolerated at the bar of public opinion, when they come with unclean hands demanding the destruction of a great reform, which they themselves have done their utmost to defeat?

AMERICANS, STAND BY YOUR CONSTITUTION.

It is true that prohibition can not be made 100 per cent effective in America until the rest of the world becomes dry, but it is equally true that if America abandons prohibition, generations may elapse before the other peoples of the world reach the point which you gained when you deposed "King Alcohol." Prohibition is the law of your country. Are you standing by it? Are you honoring it? Are you giving it a square deal?

We in Australia are looking to you. In every civilized country of the world earnest men and women are watching you; watching one of the greatest experiments in social reform the world has ever known. That experiment already has succeeded. It has given results which should encourage you to go on, to work for the enforcement of the law you yourselves have created.

Yes, my American friends, we are looking to you to help us drive the saloon out of Australia, but in helping us you will be helping yourselves. You have made the United States "a saloonless nation." Don't stop there. Let your slogan be "a saloonless world."

COMPARISON OF DUTIES ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a schedule of duties in the Underwood-Simmons law upon agriculture and live stock, together with a schedule of duties given to agriculture in the Fordney-McCumber bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON. Reserving the right to object, I inquire of the Senator from Idaho if the same matter has not been printed in the RECORD heretofore?

Mr. GOODING. Not on the basis of the present market prices. This statement gives the ad valorem duties.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONDITIONS IN CONNELLSVILLE COKE REGION.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, a day or two ago I placed in the RECORD a telegram from Pennsylvania, where the strike is on in the coke region. The statement was made that evictions by the wholesale were taking place there. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] denied that any such evictions had taken place. I shall not dispute his word. I do not know the facts. Whether he knows them is beyond my knowledge. I would like to place in the RECORD, without reading, some communications I have received since from the very region to which that telegram referred.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia must not have heard correctly what I said in reply to his question last week regarding the evictions. I did not deny or pretend to know that there had been no evictions whatever. I did deny that there was any general policy such as was indicated in the telegram which the Senator then read into the RECORD, and that denial, after further investigation, I wish to reiterate. There is no such general policy as the Senator's telegram and the Senator's informant have advised him.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to have no controversy with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania on the subject, as the facts are not known to me. I have no doubt in the world that he is honest in his statement. I misunderstood him if he did not deny that evictions had taken place. I merely wish to put in the RECORD what men in the vicinity say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EVICTIONS DISCUSSED IN SENATE.

WASHINGTON, September 15.—The miners' strike in southwestern Pennsylvania was discussed in the Senate to-day when Senator WATSON of Georgia presented a telegram from United Mine Workers leaders charging that women and children of the strikers were suffering because of evictions ordered by the operators.

Senator REED of Pennsylvania, in response to inquiries by Chairman BORAH, of the Senate Labor Committee, said he was sure there were no wholesale evictions in the Connellsville region. In most cases REED said operators had not caused evictions or attempted to collect rentals. In some instances he said they had reduced rentals.

Union recognition is the only controversy in this strike, REED said, the operators refusing recognition, although willing to continue the former wage scales which the miners were willing to accept.

MERRITTSTOWN, PA., September 18, 1922.

Hon. Senator TOM WATSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending you a clipping I cut from the Herald. Mr. REED says there has been no evictions. I will tell you the truth; there has been about 4,000 eviction notices served, and if you doubt it, come to Fayette County and see the amount of tent colonies. Then you can tell Mr. REED something else. Write to Uniontown Courthouse and ask how many eviction papers has been served in Fayette County, and you find at least 4,000 people out of doors here in Fayette County alone, besides Westmoreland and Somerset Counties and Cambria County. I know, because I am right here; and I know. I have been expecting to see this matter taken up and I think you are the right one. I thank you in advance for your undertaking.

I beg to remain your friend,

B. CURTIS MILLER.

P. S.—If you want any more information I will gladly give it to you, if you request it.

ALLISON, PA., September 19, 1922.

Senator WATSON.

SIR: There appeared an article in our paper about evictions of the families of the striking miners from the houses of the company of which they were employed, and are on strike. Your side of the debate is true. They have evicted more than 100 families here from their homes just because they will not scab, and are going to evict every family at Allison for not going to work—about 250 families—and they are going in tents. This is W. J. Rainey's works.

Yours,

GEO. CHAMBERS, Allison, Pa.

P. S.—I am central committeeman on the Democratic ticket in Luzerne Township, No. 5.

(Address: Geo. Chambers, Allison, Fayette County, Pa. Box 211.)

CONNELLSVILLE, PA., September 15, 1922.

Mr. WATSON, Washington, D. C.

GREETINGS: According to press dispatches contained in to-day's local papers it would appear our Senator REED, from this part of Pennsylvania, is grossly ignorant of conditions as they exist in his own district or else he is telling only half truths.

Concerning evictions of striking miners from company houses, it is true that they are on a wholesale basis. To prove this one need only pass over the public highways of Fayette County, where he may see household effects sitting by the roadside in large volume. Further proof is given by county records at Uniontown, where legal papers for evictions were recently filed at the rate of upward of 200 daily. This rate possibly would have been exceeded except for limited capacity to handle such papers at the county seat.

Further, the families evicted have not always been accorded even reasonable courtesy at the hands of the sheriff's deputies. Neither were the weather conditions allowed to interfere with the progress of removing these families from property of operating companies. But we shall pass over this, as it seems part of the program in such circumstances.

I am imposing on your time only in the interest of truth, and for Mr. REED'S especial benefit you might also advise him of what I have written. He should know what is going on in his particular district.

In addition to the evictions, assaults and murders by special officers have been all too frequent. I am inclosing a clipping from a local paper showing how easily it was for at least one such officer to "get away" after wantonly killing three strikers, without proven provocation. Instances like this make the Herrin, Ill., authorities look like "pikers" when it comes to covering up crime.

My only request, in closing, is that you do not give my name any publicity. I speak only as an individual and not for any organization; am not a member of the miner's union nor engaged in that line of work.

Thanking you for allowing me to thus impose upon your very valuable time, I am,

Respectfully,

JOSEPH N. SCHILDKAMP,
Star Route, Box No. 134, Connellsville, Pa.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 15, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON.

MY DEAR SIR: You made the statement to-day in the Senate that a large number of men were evicted from the coke and coal companies' houses in the coal and coke districts of western Pennsylvania. This statement was denied by Senator REED, of Pittsburgh, Pa., one of the attorneys for the United States Steel Corporation. I send you several copies of newspapers published at Uniontown, Fayette County, Pa., my old home, showing that Senator REED is not posted on true conditions in the coke regions or is willfully falsifying the facts. Thousands of men, women, and children are occupying tents and hastily constructed houses on the farms of farmers friendly to the striking miners. On Labor Day 10,000 striking miners marched in a parade in Uniontown. One of the floats on a truck in that parade was a tent, labeled "The miner's home in 1922." Senator REED did not see this parade.

All the coal and coke companies in this section have accepted the Cleveland scale except the H. C. Frick Coke Co., W. J. Rainey, and a few others. This region has not been organized since the days of the Knights of Labor, but during this strike the miners of these companies have organized. For your information, Fayette County, Pa., produces more coal and coke than any other county in the United States. The coke that takes the prizes at the world's fairs for years have been made in Fayette County. In September, before the signing of the armistice in 1918, Fayette County produced over 800,000 tons of coal; the production of an equal area in the world has not equaled this, I am informed. I can furnish you with papers from Uniontown at any time if you so desire when anything concerning the strike appears. This county supports 2,600 deputies now for the protection of the coal and coke companies refusing to accept the Cleveland settlement. This fact can be verified by communicating with Sheriff I. I. Shaw, Uniontown, Pa.

The soft, or bituminous, coal can be put on board of cars for the sum of $2. This means that all the labor, material, original cost of the coal, and the depreciation of improvement, and the royalty on the coal is figured in this total cost of $2. It is now being sold at $8 per ton on board of cars by these patriots. Most of the larger independent coal and coke operators own brokerage concerns that sell their output. In this way they try to evade the charge of profiteering.

Whenever I can I am at your service in trying to create a better condition in the handling of coal and coke.

Yours truly,

THOMAS J. MOYER,
1006 Park Road NW.

STRIKE BREAKERS QUIT AT ROYAL—SENT BACK HOME.

One hundred and sixty-two negroes, two whites, and eight women and children were on their way back to Huntington, W. Va., to-day following their refusal to work at the Royal plant of the W. J. Rainey Co., where they were brought early this week, lured, it is claimed, by exaggerated promises.

Scott, a local agent, is alleged to have collected the West Virginia delegation, showing them the Frick wage scale, and dilating upon the fact that their place of employment was less than an hour's ride to the city, with fine houses and other advantages. The men quit work upon finding they were in the strike zone.

Walking into Uniontown, the delegation was housed in the Croatian Hall here, and provision was made by the United Mine Workers for their return home to-day.

EVICTIONS IN COKE REGION BEFORE SENATE.

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, September 15.—The coking strike in southwestern Pennsylvania was discussed in the Senate to-day when Senator WATSON of Georgia presented a telegram from the United Mine Workers' leaders charging that women and children of the strikers were suffering because of evictions ordered by the operators.

Senator REED of Pennsylvania, in response to inquiries by Chairman BORAH, of the Senate Labor Committee, said he was sure there were no wholesale evictions in the Connellsville region. In most cases, REED said, the operators had not caused evictions or attempted to collect rentals. In some instances, he said, they had reduced rents during the strike.

Union recognition is the only controversy in the strike, REED said, the operators refusing recognition, although willing to continue the former wage scale which, he said, miners were willing to accept. Senator WATSON complained of the refusal of the operators to recognize the union.

BILL AGAINST ALLEGED SLAYER—THREE IGNORED.

The grand jury in Uniontown early this afternoon issued an ignoramus of the bill of indictment in which Leroy S. Lincoln, a mine guard, is charged with killing three striking miners in a fight near New Geneva on July 9 last. The case was investigated all of yesterday afternoon by the jury, and the ignoramus followed to-day. Lincoln has been out of jail on $15,000 bail.

The three men alleged to have been killed by the deputy are Andy Babchak, Alex Kosky, and Bob Valdusky. All were members of a tent colony of striking miners. At the time of the coroner's inquest into the deaths two others implicated with Lincoln were discharged. The jury, however, disagreed as to Lincoln.

The defendant never made a statement before the grand jury. His case was the first in which a coroner's jury in this county has disagreed.

FILBERT HOUSES DEPOPULATED—MINERS BREAKING BACK TO WORK.

Eighty-four families, the largest contingent yet to land on the bricks homeless, were "set out" yesterday at Filbert and to-day were lying along the roadside the object of curiosity, speculation, and pity on the part of scores of passersby. The United Mine Workers of America were without sufficient canvas to place the evicted miners and their families beneath a roof, and the miners will lie along the roadside until the erection of sufficient protection or they secure shelter elsewhere.

Plans are under way, it was said to-day, for the construction of several long wooden barracks, sufficient to house as many as 100 miners and their families. One of these wooden buildings will be located at Edenborn, another in the vicinity of Masontown, and a third further distant.

Breaks in the ranks of the miners were reported at Revere, Lambert, Leckrone, and Grays Landing to-day. Men are going back to work in large droves, it is evident, and a condition of a labor surfeit will soon prevail, it is feared, if all of the strikers should suddenly desert the union ranks.

Organized labor owes a large vote of thanks to the miners of the coke region, it being generally acknowledged and not controverted anywhere that the strike of the Connellsville region enabled the union district miners to secure terms from the operators. Further continuance of the strike in this section of the country appears hopeless, however.

SALEM, VA., September 17, 1922.

Hon. THOS. E. WATSON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 15th I see your attention has been called to conditions in the Pennsylvania soft-coal district. Thank God it is not so bad in Virginia and West Virginia, but bad enough, where I understand the miners are satisfied with wages per day or per ton, but not with time allowed them, as they are not allowed to put in over 22 hours per week. They are asking for 44 hours per week. There is a coal operator living near me who last week told me he was receiving $7 to $12 per ton at the mines for his coal, and it cost him $1.80 per ton. We are now paying $10.50 for it delivered in our basement. One other matter, as it is near time when many will be moving around. Why not try and get the Post Office officials to allow our papers to be forwarded as they do letters and cards. It would save much trouble to all and insure of the papers reaching us sooner. I inclose letter received this a. m. from a friend thanking me for copies of the Sentinel. It gladdens my old heart to receive such, and knowing you will appreciate what he says am sending it to you.

With kindest thoughts and best wishes for you and yours, and I include Mrs. Lytle and others in your office, I am yours, etc.,

W. H. TINSLEY.

THE AMERICAN CREDIT INDEMNITY CO. OF NEW YORK,
Buffalo, N. Y., September 14, 1922.

Mr. W. H. TINSLEY, Salem, Va.

DEAR MR. TINSLEY: I received the paper kindly sent me and was very much interested in the article.

We have only one thoroughbred American statesman left in this country. He is the best-educated man living, the best constitutional lawyer living, is not contaminated by any isms, and is the Simon-pure, undaunted THOMAS WATSON, of Georgia. He has never deviated one iota from the Constitution of this country and that is the matter to-day.

Through this infernal Immigration Bureau we have allowed this country to be overrun by a lot of riffraff from all the countries in the world, and the minute they get here go to making propaganda, and unless it is broken up will make this country like those they left behind. And I can tell you something secretly. There is only one political party in this country left, and they are getting to be a factor that stands on the original Constitution, the Ku Klux. Do not be afraid of it. It is absolutely all right. Any detrimental stuff that they say in the newspapers about the Ku Klux is propaganda of Hearst's newspapers against this organization. They are simply 100 per cent American citizens.

Yours very truly, T. A. JOHNSON.

MASONTOWN, PA., September 19, 1921.

Senator WATSON of Georgia,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WATSON: It seems, from newspaper reports, that our Pennsylvania Senator, Mr. REED, is not well informed with regard to the evictions of coal miners' families in southwestern Pennsylvania. I am neither a labor leader nor an agitator. I am sending you some clippings from last Saturday's Uniontown Morning Herald and to-day's Uniontown Daily News Standard, both of which are antistrike papers. If you wish to be informed of the facts in the case, get in touch with I. I. Shaw, of Uniontown, Pa., high sheriff of Fayette County, Pa., and he can tell you of the hundreds and perhaps thousands of families he has recently evicted.

Sincerely yours, JOHN W. WILLIARD.

STRIKERS KEPT ON THE RUN THROUGH EVICTION ACTIONS.

Four detachments of the State police located as outposts at threatened points in the county during the recent strike have been recalled by Capt. Herbert Smith, in charge of the State police force here, and will be sent back to Lancaster for redesignation.

Twelve men will be detached from the local force of 50 by reason of the proposed change, and the field forces of the State police will be skeletonized.

Many of the men are returning to work, and disorders have been reduced to a minimum through the strike zone, the State police reports show. Those residing in tents at Footedale and other points are shifting to the Washington County field in search of employment.

One hundred and thirteen ejectments were filed by the H. C. Frick Coke Co. in the prothonotary's office to-day.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH,
Brownsville, Pa., September 16, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I have read in the newspapers that you informed the Senate that the coal operators in the coke region of this vicinity are ejecting the miners from their homes without any consideration whatsoever. I have also read that Senator REED denied that these conditions exist.

Here in Brownsville there are hundreds of these miners seeking shelter for their families and their scant furniture every day. The roads are lined with tents and one can go over the country roads any time and see piles of furniture along the road where it has been placed by the operators' employees. There are always company armed guards on hand, and they will not permit outside persons to take any interest in the ejected miners.

Why does the Government permit these atrocious crimes against humanity? When President Harding was through this vicinity he could not help but see the conditions that existed. You stood up for the soldiers and demanded that their mistreatment be investigated; why not demand that the conditions here in Fayette County be investigated?

Later on I will forward you photographs to corroborate my statements.

I trust you will consider this, and I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

H. H. HILEMAN.

This is from Missouri, but bears on the subject:

KANSAS CITY, MO., September 13, 1922.

Hon. THOS. E. WATSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to express my feelings and sentiments on the strike situation and labor situation in general and wish to advise you that I believe that few people who own property, be it a home, a farm, industrial property, mercantile establishments, or bank stock feel differently.

Unless the rights of private property are protected, the incentive to accumulate prcperty is destroyed. Without the incentive to accumulate property, initiative and thrift in this United States of ours will disappear. There has been passed in this country laws which exempt certain organizations, namely the Clayton Act, which exempts associations of labor and farmers from the Sherman law. Thus, although combinations in restraint of trade on the part of owners of any business are a violation of the law, combinations in restraint of trade on the part of labor unions are legalized. Labor in its final essence is a commodity, and time has shown the only true basis for the value of a commodity is by the law of supply and demand.

As a business man, I do not ask a subsidy from the Government, but am perfectly willing to stand or fall on fair competition. The laboring man under the union system, if he is an able and ambitious man, carries the load of his weaker brothers, and the union restrains his progress rather than aids it.

On the shoulders of yourself as a legislator rests the responsibility for the progress of our Nation. I feel that in many cases the attitude of our legislators on the labor question (which, in my opinion, has been very foolishly made a question by Congress itself and should not be a legislative question) is influenced by the thought of reelection. I think that some of our legislators forget that this United States is a representative form of Government and not a true democracy and fail in Congress to use their own judgment, but more often play to the masses, and at this time of unrest in the entire world, as well as the United States, I do not feel that our legislators should be influenced by their own immediate popularity, but should have the "guts" to do what they know to be for the best in this country.

I trust that you will understand my intent in writing so lengthy a letter in which I have no doubt expressed myself crudely.

Yours very truly,

DE VERE DIERKS.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair, in pursuance to the concurrent resolution adopted by the two Houses of Congress, hereby declares this session of the Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, September 22, 1922.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the hand that holds the earth, the sky, and sea in its hollow is the same hand that nestles Thy earthly children in its palm; hence a new day finds us unafraid. All praise, honor, and glory be unto Thee, O Lord! Only through Thy mercy do we face each succeeding day with freshened vigor. Keep before us life's richest vocation and earth's highest attainment. On the altars of our hearts make steadfast the lights of faith, hope, and charity and may they burn with a quenchless flame. O let Thy blessing, so abundant, so free, and so divine, abide with all who are associated with this Chamber. Be with us, our families, and all our earthly loves. As the days pass and the morrows come may our hopes and our comforts be realized in the cross on Calvary's hill. In that silent, solemn moment when earth and time yield to heaven and eternity may the golden light break over the everlasting hills. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had asked a conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the House amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 215, providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project of Nebraska.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that September 21 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 12377. An act to establish a commission to be known as the United States coal commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10766. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10419. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands;

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL, 1923.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference on the bill H. R. 12704, the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments on the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if the Senate amendments—I am not familiar with them—carry legislation or are they upon a question purely of amount?

Mr. MADDEN. Two or three carry legislation, and I will say the conferees do not expect to agree to those.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Senate then has undertaken to legislate upon this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I think they have in one or two cases, but all the other amendments are within the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do understand, however, that the conferees intend to accept the amendment proposed of $200,000 for the relief of Smyrna?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course I am only one of the conferees, and I am unable——

Mr. BLANTON. But it being an administration appropriation the gentleman probably would be inclined to accept it?

Mr. MADDEN. I am inclined to think that what both the State Department and the President want ought to have great weight.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give me some time, say, 10 minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. When the conferees come back?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have it now.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman had better wait until we come back.

Mr. BLANTON. There may not be time.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; we will not be long.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The conferees on the part of the Senate are now waiting for the conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well; when they come back, that will be time enough.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS] before the American Legion convention at Goldsborough, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. LAMAR JEFFERS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM ALABAMA, AT GREENSBORO, N. C., BEFORE THE NORTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF THE AMERICAN LEGION ON SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1922.

Mr. Department Commander, Mr. Post Commander, comrades of the North Carolina Department of the American Legion, and friends, let me assure you that it is not merely making use of a conventional phrase when I tell you to-day that I am truly glad and happy to be here with you.

I may say that I always feel right at home in any gathering of service people. When I am with service people I am with those whom I feel that I know and with those who know me. We know that wherever we may meet there is always a wonderful common bond of fellowship, and so coming for the first time to visit a new place, if it is to mix and mingle with my comrades, is never like coming among strangers, but is always like returning again to be with good old friends.

It is a peculiar pleasure to me to have the opportunity to attend a great meeting like this, and I may say that it is also a great help to me, as well as a great pleasure. It is the best possible opportunity to feel the pulse of the Legion. I am sure that there is no way by which we can keep in touch as well as by attending these great gatherings of service people. I derived great benefit from my visit last fall to Kansas City to the national convention, and I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to meeting you fellows again this fall down at New Orleans.

It is my intention to keep right up with the Legion, to see how she is going, and to try to be able to size up the men who are placed at the helm, because, indeed, upon the quality of men whom we place at the head of our local posts, of our departments, and of the national organization depends to a large extent the welfare and progress of the Legion. I am very desirous of keeping in touch; I want to be able to sense and know the force of our organization, which must be preserved, and which I pray will increase constantly in strength and power.

I am sure that I will derive real inspiration and realize a great deal of benefit from this opportunity to meet here to-day with the department of the great State of North Carolina.

My making reference to you as service men and women is because I like that term much better than the term "ex-service." We are in the service of the flag to-day as citizens, and so we are indeed and in truth service people still. Of course, I understand that by "ex-service people" we mean ex-Army people, but still I do not like the sound of the term "ex-service," and I prefer to think of all my comrades as service people.

As our best services were needed as soldiers during the days when we wore khaki, so are our best services needed to-day as true American citizens, and so let us consider ourselves now and always service people still in the service of the flag as true citizens.

In the dark and troublesome days of 1917 and 1918, after the main powers of the earth on the other side of the water had been at each other's throats for several years, the tocsin of war—real, actual war—was at last sounded over our own beloved land. The spirit of America challenged the manhood and the womanhood of the country. Our people looked upon the mountain top and saw there Columbia, the spirit of America, proudly and boldly holding on high the Stars and Stripes. Columbia called and her children rallied to her side.

We all know how magnificently the men and women and the boys and girls, no matter how old or how young, did their bit the very best they could. We know that no matter how humble might have been their part to play that they gave themselves unreservedly to their task, and we know that in their breasts the flame of patriotism burned just as brightly and just as unquenchably as it flared in the heart of the most intrepid American soldier on the far-flung battle front. They were inspired by the great spirit of America, the spirit of the New World, the spirit of the West. That spirit enabled this country to form an Army in an incredibly short space of time and to back that Army up in a wonderful manner; we know that that same spirit inspired the officers and men of our great Navy, who made it possible for the fresh, new, youthful, bouyant Army to fling itself like an olive-drab cyclone across the dangerous submarine infested waters of the Atlantic to arrive "over there" just in time to cheer and bolster the then worn and faltering allied armies. It was the new life they so sorely needed, and they were refreshed and invigorated just the same as by the transfusion of new blood from the body of a friend into the veins of a perishing comrade.

Ah, my friends, it will always be a wonderful page in history for our children and for their children, and for their children's children to read how then the allied forces, given this new blood, this new life, this new vigor, turned upon the onrushing and relentless Boche, and with furious onslaught hurled them back, and back, and back, ripping and tearing the German lines asunder wherever they struck with the dauntless American doughboy always in the forefront everywhere, until ere long the world heard the glad tidings that the war was done, and that Kaiserism was stamped from the face of the earth forevermore, and the Kaiser driven with bowed back and broken sword, shrinking and slinking away into oblivion.

It is well, Mr. Chairman and my comrades, and it is as it should be that we do have in our hearts the deep feeling of love and appreciation, that will always be fresh in our memory, for all that was done for us by these boys, the very flower of our American manhood, who bore the brunt of battle always for us.

But let us never forget, my friends and comrades, that inspired by that same spirit were our precious service girls. God bless them all! None but those men who enjoyed the privilege and pleasure of meeting and knowing them as they stood the test of fire and steel can ever really know how wonderful and magnificent they were. Honor and glory to the name of every service girl. They also felt and heeded the call to duty. They bravely forsook the shelter and comforts of home and fireside. They cheerfully gave up the companionship of friends and loved ones, and they placed themselves unreservedly upon the altar of service. They joined up side by side with their warrior brothers, ready to share with them the fortunes or misfortunes of grim warfare.

So, therefore, while our hearts do glow with unrestrained pride for the patriotism and the valor of our boys, and while we shall ever sing their praises so richly deserved, we must not fail to express our heartfelt appreciation of, nor must we withhold our sincere applause for, the brilliant and unimpeachable record made by our superb American girls who served in all the various capacities with and for our Army and Navy and Marine Corps, all during the war.

I am proud, Mr. Chairman, to have the honor of paying special tribute here to-day, in this distinguished company, to the real American beauty, that incomparable rose of no man's land—the American Red Cross nurse.

To-day, my comrades, Columbia calls again insistently, pleadingly, urgently. The call is not so spectacular, perhaps, as it was in the days of '17 and '18, but it is just as earnest. The call to-day is not "To arms"; we thank God for that, but it is to the higher duties of true citizenship. We must heed this call if we as American citizens are to fulfill the certain legacy left to us by those who were willing to go for us straight down the hard, narrow, rugged path of a tiresome, toilsome duty, which led for them straight to the door of death. There they made the supreme sacrifice with a word of cheer to their "buddies" whom they left to "carry on" and with a smile upon their lips so wonderful that language is inadequate to express it and of which you could have no conception unless you had seen it.

They sleep; they took the chance
In Italy, in Belgium, in France;
For us they gave their youth to its last breath—
For us they plunged on into the gulf of death.
With high heroic heart
They did their valiant part.
They gave the grace and glory of their youth
To lie in heaps uncouth.
They turned from these bright skies
To lie with dust and silence in their eyes.
Yet they have wages we know not of—
Wages of honor and immortal love.
For they went down only to live again
In the eternal memory of men—
To be warm pulse-beats in the greatening soul
That drives the blind world onward to her goal.
They are not dead; life's flag is never furled;
They pass from world to world.
Their bodies sleep, but in some nobler land
Their spirits march under a new command.
New joys await them there
In hero heavens, wrapt in immortal air.
Rejoice for them, rejoice;
They made the nobler choice.
How shall we honor their deed—
How speak our praise of their immortal breed?
Only by living nobly as they died—
Toiling for truth denied.
Loyal to something bigger than we are—
Something that swings the spirit to a star.

Ah, my comrades, there is the charge in those few lines to you and to me, and to every man and woman whose home is in America.

How shall we honor their deed;
How speak our praise of their immortal breed?
Only by living nobly as they died—
Toiling for Truth denied.
Loyal to something bigger than we are—
Something that swings the spirit to a star.

"Toiling for Truth denied"—that the truth may shine resplendent and that error may be driven back to the caves of darkness, there securely chained, no more to march up and down the highways of life, to mislead, conflict, and embitter the hearts of men.

"Nobly, as they died," must we live here now, and faithfully must we do our full duty as true-hearted American citizens, living always above and beyond the sham and veneer and false issue, striving to know and to do that which is truly for the best interest of our country. We must do all this, my comrades, if we are to carry out this legacy left to us by our immortal "buddies" who went over with us but who "came not back again." Let this day be our day of rededication to our duty to fulfill that legacy. In their name and for their sake we must strive to do our best as citizens if we are to preserve this country the wonderful place in which to live that they thought it was when they were so willing to cheerfully pay the price, if necessary, for flag, for home, and for country.

In every test and in every emergency the great State of North Carolina has always been well represented. The part acted by North Carolina in the greatest drama of modern times—the War between the States—history will ever preserve without blemish upon its pages.

If I am correctly informed, the first Confederate soldier killed in battle was Henry L. Wyatt, of the Edgecombe Guards, Company A, of the First North Carolina Regiment, who fell in battle on the 10th of June, 1861.

And then, near the close of the war at Reams Station, on the 25th of August, 1864, after a previous assault by other troops had failed, the three North Carolina brigades of Cook, Lane, McRae, in number less than 2,000 men, drove back the Federal troops from the field, capturing their breastworks, with 2,150 prisoners, 3,100 stands of small arms, 12 stands of colors, 9 guns and caissons. The result of this brilliant engagement was hailed with great rejoicing throughout the South and shed a declining luster upon the Confederate battle flag, upon which the sun of victory was about to go down forever. Gen. R. E. Lee publicly and repeatedly stated that not only North Carolina, but the whole Confederacy owes a debt of gratitude to Lane's, Cook's, and McRae's brigades which could never be repaid.

The regiments from North Carolina engaged in this battle illustrated those qualities which will perpetuate the name and fame of the Confederate soldier in years to come. Unshaken by the fall of Vicksburg and the disaster at Gettysburg, undismayed amidst the general gloom which was settling upon the fortunes of the South, they exhibited the same enthusiasm and valor which had marked their conduct upon every field where they had stood for the honor, the glory, and the renown of their State.

Just here, comrades, let me refer for a moment to a character that I have learned to respect and to admire; to a man whom I have learned to love. I refer, my friends, to that grand gentleman, that gallant veteran who wore the gray in the sixties—the last one of his kind in the House of Representatives—that man among men, that peer amongst his fellows—the Hon. CHARLES M. STEDMAN, your own Representative in Congress. Major STEDMAN is a man admired, respected, and loved by all of his colleagues. His gentle demeanor and his courtly bearing, and the character indicated by his gentleness and at the same time his manliness, has been a source of inspiration to me as a young man. It was with a great deal of pleasure that I was telling him, in a conversation I had with him only a few days ago, that I expected to visit his home, and I expressed to him how much I would like to be able to look forward to his being there at this time and mixing and mingling with the veterans of the World War. Major STEDMAN is a soldier, and he assured me that nothing would give him more pleasure than to come and be here with you were it possible for him to do so. That being impossible, he wished me to say to you how much he regretted that he could not come, and to tell you that he wished you good luck and Godspeed in all the activities and undertakings of the North Carolina department of the American Legion.

Have we learned naught from the silent endurance, the patient agony, the deathless valor of the Confederate soldier? It can not be. His life and his conduct have taught us the lesson over again which history has ever repeated.

And then you know the record for intrepid bravery made by your own North Carolina boys during the World War.

Where did they get that magnificent, dashing, slashing, fighting spirit? They came by it by priceless inheritance, and they proved themselves worthy sons of their illustrious fathers.

I feel sure that you will be interested in something touching legislation affecting service people, as well as being interested in the general situation concerning service people and their welfare. Since I have been in my present position I have had the opportunity, of course, to observe it both from the inside and the outside.

I talk with service people every day just as one service man to another, and so I feel that I know their points of view. I am sure I understand their language, and I know what they feel and what they are talking about. On the other hand, I, of course, have the opportunity of hearing what the fellow on the inside thinks of the service man and his influence and of legislation affecting service men.

I know that the average soldier came out of the war with no intention or desire to push himself forward into politics. He had heard so much before his discharge about what was going to be done for the fellows to help get them on their feet again as American citizens when they came back that he naturally thought that at least a square deal would be coming to him as a matter of right and justice. So he came out of the service confidently expecting that that would be done. As I say, he was not desirous of pushing himself forward. He was not begging for the aid that he had been told would be his as a matter of right and justice. He naturally thought those things would come, but, my friends, you know what he got—one crack below the belt right after another. At first he was shocked and surprised and did not know what to make of it, but, then, my friends, he roused himself, and he began to organize as a matter of self-preservation. He continued to receive one jolt after another until he at last began to take the attitude that that was a game that two could play at. An so, unconsciously almost, service people have been to a large extent crystallized, and while I know that our great organization steers clear of partisan politics—and should do so—yet we know, my friends, that the service people of the country in their organization, the American Legion, do compose an influential factor.

And the treatment which service people are receiving and have received at the hands of the politicians of the Nation will cause them to continue to organize and to crystallize their sentiment until finally, even against their natural desire, perhaps, and unwillingly in some cases, and almost unconsciously, the service people of the Nation will become one of the greatest organized factors which this country has ever known in connection with the shaping of the policies of the Nation. People are impressed already with the seriousness and determination with which they are pressing the matters in which they are interested.

We must remember, my friends, that if we are to make the impression which we desire upon the people of America we must press these matters firmly, but at the same time we must press them manfully and in a clear and level-headed manner. The Legion must not be known as being rowdy or domineering when it comes to handling or influencing matters of legislation. We must work on a higher plane. We must go about these matters as an intelligent organization and not as a misdirected mob. Everything depends upon the organization—its strength and the way it is guided.

So let me say a word at this time for the organization. I wish I could impress every legionnaire in the whole country with the absolute necessity of working at all times for increased membership. If we want more strength and more power for the American Legion we must have more members. The influence of the Legion depends upon the number of men in the Legion. The influence of the Legion depends upon its numerical strength. If you approach a man on any subject and tell him that you have the American Legion behind you, he wants to know immediately how many men that represents. If you tell him that represents 500,000 men, he figures on that basis. If you are able to tell him that that represents 1,000,000 men, my friends, it weighs upon his mind a great deal more than twice 500. As your figures mount higher, the proportion of influence grows greater and greater at a ratio far exceeding the actual ratio of increased membership. So it is most important that we seek seriously to enroll every man and woman so far as we possibly can.

Tell these fellows who have not yet come into the Legion that the American Legion needs them, not for the few paltry dollars they may pay into the Legion as dues, but tell them that the Legion needs every service man in it, so that the Legion can be the power that it ought to be for the benefit in many ways for all of our comrades all over this land. Tell them about the shattered ones. Tell them that the American Legion says and has always said that they must come first. We know that their interests have the first consideration of the Legion; we know that the Legion says that these disabled "buddies" of ours must be given every care; that they must be made comfortable, and we know that the Legion is insisting with all of its power now, that in these cases the minds of these comrades of ours must be put at ease as well as their bodies. Their surroundings should be pleasant and the last word in comfort and convenience. That is one of the aims, that is one of the principal aims, of the American Legion.

Go tell the fellows who have not yet come within the fold that we need them not for their money but that we need them for their numerical strength and that every man who comes into the Legion adds just that much to the influence and the power of the organization. Oh, go back to your local posts and tell your comrades there that the one thing that your post has got to do is to get busy and go out into the highways and byways and bring them in. Get a list of the men eligible for membership in your territory, and go after those fellows one by one with dogged determination, which will finally win their applications for membership in your post.

I am sure that you are all perfectly familiar with the progress from the very beginning up to date of the adjusted compensation legislation, but as it is a live issue at this time, I think it appropriate to touch upon it here.

Very soon after the armistice there were between 50 and 60 compensation bills introduced in Congress The Ways and Means Committee called in the legislative representatives of the American Legion and requested them to help study the different proposed bills and to help determine what would be best.

The representatives of the Legion made an exhaustive study of the bills and investigated the circumstances and conditions of the service people over the country and worked out the five-plan idea. It appeared to be the most feasible plan that could be submitted. Since the day the armistice was signed the service people have been promised some suitable adjusted compensation. The American Legion and other organizations of ex-service people have been given to understand that it was coming. The service people have been led to believe all along that a compensation measure like this was to be passed, not as a matter of charity at all but as a matter of right and justice. Consequently it has gotten to the point now that there is no way for the issue to be settled until an adjusted compensation measure is passed and taken care of. Now that it is actually being considered, and after leaders have publicly promised that it would soon be passed, certain interests are flooding the country with propaganda to scare the people with greatly exaggerated statements about the immediate cost of the legislation.

I believe the country has been unduly frightened by an immense propaganda which has been and is being carried on by interests that are against any adjusted compensation for service people. I also believe that there is a desire on the part of some of those who are high in the administration circle here in Washington to attach some obnoxious tax to the adjusted compensation measure, because they believe such a tax would serve to create sentiment not only against the measure itself but would also reflect against the service people all over the country. Politicians of this stripe want, I believe, to kill the service men and women as a rising and growing political factor by deliberately trying to make this soldier legislation unpopular with the people.

I am glad to say that I feel sure that Congress and the people of the Nation will be agreeably surprised when they see how many of the service people will take advantage of the other and better features of the bill instead of the small cash payments.

About the matter of attaching a special tax to this particular piece of legislation, that is a thing that has not been done before. The $700,000,000, and more, that have been paid to the railroads out of the Treasury during the last 24 months came out of the taxes paid by the people, of course. They say that was a matter of right and justice that the railroads should be so reimbursed. Be that as it may, it all came out of the pockets of the people in taxes. And I noticed a day or two ago that the railroads still claim that reimbursement is due them to the amount of $350,000,000 more than has already been paid, and they expect to collect that very soon. But there is no movement on foot to place a sales tax or other special obnoxious tax on the people for the express purpose of raising money to pay the railroads. But, of course, it comes out of the people, anyway, all the same.

It cost billions to reimburse war contractors—a bill for the relief of the Shipping Board contractors carried fifty million, the war mineral relief bill carried forty million, twenty million was voted recently for Russian relief without question as to how the money would be raised; all these measures were put over without any special obnoxious tax being attached to them to make them a stench in the nostrils of the public. Why single out the soldiers' compensation measure to put a special tax upon the people to raise the funds when they have not mentioned any special taxation to pay all these other debts? Why attach all the odium to the soldiers?

The giant interests of the country who are now fighting the adjusted compensation measure were in favor of most of the above relief measures, I believe, and they did not want anything said about any taxes necessary to pay those sums of money because of the fact that they do not want to bring the railroads and other special interests into disrepute with the people; but now that an adjusted compensation measure for the soldiers is being considered they would like to put an obnoxious tax on the people in connection with that.

Let us consider the civil service employees and the great army of war workers. Added compensation of $240 per year was given them to help them meet rising living costs. That is all right; they needed it, no doubt. Now, while thousands of ex-soldiers are unemployed to-day these war workers still have the jobs and are still drawing the $20 per month as a bonus or added compensation. That is a matter of right and justice, they say; all right, we will say it is, but it all comes out of the Treasury. There is no special tax attached to that particular expenditure.

If full reparation to the railroads for all losses sustained during the war; if reimbursement for war contractors; if help for the Russians; if a square deal for the great army of war workers; if all this is done in the name of justice, then why not grant fair adjusted compensation to the men and women who turned themselves over to Uncle Sam and went away to serve for $1 per day, less allotment, less insurance, less other items that left a man about $1.75 per month which he could squander on tobacco and other luxuries?

If a square deal to the railroads, if a square deal for the war contractors, then why, in God's name, not some semblance of a square deal for the poor devil of an American doughboy soldier, who sweat blood and slept in the mud for the preservation of the homes of America, for the safety of the wives and mothers and children of America, and to keep this country safe for the continued operations of the profiteers?

Seriously, these ex-service people all over this country need a little help now in order that they may be able to more readily pick up again the broken threads of their civil lives. It is mighty hard for them to come back and take things up again where they left off. They lost out in many ways. They are young Americans, and many of them are right now struggling against odds to begin life all over again as heads of young American families. They should be encouraged. It is America's sacred duty to be considerate now to those who wore her uniform in time of war.

Another thing to be considered is that other countries have given this adjusted compensation to their service people. England granted adjusted compensation ranging from $150 to $750 per man.

That brings us to the point that England and other countries owe the United States about $10,000,000,000. I am much in hopes that some way will be found to finance some part of that debt with sufficient security to provide for all needs, so that no special odious tax measure will be attached to the adjusted compensation measure. There are those here who are in position to know who say that can be done. Banking institutions in this country, however, to whom our allies also owe money are against this plan, because they want to try to get their pay from our allies before our Government gets hers.

We had to vote on the bill as it was presented. We had to "take it or leave it." The certificate plan in it was, and is, in my opinion, an infamous, unfair, deceptive subterfuge. But it was ushered in there under a gag rule that made it impossible to even offer any amendment whatever. We had to swallow it as it was or vote with the Mellons if we voted against it. Of course, I voted for it, but in supporting it in its deceptive and disappointing form I felt toward it like the old negro felt about the liquor that his boss gave him. The boss gave old Sam this liquor one evening, and the next morning when they met the following colloquy took place:

"The BOSS. Good morning, Sam; did you drink that liquor I gave you last night?

"OLD SAM. Yassar, Boss, yassar; I drunk it.

"The BOSS. Well, Sam, how was it? How did you like it?

"OLD SAM. Well, suh, I drunk it all right.

"The BOSS. Well, how was it, Sam?

"OLD SAM. Well, suh, I reckon you'd call dat likker jes about right for er nigger.

"The BOSS. What do you mean by that expression 'just about right for a nigger'?

"OLD SAM. Well, Boss, you see dat likker was like dis: Ef hit had er bin any better you wouldn't er gi' it to me, and ef hit had er bin any wusser I couldn't er drunk it."

There are quite a number of other things, of course, which should be attended to and I hope will be attended to. One thing which has been on my mind all the time since I have been in Congress, if you will pardon a personal reference, is the matter of veterans really being given the preferenee which the Congress intended they should have when they passed what preference laws are now on the books. The spirit of this law is not being carried out in all cases. That is one thing that I hope our organization will give its sincere and serious and true attention to in a forceful manner, so that we may have this preference really given to the ex-service men and women, and so that we will actually have such preference laws enforced as they should be in actual practice, and not merely existing in theory. That is one result that I feel and believe can be gotten if the right sort of effort be devoted to it.

Of course, in some cases preference has been given, but it can be and is often avoided and evaded in the departments, and we should come down on them so strongly that the law would be interpreted in all cases in favor of the service people, who are entitled to the preference, as it should be.

I may say at this time that there are those in Congress who are hoping that in the near future we can have a new committee in Congress, to be called the committee on Veterans' Bureau and veterans' legislation. If this plan goes through it will be provided that at least half of the membership of this committee be ex-service men. And then I feel sure—I say this without speaking disparagingly of any Member of Congress or of any present committee—that veterans' legislation will be given quicker, better consideration, and consideration with a better understanding of the service people and their problems than has been the case in the past. I feel that this will be a big step in the right direction, and I hope we will have this new committee created at least by the beginning of the next Congress.

I have no fear but that the soldier of yesterday will make the good substantial citizen of to-morrow. Of course we know and realize that the average service man when first out of the Army was restless. He was trying to again take up the threads of civil life, trying again to find the niche of life where he could properly fit in, awakening from a dream which does not bear description, coming back to the old life that he once knew, but now finding things so changed. So it is no wonder that the average service man was filled with the wanderlust, and moved about trying to find the proper place, trying to get his bearings, trying to get back on his feet, his visions of life before him, trying to find some way to get the proper grasp upon the ladder of life.

The service man came in for a great deal of criticism and a great deal of censure on account of this restlessness, but never was criticism any more unjust than that sort of criticism of these service men. But they are finding themselves, and as they are they are coming through in great shape in every kind of capacity.

I want to mention one thought in this connection, my comrades, and that is that every service man in any capacity should do his best to make good. Not only for his own sake and for the sake of his own loved ones, but for the sake of all of his comrades, because the service man is under the observation of the public. He is under the public eye, and he is on trial and the public is watching him, and every success made by any service man redowns to the credit and the benefit of every service man; and on the other hand, my friends, every failure made by any service man is damaging to the chances for success of every service man who is trying to pick up again the thread of life and carry on as he did before. So it is up to all of us to consider seriously the responsibility that is on us from that point of view. We must make good not only for our own sakes but for the sake of all of our comrades, who are struggling to get their feet planted again upon the rungs of the ladder. So, heads up! Let us now be up and doing, with a heart for any fate!

We have noted the criticism hurled at the service people and at their legislation by big interests and politicians who are the tools or the servants of those interests. The service man has not said a great deal, but he has seen all this and has done a great deal of thinking. He has seen and recognized the political chicanery through it all. They have hit him many unfair, underhanded blows. Preference promises have not been kept. The service man has seen that. They talk about "commercializing patriotism" when adjusted compensation is mentioned, thereby striking at his pride. They know he has pride and honor, which is more than can be said of the war profiteers, who accumulated their millions off the blood of American men and who are now raising the most strenuous objection to adjusted compensation. Andrew Mellon, of the Standard Steel Car Co. and other Mellon interests, for example. Yet they hit the ex-soldier below the belt by trying to work on the pride that they know he has. The service man has seen all this and has not said a great deal, but I am sure the average service man must have, while keeping his own counsel, felt the utter disgust and the fine scorn expressed by an old artillerist when he wrote the lines with which I am going to close.

During the days after the armistice, as the men were returning to this country from overseas, you who were there will remember the constant changing of orders concerning the service chevrons, the wound chevrons, the divisional insignia, and all distinctive markings. Some people wanted them all taken off because they were marks of distinction, and they feared would cause envy and jealousy between the men or between outfits. But the service man knew that he cared nothing for all that; all he wanted to do was to get back home. He did not have any desire to lord it over his less fortunate buddies who had not gotten overseas, and he was disgusted and scorned the attitude of those who were so afraid of creating any distinction; and so, in his quiet scorn and utter disgust, the old artillerist wrote these lines. As they were true of the soldiers' attitude then, just so are they true of him to-day and, I think, will be always. But again let me suggest for all a good motto: "Let us now be up and doing, with a heart for any fate."

No matter what happens, comrades, or how unfair and wrong things may seem to be, remember that there is a heritage which can not be taken away—

You can strip him of his chevrons,
  You can take his stripes away,
And the badge of his division,
  Which produces your dismay;
You can make him scrap his medals;
  But no matter how you try,
You can never, never legislate
  That glitter from his eye.

For he has seen a summer day
  That you have never dreamed;
He has seen flesh turn to clay
  While affronted Heaven screamed;
He has seen the shattered trench,
  He has seen the twisted wire,
He has seen strong, living men
  Charred and black in molten fire;
He has seen beneath his feet
  Flesh of comrades turn to clay,
As you never could have dreamed—
  He has seen a summer day.

You can ban the golden arrow
  That is stitched on his right sleeve,
And "eradicate distinction"
  With a simple by your leave,
Promulgate your resolutions,
  Hurl the ink until you die,
But you can't expunge his mem'ry
  Nor the glitter from his eye.

For he has seen cold autumn night
  That you could never bear,
With hell's flare his only light,
  Pointing out hell's angel there;
He has known a single hour
  When cold steel, red hail, and gas
Ceased and left a holy calm,
  Such as come when angels pass;
He has seen his comrades stand,
  Half-transfigured in release,
Knighted, spurred, and panoplied
  By their liege, the Prince of Peace.

—Artillerist.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has promised me 10 minutes to debate the Senate amendments on the deficiency appropriation bill, and in order to save time when the conferees come back I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed now for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HICKS. On what subject?

Mr. BLANTON. On the subject of the Smyrna relief proposition and other matters which I think are of great importance at this time.

Mr. HICKS. I have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, the Congress is preparing to adjourn sine die. Every Member here is aware of the fact that there will be a call to bring us back in a second special session November 15. From this conference report on the deficiency bill we are aware of the fact that the Senate held no hearings, and without knowing how many Americans were suffering in Smyrna, without knowing the circumstances of the alleged Turkish atrocities respecting Americans or their necessities, it has placed in this bill $200,000 for immediate expenditure in their behalf, and the House has given it no consideration whatever; but in the dark and without knowledge of the facts, the Congress is to vote this money of the American people out of the Treasury.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I regret that I can not. We have been told by the present administration all through the months which have gone by that we must keep out of foreign entanglements, and yet each month or two we are called upon to take part financially in foreign matters which are taking place from day to day. We still have 1,200 soldiers quartered in Germany at the expense of this Nation, nearly four years since the armistice. And on Tuesday the President advised us that we must vote rigid economy, as we are facing a deficit of $600,000,000.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not. I have only a few minutes. And yet without any hearing or consideration we are called upon to vote large sums every day, and create new high-salaried positions.

If we are to effect rigid economy, why should we not recess until November 15, instead of now adjourning sine die, and then being called back in special session, and thus save all the incidental expenses of an adjournment and a reconvening of Congress? We could save about enough to pay this $200,000.

I think there are matters of more urgent importance to be considered just now than the voting out of this sum without hearing or consideration. For instance, there is a resolution pending here now before Congress to impeach the Attorney General of the United States for doing his duty. [Applause.] I have no objection to the resolution of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] to investigate the Attorney General for not having prosecuted war profiteers. He has not prosecuted them. He should prosecute them. There should be a proper and rigid investigation concerning that question. And the Attorney General should be condemned for not prosecuting war profiteers. But when the Attorney General, in behalf of the whole people of this United States, with our industry tied up, has performed his duty and has taken action before the courts of his country to have the law administered in behalf of the whole people, a resolution is brought in here to impeach him, which has the tendency to hinder him, to discredit him before the country, and the administration, with its 170 majority in this House, has not placed a man on the floor to defend the action of the Attorney General in protecting the industry of this country.

Talk about Turkish atrocities in Smyrna. I have in mind atrocities that equal any ever committed by the unspeakable Turks that have been committed not in Smyrna but in the United States, in the State of Illinois. There never will be an atrocity greater than that committed at Herrin, Ill. Peaceful American citizens seeking to exercise their constitutional right to work for their families and earn an honest livelihood, with laws to protect them, were taken in charge there by men whose will is considered greater by some men than the will of this Government. They were stripped of their clothing; they were tied together with a rope; tied behind a high-powered automobile, and dragged over the rough, rocky road at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and, bleeding and dying in the hot sun, they plead for water, but are told in America, "I will see you in hell first."

That is an American atrocity. With the railroads tied up; with factories shutting down; with the products of the farm rotting in the fields where they were produced because they can not be sent to market; with the cattlemen unable to send their live stock to market because they can not get the cars; with railroad bridges blown up by dynamite or burned and trains purposely derailed, with men, women, and little children placed at inconvenience; with engines run into open turntables and the machinery spiked to put it out of order, so that the cars can not run, and the people of the United States, with every industry tied up, appealing to the administration for law enforcement; when the great chief law officer of this Nation resorted to our courts and the law, seeking to bring order out of chaos; when he seeks to stop men from violating the law—then he is to be impeached. Not a man of his administration has dared to get up here and defend him.

I am a partisan Democrat; he is a partisan Republican. But I want to say to Mr. Daugherty that I am one American citizen who is behind him in his fight to restore law and order in this country. I will lend him every assistance I can. The people of America are entitled to it. It is the duty of every friend of the administration to stop throwing obstacles in the way and to help uphold the law of this country.

I could mention many other things that are more important just now than the Smyrna proposition. Why, France and Italy are taking one position on this Turkish question, while England is taking another. There could be a conflict between these great powers over this question. There are many so-called American citizens living all over the world that could be involved. This little $200,000 could be a mere bagatelle compared with the sum which this country could be called upon to appropriate in order to grant relief to nonresident Americans in many other parts of the world. Yet we have tied our hands by refusing to enter the League of Nations and have placed ourselves where in a diplomatic way we can not take part in the proper solution of these questions to bring about a world peace.

Charity begins at home. Americans here at home are entitled to relief first. We are called upon to spend liberally the people's money on every kind of a foreign proposition, but we are told that we can not adjust the pay of the brave soldiers who through great sacrifice brought back from France a world victory.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that the conferees will get through on the deficiency bill by that time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am indulging the hope that they may get through by that time. If not, we shall at least know what progress they have made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I get it, the Senate adjourned until 12 o'clock to-day. They have not yet passed the final adjournment resolution. I was wondering whether 12.30 might not be better than 12. However, it is immaterial to me. I will take whatever the gentleman's best judgment is.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can see how it might add to the convenience of the Members and accommodate the situation of the House to the situation of the Senate by recessing until 12.30. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask that the House stand in recess until 12.30.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the Senate would not pass that resolution until the deficiency bill was disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Until it passed the House?

The SPEAKER. Passed through both Houses.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, with that understanding I ask that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 22 minutes) the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock noon.

The recess having expired, the House, at 12 o'clock noon, resumed its session.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION, 1923.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the deficiency bill, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a conference report, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 11, 12, 14, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 16, 17, 19, and 20, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "two assistant registrars at $5,000 per annum each" and insert in lieu thereof "assistant registrar at $5,000 per annum," and in line 15 strike out "$33,125" and insert in lieu thereof "$29,375"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "and directed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
PATRICK H. KELLEY,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the House appropriated $560,688.08. As it passed by the Senate it carried $2,831,742.15, an increase by the Senate of $2,271,054.07.

From this increase the Senate has receded on amendments involving a total of $377,532.06.

If the House adopts the conference report the bill will carry $2,454,210.09, which is $1,893,522.01 more than when it passed the House.

Of the Senate increase, which has been agreed to, $1,239,238.44 is due to judgments and audited claims for which it is necessary to appropriate.

The remainder of the increase, or $654,238.57, is distributed as follows:

On account of Senate expenses, $13,184.

White House police, as authorized by law, $51,555.

United States Coal Commission, on account of the bill recently passed, $200,000.

China trade act, in accordance with the law just passed, $29,375.

Oregon and California railroad lands, $10,169.57.

Indian schools, $100,000, due to the necessity for rebuilding two schools that were partially burned down.

Spillway and drainage ditch, Lake Andes, S. Dak., $50,000, in accordance with the act just passed by both Houses.

Smyrna relief, $200,000, as suggested by the State Department and the President of the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is that fund to relieve American citizens?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; entirely.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is there a list of the judgments in the room of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and the list is in the bill also.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. The conference report makes available one hundred and three thousand and some odd dollars for the administration of the futures trading act.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the amount that was appropriated in the former act is made available under the act just passed.

Mr. TINCHER. We were not in shape to ask that that be made a part of the act at the time the bill passed the House, because the futures trading act was not passed until yesterday.

Mr. MADDEN. The futures trading act was not passed by the Senate when the House considered this bill, or it would have been included.

Mr. TINCHER. Regardless of the fact that the gentleman is opposed to the bill, the friends of the bill are very appreciative of the prompt appropriation for the enforcement and carrying out of the bill. The gentleman has shown his usual sportsmanlike spirit and the spirit of true statesmanship, and his unfailing courtesy, regardless of his personal views. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I am sure that the Committee on Appropriations feels that every act on the statute books ought to be properly enforced; and if it takes money to enforce it, we agree with the gentleman that it is our duty to appropriate the money, and we are very happy to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It has been stated that because of provisions in the tariff act vesting unusual discretion in the President it will be necessary to make very largely increased appropriations for the use of the Tariff Commission. Does this bill take that fact into account?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we have no information on that subject except what I have seen in the newspapers.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There will be estimates, however, after a while, in order to cover which it will be necessary to increase appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know. We have no information at all on the subject, I will say to my friend.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As a matter of public interest, will the gentleman tell us what the situation is so far as our nationals in Smyrna are concerned, to the extent that he is able to do so, based on the data now available?

Mr. MADDEN. The information that I have came from a conversation that I had with the President, in which he stated that the State Department had been making a very careful survey of the situation over there, and that the American citizens in and about Smyrna are in a very bad condition. The burning of Smyrna and the riots and the trouble on account of the war made our citizens refugees, and they have been unable to find food or relief in any way. I thought it would be very important and necessary that the Government should supply their present needs. I understand that a relief cargo of food and other supplies is on the way.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman stated it awhile ago, but I could not hear him. How much is the increase in the bill over the amount it carried when it left the House?

Mr. MADDEN. The increase is $1,893,522, but $935,000 of that is due to audited claims for past years, 1920 and prior years, that have just come in and passed through the General Accounting Office, $284,000 due to judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, and $19,000 due to judgments rendered by the United States courts.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I understand the gentleman, these increases are all due to acts of Congress which have passed?

Mr. MADDEN. Of these increases $935,000 is due to activities of the Government in years past, 1920 and prior years, the accounts for which did not come in until the appropriation was either exhausted or the money turned back into the Treasury; $284,000 is due to judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and $19,000 to judgments by the United States courts. About $650,000 is due to the enforcement of acts recently passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Passed since the Appropriations Committee considered this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us with regard to these Americans in Smyrna for whom $200,000 is to be appropriated? How many years has it been since they have been in the United States?

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Probably some 15 or 20 years.

Mr. MADDEN. I think most of them are traveling over there, if I understand the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. In fact, most of the appropriations are a mere guess?

Mr. MADDEN. That part of it is a guess, sure.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no other questions, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House and revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress is about to adjourn. Of its achievements we have all reason to be proud. I wish to extend my congratulations to the Members on going home and getting into the swim for the Grand Old Party. No apology need be made by any Member on either side for the record of this Congress.

President Harding was elected at the November election, 1920, and sworn into office on the 4th day of March, 1921. The Congress was promptly called into special session and met on the 11th day of April, 1921. It has been in almost continuous session until this day, a period of 18 months. The Congress is composed of 302 Republicans, 132 Democrats, and 1 Socialist. Since that time, as stated by our floor leader, Mr. MONDELL, on the floor of the House, this Congress has enacted many important measures and much-needed legislation. In contrast with the oft-repeated statements carelessly, unknowingly, or purposely made to prejudice and mislead, I wish to quote this statement of his taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> No Congress ever sat under this dome that was more faithful, diligent, painstaking, earnest, more intelligent, or sounder in its judgments and decisions than the present Congress. Never in the same length of time has so much important legislation been considered in committee and in the Halls of the two branches of the National Legislature. Never in the history of this House had there been so close a study and painstaking an application to the work of the people in the matter of legislation and appropriations. Never has a Congress maintained a finer record for economy for expenditures than has this Congress, and gentlemen may go home to their constituents assured that their record and the record of the Congress of which they are Members will be approved by the overwhelming majority of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, that statement has never been successfully refuted by facts, figures, or the record.

I wish to enumerate some of the outstanding legislation enacted into law by this Congress to show the basis of that statement. Agriculture is the basic industry of our country. When farmers are prosperous all other industry prospers. When agriculture is depressed every industry suffers and hard times exist. Everybody knows of the great depression that the farmers were laboring under when President Harding was sworn into office. Mr. GLASS, a Member of the House from Virginia, had been appointed by President Wilson Secretary of the Treasury. After Secretary GLASS had been elected to the United States Senate, Mr. Houston, the Secretary of Agriculture from Texas, succeeded him as Secretary of the Treasury. Both led in the downward race of deflation, and in the squeeze the American farmer felt the pinch the hardest. Under the Underwood tariff law of free trade the market for home products was being flooded by other countries. We bought millions of bushels of wheat from Canada and cattle and dressed meat in large quantities from New Zealand and South America. The bars were thrown down to agricultural imports by the Underwood tariff law. We all remember how the importers and free traders rejoiced and shouted victory when the Underwood tariff law was passed; how vast stores of goods were piled up in the customhouses ready to be released before the dawn of day after its enactment. And all will admit that the baneful and harmful effect of that law was arrested only by the World War. There is no use disguising the fact. The Republican Party at the national election of 1920 was returned to power by the largest electoral vote ever cast by the people for the avowed purpose of putting up the bars against this flood of foreign imports and preventing the United States from becoming the dumping ground of the world.

The farmers' emergency tariff was one of the first measures to be enacted into law, and to show the changes made by it and the Underwood free trade law I incorporate a comparison of the changes made by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois found on page 12535 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 13, 1922:

In addition to this the Congress also speedily revived the War Finance Corporation and authorized $1,000,000,000 to be loaned to the American farmers in order that they might hold their crops, live stock, and products until such time as they could market them in an orderly manner and to better advantage, so that they need not throw them on the market at a ruinous price. Under this law to date there has been advanced to them for this purpose nearly $400,000,000, and the remainder is still available and the law is unrepealed. I wish also to state that this session of Congress has advanced the further sum of $25,000,000 to the farm loan banks of the country to loan on farm mortgages at a reduced rate of interest.

I wish further to say that the present Congress has passed a law permitting the farmer to cooperate in the sale and distribution of farm products and do collective marketing. I am also pleased to mention that the present Congress has passed a law beneficial to the dairy interests prohibiting transportation of filled milk in interstate commerce. I am pleased to state also that inasmuch as our Democratic friends and opponents never lose an opportunity to mention the fact that the Republican Party is controlled by Wall Street, the moneyed interest, and special legislation, let them ask themselves the question whether or not the legislation above enumerated was in the interest of or controlled by capital or Wall Street? It is an easy matter to demonstrate that no Congress in the history of the country in peace times has in the short time of 15 months' actual sessions passed as many beneficial acts as this Congress in the aid of agriculture. It is easier to tear down a structure than it is to build it.

Time or opportunity will not here permit me to enumerate at length the other important measures. Many of them would do credit to any session of Congress standing alone and by itself. Aside from the annual special bills for the carrying on of the Government, let me mention some of the other measures enacted by this Congress into law by the present Republican Congress:

The tariff bill.
The Budget system.
A new revenue bill.
Antilynching bill, passed by the House.
Bill to limit immigration.
Pension for Spanish war widows.
Pension bill granting $72 to Civil War veterans needing attendants.
A reduction of the personnel of our Army and Navy.
Bill to refund our foreign debts.
The Veterans' Bureau act.
Federal aid to highways and education.
Making pensions payable monthly to our veteran soldiers.
A coal fact finding commission bill.
A coal distributing bill to prevent profiteering.
New legislation for the benefit of disabled soldiers of the World War.
Economical legislation reducing our war debt more than $1,000,000,000.
Legislation ending the war with the Central Powers of Europe which failed of passage under Wilson's administration.
Resolution to prevent war-fraud cases.
Act granting independent citizenship to women.
Child labor law.
The packers' act.
Act to prevent trading and gambling in grain futures.
Aid to starving Russia.
Legislation to promote export trade by facilitating the organizations of corporations of foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, since it is claimed by the unthinking that this Congress was dominated by Wall Street and in the interest of capital, let me also call attention to the measures passed and enacted into law in the interest of the working men and women. This table is found on page 76 of the report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor to the forty-second annual convention:

1. Limiting immigration until June 30, 1922, to 3 per cent of the number of foreign born of any nationality in the United States according to the census of 1910. (Public, No. 5.)
2. Extending the expiration of the 3 per cent immigration law to June 30, 1924.
3. Increasing the number of years to five instead of one that foreigners must live in Canada, Cuba, or Mexico before entering the United States.
4. Penalizing steamship companies that bring more than the quota of any nationality provided in the immigration law.
5. Appropriating $5,000,000 for purchase of seed grain and of feed for farmers in crop-failure areas of United States. (Public, No. 177.)
6. For relief of distressed and starving people of Russia. (Public, No. 117.)
7. Authorizing associations of producers of agricultural products. (Public, No. 146.)
8. Appropriating $75,000,000 for construction of rural post roads. (Public, No. 87.)
9. Public protection of maternity and infancy. (Public, No. 97.)
10. Establishing Veterans' Bureau in Treasury Department. (Public, No. 47.)
11. Increasing force and salaries of Patent Office employees, etc. (Public, No. 147.)
12. Authorizing extension of time for payment of construction charges on reclamation projects, etc. (Public, No. 185.)
13. Amending act for retirement of employees in classified civil service. (Public, No. 142.)
14. Bringing all persons in classified civil service under retirement act. (Public, No. 182.)
15. Providing that water tenders, oilers, and firemen shall work 8 hours instead of 12 whether in port or at sea.
16. Appropriation of $225,000 for United States Employment Service of Department of Labor.
17. Appropriation for Women's Bureau of Department of Labor increased from $75,000 to $100,000.

Also referred to by Mr. HULL, of Iowa, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1922, on page 13098, and it will do no one any harm to read his speech connected therewith.

After reading the above acts, will some gentleman please point out and refer to any Congress that ever sat in peace times and passed anything approaching the legislation enacted by this Congress? If you can, please note that beside all the foregoing legislation, complexed and important as it is, you may add to it the time spent in adjustment of hundreds of millions of dollars of war contracts inherited by this Republican administration when it came into power. Of all the entanglements and mixed-up governmental affairs confronting this administration, all have been met boldly and openly and many of them solved.

In passing I may mention that there has been 383 new public acts placed upon the statute books and 114 private acts, including claims, by the present Congress, and I appeal to the fairness of all good citizens whether or not this is not a record of which any Republican and the Republican Party may be proud. But this is not all. In one short year the Nation's debt has been reduced more than $1,000,000,000. The appropriations in expenditures of the Government have been reduced more than $1,000,000,000 below what it was for 1921 under the last Democratic fiscal year.

The actual expenditures for the fiscal year 1922 were $3,000,000,000 below the amount spent in 1920. The cut in the pay roll of the Government this year amounts to half a billion below the Democratic pay roll in 1920. Liberty bonds rose to par under the Republican administration and the rate of interest on Government loans reduced from 6 to 3½ per cent. The whole administration of President Harding and the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States of America has been one of beneficial and constructive legislation. And his administration is crowned with the epoch-making peace conference to limit war armament, useless rivalry in naval construction, and fabulous expenditures, which will shine with the ages as one of the greatest achievements for lasting peace in the annals of the world's authentic war history.

Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish or may fade,
A breath can make them as a breath hath made,
But a bold peasantry, a country's pride,
When once destroyed can never be supplied.

The Republican Party has much to be proud of in its record of achievements by its Congress just brought to a close. We must not overlook the fact that complaints are heard, but for constructive legislation and the adjustment of our national affairs, distorted by the great World War, great progress has been made, although the end is not yet. Let us pledge a renewal of our fidelity and patriotism to our beloved land and Republic of the United States. It is the favored nation of the world. Let us strengthen our allegiance to its perpetuity and its eternal welfare. Anyone thinking or believing there is a better country than ours ought to go to it. And anyone advocating our country's destruction by force ought to be forced to abdicate and make room for some good, loyal citizen.

Before closing I wish to incorporate the reduction of appropriations found in the World's Almanac for 1922 to show that we are making progress in the reduction of taxation and cutting down appropriations:

Grand total appropriations.

Fiscal year:
1919	$25,598,967,518.00
1920	4,850,169,029.00
1921	4,789,300,920.00
1922	3,960,354,621.00
1923 (estimated)	3,500,035,382.64

One of the complaints most heard is concerning the guaranty of the railroad earnings under the Esch-Cummins Act. It is untruthfully reiterated time and again that the Government guarantees to the railroads a fixed return under that act. In the transition of the railroads from Government control, with its operation costing the Government a deficiency of $1,000,000 a day, this act simply extended Federal control over the railroad revenues for a period of six months only. This was made necessary in getting the roads back into the hands of their owners and to give the Interstate Commerce Commission an opportunity within that time to fix new rates of transportation, both freight and passenger; but since September 1, 1920, the United States has not paid one dollar to the railroads for maintaining earnings on their stock or for operating expenses.

Vague and misleading opinions may be expressed concerning this act, but day by day and month by month the railroads are returning to a sound basis or more prosperous condition. At the end of Government control many were threatened with bankruptcy. The transportation and commerce of our country is of vital need to our progress and national welfare. The year 1921 was a trying year the world over for transportation, and 1922 has had its industrial trials, but commerce is adjusting itself to normalcy. The interstate commerce is under the control of men of great ability versed in transportation, but it is glibly criticized by some who have never read the Esch-Cummins Act. To anyone interested and wanting the information they need only to send a postal card to the Interstate Commerce Commission and a copy of this act will be gladly sent to them.

We are all proud of our Nation, its opportunities and its beneficence. The poor boy of to-day is the rich man of to-morrow. In Congress the head of the great Banking and Currency Committee was a poor orphan boy at the age of 11. The chairman of the Budget Committee, having control of all the appropriations and the financing of our Government, began life when a small boy as a water carrier in a stone quarry; and without thinking of self-praise, I might say I have traveled the route unaided and alone from hodcarrier to a seat in Congress. The majority of the Members of Congress are poor men. They are patriotic in the extreme. They have the best interest of their country at heart. They are Members elected by their constituents from every walk of life and are not dominated by any Wall Street, or any other street, road, or alley.

Thou, too, sail on, O ship of state;
Sail on, O Union, strong and great;
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all its hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that the Federal Reserve Board, consisting of members appointed by ex-President Wilson, undertook a process of deflation of the currency. This is what "broke" the American farmer. The result of curtailing farm credits brought agricultural ruin. This took place in the latter part of the year 1920. When a Republican Congress came in they found that under the Democratic system the United States was being flooded with cereals from Argentina and Canada, eggs and butter from Denmark, beef from Argentina, mutton from Australia, all imported under the Underwood Tariff Act, free of duty.

To stem the tide and protect the American farmer from bankruptcy and ruin, the Republican Congress on December 20, 1920, introduced the emergency farmers' tariff bill. This bill passed the House on December 22, 1920, the bill being opposed on the floor of the House by such Democratic leaders as Mr. Cordell Hull, then a Representative in Congress from Tennessee and now Democratic national chairman, and other Democrats of national reputation.

On March 4, 1921, the Republicans came into full power. Congress convened April 11. Immediately the farmers' tariff bill, which had previously been passed by a Republican Congress and vetoed by President Wilson, was reintroduced. It became a law May 27, 1921. This law had the effect, as shown by market reports, of keeping American farm product prices above those of all other countries of the world. The statistics show that the United States in 1920 imported four times more butter under the Underwood tariff than during any previous year in the history of the country.

This new tariff law increased the price of live stock, such as produced in the blue-grass region of my district and State. The price of hogs, sheep, and cattle went up. Under the Underwood tariff corn was sold at less than the cost of producing it. Breeding stock was sacrificed. The meat supply was destroyed. Many cases are recorded where the prices obtained by the farmer for his corn, hay, and live stock was not sufficient to pay the freight rates.

Agriculture is America's greatest industry. Most of the men who have achieved greatness in this country have come from the farm. The farm is the Nation's greatest source of wealth, and, in dollars and cents, the greatest source of wealth is the farm products.

Among the laws which the last Congress has passed in the interest of farmers I may mention the following:

1. We have already referred to the farmers' tariff bill and the beneficial effect it had.

2. The War Finance Corporation, created by special act of this Congress, was authorized to make loans direct to organizations for the purpose of financing their members. A short time after it was authorized to make loans for agricultural purposes the War Finance Corporation was making loans at the rate of over one and one-half millions of dollars a day.

3. Amended the Federal reserve act and required that agricultural interest be represented on the Federal Reserve Board.

4. Under an amendment to the Federal farm loan act loans were increased over $200,000,000.

5. The present Congress passed the packers bill, designed to regulate the flow of live stock from the ranges and farms through the great stockyards and then to the consuming cities.

6. The Sixty-seventh Congress passed the grain futures act to prevent gambling in grain at the farmers' expense.

7. In the Fordney tariff bill fertilizer, phosphate, and potash are on the free list, and there is provided a tariff on farm products to amply protect the farmer.

8. Congress enacted a law permitting cooperative marketing associations, authorizing those engaged in the production of agricultural products to form associations for collecting, preparing, and marketing their output.

9. The Republican administration has brought about a reduction in freight rates on farm products on practically every railroad of any importance in the United States. At the time the Republicans came into power producers and shippers of farm products were heavily handicapped by enormous freight rates.

10. The Republican Congress has passed liberal appropriation bills for the Department of Agriculture, one of the most important appropriations being for $3,000,000 for use in eradicating tuberculosis in cattle.

The accomplishments of the Republican administration have done more to give proper recognition to the agricultural industry than those of any other administration in a previous decade in the history of the United States.

In addition to all this, for the years 1921 and 1922 Congress appropriated $175,000,000 for public roads, which was distributed among the various States. Of the above amount $1,868,511 was allotted to West Virginia for these two years. Further than this, Congress by legislation authorized and directed the distribution of thousands of motor trucks among the States for use in the construction of roads. West Virginia has received her pro rata share of these trucks and tractors.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to feel that our farmers have had the sympathy and support of this Congress and this administration, and that I have had an opportunity to be of assistance to the class of people from which I sprang.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On what subject?

Mr. KELLER. In answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas before the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, some folks, in their attempts to justify the extraordinary proceedings which are now taking place before one of the Federal courts in Chicago, are taking a queer position. They assert that the injunction which is being sought is for the protection of the American people and that it will move the crops and carry the coal which the people of the Northern States must have during the coming winter. Some have gone so far as to declare that an injunction of this character would forever make strikes in the United States impossible.

My friends, you who have had legislative experience know how ridiculous this view of the situation is. You know also that this injunction will not prevent future strikes.

Every well-informed man in the United States knows that at the time when the Attorney General secretly went to Chicago to ask for this injunction the coal strike had already been settled by negotiation, and that the leaders of the shopmen and a number of the executives representing a very large group of roads were meeting together to work out an agreement which would have brought peace on all the roads in the United States except a small group of railroads dominated by the "die hards" among the railroad executives, who have sworn that they will never consent to any settlement which does not involve complete surrender by the shopmen and the abandonment of collective bargaining on their roads. This small minority of "bitter enders" are the same ones who contemptuously rejected the proposed settlement officially offered by the President of the United States. If this amicable settlement between the shopmen and the railroads had been completed, it would have left this small minority of antiunion executives isolated and would have meant their ultimate defeat.

In order to save themselves they had to call on the Attorney General, who went to Chicago and asked for an injunction which has no parallel in the history of the United States. It is obvious that the purpose of this injunction was not to protect the lives and property of the American people nor to restore uninterrupted transportation. If this had been its object, it would have been applied for in the early stages of the strike before the alleged acts of violence were committed and when what is now charged to be a great nation-wide conspiracy was being formed. You must remember that when Attorney General Daugherty went to Chicago the railroad strike had already been under way for more than two months; that during these two months the President of the United States had been in communication with both the railroad executives and the strikers and had repeatedly had conferences with the strike leaders in the White House. The President had himself directly intervened and on two occasions had sought to bring about an agreement for the settlement of the strike. You will also remember that his first proposal, which we must assume represented his deliberate judgment as to what was just and fair to both parties and in the best interests of the entire American people, was accepted as a whole by the railroad employees, but was rejected by a majority of the railroad executives. The proposals made by the President in this first plan of settlement were substantially the basis upon which the separate roads were about to make settlements with their employees when the Attorney General interfered by asking the Federal court at Chicago to give him extraordinary powers which are prohibited by the Constitution, and which Congress has repeatedly refused to grant to any man.

The Attorney General, in asking for this injunction, has submitted as evidence some hundreds of documents, outlining alleged crimes by strikers, including such grave acts as the burning of bridges, the wrecking of trains, assaults with intent to kill, and even murders. It does not take a profound knowledge of the law to know that the Attorney General has ample power under existing law to punish the perpetrators of such outrages, and that if he were doing his duty he would to-day be prosecuting these alleged criminals instead of asking for an injunction which will not in any respect increase his powers to punish actual criminals, but will give him greater powers of suppressing free speech and other lawful activities of citizens than were ever possessed by any czar.

I refuse to remain silent while this attempt to destroy the Government created by the Constitution is under way and to substitute for it a government by the edicts of judges who are appointed for life and are in no way directly responsible to the people. I stand for the preservation of the fundamental American principle of equal enforcement of the laws. I demand that the Attorney General, if he has evidence of the commission of crimes by the striking railroad employees or by any other individual, proceed immediately to prosecute them in the courts of the Nation; but I also demand that he enforce the laws which have been enacted to prohibit the railroads from using defective and unsafe equipment which endangers the lives of passengers and employees. I also demand, and this is the fundamental basis of my impeachment, that he enforce the laws which are now on the statute books to protect the American people from being plundered by criminal combinations and monopolies, and also the corporations and individual Americans who during the war deliberately and willfully defrauded their Government in the sum of more than a billion dollars in order to enrich themselves at the expense of the American taxpayer and soldier. These grafters and profiteers were the real traitors during the war. They stabbed our Government in the back while the battle was raging and endangered the lives of every American soldier at the front.

Mr. Speaker, when I saw that these war profiteers and grafters were about to escape punishment completely because, while the Attorney General was refusing to prosecute, the statute of limitations was running day by day to outlaw the charges against them, and when I further saw that this Nation was passing into the grip of a combination of monopolists such as has never before been seen in the history of the world, and when it further became apparent that the Attorney General was being used simply as the tool of powerful interests to prevent a just and equitable settlement of the railroad tie-up, I felt it a duty, as a Representative of the American people, to seek to remove this man from office by the only method prescribed in the Constitution. No man can study the record of the present Attorney General, either as a private citizen, when he used his political connections to secure the pardon of a wealthy criminal on fraudulent grounds, or during the 18 months in which he has been in office charged with the administration of justice in the United States, without being convinced that it is a menace to our fundamental principles of liberty and to the very peace and welfare of our Nation for him to continue in office a single day beyond the time necessary for his removal by the orderly procedure of impeachment prescribed in the Constitution.

Even if the Attorney General had not gone to Chicago to seek the extraordinary and unconstitutional injunction, I should, nevertheless, have moved for his impeachment at the present session of Congress. I had planned to bring this entire question before this House even before Representatives WOODRUFF and JOHNSON made their demand as ex-soldiers for the investigation of the Attorney General's failure and refusal to prosecute the war frauds. Believing in their sincerity and thoroughly realizing the gravity of their charges, I gave them my earnest support and withheld my action until their demand for an investigation was disposed of. When this war-fraud investigation was blocked by the Committee on Rules I determined to bring the whole subject of the Attorney General's activities before Congress at the earliest possible moment. Immediate action was prevented by the adjournment of the House. As soon as it was possible for me to return to Washington after the House reconvened I laid my charges before this body, and have since that time diligently sought to present in an orderly manner and with the advice of counsel the evidence upon which I rest my case.

There is a very grave and important reason why it is necessary at this time to have an Attorney General who will enforce the laws which are now on the statute books of the United States without fear and without favor. This Congress has just passed a new tariff act, which establishes high duties on foreign goods for the protection of our industries. This means that foreign competition has for the present been practically eliminated. Such high tariffs tend inevitably to create greedy monopolies. The only way in which American consumers can be protected from paying the excessive prices demanded by monopolists is by the preservation of domestic competition. Years ago when Congress first saw the effect of a protective tariff in creating domestic monopolies it enacted the Sherman antitrust law to prevent further growth of such monopolies and to suppress as far as possible those which had already been created. They realized fully that when they removed foreign competition, and thus created a condition in which monopolies could easily grow, they must strengthen the law in order to prevent such monopolies. This law is still on the statute books, and has been further strengthened by the enactment of the Federal Trade Commission act and the Clayton antitrust law. The Department of Justice, therefore, has in its hands effective legal weapons with which, if it chooses, it can protect fair and independent manufacturers and preserve domestic competition for the benefit of the American consumer.

When we the other day passed this new tariff act for the protection of American industries it became our solemn duty to see to it that the antitrust laws were enforced and that the monopolies which are now rapidly growing, and will continue to grow in every line of industry, are suppressed. There is not a Member of this House who does not know in his heart that the antitrust laws will never be enforced as long as the present Attorney General remains in office. As a matter of fact, the persistent inactivity of the present Attorney General has already served notice on these monopolists and profiteers that they can go as far as they like.

It is for these grave reasons, and without any personal feeling whatever, that I have instituted proceedings for the removal of the Attorney General from office, and shall continue to press them with all my vigor and all my strength as long as he remains in office.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the temperance question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the temperance question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, one of the most judicious citizens in our district wrote me September 21: "I do not know at this time whether, if the matter were put to a vote in the second district, you could get an indorsement of the Volstead Act." Much sentiment of that kind is a natural temptation to a candidate to put on the soft pedal and avoid taking a stand, in the hope that by keeping quiet he may get those opposed to the Volstead Act. However, I answered that personally I was in favor of prohibition and its enforcement, and would stand or fall on that principle.

A little later, in talking with the county attorney of one of our counties, he told me that there was a considerable support for light wines and beer in his county. From many other sources I found that there were those in our district that were not advocating prohibition and who were very much opposed to the Volstead law, and it appears that there are those that think that that proposition is not a real issue in our district. The Congressman from one district has just as much of a vote upon those laws when they come up here as the Congressmen from any other. The election of a temperance Congress is an issue in every district in the Union.

Those who voted for the prohibition amendment, for the Volstead law, and for other temperance acts know perfectly well that the liquor interests are always against them and would be glad to defeat them, no matter who is elected, as an example to others. The same is true of those who voted for a 50 per cent surtax and for a 65 per cent surtax last fall, as I did. They know that the men with the big millions who do not want to pay big income taxes would like to beat them, and they know, too, that there never is a night too dark nor a day too long that there are not at the command of our enemies immense campaign funds from the liquor interests and the big money that can be placed in any district. One of the most common uses made of such funds is the employment of vigorous and skillful liars, who continually spread fakes and falsehoods about decent and honest men who do their duty in this House. The question of whether temperance is a real issue is constantly agitated by the Literary Digest and is a subject well worthy of our consideration.

As the November election approaches the opponents of the eighteenth amendment are disclosing their indefensible program of opposition to and nullification of this part of the Constitution. The leading organization in this fight is entitled the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. The eighteenth amendment is a part of the Constitution. It is binding upon every State and upon every officer and every individual in every State of the Union.

It is difficult to understand the reasoning powers of some of these people who claim to be loyal citizens and who are fighting the Constitution, which as citizens and as public officials it is their duty to obey. No one will deny the right of good citizens who are opposed to national prohibition to repeal it or to change it in a legal and orderly manner. This amendment was put into the Constitution after more preparation on the part of the people and by a larger majority of the States ratifying it than any other part of the Constitution. If its opponents can elect two-thirds of each branch of Congress and secure the majority of the legislatures in three-fourths of the States to repeal this amendment, that is their undoubted right, but to defy it or to call upon Congress to change the national prohibition act so as to permit the sale of 2.75 per cent beer or other liquors is not, in my judgment, consistent with civic duty or patriotism.

As long as the eighteenth amendment remains in the Constitution the issue concerning its enforcement is essentially one of law and order. This amendment prohibits the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, and exportation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. It lays an obligation upon Congress and the several States to adopt appropriate legislation to enforce it. This Congress faced its duty under the Constitution and adopted what is known as the national prohibition act or enforcement code. The chief attack upon this enforcement code is that it defines intoxicating liquor to include those alcoholic liquors containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol or more. The opponents of prohibition are carrying on a propaganda against it on the ground that this definition is unfair and unreasonable. It is even suggested that this definition is a lie and can not hold the respect of the American people.

Why did Congress adopt this definition? It probably would not have done so had it not been for the fact that over 30 States had experimented with this question, some of them for half a century, to find out what was the reasonable standard for law enforcement and how this term should be defined so as to bring about an honest enforcement of the law. Thirty-two States had defined the term "intoxicating liquor" before the national prohibition act went into operation. In all but three of them the standard was one-half of 1 per cent or less. In these three States it was 1 per cent. Every Congressman who knows the first elements of law is fully aware of the fact that even if Congress had set the standard at 2.75 per cent such beer could not be sold in these States where it was prohibited under the State law. Congress did the reasonable and sensible thing; it took the average standard in two-thirds of the States which had acted on this question and wrote it into the Federal law as the standard for the Nation.

This definition is based upon experience and reason. In order to enforce the law against intoxicating liquor it is necessary to prohibit all alcoholic liquors with enough alcohol in them to produce intoxication when the largest amount of the liquid is consumed within the time when the alcohol could accumulate in the human system. If the opponents of this standard could point out some State of the Union where they have enforced prohibition honestly and effectively with a 2 or 3 per cent beer exemption, there would be some basis for their appeal. Fortunately we have at least two instances where a beer exemption was tried out and where it proved a failure.

Massachusetts was one of the States which adopted prohibition in the early days. In 1870 the legislature enacted a law exempting cider and malt liquors from the prohibitory law, but giving municipalities the right to vote license for the sale of these liquors or to prohibit their sale. In 1873 the legislature repealed the act and restored prohibition, so far as malt liquors were concerned. The following testimony concerning the failure of prohibition where this kind of exemption obtained is found in the report filed by the Canadian commissioners who were appointed by the Governor General of Canada to visit the prohibition States of the United States and to make inquiry into the success which had attended the working of such laws and to report the facts as they found them. This testimony shows the result of this partial liberation of certain liquors from the grasp of prohibition, It says:

In 1870 and 1871 the people of New Bedford voted "no license," but in May, 1872, they carried a license vote by a small majority. Of the results the commission reports Judge Borden, of this city, as saying:

"The beer law appears to make considerable difference to the police court. The number of criminal prosecutions in the court from May 7 to October 1, 1870, under the prohibitory law was 200; same time in 1871, under the same law, was 219; same time in 1872, under the beer law, 454. The cases named in 1871 include 83 for drunkenness and 46 assaults; in 1872, 274 cases of drunkenness and 67 for assaults. Besides the total of 454 this year, 41 persons arrested were allowed to go without prosecution, which is about three times the number dismissed in that way during the same months of 1871."

The commission found in the reports of the New Bedford mayor and city marshal the following significant figures:

Whole number of arrests, 1871 (prohibition)	462
Drunkenness	188
Whole number of arrests, 1872 (beer sold)	779
Drunkenness	415
Lodgers in stations, 1871 (prohibition)	348
Lodgers in stations, 1872 (beer sold)	434

"Thus exhibiting," says the commission, "an increase of over 68 per cent in the aggregate number of crimes, over 120 per cent in cases of drunkenness."

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Number of commitments from New Bedford in 1871 was 93.
Number of commitments from New Bedford in 1872 was 180.
Or an increase of about 97 per cent.

WORKHOUSE.

Number of commitments from New Bedford in 1871 was 37.
Number of commitments from New Bedford in 1872 was 69.
Or an increase of about 95 per cent.

Trial Justice E. Southworth said: "So far as I am able to give an opinion of the working of the beer law, it would be that we may as well have a law licensing the sale of all other intoxicating liquors; for everything, almost, that will intoxicate is sold, or has been, by the name of beer. I have no belief in any beer law. I know, or I think I do, that drunkenness has largely increased under its operations."

The commission quotes Trial Justice Newton Morse, of Natick (Middlesex County; population 6,404), as saying, "Whole number of prosecutions for all offenses from July 20, 1870, to date, 655; liquor prosecution for same time, 614; prosecutions for drunkenness, 162. Of the remaining 279 cases, 178 are the direct results of liquor selling and drinking. I voted in the legislature of 1869–70 for the beer law, as I believed in the interests of temperance and the Republican Party. With the experience of the last two years, I shall this year vote against the beer law, in the same interest. The prosecutions for drunkenness for the last year, and especially the last part, have increased one-third."

Justice Hamlett Bates of the Chelsea Police Court said (January 3, 1873): "The records of the court here exhibited the number of cases for drunkenness for the three years past as follows:

In 1869 (prohibition up to September)	141
In 1871 (beer law in operation)	188
In 1872 (beer law in operation)	260

"The sale of beer should not be legalized; almost every beer saloon is a rum shop. For violation of the law, imprisonment instead of fines should be imposed, not for a few days, but for months."

From the justice of the first district court:

"My district includes six towns, to wit: Sturbridge, Southbridge, Charlton, Dudley, Webster, and Oxford.

"The sale of beer is prohibited in all of them. There is not an open bar in the district, but liquor is sold to a limited extent in dwelling houses and by persons who carry it in their pockets.

"Should the sale of beer in the above-named towns be permitted by vote, crime would increase there 50 per cent within a month. To permit the sale of beer by law is only a deceptive method whereby the sale of all kinds and quantities of intoxicating liquors is legalized and clothed with a kind of respectability which does not belong to that nefarious business. Report of Clarke Jellson, justice of the first district court, County of Worcester, and mayor of Worcester.

VITIATED PROHIBITORY LAW.

"One of the effects of the free sale of malt liquors is to increase the crime of drunkenness and multiply by other forms the violation of the criminal law. The sale of these liquors is made a cover for the sale of spirituous liquors generally. Under the laws of 1870 the sale of malt liquor was authorized for several months in the town by vote of the inhabitants. Efforts to enforce the prohibitory law, or what there was left of it, during that period were almost nugatory. In no way, as it seems to me, can a greater blow be given to the prohibitory law, or its purpose be more surely defeated, than by legalizing the sale of malt liquors." J. Rockwell, trial justice and judge of district court, Berkshire.

RESULTS SHOWN BY JAIL AND PRISON REPORTS.

By a reference to a former part of this report it will be seen that in 1867 the prohibitory law was quite well enforced in Boston, so much so as to reduce the revenue receipts in one district from $22,000 to $6,000 per month. From the statistics of Boston we gather the following figures:

October 1, 1867, confined in Suffolk jail	173
October 1, 1870	222
Difference in favor of prohibition	49
Committed to Suffolk jail in 1867	3,736
Committed to Suffolk jail in 1870	5,262
Difference in favor of prohibition	1,526
Committed to all the jails in the State in 1867	5,770
Committed to all the jails in the State in 1870	7,850
Difference in favor of prohibition	2,080
Committed to city prison, Boston, in 1867	10,429
Committed to city prison, Boston, in 1870	12,862
Difference in favor of prohibition	2,433
Committed to all the houses of correction in the State in 1867	3,829
Committed to all the houses of correction in the State in 1870	5,477
Difference in favor of prohibition	1,648

STATE PRISON.

Committed in 1867	128
Committed in 1870	177
Difference in favor of prohibition	49
Average number of convicts in 1867	537
Average number of convicts in 1870	594
Difference in favor of prohibition	57
Total number of persons in State prison in 1867	646
Total number of persons in State prison in 1870	774
Difference in favor of prohibition	128

Such is the official report of the Canadian Commission on Massachusetts's experience with exempting beer from her prohibitory law. It showed that drunkenness, crime, violation of the liquor law distinctly increased and that under the cover of malt liquors, the sale of the stronger beverages not only increased but was far more difficult to control than when malt liquors were included in prohibition. The exemption of malt liquors practically vitiated the prohibition law.

The evidence submitted by Judge Pitman was of the same general tenor. Following are some selections which he made "from a mass of testimony from the most reliable sources."

"THE BEER SHOP IS THE RUM SHOP IN DISGUISE.

"The Boston chief of police, in December, 1870, reported that out of 2,584 places in Boston where liquor is sold, only 17 sell lager beer alone.

"The chief constable of the Commonwealth, under date October 3, writes: 'That not exceeding 5 per cent of the retail dealers who pretend to sell ale, porter, strong beer, and lager beer, confine or limit their trade to malt liquors only. The service of the search warrants almost invariably discloses the fact that lager beer saloons, so called, keep and sell more or less distilled liquors.'

"In reply to letters of inquiry addressed to district attorneys generally uniform answers on this point were received.

"The district attorney of Essex writes: 'According to the evidence which I have, beer shops where nothing stronger is kept or sold are as scarce as men entirely without sin.'

"The district attorney of the western district: 'I believe wherever beer is sold strong liquors are also sold.'

"The district attorney of the northwestern district: 'The difficulty is that the beer traffic should be used as a cover for rum selling. That it is so used can not be denied.'

"The attorney of Worcester County: 'The exemption of beer affords a cover under which to sell spirituous liquors.'

"A like testimony is borne by the justices of police and similar courts. We select a few: Chelsea—'About every beer saloon is a rum shop.' Worcester—'In saloons where the sale of beer is permitted by law, there spirituous liquors can usually be obtained.' Springfield—'All sorts of spirituous and intoxicating liquors are sold under cover of such license.'

"To multiply evidence on this point is needless. It is clear that the governor was amply justified in declaring in his message that 'a beer shop, so called, has come to mean generally a place where all kinds of intoxicating liquors are furnished.'"

BEER A NULLIFIER.

"This is a corollary," said Judge Pitman, "from the last proposition; but it is capable of being made more impressive from independent proof. The police commissioners of the State, in the first annual report, say: 'The ale and beer law is a veil that covers much that is vile, and it is one that is difficult for the officers to lift or see through; and under its protection every vile compound that ever poisoned the human system may be sold almost with impunity.'

"In his last report the present chief constable said: 'While it is the sole duty of the force to execute the laws, I may be permitted to say that the authority now given for the sale of ale embarrasses and hinders the force in their attempts to prosecute for the sale of liquors forbidden by law.'

"One of the most intelligent and active of the deputy State constables writes: 'I believe it is almost useless to attempt to enforce the law against spirituous liquors while all persons are allowed to sell malt liquors.'

"The district attorney of Worcester County says: 'I have no doubt that the beer traffic is adverse to the enforcement of the liquor law. I do not well understand how the friends of that law can hope to enforce it when the exemption of beer affords a cover.'

"The justice of the police court of Springfield says: 'I think licensing the sale of ale and beer much increases the difficulty of enforcing the prohibitory law'; while the mayor of the city of Worcester declares that 'to permit the sale of beer by law is only a deceptive method whereby the sale of all kinds and qualities of intoxicating liquors is legalized and clothed with a kind of respectability which does not belong to that nefarious business.'

"Mayor Richmond, who earned a reputation for the vigorous and thorough enforcement of the prohibitory law in New Bedford, said in his valedictory in 1872: 'It will be remembered that on the first Tuesday of May last our city voted to allow the sale of ale and beer. The result has proved that the legalizing the ale and beer shop has been a curse to our city and carried misery to hundreds of homes in our midst. They are nothing but shields to cover the stealthy sales of all intoxicating drinks, and are almost a thorough protection of the rum seller against the enforcement of the prohibitory law.'

"The causes which render the detection and conviction of sellers of distilled liquors difficult where the sale of fermented liquor is lawful lie upon the surface and are not difficult to see. * * *

BEER A STIMULANT OF CRIME.

"Among many persons of some general intelligence a notion prevails that fermented liquors rarely excite to crime. Such is not the judgment of those practically conversant with our criminal courts; such is far from the testimony of criminals themselves."

BEER AND CRIME.

In the nature of the case it was impossible for officials to determine exactly what proportion of the increased drunkenness crime was due to beer and what to spirits. Many of the persons brought to court evidently themselves believed that beer was intoxicating and capable of putting them into a condition for committing offenses as they repeatedly claimed beer "as their usual tipple." Judge Pitman quotes an interesting expression of opinion from the Essex County district attorney to the effect that the "immediate influence and effect (of beer) upon crime is more dangerous to the community than the stronger liquors, in this way: The excessive use of the stronger drinks is liable to make men drunk and helpless, unable to do much harm, while beer excites men to acts of violence, desperation, and crime."

BEER TEMPTATIONS TO YOUTH.

Further difficulties experienced during the beer period in Massachusetts lay in the object lesson and incentive to drink which the sale of beer presented to youth and to addicts trying to free themselves from the drink habit.

To exempt beer from the provisions of the prohibition laws claiming that it is nonintoxicating is a direct invitation to youth to frequent the beer saloon as they would a soda-water fountain or dry goods store. While the beer law was in operation in Massachusetts Judge Pitman related that the Rev. Mr. Coombs, one of the agents for the State Temperance Alliance for visiting the public schools, reported that "in one town 75 pupils told me that they had been more or less intoxicated. In 12 cases where boys came into school drunk, or were found to be so in the schoolroom I was told that 6 of them drank cider (which was also exempt from prohibition). Careful examination will show that 19 out of 20 of the pupils who have been intoxicated were under the influence of cider or beer."

LED TO ALCOHOLIC HABITS.

Two superintendents of the Boston Washingtonian Home, which at that time had had one of the widest experiences with inebriates, were emphatic in their testimony that beer and other so-called light beverages initiated the drink habit in the majority of cases.

INCREASED DIFFICULTIES OF REFORM.

Beer was also an "unqualifiedly hindering" cause in the thorough reform of inebriates. "A large proportion of backsliders stumble over these light drinks who would hesitate long before they would dare meddle with the stronger liquors." This is a matter of no small importance in a would-be prohibition State.

The friends of light wines and beer have seen the Frenchmen swilling down their "red ink," sitting at a table for an hour to drink a little glass, and they can not see the difference between them and men of the American temperament who have never learned to sit patiently at a table and drink light wines, but whose eager, lively temperament when they have begun drinking sets them to looking for a glass of whisky, with the inclination and disposition and intention of starting something exciting. When the American people get to drinking they are not going to stop at any light wines and beer.

Forty years ago, when the students at Kansas University and Baker University were jollying each other from year to year, there appeared in the university paper at Lawrence an alleged verse said to have been written by a now prominent Kansas statesman, which said:

I drink no beer nor wine nor ale,
Said the good boy from Baker.
Give me a bowl of whisky punch,
As hot as you can make 'er.

This little joke on their Methodist brothers at Baker is very expressive of the difference between the French temperament and the American temperament. When an American begins to drink all bridles soon come off. The application of European theories to Americans is not practical. The experience as just above set out demonstrates that fact. Nobody has ever endeavored even to point to any really beneficial results or elevating tendencies in France because of their drinking of "red ink." If you start light wines and beer, you have allowed the wooden horse to enter Troy. Fellow citizens, his belly will be as full of armed men as Vallambrosa of autumnal leaves.

We have established this great principle in the Constitution for the benefit of this great Republic and the young men now growing up. We have won this place by long years of hard labor. Let us keep the flag where it is instead of hauling it down to please the liquor interests. When the Good Book said that "He that putteth liquor in his mouth stealeth away his brains," it did not make any qualification in favor of any one kind of liquor. Liquor is liquor, and the money spent for it had much better be invested in some useful way for his family.

Prior to the recent primary campaign, Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, asked me whether I desired a recommendation from the league, which, by the way, they had frequently given before and which they had already given to many other temperance Congressmen, including some from Kansas. I told him I would let him know. After some time at home I wired him that I should be glad if he would wire the recommendation to some of the temperance unions in the district. The situation was such that I thought it best to have it done, which he did. Some exception has been taken to that by the gentleman who ran against me, on the theory that temperance was a fictitious issue in our district, and the charge was even made that Mr. Wheeler never sent the telegram; that it came from my headquarters. That statement, of course, was false, for I did not even mention my opponent's name to Mr. Wheeler or to any other of the temperance leaders. It was suggested by a newspaper out there that the telegrams were such that I ought to make an explanation. They were Mr. Wheeler's telegrams, and I left the explanation to him; and in justice to him and myself, I present herewith his correction of that false statement, which was made by a party who said that I had attacked the other gentleman. I did not even mention him and had made no remarks about the matter in any way when his attack upon me was made, and Mr. Wheeler's statements follow in a moment.

Herewith I present some of the indorsements the Anti-Saloon League had given Mr. Little long before this campaign, and which he could just as well have used:

The Anti-Saloon League of America,
Legal Department,
Wayne B. Wheeler,
General Counsel and Legislative Superintendent,
30 Bliss Bldg., Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 30, 1921.

As we come to the close of another year and think of its progress and problems, let me express to you the appreciation of our constituency throughout the country for your valuable assistance on behalf of national prohibition.

As you count up some of the things worth while you have accomplished this year, do not forget that hundreds of thousands of homes are happier at this holiday season because you have helped to abolish the beverage liquor traffic in the Nation.

Yours, very cordially,

W. B. WHEELER.

AUGUST 15, 1921.

We appreciate the splendid support you have given the national prohibition act and the measures to make it enforceable.

Yours, very sincerely,

W. B. WHEELER.

In response to his inquiry as to my opponent and whether I desired indorsement, I told him I had no criticisms to offer of my opponent and if I should desire another indorsement after I got home I would let him know. After examining the situation, I felt that the indorsement he had offered me would be helpful, and as he had already given a similar indorsement to other Kansas Congressmen, it became necessary that I should have the same, at least, and I wired Wheeler on July 26 from Kansas City, Kans., as follows:

KANSAS CITY, KANS., July 26, 1922.

WAYNE B. WHEELER,
Bliss Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Hadn't you better wire W. C. T. U., Kansas City, Kans., Lawrence, Fort Scott, Paola, and Ottawa indorsing my record? Light wine and beer fight apparently being strongly urged by opposition and seemingly that money being spent.

E. C. LITTLE.

The telegram in no way referred to my opponent, and he was quite free to make a public written statement any time he wanted to that he was in favor of prohibition and the Volstead law. On July 29, three days later, Mrs. Yost, Legislative Representative in Washington of the W. C. T. U., and Mr. Wheeler, joined in the telegram to the temperance unions in Kansas City, Lawrence, and several other towns. It did not occur to anybody in any of the other towns on the day after the primary or since to suggest that the Yost-Wheeler telegram was not genuine. Mr. LITTLE asked for no more than the Anti-Saloon League had already offered him for this campaign and had already given others and had before given him.

When an opposition occurs so vicious that it charges with forgery a decent man because the temperance people indorsed his record here, I think it best that the people of the District should know what the facts are as Mr. Wheeler presents them. With regret I notice that the papers at home have not as yet given any real publicity to Mr. Wheeler's statement, though they did to the other statement. If that had been properly attended to it would be unnecessary to present the facts this way. Mr. Wheeler is the national attorney for the National Anti-Saloon League. He says he sent the telegram of July 29 to the W. C. T. U. himself, jointly with Mrs. Yost, of the national W. C. T. U.

WHEELER'S REVIEW OF AUTHENTICITY AND FICTITIOUSNESS SUGGESTIONS.

On July 29, two days before the primary, Mr. Wheeler sent this dispatch to the president of the W. C. T. U. of Lawrence, Kans., and four other cities:

[Telegram—Night letter.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29, 1922.

PRESIDENT W. C. T. U.,
Lawrence, Kans.:

Informed that opponents of prohibition oppose Congressman LITTLE because of splendid record in Congress for prohibition and its enforcement. They believe that every dry Congressman defeated furnishes warning to his successor not to follow his example. Hope you will not allow LITTLE to suffer because of splendid record.

LENNA LOWE YOST.
WAYNE B. WHEELER.

Same telegram sent to:
President W. C. T. U., Kansas City, Kans.
President W. C. T. U., Fort Scott, Kans.
President W. C. T. U., Ottawa, Kans.
President W. C. T. U., Paola, Kans.

On August 1 EDWARD C. LITTLE was nominated for Congress by the Republicans by a vote of more than 15,000 to 7,000. On August 2, the day following the primary, his opponent wrote W. B. Wheeler, of Washington, attorney for the Anti-Saloon League, saying, "Some of my friends, I having been Mr. LITTLE's opponent, are questioning whether this telegram emanated from your office or not." On the same day a Lawrence paper, evidently at the suggestion of "some of his friends" (and in the absence of the proprietor and editor), said that "Fictitious Dry Issue Was Raised in Congressional Campaign Yesterday," so that on the very first day after the primary the defeated candidate was raising the issue of whether temperance was a fictitious issue and whether Mr. Wheeler's telegram indorsing Mr. LITTLE was authentic.

Why ask such a question while the Literary Digest poll of Kansas had just announced a vote of 6,595 for enforcement of the prohibition amendment and the Volstead Act and of 4,635 for modification or repeal thereof, a hint to prudent and "conservative" politicians to avoid, if possible, any positive public statement, especially if running against a positive prohibitionist?

As will be seen, that letter was answered August 12 by one of Mr. Wheeler's secretaries while he was out of town, and he did not know it had gone, but answered the gentleman August 22, apologizing for not answering sooner. Meanwhile the gentleman raised the question of the authenticity of the telegram of July 29, it finally being charged that Mr. Wheeler had not sent the telegram of July 29 but that it had emanated from Congressman LITTLE's headquarters, and a question of veracity arose, accompanied by a bitter attack upon the Republican nominee for Congress by his opponent, concerning whom the congressional nominee had not said a word. Is prohibition a fictitious issue? was Wheeler's telegram of July 29 to the W. C. T. U. authentic? are the issues projected into the campaign. The charges being made and the Lawrence paper suggesting that the question of authenticity should be settled, Mr. W. B. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, sent the following wire to the paper and other papers which had discussed it:

CONFIRMS JULY 29 WIRE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 22, 1922.

JOURNAL-WORLD,
Lawrence, Kans.:

On July 29, Mrs. Yost and I signed and sent from our offices in Washington to president Women's Christian Temperance Union, Lawrence, Kans., telegram as follows:

"Informed that opponents of prohibition oppose Congressman LITTLE because of splendid record in Congress for prohibition and its enforcement. They believe that every dry Congressman defeated furnishes warning to his successor not to follow his example. Hope you will not allow LITTLE to suffer because of splendid record."

LENNA LOWE YOST.
WAYNE B. WHEELER.

Neither Colonel LITTLE nor anyone in his headquarters sent it nor signed it nor saw it. I am very sorry a misundertanding has arisen. Please print this correction. It is the settled policy of the league to give all dry Congressmen the benefit of their records. Colonel LITTLE has at no time made any criticism to this office of his opponent in the Republican primary.

WAYNE B. WHEELER.

The editor who had raised the question as to whether the dry issue was fictitious wrote asking for a confirmation of the telegram of September 22 and inclosed a photostat copy of the letter of August 12. On September 25 Mr. Wheeler wired as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 25, 1922.

J. W. MURRAY,
Care Lawrence Journal-World, Lawrence, Kans.:

Night letter 23d authentic. Communication you inclose to Harley referred to source of information. It was sent while I was absent from office. Letter sent Harley August 22 made this clear.

WAYNE B. WHEELER.

He then followed that by the following letter of September 26:

SEPTEMBER 26, 1922.

Mr. J. W. MURRAY,
Managing editor Journal-World, Lawrence, Kans.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to submit to you some further information concerning the communication to Mr. Harley. I am grateful for the photostat copy of the letter of August 12, which Mr. Harley advances as the reason for believing I did not send the telegram of July 29 to the temperance ladies, which I did send. I was unable to remember sending such a letter. The photostat cleared it up and showed it was signed by some one else. My answer to Mr. Harley's letter, which I will include herein, was sent August 22, and in it I apologized for not writing him sooner. Examining the photostat, I see that the letter of August 12 was not signed by W. B. Wheeler, as you can see by looking at it, but was signed "W. B. Wheeler, L. L." As a matter of fact, it was sent when I was out of the city by one of my secretaries, Miss L. Lindley, who attached her initials to it and sent it, as she supposed, properly.

Furthermore, supposing that Mr. Harley's letter had not been answered, I wrote him August 22 apologizing for not having answered up to that time, and my letter is as follows:

AUGUST 22, 1922.

Mr. TOM HARLEY,
Lawrence, Kans.

DEAR MR. HARLEY: Pardon my delay in answering your letter. I have been out of the office a good deal of the time.

We got the information from Mr. LITTLE's headquarters. Were we misinformed?

Yours cordially,

W. B. WHEELER.

Please send me a photostat of this letter of August 22. It should have made clear to Mr. Harley that I had not signed the other; so there was no reason why he should be misled. When Mr. Harley wrote his letter of September 4 attacking Mr. LITTLE, who had not even said a word to me about him, he claimed to publish the letter of August 12 in full. He published it as signed by W. B. Wheeler, but failed to add the initials "L. L." which were under my name in the original.

You suggest that in view of the photostat copy you would like to have a confirmation of my telegram to you of September 22, which cleared up the whole matter, and that I will probably see the justice of your suggestion. I do not see any reason in your photostat why it should be necessary to send you a confirmation of my telegram to your paper, though I do now confirm the authenticity of that telegram. On a letter of a line and a half, to which somebody else had attached my signature, and without the slighest effort to secure confirmation of such a letter, Mr. Harley attacked the reputation of a man of unquestioned integrity, and you gave expression to it without ever suggesting that you would like to have it confirmed. If you would take such an attitude on such a slender foundation, I do not see any reason why you should ask confirmation of my telegram or why you should have delayed publishing it as I requested. You made no such delay in advancing the charge that the first telegram was not genuine. Why should the correction have been delayed?

The only desire I have is that justice may be done to Colonel LITTLE, whose attitude in the matter has been without fault and whose splendid record here as a temperance man is entitled to the highest consideration from all good citizens. I hope that the telegram which I sent you and the letter I wrote Mr. Harley, copy of which I sent you, and this letter may be published in full so that the people may have all the facts.

Let me add that the same telegram which I sent July 29 to the temperance ladies at Lawrence was sent to the temperance unions in the large towns of the district, and I have never heard any criticism except from Mr. Harley. Our purpose is to give all Congressmen who made good temperance records the benefit of those records when they come before the people for renomination and reelection.

Yours cordially,

W. B. WHEELER.

In the meantime he had written the following letter to the defeated candidate who had made the attack on LITTLE, answering the gentleman's public attack:

SEPTEMBER 23, 1922.

MR. TOM HARLEY, Lawrence, Kans.

MY DEAR MR. HARLEY: I have just read your signed statement in the Kansas City Kansan of September 5, concerning a telegram which was sent to the president of the W. C. T. U. of Lawrence and four other places, signed by Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, legislative representative at Washington of the W. C. T. U., and myself, which reads as follows:

"Informed that opponents of prohibition oppose Congressman LITTLE because of splendid record in Congress for prohibition and its enforcement. They believe that every dry Congressman defeated furnishes warning to his successor not to follow his example. Hope you will not allow LITTLE to suffer because of splendid record."

I regret that there has been any misunderstanding concerning the authenticity of this telegram. It was sent in harmony with the settled policy of our organization to protect Congressmen who have made good records for prohibition and its enforcement against the attacks of the liquor interests. My former communication to you related simply to the source of information and not to the authenticity of the telegram.

I have been greatly surprised at the complaints in the Kansas City papers by you that we should have sent this telegram concerning Colonel LITTLE and the record on prohibition which he made in Congress. The justification for this action is further strengthened by the fact that prior to the time when we sent this telegram, we are informed that the temperance women of Lawrence had not been able to get from you any statement whatever for publication as to your attitude on the temperance question. Also, in view of the further fact that when they received the telegram on Monday before the election they asked you to make a public statement, which you could have done in the afternoon papers of Monday. We are informed, also, that you refused to make any statement, but as the ladies say, "flew into a rage," and simply answered, "it is a ——— lie." Is it not evident that you were endeavoring to avoid taking any stand which would alienate the liberally inclined voters?

I notice in one of your statements that up to the arrival of our telegram nothing had been said in the campaign on the question. While it is evident that you had said nothing about it, nevertheless there were others who were opposed to prohibition who were saying much about it and about the fact that Colonel LITTLE has been a stalwart advocate of temperance ever since he has been in Congress. As a matter of fact, I have seen a communication sent him threatening his life because of his devotion to this cause. He and all of the men like him in Congress have the bitter enmity of those who oppose the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment.

I have a letter from Mrs. Berry, of Lawrence, in which she says that one of the temperance women took the telegram to you and that you refused to make any statement for publication, and further says, "If he had made a statement for the Monday evening Journal-World, as we asked, saying he would support every prohibition law now in effect, I would never have turned another finger." Mrs. Berry says that the telegram arrived early Monday morning.

I have in my hand another letter from a lady in Lawrence, in which she says, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union president had a meeting with Harley, who was to declare his stand for the Volstead Act, but flew in a rage when asked to sign a statement for publication."

In view of the fact that the liquor interests are making a nation-wide fight to elect a Congress which will modify the national prohibition act, what was the reason you did not make a public statement at that time or before, as you were requested to do by the temperance workers?

Still another communication says "that the telegram came Monday morning and Mr. Harley was asked to make a statement and promised to make a statement at 2 o'clock, but at that time he reversed his decision and refused to make a public statement that he is dry."

I am reliably informed that another good citizen of the county called on you before the primary and was unable to get a direct statement from you as to your stand on the prohibition issue, and that he went away and voted for LITTLE as a result, although he had intended to vote for you until he talked with you about temperance.

The attitude of the Anti-Saloon League with reference to these contests is simply this: When two candidates are running for Congress with equally strong records or who make equally satisfactory statements, the league takes no part in the fight. If, however, one of the candidates has made a strong record for prohibition and its enforcement and is being attacked because of that record, we appeal to our friends not to allow him to suffer because of it. The liquor interests are running their campaign on the theory that every dry Congressman defeated is a warning to his successor not to follow his example. Whenever a strong dry Congressman is opposed by a candidate who refuses to state his position on this question, the league feels fully justified in giving its support to the man with the record who is under fire. We have given the same indorsement to other Congressmen under similar circumstances. We have given the dry Congressmen the benefits of their dry records when they are candidates for renomination and reelection. There was no attack made on you in the telegram we sent; in fact, your name was not even mentioned in it.

I am sure you would not claim that the whisky men were not against Colonel LITTLE. They have been against him for years. He drew and introduced, the night war was declared, the bill to establish a prohibition zone 20 miles wide around the camps and forts, which resulted in giving us a sober Army. He has voted for and advocated every temperance measure in Congress for years, and was entitled to the benefit of that splendid record.

Furthermore, Mr. Harley, any person who refers to prohibition as a fictitious issue can not complain when the friends of prohibition rally to the support of a Congressman with a consistent dry record. It can not be characterized as a fictitious issue as long as the liquor interests are fighting to elect a Congress which will modify the national prohibition act so as to make it nonenforceable. While this fight is not as intense in Kansas as it is in some of the Eastern States, yet the liquor interests have announced that they will oppose every dry Congressman, and when they can not secure an openly wet candidate they aid in the fight to elect one who is less aggressive against them. Your refusal to make any statement would naturally draw to you the support of these who want to weaken the prohibition law. Our experience has been that the liquor interests will always oppose a dry Congressman and support a candidate who declines to make a public statement as to how he stands on the Volstead Act.

Congressman LITTLE has not said a word to me suggesting that you were an antiprohibitionist. No one, so far as I know, had said a word about you when you made your attack upon Congressman LITTLE, whose dry record was inviting the opposition of the liberally inclined voters of the district. If your position for prohibition is as strong as you indicate, why did you not say so in the afternoon papers of Lawrence the day before election, as the temperance women asked you to do? In view of the fact that you yourself make the statement that up to Monday morning there had been no discussion by you of the question, and the fact that there is a nation-wide propaganda for liquor, why should you complain because the temperance voters were asked to support a dry Congressman who was being attacked because of his dry record?

Within the last few days the press dispatches have announced that bootleggers have killed 125 prohibition-enforcement agents since the war on rum running began. As the support of Congress is absolutely essential to the enforcement of the Federal prohibition laws, and the wet forces are trying to control Congress so as to prevent prohibition enforcement, I do not see how you can consistently complain when an indorsement is given to a Congressman with a dry record when his opponent refused to make any public statement on the Volstead law and characterized prohibition as a fictitious issue. In other words, I can not see how anyone with the convictions which you say you have on this question can consistently oppose Colonel LITTLE for reelection.

I am writing you somewhat at length in order that you may know the reasons for the position which we have taken in this matter. Neither Colonel LITTLE nor anyone from his headquarters signed, saw, or knew the contents of the telegram which was sent to Lawrence. He has made a fine record on prohibition and its enforcement in Congress, and if you had been in his place, with a similar record, facing a like situation, we would gladly have given you the same aid that was given him.

Yours cordially,

WAYNE B. WHEELER,
Legislative Superintendent Antisaloon League of America.

The telegram of July 29 indorsing Congressman Little was signed by W. B. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, and Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, Legislative Representative of the National W. C. T. U. in Washington. On September 13, in answer to a question about the telegram of July 29, she sent the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 13, 1922.

Mrs. MURIEL CULP BERRY,
Lawrence, Kans.

Mr. Wheeler's absence from the city prompts his secretary to bring your letter to me. The telegram sent to W. C. T. U. President in interest of LITTLE and which appeared in Lawrence Journal-World, was sent from Washington by Wheeler and Yost and is authentic. You are at liberty to publish this.

LENNA LOWE YOST.

She had thus verified the telegram and the authenticity of its signatures several days before Mr. Wheeler came back to town and sent his wire of September 22. Her's was an independent certificate to its authenticity and genuineness.

SHERIFF DEAD—DRY ISSUE ALIVE.

A Fort Scott paper of September 18 says:

The chamber of commerce directors at their meeting to-day adopted a memorial in honor of Officer Bloomfield, who died Saturday night after being shot in a duel with a bootlegger.

Somebody should have told Officer Bloomfield that the dry issue is a "fictitious" one, and he would not have lost his life in a duel with a bootlegger.

In view of the question as to whether the dry issue is "a fictitious one in this congressional district," it is a singular pleasure to be able to produce a certificate from a final authority on the subject, and I finish the extension of these remarks by reproducing the following letter from the national headquarters of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, in which they inform me very pointedly that temperance is not a fictitious issue in the second congressional district:

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
THE ASSOCIATION AGAINST THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT,
Washington, D. C., September 22, 1922.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: As we are preparing a bulletin for our membership in your State incorporating the sentiments of candidates with regard to our aims and ideals, and as we have not been favored with the courtesy of a response to our former communication, I am again writing to ask if you will kindly indicate your sentiments for or against our platform hereinabove set forth.

Please let us hear from you by October 2.

Very truly yours,

G. C. HINCKLEY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

To this letter I have made the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 27, 1922.

Mr. G. C. HINCKLEY,
Secretary-Treasurer of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, 511 Eleventh Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter in which you state that you are taking a hand in the fight for light wines and beer in Kansas. I had supposed my views on the subject were known to all those who followed the course of such legislation in Congress, and am sorry to hear that you are going into that fight out there.

I voted for the prohibition amendment and for the Volstead law and for all temperance legislation now on the books, and I am strongly in favor of their perfect enforcement and shall so continue. I see with regret your determination to prove that that fight is not a fictitious issue in Kansas.

I voted for prohibition with my first vote 40 years ago, and I don't propose to quit now that the whole Nation has voted with us.

Very truly yours,

E. C. LITTLE.

A candidate nominated by over two to one is entitled to the support of those who opposed him in the primaries. I am glad to say that the Hon. Russell Dyer called on me while I was in bed sick, congratulated me, and assured me of his support. The other candidate has not written me at all.

At the present time any politician almost anywhere can safely declare himself in favor of prohibition, especially if he can avoid making a public statement until after the election. Six years ago, when the Congressmen who have put prohibition and the temperance laws through began that fight, the situation was very different. In the spring of 1917, when Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, introduced his bill to establish a prohibition zone 20 miles wide around the camps and forts, and undertook to amend the big bill preparing for the war by inserting his prohibition zone bill, scores of Members of the House hooted and yelled at him, and temperance men were considered cranks. From that time till now they have been constantly under the fire of the official organs of the bootleggers' trust, like the New York Herald, the New York World, and the New York

Sun. Sometimes they are joined in their clamor by papers similarly subsidized in other parts of the country occasionally edited by some man who ought to be in the penitentiary, which always join in knifing a temperance man under some pretext. In February, 1918, when Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, introduced his bill to exclude from the mails papers encouraging men to disobey the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the New York Herald made a vicious attack upon him for endeavoring to preserve the Constitution, and some fellow in New York sent Mr. LITTLE a clipping from the Herald and the following letter, excluding one unprintable word:

The damn fools are not all dead yet, and this last move of yours will do more to arouse the people than any of the outrageous legislation you bunch of Jew and Irish grafters have put over on the American people since this accursed war began and ended. Don't you think the people have been tricked enough, or do you want them to rise up and show you a few tricks? The lamp-posts may yet be used, but not as that Tammany Hall crook Gerard suggested. Instead, it will be fellows like you and Gregory and Creel, and probably King Woodrow himself, the subsidized hypocrite, the guy that kept us out of war long enough to reelect himself and sell us out.

Go slow, Mr. LITTLE, lest you get the heavy hand of retribution and are slipped off in the quiet hours of the night.

Who gave you the liberty of deciding what the American people should say and do about free speech?

The spirit of independence is not all dead here yet; and your kind will soon know it, you can bet.

The Congressmen who have successfully borne the heat of the burden through all these bitter years are entitled to the hearty indorsement of the Anti-Saloon League, no matter who runs against them. After the Civil War, when they nominated old soldiers of the Republic for office, there were sometimes mean-spirited, loyalty-lacking fellows who objected, saying that the Civil War was over; that they should not wave the bloody shirt by nominating old soldiers; that it was a fictitious issue. But if the bootleggers' trust were as dead as the Roman Senate, if every bootlegger had become a Sunday-school teacher, and not a vestige of the antitemperance fight remained, the Members of Congress who won that big fight and put whisky out of business and saved the homes and the young men of the Republic from that blight would still be entitled to the vote and support of every sincere and earnest temperance man and woman in the United States.

As has been seen by his letter of August 2 to Mr. Wheeler above, on the very day after the primary my opponent was circulating the story that Yost and Wheeler's telegram indorsing LITTLE was a bogus one. On September 5 he published at his own expense an attack on LITTLE and his family, including a continuation of the suggestion that Wheeler's telegram of indorsement was not genuine. This was done under the pretext that LITTLE or his friends had criticized the temperance record of his opponent. Mr. LITTLE had not said a word about the gentleman's temperance record and the Baldwin paper did not go to press for some days after August 2. The suggestion started by the defeated candidate the day after the primary finally bore fruit in a Democratic paper and two Republican papers which had supported Mr. Harley in the primary, making the direct charge that the telegram from Yost and Wheeler was a forgery. Mrs. Yost wired to Lawrence, September 13, stating that she and Wheeler had sent that July 29 telegram and that it was authentic. On September 22, Mr. Wheeler sent a similar telegram, certifying the authenticity of the first wire and that it was a proper telegram of indorsement. Several days have passed without any correction. In view of the fact that on September 5 the defeated candidate had followed the planting of this poisoned seed by a vicious, malicious, and untruthful attack upon Mr. LITTLE and his whole family, it absolutely becomes essential that Mr. LITTLE should protect his family and his own good name. No man is compelled to submit to a charge of forgery, and I shall resent it from wherever it comes, without regard to the consequences on my political fortunes. Hasn't a Republican nominee for Congress any rights his defeated opponents and everybody else are bound to respect? I owe it to myself and my family and my friends and the American people to show that even a candidate for office should be free from slanderous falsehoods. I hope such thorough correction shall be made of these false statements by those who started them that it will be unnecessary to use these remarks.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, when the soldiers' bonus bill was under consideration, on the question of passing the bill over the President's veto, the minority leader, the distinguished and able gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], endeavored to get time to debate the question. The Republican majority leader [Mr. MONDELL], by moving the previous question, which he had the right to do, cut off all debate. I shall not ask leave to extend my remarks, because it would only be putting my constituents and the people to unnecessary expense. I simply desire to say that during the last campaign I made my attitude perfectly clear on the bonus question and also the stand that I would take. I know the boys of the fourth congressional district, regardless of my vote, appreciate the fact that I am their friend and am always ready to help them. I wish I could have debated the question before the vote was taken, but I will not take up the time of the House now to do so.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following concurrent resolution.

House Concurrent Resolution 71.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of September, 1922, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced in the House to-day a proposed constitutional amendment providing for a nationwide popular referendum upon the proposition of permitting the sale of 5 per cent beer to be licensed and taxed by the Federal Government, the revenue therefrom to be applied to the payment of the soldiers' bonus. [Applause.]

A little more than a year ago I expressed to the American Legion my apprehension that the adjusted compensation bill, as drafted, would never become a law, because of the opposition of President Harding to it and because of his declaration that the condition of the National Treasury would not permit the necessary expenditure. At the time I suggested that the one feasible method of financing the bonus was to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer, to license and tax it, and to apply the enormous revenue thus obtained to the payment of the bonus. The proposal inspired country-wide comment and approval. I deferred, however, the actual introduction of a bill until it was definitely and finally determined that the Fordney bonus bill could not become a law. But now, with almost four years having elapsed since the conclusion of the World War, the enactment of adjusted compensation legislation seems to be more remote than ever, unless the one sensible method of financing the bill is seized upon and approved.

My proposal of a constitutional amendment, in effect, modifies and supersedes the eighteenth amendment to the extent of legalizing 5 per cent beer to be licensed and sold under strict regulation and without permitting the return of the saloon. The advantage of constitutional amendment over simple legislative enactment is obvious. No one can raise the objection against the validity or legality of the course here proposed.

If the proposal is written into the Constitution, legislation providing for a tax of 20 cents per gallon on beer could be enacted and would raise revenues of from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 per year.

Such an income, of course, would enable Congress to enact a bonus bill much more generous and satisfactory than the loan certificate bill vetoed by Mr. Harding. Nor should the Federal Government have any qualms about collecting revenue that is now going into the pockets of bootleggers and rum runners.

Many millions of people who voted for prohibition are now convinced that the eighteenth amendment as interpreted by the Volstead Act has gone too far and has created evils worse than the mischief it sought to cure. The experience of the last three years has taught the Nation that no law of Congress can prevent the operation of the law of fermentation—no swarm of revenue and prohibition agents can effectively prevent people who want to drink intoxicants from satisfying their desire. There is only one way of damming the flood of poisonous and death-dealing liquid concoctions which is deluging the country, and that is to permit the people to use the lighter and more innocuous beverages and thus remove the desire for the more potent and harmful liquors.

My proposal gives Congress and the States concurrent power in providing for the manufacture and sale of beer; but it expressly prevents Congress from relaxing the provisions of any State prohibition law or local regulation affecting beer. When this article becomes operative it will not change the situation in States which have voted dry or in counties where local option was in effect before the eighteenth amendment. If such communities desire to take advantage of the new article, they will be obliged to modify their own legislative enactments accordingly. The article further empowers Congress and the States to pass legislation effectively to prevent the revival of the saloon.

An essential and persuasive feature of my proposal is that, even though the article becomes a part of the Constitution by virtue of its submission by Congress to the States and its subsequent ratification by three-fourths of the States, it will not become operative unless and until it is affirmatively approved by a majority of the electors of the country voting at a nation-wide referendum.

Unlike the State legislatures, Congress has never attached a referendum clause to a legislative enactment or to a constitutional proposal. There is no question, however, of the power of Congress so to do. It is an inherent power of any legislative body to provide that any one of its enactments shall not become operative unless a certain condition is fulfilled or a certain event occurs. In my proposal the condition precedent is the affirmative approving action of a majority of the electors.

There are numerous instances of Congress attaching conditions to its legislative or other action. The new tariff bill is an illustration. Certain rates will not become operative unless and until the President makes certain findings. The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution itself was a conditional ordinance. It provided:

> This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified * * * within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

The Supreme Court has held that this seven-year limitation did not invalidate the amendment.

The referendum feature of the proposal should remove the objection of the most ardent prohibitionist. For the past several years no two questions have caused such public interest or agitation as prohibition and the soldiers' bonus. The electors of the country are well acquainted with all arguments on both sides and are perfectly qualified to pass judgment on these two simple issues. Recently the Literary Digest conducted a nation-wide poll on the prohibition question and on the bonus. The final tabulation showed that 356,193 ballots were cast in favor of continuance of the present prohibition law, while a total of 566,190 ballots, or 61 per cent of the entire number cast, favored repeal or modification of the present law. The vote on the bonus was not so decisive—466,814 votes, or 51.2 per cent, favored the bonus, while 444,221 opposed it. The poll, of course, was conducted with absolute fairness and may be accepted as a fair indication of the sentiment of the country.

The interest displayed in the poll and the decisive vote on the prohibition question would seem to furnish Congress with most impelling reasons for submitting the propositions direct to the people for decision. In fact, it would be difficult to understand how any Member of this House, whether he personally favors my proposal or not, could refuse to give the people of the country an opportunity to pass upon it.

Section 5 of my proposal provides that, once it becomes a part of the Constitution and operative, it may thereafter be amended or repealed at any time by referendum vote of the people. If this article is adopted, Congress in the future at any time may submit amendments to the fundamental prohibition law direct to the people for action without the necessity of ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. This section, in effect, changes Article V of the Constitution, which sets forth the method by which the Constitution may be amended. The change in method of amending the Constitution would apply, however, only to the prohibition amendments.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution—the prohibition amendment—as now in effect, reads as follows:

> SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all Territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.
>
> SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
> SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

The amendatory article which I have introduced to-day, designed to modify the eighteenth amendment, reads as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the several States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be a part of the Constitution of the United States:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. Notwithstanding the provisions of the eighteenth article in addition to, and amendment of, the Constitution, the manufacture, sale, or transportation of beer, containing not more than 5 per cent of alcohol by volume, within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, shall not be prohibited.

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce this article and to regulate, license, and tax the manufacture, distribution, and sale of such beer, and to prohibit its sale in saloons or other public places for consumption upon such premises; but nothing contained in this article, or in any act of Congress enacted in pursuance hereof, shall have the effect of relaxing the provisions of any State or local enactment, prohibition, or regulation which has been or may be adopted with reference to the manufacture, sale, or transportation of beer.

SEC. 3. Revenues derived by Federal taxation and license of beer, to the extent of not exceeding $5,000,000,000, shall not be appropriated by the Congress except to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War.

SEC. 4. Following the ratification of this article by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, it shall not become operative unless it is approved, as hereinafter provided, by a majority vote of the electors of the several States possessing the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures. Immediately upon the ratification of this article by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States the Congress shall provide for a popular referendum upon the same to be held in the several States at the next ensuing election of Members of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States. At such referendum the text of this electors voting thereon, it shall become operative 30 days after the article shall be submitted upon the ballot to the electors of the several States for approval or rejection. If it is approved by a majority of the official declaration of the vote by the Secretary of State of the United States.

SEC. 5. This article and the eighteenth article in addition to, and amendment of, the Constitution may be amended or repealed only whenever the Congress submits a proposal of such amendment or repeal to a popular referendum and such proposal is approved by a majority of the qualified electors of the several States voting thereon.

The hypocritical and unsupportable pretension is made in some quarters that any proposal to amend or modify the eighteenth amendment is just short of high treason or sacrilege. But judging from the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country, including a large proportion from service men, indorsing my plan, I am convinced that the better judgment of the country demands a relaxation of the Volstead Act. It is perhaps opportune that Members of Congress are returning to their districts at this time. They will have an opportunity of learning, at first hand, the temper of the service men who have been denied their promised adjustment of compensation. I have reason to believe that upon the reconvening of Congress the proposal which I have made to-day will be supported by Members who to-day assert it to be preposterous. If the membership of Congress is given an opportunity of expressing its true convictions upon this proposal, no one will deny that the amendment will easily receive the necessary two-thirds vote to provide for its submission to the States and to the people.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee] may proceed for 15 minutes and that the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico may proceed for 15 minutes. What is the plan of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is my intention, as soon as the membership of the House can agree to it, to ask that the House stand in recess until 1.45 p. m.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee] may proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his colleague may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] at the New York State Fair, and also another speech delivered by him before the National Retail Hardware Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may insert in the RECORD speeches by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after repeated visits to the White House by Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, and after frequent announcements were given out by him that the President would appear before the Congress in advocacy of a ship subsidy bill, finally, on February 28, 1922, the President appeared before Congress and delivered a message in advocacy of the ship subsidy bill, which was introduced in both branches of Congress on that day. On April 4 joint hearings were begun on the bill, and were concluded about the middle of May; after the proponents of the bill had presented their case the hearings were hurriedly brought to a close, it being stated in the press at the time that the President had summoned members of the committee to the White House and requested them to close the hearings and speedily report the bill out. However, the iniquities of the bill had been so fully exposed at the hearings and the opposition to the bill became so pronounced that it looked for a while as if the bill would not be reported. There were frequent undenied statements in the press to the effect that not only a large majority of the rank and file of the House membership, but also most of the leaders and the steering committee were opposed to action on the bill, at least before the fall elections; there were frequent undenied reports of House leaders importuning the President to acquiesce at least in a postponement of action. In assuming this attitude the House leaders and Members were undoubtedly reflecting the views of their constituents. However, Lasker had his way, with the result that the President insisted that the bill be promptly reported out and passed, and it was reported to the House by a majority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on June 16, 1922. At once a drive was made to procure a special rule for the immediate consideration of the bill.

In a letter to the chairman of the Rules Committee of the House the President not only demanded a special rule on the bill, but also threatened to call an extra session if the bill should not be reported out and acted upon. However, the opposition to the bill was so intense that it was apparent that it would not only be defeated if pressed to a vote at the time but would also result in the defeat of many Members who might vote for it, so that the President was finally persuaded to acquiesce in the postponement of action on the bill until after the House recess, which was to commence June 30 and end August 15. In a letter to Majority Leader MONDELL the President reluctantly acquiesced in such postponement, and in effect requested the Members of the House to return to their constituents and "sell" them the ship subsidy bill during the recess. On the night of July 5 Republican Senate leaders met at the residence of Senator LODGE and agreed that it would not be advisable to act on the ship subsidy program until after the fall election, and decided to ask President Harding to acquiesce in deferring action on the ship subsidy bill until next session. When the Members of the House returned, it developed that their constituents had apparently done more talking on the ship subsidy than the Members, with the result that the Members were less inclined than ever to commit political suicide by supporting the Lasker ship subsidy bill. The enthusiasm for the bill among the House membership had become so feeble and the opposition so pronounced that no serious effort has been made to bring the bill up for action since the House reconvened, although Lasker and the shipping interests have persistently carried on their fight and propaganda. The President himself finally acquiesced in postponement of action on the ship subsidy until after the elections, but made it clear that he expected the bill to be acted upon then.

We are to adjourn sine die to-day. It is reported that the President insisted that Congress should recess until about the middle of November—after the coming elections—for the purpose of then taking up the ship subsidy bill, but that a majority of the leaders, particularly in the Senate, realizing the political inexpediency of such a move, declined to agree. It is now announced that the President will call an extra session, to convene shortly after the coming elections, for the purpose of taking up the ship subsidy bill. Undoubtedly a very large majority of the Members are opposed to the extra session for this purpose. I am aware that it is stated that the President has not finally and definitely concluded to call such extra session, but I do not doubt that he will. It has been repeatedly demonstrated that Lasker has the ear and confidence of the President to a greater extent than have congressional leaders, and with Lasker on the ground ever hovering around the President and accompanying him on his week-end trips, and the congressional leaders out of the city, we may rest assured that Lasker's counsel will prevail, which means an extra session.

Lasker has more influence with the President than all of you Members combined. While it is true that the President and the proponents of this bill have several times marched up the hill and then marched down again, yet they did not march down out of any consideration for you, but because they had reached the conclusion that if the bill should be pressed for passage at the time, it would be defeated. They are in the attitude of the man who met one of his friends for the first time in several months and said to him, "John, how is your wife?" to which John replied, "I have no wife." His friend then said, "Why, the last time I met you, you told me you were soon to be married." "Yes," replied John, "I thought I was, but when I learned that the girl and all the members of her family were opposed to it, I gave up the idea." [Laughter.]

However, the friends of this ship subsidy bill have only temporarily given up the idea. Those seeking special favors never give up as long as there is a chance. When there is as much at stake as there is in this bill, and when they have succeeded in securing such powerful backing, you may rest assured that the shipping interests have not given up the fight. The friends of this bill have simply made a strategical retreat. They will employ every conceivable method to strengthen their lines, and when we reconvene they will renew the attack with renewed vigor and skillful strategy. They fully realize that their only remaining chance is to jam the bill through before the present Congress expires. This bill was not an issue and the people had no opportunity to express themselves thereon when the present Congress was elected. However, this bill will not have a "Chinaman's chance" with the Congress to be elected the coming November, because at least a majority of those elected will have been required to commit themselves against this iniquitous measure. As that great farm journal—Farm, Stock, and Home—stated in a recent issue commenting on this bill, "Like all burglaries, it has to be committed quickly, or not at all."

The opponents of the bill have repeatedly challenged its proponents to bring the bill to a vote before the election. Why this postponement until after the election? It can not be for any reason other than that its proponents think it could not pass now, but that it can be passed after the election. They have ascertained that a majority of the Congress will not vote for it and then go home to face their constituents in the coming election. They think that after the election those who have been reelected and are two years removed from another election, can be more easily whipped into line for the bill, and that the large flock of "lame ducks" will be indifferent and many of them looking out for Federal appointments. One Member is quoted as saying:

> We can pass the ship subsidy bill in December, but I am not certain we could pass it now with safety to the candidates. I know 50 Congressmen who would vote for the bill after the election in November who might meet with defeat if they voted for it now. To push it now is bad politics.

Consequently, whether it be viewed from the standpoint of probable action after the election during the present Congress or to prevent action in the next Congress, I want to warn the Members of Congress and the people that the ship subsidy is an issue, a live issue, which should be discussed by the American people in the campaign, and it is of so much importance that every candidate for Congress in either party should be required by the people to state his views on this proposition.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In a minute.

Mr. EDMONDS. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman if it was not discussed in Maine.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I do not think it was an issue. Whether it was discussed in Maine or not, that State would doubtless be benefited by this bill and by the recently enacted tariff bill as much as any State would, and yet in the recent Maine election the Republicans lost 36,000 votes and lost 22 seats in the legislature and their majority was reduced about 10,000 votes in each congressional district. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Republicans sustained a loss of nearly 60 per cent of their majority and over 25 per cent of their total vote, whereas the Democrats made a gain in their vote. In commenting editorially on the results of the election, the Portland Press Herald, the leading Republican paper of Maine, declared, in part:

The real cause of the Republican slump, as we see it, was the feeling of lukewarm interest in the administration at Washington. * * * If anything, the election in Maine should serve as a warning to the Republican Party as to what is expected of its leaders in Washington. It certainly can not be construed as an absolute indorsement of the party policies as they have been exemplified at the Federal Capital.

However, the condemnation of their policies is so general and the administration forces have sustained so many crushing defeats in the primaries that they seem to have extracted some comfort from the fact that the rock-ribbed Republican State of Maine did not repudiate them to the extent of actually going Democratic.

The question of ship subsidies was an issue in the Republican primaries in South Dakota, North Dakota, Iowa, and Nebraska, where Frazier, La Follette, Brookhart, and Howell were overwhelmingly nominated for the United States Senate on platforms declaring unqualifiedly against any ship subsidies. Keynote addresses have been delivered in various sections of the country, but it does not appear that any of the keynoters dared to include an advocacy of this ship subsidy bill in their repertoire. It is quite apparent that those who intend to support the proposition will keep "mum" if permitted to do so. However, the people are entitled to know how every candidate stands on this very important and tremendously expensive measure, and the people should require every candidate to state how he stands.

For a year most extensive propaganda has been carried on in behalf of ship subsidies. Chairman Lasker, who prides himself on being a publicity expert, has been most active in this respect. The Merchant Marine Association and other shipping interests have been very active. Speakers in behalf of the bill have been sent through the country, particularly the Middle West. Chairman Lasker and other members of the Shipping Board have devoted their time and attention, not to the dispatch of the business of the Shipping Board, but to engaging in propaganda in behalf of this bill. Instead of performing the duties for which they are appointed and paid, they have subverted those duties and engaged in an unseemly and improper campaign in favor of this legislation. They have employed the most questionable methods in their zeal to procure the enactment of a bill which would give them unprecedented power and the control of immense funds.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. My time is limited.

Mr. LINTHICUM. For a short question on that very point?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I have so very many things I desire to say.

Perhaps on no question has so much misinformation been disseminated. The propaganda in behalf of this legislation has contained many absolutely false statements, deceptive and misleading statements. All of that having failed to convince the American people, those seeking this legislation have resorted to the old bogy of alleged British hostility and influence. Whenever a proposition is so offensive and objectionable that the people will not stand for it, it is customary to charge German or British influence. Talk of British hostility and influence against an American merchant marine is a straw man set up to divert the attention of the people from the iniquities of the bill and the forces that are at work to force its passage. Such talk, of course, originated with the Hearst papers and has since been echoed by others. As an evidence of Hearst's lack of sincerity in the matter, his leading paper, The New York American, had an editorial which stated in part:

The future of the American merchant marine is in the hands of you and us, the traveling and shipping public. If we will concentrate our patronage on American steamers, we can give them so much business that they can afford to pay an American scale of wages and yet make money.

That's up to us Americans. By the operation of the ocean rates conferences rates for passengers and freight are identical by all competing lines. So it costs us nothing to be patriotic.

When we plan a trip to Europe, South America, the West Indies, or the Far East let's go on an American steamer. In so far as we control the routing of export or import shipments let's send them by American lines.

When this article appeared William R. Hearst had just sailed to Europe on the British Cunard liner Aquitania.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] on June 28 addressed a letter to all the Members of Congress referring to "the subtle but nevertheless deep-seated opposition to our maritime efforts," and "to illustrate specifically this campaign of antagonism" called attention to the fact that the recently promulgated Suez Canal rules did not specifically mention tankers classed by the American Bureau of Shipping as being entitled to enter the canal and claimed that this would debar American tankers.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; I can not, my time is too limited.

However, the said American Bureau of Shipping issues an official bulletin, and in their July-August, 1922, bulletin, in display type on the first inside page of the bulletin appeared the following:

AMERICAN BUREAU CLASSIFICATION AND THE SUEZ CANAL REGULATIONS.

The attention of the bureau was recently called to the fact that the new 1922 edition of the "Rules of Navigation, Appendix for Ships Carrying Dangerous Materials" through the Suez Canal, which includes all seagoing tankers, had failed to mention that such ships classed by the American Bureau of Shipping would be permitted to enter the canal ports or to make the passage through the canal.

At the time the complaint was made President Stevenson Taylor, of the bureau, was in London, and the fact was cabled to him. Mr. Taylor immediately took up the matter with the Suez Canal authorities, and we are pleased to announce that he was assured that this omission was due to the copying of old regulations on the subject, and that the omission of tankers classed by this bureau from the list of approved classifications was unintentional.

Shipowners operating tankers which are classed by this bureau need therefore have no further apprehension regarding permission to use the Suez Canal on an equality with similar vessels classed by the other recognized classification societies.

It must be borne in mind that the necessity for such stringent regulations as to the character of ships using this and other great canals arises from the danger of fires and consequent sinking in the canal channels. This danger is recognized and avoided, so far as structural requirements are concerned, by all classification societies alike.

In other words, the American Bureau of Shipping had been created since the drafting of the regulations of the Suez Canal, and in recopying the old regulations mention of the American Bureau of Shipping was inadvertently omitted. As soon as the matter was called to the attention of the Suez Canal authorities they promptly and without question included tankers classified by the American Bureau of Shipping as entitled to enter the Suez Canal. Not a single American tanker was debarred from entering the Suez Canal because of this apparent inadvertence. In spite of this refutation by the American Bureau of Shipping itself, the Washington Post had an editorial the other day citing that omission as an evidence of British hostility.

Edward P. Farley, a vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, in charge of ship sales, spent several weeks in Europe last spring studying shipping problems for the benefit of the Shipping Board, and upon his return he reported in part as follows:

"The American merchant-marine program will meet with no hostility either in England or Germany, according to a verbal report on the attitude of shipping interests in those two countries made to Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board by Edward P. Farley, vice president in charge of ship sales, who has just returned from a trip to Europe for the purpose of obtaining this and other information needed by the board."

That is correct, is it?

Mr. FARLEY. Well, I wouldn't say it was word for word what I said, but in general it might be assumed to be along the lines. I mean I might not have used the word "no."

Mr. DAVIS. I don't mean word for word.

Mr. FARLEY. Yes. In general substance that is correct.

Mr. DAVIS. In other words—that is, in substance—the facts as you reported them and they are the facts as you found them?

Mr. FARLEY. The facts as I found them; yes.

Mr. DAVIS. You found no hostility and no disposition to try and throw blocks in the way?

Mr. FARLEY. Well, now, I wasn't there on an investigation of that phase of it, but, as I explained here, what people I did talk to—the ship-owning people—all realized that this fleet was built at their earnest request, built to help protect them, as well as the rest of the world. We felt then that is what we were doing.

Mr. DAVIS. They still manifest the spirit of our allies in that respect, do they, Mr. Farley?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. That is, so far as Great Britain is concerned?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, I believe you also stated later, in substance, that in Germany they didn't appear to be paying any attention to our plans and program. Is that correct?

Mr. FARLEY. I would say that would be quite correct. (Hearings, p. 2047.)

W. J. Love, another vice president of the Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, made a very recent trip to Europe in behalf of the Shipping Board, and upon his return, according to the press reports, he made substantially the same report in this respect as did Mr. Farley.

On the other hand, there have been some pretty salty charges of British influence operating upon those connected with the present Shipping Board. For instance, Edgar Pennington Young, publisher of the Marine Journal, of New York City, threw a bombshell into the convention of the National Merchant Marine Association, in session in Washington last spring, in a speech, in which he declared in part:

Candidate Harding has not been President a year, and what has happened? He appointed as chairman of the United States Shipping Board, an office requiring an intimate knowledge of shipping, a man who scarcely knew one end of a ship from another. It is said that one or two powerful officials of corporations in New York, both having intimate business relations with England, suggested the name of Mr. Lasker. I wonder if either of them would place in charge of one of their own vital departments within their own corporation a man who had never had the slightest experience in that particular line of work? What justification is there, therefore, for the belief that either of these gentlemen, in their hearts, are anxious for a real American merchant marine?

I have no faith in the subsidy program. I believe no permanent good will result from it. I believe the present objective of certain powerful interests who are playing into the hands of Great Britain is a heavily subsidized merchant marine with secret British-Canadian ownership or control.

Of course, if, instead of proceeding along business and efficient lines, we undertake to aid our merchant marine by artificial methods, such methods can and doubtless will be met by similar methods in foreign countries, provided our methods should discriminate or prove to the disadvantage of foreign shipping.

We can not succeed by rewarding and preserving extravagance, waste, graft, incompetent, and inefficient methods by treating the symptoms with artificial nostrums. We can succeed by an application of American intelligence, genius, and resources to building and maintaining a merchant marine on sound businesslike and efficient principles.

If British hostility and influence is controlling the opposition to ship subsidies in this country, it has been so powerful in the past that it has prevented any political party in this country from ever declaring in favor of ship subsidies. It kept the Republican convention in 1920 from declaring in favor of ship subsidies; instead of so declaring, the Republican national platform of 1920 expressly declared in favor of the merchant marine act of 1920—Jones law—as follows:

We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

If British hostility is controlling, it prevented the recent Ohio state convention from declaring in favor of ship subsidies and caused it to remain silent on the subject, although the President expressly requested that the convention indorse the pending ship subsidy bill. If Great Britain is responsible for the opposition, it was sufficient to cause the recent Democratic convention in Missouri to denounce the pending ship subsidy bill, and sufficient to prevent the recent Republican convention in Missouri from saying anything about it. There has not been a single convention in any State to declare in favor of this bill or the principles involved and I venture to say that there will be none. The American people are opposed to the proposition, and properly so.

As a matter of fact, there is no danger of British hostility or influence; it is a scarecrow and not a menace. However, I will tell you where there is a real danger, to which I shall call attention, and I do so in the light of history and the activities of the Shipping Board and the shipping interests who are interested in jamming through this program. I have here an official publication of the Department of Commerce, entitled "Government Aid to Merchant Shipping," by Grosvenor M. Jones, commercial agent, who is still an official of the Department of Commerce, and who was appointed by the present Shipping Board on the committee to study these problems. On pages 40 and 41 of this volume we find the following:

In 1872 the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. proposed the establishment of another monthly mail-steamship line to China and Japan for an additional subvention of $500,000 per year. After much debate Congress adopted the proposal and a contract to that effect was entered into. This contract, however, was abrogated by act of March 3, 1875, after it was discovered that the law had been passed as a result of corruption and the company had failed to carry out its part of the agreement.

During this period, however, the policy of granting mail subventions received a deathblow. The disclosures as to the maintenance of a corrupt lobby to secure congressional approval of the second Pacific Mail contract left such an unfavorable impression upon the popular mind that no serious attempt was made to institute subvention payments for at least 10 years.

I also have here Meeker's History of Shipping Subsidies, the recognized standard work on the subject. The author is likewise a Government official. I read from this work, pages 160–161, as follows:

In 1872 the Pacific Mail Co. offered to run another monthly service to China and Japan for an additional $500,000 a year. With considerable difficulty a bill authorizing such a contract was passed by Congress, June 1, 1872. In 1874 it was discovered that bribery had been employed to secure the passage of the measure. It was proven that the company had spent about $1,000,000 to push the bill through Congress. The new contract was abrogated by the Government because of the improper methods used in gaining the necessary legislation, and the subsequent failure of the company to fulfill the conditions of the said contract. (House Doc. No. 598, 42d Cong., 2d sess.; Miscel. Docs., Nos. 74 and 225; House Doc. No. 268, 43d Cong., 1st sess.)

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen, if one company would pay $1,000,000 to corruptly have a bill passed that would pay it $500,000 a year for 10 years, or a total of $5,000,000, in payment of services to be actually rendered in carrying the mails, how much do you suppose at least some of the present shipping interests would pay in order to get passed a bill that would authorize the loaning to them of $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest for 15 years, that would exempt them from the payment of taxes and would provide for the payment to them of subsidies to the extent of at least $75,000,000 per year for an indefinite period of time, such favors not to be for services actually rendered but in the form of subsidies or bounties?

I trust that the Congress and the people will not permit their attention to be diverted from the real issues, the actual facts and dangers, by a false hue and cry raised for the express purpose of diverting attention.

As before stated, the Shipping Board is neglecting its real duties and subverting its proper functions. It is not only improperly expending its time and energies in an effort to further this legislation but it is, at least in part, paying for the propaganda with public funds, some directly and some indirectly. Why do they seek such extraordinary powers? Why are they so zealously working for the passage of this bill, which would confer upon them such extraordinary power in determining shipping policies, in bestowing or withholding favors, and in handling fabulous sums of money, without coming to Congress for appropriations and without being required to make any report or accounting to Congress, the President, or anybody else?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What policy or plan would the gentleman suggest to salvage the $3,500,000,000 merchant marine that we have?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that it would take considerable time to fully present a plan; it can not be done in a few words. If this bill is presented for passage and I can get the time, I shall present a full, definite, and specific plan as to how I think the problem should be handled and based upon what I conceive to be a correct diagnosis of the difficulties. However, I shall answer your question as fully as I can during the short time I have remaining. It is true that we have from $3,000,000,000 to $3,500,000,000 invested in ships. Under the present plan the Shipping Board does not expect to realize exceeding $200,000,000 for our fleet, so that this bill can not be considered from the standpoint of salvaging our investment. According to the plan as stated by Mr. Lasker at the hearings and in press propaganda, it will be necessary to spend $400,000,000 additional for new ship construction in order to create what they call a well-balanced fleet. Instead of the pending bill saving anything by way of investment, it means a tremendous additional cost to the Government and the people.

If this bill should pass and these ships are thrown on the market under the existing depressed conditions, when there is a large amount of idle tonnage all over the world, due to lack of cargoes, we will not even realize $200,000,000; and there is no expectation on the part of the board that they can sell any appreciable amount any time soon. Chairman Lasker testified at the hearings that if this bill should pass they would consider themselves happy if they could dispose of the 400 ships now in operation within 30 months, and he would not even undertake to state how long it would take to dispose of the remaining 1,000 or 1,100 steel ships. He further stated that it would be necessary to maintain substantially the same organization as long as we operated any of the ships. However, suppose that they should dispose of our ships for $200,000,000, how much would it cost us? In the first place the bill proposes to lend $125,000,000 for 15 years at 2 per cent interest. The various subsidies and aids provided in the bill will cost us at least $75,000,000 per year for at least 10 years, because this bill authorizes the Shipping Board to make 10-year contracts for the payment of subsidies; and the 10-year periods are to commence, not from the date of the passage of the bill but from the date of the contract, so that when the program is once entered upon there will be outstanding contracts all the time, making the repeal of the bill practically impossible. However, in addition to the $125,000,000 loan, the operation of the bill would cost us at least $750,000,000 in 10 years, a pretty big price to pay in order to salvage a $3,000,000,000 fleet for $200,000,000. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks, I desire to call attention to certain additional features.

I have previously referred to the false propaganda that is being disseminated in an effort to put through this bill. It has been repeatedly stated in such propaganda that if this bill should pass the cost the first year would be only about $15,000,000, and thereafter about $30,000,000. Chairman Lasker made such a statement in an article appearing in the September issue of the Scientific American, such a statement not only being contrary to the facts but in conflict with his own admissions at the hearings. As fully appears on pages 239 to 241 and 273 of the hearings, Lasker admitted that if the bill should pass and the provisions get into operation certain specified provisions of the bill would constitute a direct charge on the Public Treasury of $52,125,000, and this did not include certain provisions, the cost of which he was unwilling to estimate.

This bill creates a "merchant-marine fund" for the payment of the voyage subsidies, "which shall be subject to withdrawal by the United States Shipping Board on requisition approved by the chairman of the board." This fund is to be derived from 10 per cent of our custom receipts, which Chairman Lasker estimated will amount to about $30,000,000 per annum; by tonnage taxes, which he estimated will amount to about $4,000,000 per annum; and by the amounts which would otherwise be paid for carrying the mails which he estimated at $5,000,000, making a total of $39,000,000; and all of which amounts the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay into said merchant-marine fund without any appropriation by Congress.

Another direct charge on the Public Treasury is involved in the provision authorizing deductions from net Federal income taxes of 5 per cent of the freight paid on goods imported or exported in American-flag vessels, which Chairman Lasker and the Shipping Board report estimate would amount to about $10,000,000 per annum when the program gets into operation; as a matter of fact, it would amount to much more than that.

Mr. Lasker also conceded that in lending the $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest the Government would be losing at least 2½ per cent, which would amount to $3,125,000 per annum. Furthermore, the 2 per cent interest, amounting to $2,500,000 annually, if collected, will go into this loan fund and not the General Treasury.

It will be noted that these different items involving a direct charge on the Treasury aggregate $52,125,000, according to Mr. Lasker's admissions and figures, and not including the $2,500,000 annual interest, which should also be counted.

Lasker's estimate of $30,000,000 from 10 per cent on import duties was predicated upon the supposition that such import duties would amount to $300,000,000 per annum, whereas it is estimated that under the operation of the recently enacted tariff act such revenues will amount to $400,000,000 per annum, so that this item should be increased from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000. Accepting Lasker's figures on the other items, all of which are entirely too low, and also adding the 2 per cent interest on the loan fund, which would go into the loan fund instead of the General Treasury, we have a total cost of $64,625,000 per annum under the above-mentioned items.

Furthermore, this bill exempts the operators or vessels from the payment of "war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1918 or any and all taxes on income, corporate or individual, imposed by the revenue act of 1921, or by any subsequent revenue act, an amount equivalent to the net earnings of such vessel during such taxable year," provided the owner "invests or sets aside in a trust fund for investment" for the construction of new vessels.

The bill further provides for the exemption from taxation of the profits made upon the sale of vessels built prior to January 1, 1914, provided such owner "invests or sets aside in a trust fund for investment for the building of new vessels." I do not know why this advantage is accorded to privately owned vessels but not to those built by the Shipping Board.

Of course, it is impossible to state the extent of the charge upon the Public Treasury of these tax exemptions and none of the representatives of the Shipping Board would give any estimate thereon.

The bill further provides for the elimination of the Army and Navy transports so as to require our troops, munitions, and supplies to be carried in privately owned vessels without any distinction in time of war. Chairman Lasker and the Shipping Board report estimated that the income to privately owned ships from this source would amount to $7,500,000 per annum in the Pacific alone, of which amount they state that approximately $5,000,000 would be net profit to the ship operators. It will be noted that this amount does not include the Army and Navy transport service to the Canal Zone, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Haiti, and so forth.

One of the provisions of the bill provides that 50 per cent of the immigrants to this country shall be transported in American vessels. Mr. Thomas H. Rossbottom, a representative of the Shipping Board, who testified at the hearings, estimated that under the present 3 per cent quota law "this traffic would give the transporting companies a gross income of $17,600,000 per year, of which one-half, or $8,800,000 should come to American owners." He further stated that one-half of this sum would be net profit.

There are other indirect aids carried in the bill, which I shall not now discuss.

However, Lasker stated at the hearings that the indirect aids provided in the bill were of much greater value than the direct aids.

Wherefore, as previously stated, it is a conservative estimate to state that this bill would constitute a direct charge upon the Public Treasury of at least $75,000,000 per annum, not to speak of additional costs to the American public.

Another false feature of the propaganda is the continual assertion that this bill is favored by the farmers, such an assertion having been repeatedly made by Chairman Lasker and repeated by him as late as the said article appearing in the September issue of the Scientific American. Such assertions are invariably based upon the fact that J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, indorsed the bill, as they are unable to point to any other farm organization or representative thereof having indorsed the bill for the very good reason that no others have done so, although most of them have gone on record as strongly opposed to it.

With respect to Howard's indorsement of the bill, those who have been parading such facts from one end of the country to the other failed to state that Howard was then and is now a candidate for appointment to the Federal Reserve Board, and that he indorsed the bill at the request of Chairman Lasker. They failed to explain that in indorsing the bill Howard not only did not represent the views of the American Farm Bureau Federation but acted contrary thereto, as that organization had gone on record in national convention as opposed to any subsidies, all of which was admitted by Howard at the hearings.

Upon cross-examination at the hearings, upon having his attention called to the different provisions of the bill, Howard repeatedly either expressed disapproval of same or withheld his approval. Furthermore, since he testified at the hearings, I have received a letter from James R. Howard, in which he states, in part:

> The statement which I made at the hearing before your committee on the ship subsidy was prepared, as I stated, by our office and not by myself. I had not read it over until I read it in the committee. * * * So far as governmental aid is concerned, you will note from the purport, both of the evidence and telegram to President Harding upon which our statements were made, that we approved aid only with essential reservations. I need not repeat that.

As evidence of the extent to which Howard misrepresented the membership of the American Farm Bureau Federation, I call attention to the action taken by the local chapters of that organization in Howard's own State, as explained in the following letter:

> DES MOINES, IOWA, August 21, 1922.
> Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
> United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your inquiry of August 22, regarding the referendum vote in Iowa on the subject of the ship subsidy bill, will say that the ratio stood 37 to 1 against the bill. That vote would indicate that the farmers were very largely against ship subsidy.
>
> Yours very truly,
>
> IOWA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
> By C. W. HUNT, President.

The farm journals throughout the country, practically without exception, have been denouncing the pending ship subsidy bill in unmeasured terms and declaring that the farmers are practically a unit against it. I shall not burden the RECORD with extensive quotations from such papers, but shall simply call attention to some typical examples. The National Grange, monthly, published at Springfield, Mass., is the official organ of the National Grange, the largest farm organization in the country, having over 800,000 paid-up bona fide members representing every State in the Union except a Southern State, and a representative of which organization, Dr. T. C. Atkeson, appeared at the hearings in opposition to this bill. In a recent issue said journal had the following to say in regard to this bill:

THE TRUTH ABOUT SHIP SUBSIDIES—IN THE MIDST OF ALL SORTS OF MISREPRESENTATION THE GRANGE SPEAKS FOR THE FARMERS.

With tremendously gathering force the ship subsidy question is arousing the country and is fast taking first place in public attention among the many matters pending before Congress. On every side the farmers are uttering strong protest against the proposed ship subsidy project, and it is already apparent that a great wave of agricultural opposition will soon be sweeping the country, with a likelihood that the magnitude of the protest will exceed any previous uprising of the American farmers since the days of the Canadian reciprocity buncombe, which those same farmers so effectively squelched.

The usual propaganda methods are being resorted to to misrepresent the farmers' attitude and to make it appear that the latter are going to be lined up for ship subsidies—than which nothing could ever be further from the truth.

And in the last issue the National Grange monthly contained the following editorial:

A RINGING VOICE.

Of all the times that the Grange has spoken on big pending questions in the name of the farmers of America it never expressed their position more accurately than when it protested vigorously at Washington against the ship subsidy measure which influential interests are bound to jam through the present session of Congress. Its protest was instant, has been vigorous, and apparently is to prove effective. There does not at present appear to be the slightest chance that a ship subsidy bill can be gotten through this session, so mighty have become the forces lined up against it, the solid phalanx of American farmers at the forefront.

In the midst of some farmer misrepresentation at Washington of the most unfortunate nature, the Grange declaration against ship subsidy rings clear to the desires of an overwhelming preponderance of the farmers in every section of the country, and the organization again stands revealed as the true spokesman of the agricultural people.

The August issue of Farm, Stock and Home, published at Minneapolis, Minn., by Harry H. Owen and recognized as one of the foremost farm papers in the country, contained the following editorial:

WILL NOT SURVIVE DISCUSSION.

Our guess is that the ship subsidy is dead. The only chance of success it had was to jam it through quickly under a smoke screen of false patriotism. "Keep the American flag on the sea," "Do not surrender the ships," "Do our trading under the Stars and Stripes," and a lot of similar buncombe, but the scheme did not work. The American voter is doing his own thinking to a greater extent than any time in the last 60 years. He does not accept and defend every proposition his party suggests, or condemn blindly those of the opposite camp. Even as recently as 10 years ago practically every Republican would have favored the ship subsidy because a Republican President had proposed it. Because they do not now is one of the most encouraging signs of the times; it shows that political parties can not be used to further class interests as has been done in the past.

The longer the ship subsidy is before the people the less likely it is to be passed. Wrong in principle, unjustified by economic needs, a mere grab into the United States Treasury by a few favored individuals, its true nature will become more apparent the longer the proposition is before the people.

The noted farm papers published in different sections of the West by Dante M. Pierce have had repeated editorials and other articles denouncing the ship subsidy bill and stating that the farmers are practically unanimously opposed to it. Mr. Pierce, among other things, says:

The Congressman from Iowa who voted for a ship subsidy might just as well lease his apartment in Washington.

Heretofore the farmers of the country, without regard to section or party, have been a unit in opposition to the various efforts that have been made from time to time to pass ship subsidy bills, and largely by reason of that opposition all such bills have been defeated. The opposition of the farmers to such legislation was based upon the fact that such bills were not only wrong in principle but also imposed heavy burdens upon the farmers as taxpayers without any corresponding benefits. There is much more reason for farmers opposing the pending bill than there ever was for opposing any previous ship subsidy bill, and the indications are that they are almost a unit in opposition to the pending bill in spite of the tremendous amount of false and misleading propaganda which has been disseminated in its behalf and largely at Government expense. The pending bill is not only more vicious in principle than any previous bill but would be infinitely more burdensome to the farmers. In comparison with previous bills it is a giant compared to pigmies.

As the American people revolted to such an extent as to prevent the passage of the Hanna ship subsidy bill, which carried an estimated annual expenditure of only $3,222,268, and later the Gallinger bill, which carried an estimated annual expenditure of $5,109,355, which the report on the bill stated would be covered by ocean postage collected and the increased tonnage taxes provided in the bill, it is hardly conceivable that they will tolerate this proposed monstrous raid on the Treasury, which will cost the American people at least $75,000,000 a year, not taking into consideration various indirect aids to the shipping interests which are not susceptible of calculation.

The direct charges upon the Public Treasury carried in this bill, even if they amount to no more than the figures conceded by Chairman Lasker at the hearings, will amount to 50 per cent more annually than the combined subsidies, subventions, and State aid of every character and description paid by all of the nations on earth combined.

The worst feature of it is that subsidies have never built up or maintained a successful merchant marine, as a report of the present Shipping Board concedes, and it would not do so in this instance. The bill is designed and would operate in the interest of a very few large monopolistic shipping concerns. It is an indefensible case of class favoritism, of enriching the few at the expense of the many.

While the farmers, who pay more taxes, direct and indirect, in proportion to their wealth and earnings than any other class, would be compelled to bear a large part of the burdens of this legislation, yet the bill is not framed with their interests in view and would not work to their interest. The farmer's interest is in cargo vessels to carry his products to foreign markets, and yet the subsidies provided for cargo vessels in the pending bill are insignificant. The bill is so framed that most of the subsidies will be paid to fast ocean liners. How many farmers are able to travel abroad?

It is stated by Chairman Lasker and others that negotiations are under way for the construction of two 1,000-foot passenger liners, each of 70,000 gross tons, the largest in the world, their construction being contingent upon the passage of the pending ship subsidy bill.

This smacks of propaganda. However, it is entirely possible that these ships may be constructed, as under the provisions of the Lasker ship subsidy bill the owners could borrow two-thirds of the cost of construction on 15 years' time and at 2 per cent annual interest; then they would be entitled to annual voyage subsidies amounting to at least $4,000,000 according to the basic rates, and twice that amount if the Shipping Board doubled the basic subsidies under the discretion lodged in them by the pending bill; so that the two ships would be entitled to $60,000,000 in voyage subsidies during the 15-year period, and $120,000,000 if such subsidies were doubled by the Shipping Board; also they would be exempted from the payment of all Federal taxes, provided they set aside same for reinvestment; they would also receive the benefit of various other aids provided in the bill. R. T. Merrill, an official of the Shipping Board, testified that the Leviathan would be entitled to voyage subsidies of $900,000 annually according to the basic rates, or $1,800,000 if the basic rate should be doubled. He was entirely too conservative. A layman can take a pencil and paper and figure it for himself; taking the rate of subsidy provided in the bill for such a vessel and the tonnage of the Leviathan and the number of trips it could reasonably make in a year, he will see that the Leviathan could draw twice as much subsidy as conceded by Mr. Merrill. As the vessels mentioned are to be considerably larger than the Leviathan, which has a tonnage of about 54,000, the above estimates are entirely conservative.

Of course, nobody exccept the very wealthy could pay the price to travel on these palatial greyhounds. The question is as to whether the masses of the people are sufficiently interested in providing these floating palaces for the luxuriant comfort of the wealthy tourists to be willing to pay this price. Is it not a fact that not only the farmers but the masses of the American people are much more interested in cargo vessels to carry their commerce? An infinitesimally small percentage of them ever get the opportunity to travel abroad, but all of them are interested in our commerce. And yet, the pending ship subsidy bill is framed in the interest of the fast ocean liners rather than the cargo vessels. For instance, the same Mr. Merrill, and also Mr. Homer L. Ferguson, testified at the hearings that a 5,000 gross ton cargo vessel with a speed under 12 knots—and but few cargo vessels exceed that, the ordinary cargo steamer making a speed of 8 or 9 knots—in customary continuous operation would be entitled to voyage subsidies of $7,500 annually, according to the basic rate provided in the bill. A 7,000 gross ton vessel of this type would be entitled to $10,500 per annum. It would take about 48 of such 5,000-ton ships or 34 of the 7,000-ton ships to equal the tonnage of the two large passenger steamers mentioned by Mr. Ferguson. This entire fleet of 48 or 34 cargo vessels would be entitled to only $360,000 annually in voyage subsidies, or $720,000 if such subsidies were doubled; but it is unlikely that the subsidies on cargo vessels would be doubled. Differently stated, the basic voyage subsidies to which those two giant liners would be entitled under the provisions of the Lasker bill would be equal to the basic voyage subsidies of 522 5,000-ton cargo steamers, or 380 7,000-ton cargo steamers, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,660,000 gross tons. If the subsidies to the said liners were doubled and the cargo vessels received the basic subsidies, the bounties received by the two large passenger vessels would equal the subsidies received by 1,064 of the 5,000-ton cargo steamers or 760 of the 7,000-ton cargo steamers, with an aggregate tonnage of 5,320,000. In other words, under the basic subsidies provided in the bill for the different classes of vessels, these two large liners would be entitled to half as much subsidies as the entire Government fleet of cargo vessels; and if the Shipping Board should exercise their discretion of doubling the subsidies to these liners, they would receive as much as all of the cargo vessels, figured upon the basic rate to which they are entitled. Figured on the same basis, those two vessels and the Leviathan would receive as much as all of the American cargo vessels fit for service, including both Government owned and privately owned. While it is true the liners mentioned are extra large, yet there are numerous passenger vessels which would be entitled to one-fourth to one-half the subsidies to which these liners would be entitled.

The pending bill is thus framed in spite of the fact that it was shown conclusively at the hearings that American passenger vessels labor at a less disadvantage than do cargo vessels.

For a refutation of the different arguments advanced in favor of the pending bill, I call attention to the facts furnished by me in a speech delivered in the House on June 13 last, which nobody has attempted to dispute or answer, and to the minority report on the pending bill.

I quote the conclusion of the minority report, which is as follows:

In addition to the fact that the proponents of the merchant marine act of 1920 claimed at the time of its passage that it was a complete and adequate solution of the problem, as reiterated in the Republican national platform, Chairman Lasker at the hearings declared that in his belief, "if the Jones law could have been carried out as a whole it would have given us an American merchant marine without asking for further legislation."

Section 273 of the pending bill, allowing a deduction from net Federal income taxes of 5 per cent of the freight paid on goods imported or exported in American-flag vessels was provided as a substitute for said section 34 of the Jones Act. Both Chairman Lasker and Winthrop L. Marvin, general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association, stated at the hearings that this substitute provision is "far more valuable and effective" than section 34 of the Jones Act, and they are undoubtedly correct, for the very cogent reasons stated by them.

Yet the pending bill not only provides a substitute "far more valuable and effective" than section 34 of the Jones Act but also amends said act in several vital respects and in addition provides enormous direct subsidies as well as numerous other direct and indirect aids to the shipping interests, which will cost the American people at least $75,000,000 per year and which will amount to at least 50 per cent more than the aggregate amount paid by all foreign nations in the form of subsidies, bounties, subventions, ocean mail pay, and of every other form of direct or indirect aid to the construction and navigation of their merchant marines.

In conclusion we call attention to the following facts:

1. Our Government-owned merchant tonnage cost the people about $3,000,000,000. It is estimated that we will probably sell the ships for $200,000,000. Consequently the people will stand a loss by deflation of $2,800,000,000. Furthermore, it is contemplated that either existing shipping companies or companies to be organized, who buy the ships, will capitalize the ships largely in excess of their cost to them, and sell the stock and bonds to the American people—so that the people will be standing the war inflation, the post-war deflation, and then the promotion inflation.

The people, through their Government, will sell the ships for approximately $200,000,000, lend $125,000,000 to recondition those ships or build others, and then pay the owners approximately $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years. In other words, we will be giving the ships away and paying the recipients over $500,000,000 to operate them for the next 10 years, with the chances that such burdens will thereafter continue indefinitely and probably increase if this policy is once fastened upon this Government.

2. That this bill provides for a loan to shipowners of a revolving fund of $125,000,000, such to be loaned at 2 per cent interest and for 15 years at a time, and up to two-thirds the cost of the ships upon which the loans are to be made, although the average life of a ship is estimated at 20 years; whereas, even under the Federal farm loan system, farmers are compelled to pay about 6 per cent interest, and are not allowed to borrow more than 50 per cent of the market value of their farms, which constitute permanent security.

3. That this bill exempts shipowners from the payment of all Federal taxes, provided the amount which would otherwise be payable as taxes is invested or set aside for investment in new ship construction.

4. That it is not even claimed by the proponents of this bill that the people will obtain any cheaper ocean freight rates, and that the bill does not pretend to provide for any sort of regulation of such rates; on the other hand, Chairman Lasker at the hearings called attention to the fact that, by reason of the provision authorizing a deduction from net income taxes of 5 per cent of the freight paid on goods imported or exported in American vessels, an importer or exporter could afford to pay 4 per cent more for the carriage of his goods on American vessels than they would be carried for on foreign vessels and still save 1 per cent.

5. That this bill authorizes the Shipping Board to make contracts for the payment of subsidies for a period of 10 years from the date of making contract, this being admittedly for the purpose of preventing a repeal of the act by subsequent Congresses.

6. That, instead of the Shipping Board coming to Congress each year for necessary appropriations to carry out the provisions of the bill, as all other departments of the Government are required to do, this bill is so framed as to avoid this, it directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to the merchant marine fund certain receipts, and "all moneys in the fund are hereby permanently appropriated for the purpose of making such payments" of voyage subsidies "upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the board."

7. That this bill confers upon the Shipping Board the most autocratic and unprecedented powers with respect to selling ships, making loans, making subsidy contracts, and handling enormous sums of money ever conferred upon any board, and yet the Shipping Board is feverishly employing every conceivable means to obtain such powers and opportunities.

8. That this bill does not require the Shipping Board to make any report or accounting to the President, to the Congress, or anybody else at any time.

9. That most of the American steamship lines which are seeking and would receive the subsidies and other aids maintain an unnecessarily large force of high-paid executives, their salaries running as high as $100,000 a year, not only greater than the salary of the President of the United States but out of all proportion to salaries paid in any other industry, especially considering the size and the amounts invested in the enterprises. The Seager Steamship Co. is a leading American line, organized in 1907 and having operated American-flag ships to various European ports in the sharpest competition in the world; John C. Seager, sr., the president of the company, is said to be the oldest and one of the most highly esteemed shipping men in New York. John C. Seager, jr., the vice president and treasurer of the company, in a recent interview published in the Nautical Gazette, declared:

"Steamships purchased at the present time can be operated at a profit; foreign owners are not losing money, and there is no reason why an American owner can not make a profit with his ships. The most potent factor militating against the successful operation of American ships is the large overhead, which is incurred by the payment of large salaries to unnecessary executives. With few exceptions in Britain, there are no large salaries paid to steamship men in Europe, and if this example were followed in this country the balance sheets of the industry would make a better showing."

10. That this bill authorizes the granting of subsidies and all other aids to the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and other large concerns which own and operate their own ships in the transportation of their own products and does not require them to operate their ships in whole or in part as common carriers.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] in his remarks has taken up a question that I think will be answered at a later date in the House by Members in favor of the subsidy bill. We deny, in the first place, that our ships are worth $200,000,000 or less. We deny also that it is going to cost $75,000,000 a year for a subsidy. We also deny that the additional expenditure of money has anything to do with the present ships. It is for additional ships, to build up the merchant marine and balance out, as they call it, our fleet, so that we may have ships of all kinds to carry our goods.

But I do not wish to speak on that subject to-day. I wish to speak now about the letter that I sent out concerning the Suez Canal rules. That letter was written in my office, with the vice president of the American Bureau of Shipping in my room, with the rules issued by the Suez Canal Co. in his hand. The American Bureau of Shipping was not, no matter what the circular says which the gentleman is going to put in the RECORD, included in the list for recognition of their survey of oil vessels which would be allowed to go through the Suez Canal. One week after sending the letter to the House—and the statement was put in the newspapers—the Suez Canal authorities met and included the American Bureau of Shipping in their list of recognized authorities for survey of ships going through the canal, realizing the fact that they had made an error, as I presume. But it was the action of that letter and the action in the newspapers that brought about the result by which a French corporation in which the British Government has a controlling financial interest, upon whose board of directors they have a very large representation, took the action I have mentioned. The reason I sent that letter out was that it meant that our oil ships could not go through the Suez Canal unless surveyed by foreign associations.

It was evidently done intentionally, because they included the German bureau, the British bureau, and the French bureau, but they did not include the American bureau. Therefore, no matter what statement is made on the floor, I am perfectly prepared to prove at any time to the House of Representatives and to the people of this country that there was a discrimination against American ships in the Suez Canal rules when they were issued, and we have the rules to show you.

Now, I want to go a little more into this question of British discrimination, which the gentleman from Tennessee denies. We all remember that just recently the American consul to Newcastle was reprimanded by the British Government and we were asked to withdraw him as a person not acceptable by that Government, the reason being that he asked some shippers over there to ship coal in American ships. The gentleman well knows, if he has studied this question, as does every other man who has studied the shipping question, that all over the world British consuls are not only British consuls but they represent British commercial companies. They represent British shipping companies. They represent Lloyds registry. They represent the London Salvage Co. They do not all represent all of these concerns, but in some places you will find one representing one concern or two concerns, and in another place another representing some other concern. The consular agents of Great Britain are the commercial agents of that nation all over the world, and England should not take exception to an American consul desiring to assist the American merchant marine. It is an outrage and a shame that such a thing should have occurred.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRENNAN] has introduced a resolution to modify the eighteenth amendment, commonly known as the prohibition amendment. This is perhaps a movement, though slight, in the right direction; but if it were possible to adopt the amendment proposed by him, the principle which underlies the objection to this amendment still remains.

I contend that the eighteenth amendment was an invasion of the State rights and the usurpation by the Federal Government of functions reserved and guaranteed to the States under the Constitution. It does not express the will of a majority of the people of the country, and was adopted at a time and in a manner which was unwarranted and unjust. Even the amendment would not have been quite so bad in practice, nor offended the people to such degree, if Congress had only carried out the provisions of the amendment.

The amendment provided against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and yet Congress passed over the veto of a Democratic President what is known as the Volstead Act, the terms and provisions of which are so drastic that it has raised the ire of those who believe in the liberty and freedom of the people. The effect has been the wholesale violation of its provisions and the tendency to disregard all laws and its enforcement seems impossible.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Did I understand my friend to say that his constituents are opposed to the enforcement of the law?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I say they are in favor of the repeal of the law. My people live under the Constitution and whatever is in the Constitution they want carried out, but they believe that the Volstead Act ought to be absolutely repealed.

As I was about to say, crime, drunkenness, bootleggers, and stills infest the country. The prohibition enforcement officers have been found to be absolutely inadequate to meet the situation, despite the fact they are spending millions of the people's money. I have voted against the amendment and Volstead Act at all times; I should be happy to vote for their repeal. In the meantime, in order to give relief to the situation and liberty to the people, I would vote for an amendment to the Volstead Act which would permit light wines and beer.

I have always maintained this position. In my speech on December 22, 1914, on the Hobson resolution proposing an amendment prohibiting manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, I said:

"I do not believe the liquor question can be solved by an amendment to the Constitution, which could be adopted by a minority of the people of the land through legislative bodies. In the adoption of the constitutional amendment each State, through its legislation, has the same power; for instance, the State of Delaware, with its 203,000 people, would have the same power of adoption of this amendment as would the State of New York, with its 8,000,000. Ten States of the Union—a majority of the people—might vote against the adoption and yet the balance of the States could adopt it.

"Thousands of Federal employees will be necessary for its enforcement, expense unlimited, and trouble and annoyance untold.

"Shall we so far forget the past as to approve an amendment which in its power and inquisitorial nature is a close parallel to the force bill?

"You can never enforce a law of this character unless you have public sentiment behind you. You can never legislate people good; they must be trained and educated so.

"I prefer to leave the solution to the people of the States and of those localities which desire it. Let good men, above reproach, who have the confidence of the community, be intrusted with the execution of the liquor laws, and with public sentiment back of them, upholding and aiding in the work, we will get the best results.

"The State of Maryland and its people should be foremost among the guardians of our Constitution. It is a noteworthy incident that it was the Maryland-Virgina convention which met at Annapolis which called the convention to meet in Philadelphia in 1787, at which convention the present Federal Constitution was discussed, framed, and finally adopted.

"The convention of Maryland by resolution ratified the Constitution by a vote of 63 to 11, upon the plain understanding and obligation that the amendments proposed by Governor Hancock and Samuel Adams, of Massachusetts, and Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, should be ratified by the States thereafter. The great Marylander, Luther Martin, had laid his views before the convention and before the people of Maryland.

"In that day and generation Maryland had no thought of abandoning her sovereign function to control her domestic affairs. There were a little over 3,000,000 of people in the United States, and Maryland did not then think that these people could be controlled from a consolidated and centralized government at the National Capital. And now, when our population is 100,000,000 of people, she does not believe that her domestic concerns can be better regulated or controlled from Washington City.

"Therefore, standing squarely upon Jeffersonian principles and against the Hamiltonian idea of a central government, cherishing the ancient faith of democracy, I still believe as Maryland did at that date, and as one of her Representatives shall cast my vote against the repudiation of all that her forefathers held dear when the Constitution was fashioned and established."

Mr. Speaker, the principles which I have enunciated in my few remarks to-day and on the Hobson amendment I have conscientiously shown in my voting since becoming a Member of this House, nearly 12 years ago. My record as shown by my votes is as follows:

December 22, 1914: Voted against the Hobson resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States against the sale of liquor.

February 28, 1917: Voted against the passage of a bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia.

December 17, 1917: Voted against constitutional amendment for prohibition.

May 23, 1918: Voted against so-called Randall amendment, which prohibited the expenditure by the President of an appropriation for a food survey unless a proclamation authorized by section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, shall be issued by the President, which would restrict the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes.

"July 22, 1919: Voted against the passage of the Volstead Enforcement Act.

March 4, 1920: Voted to recommit the legislative appropriation bill in order to repeal the Volstead Enforcement Act on and after July 1, 1920.

February 26, 1921: Voted against motion to increase the appropriation by $400,000 for the enforcement of prohibition.

June 27, 1921: Voted against the bill which prohibited the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and in that extension to place some excerpts from a former speech in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to insert certain extracts in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article from the Journal of Clinical Medicine on the subject of the opium traffic.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the opium traffic by inserting an article from the Journal of Clinical Medicine. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., September 18, 1922.

Hon. J. WILL TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The September number of the American Journal of Clinical Medicine (Chicago, Ill.), a copy of which I have to-day mailed you, contains an article by Dr. H. E. Goetz, of this city, on "The problem of opium addiction," which I regard as one of the best articles on this important subject that I have ever read.

He shows plainly and conclusively the failure of the law as it now stands to control the opium traffic and points out what seems to me to be the only rational way by which this gigantic traffic can be checked.

Not only is the article interesting in this regard, but the opium addict is placed in his true light before the medical profession and the public.

Doctor Goetz is a pioneer in this work and speaks with authority. His article has commanded the attention of the editor of this great medical journal, who has called attention to Doctor Goetz's article in a page editoral in the same issue. I understand, also, that the Literary Digest has already asked permission to reprint the article in full—more than five pages.

Now, since this subject is one which should interest the lawmakers and since Doctor Goetz's article is so pregnant with fact, I hope, after reading the same, you will read it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am sure that the editor of the medical journal referred to would recommend such a step. It has interested me so much that I have written the Journal a commendatory criticism of same.

Trusting that you will concur with my judgment in this matter and thus give the lawmakers the benefit of Doctor Goetz's experience as well as giving other readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an opportunity to see this proposition in the true light, I am,

Your friend,

HENRY F. ALEXANDER, M. D.

THE PROBLEM OF THE OPIUM ADDICT.

(By H. E. Goetz, M. D., Knoxville, Tenn.)

The Harrision antinarcotic law may well be termed the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde of Federal statutes in so far as it is supposed to control the employment of narcotic drugs for other than legitimate medicinal purposes and to bring about a reduction in the number of what is termed drug addicts. It has taken away dispensing privileges from the medical profession and has placed them in the hands of illegitimate drug venders. It is not alone my purpose to criticize this statute, but to point out why it has failed and why the addict fails to obtain permanent relief from his malady under the operation of this law.

During 12 years of active work with these patients it has been my fortune to observe that surely the harvest is plenty and the laborers are few.

It seems that there yet remain some in the ranks of the medical profession who deny that drug addiction is a disease and who consider it a vicious habit only, placing the addict in the class of the moral derelict. His demand for the drug is believed to be but a desire to satisfy a perverted craving, and it is asserted that he might purge himself of this craving as easily as one would of the use of tobacco. This erroneous conception seemingly arises from the fact that one does not readily appreciate the various pathological aspects of the problem.

What is disease? According to Lippincott's Dictionary of Medicine it is "any departure from the state of health, presenting well-marked symptoms and having a definite character." That being so, it must be asked whether opiumism, or drug addiction, presents well-marked symptoms of a definite character.

Consider a patient, an addict, not in balance; that is to say, deprived of his regular allowance of opium. He appears before us with rapid heart action, thready pulse, irregular respiration, yawning, sneezing, complaining of great weakness, pain in limbs, chilliness, and goose flesh, pallor, restlessness, diarrhea, vomiting, loss of appetite, widely dilated pupils, excessive lacrimation, and insomnia.

The same patient, while in drug balance, presents contracted pupils, heart action usually accelerated 10 beats, respiration normal, taking food at irregular hours and scantily, constipated to a degree that makes necessary strong purgatives daily, urine scanty and high colored, with high specific gravity. The blood pressure is commonly low; 80 to 110 systolic, unless some complicating factor raises it higher. Emaciation is usual; yet some patients appear to be well nourished. The liver is contracted; there is lack of energy and strength; also loss of will power. Some patients complain of impotence; nearly all state loss of libido; cessation of the menstrual flow is observed in more than 80 per cent of the female addicts.

HEREDITY A FACTOR.

I have heretofore called attention to a family who came under my observation and in which there was a direct transmission of the disease from mother to son, in utero, and in turn by the son's wife, she being an addict also. In the children born in this second generation, I witnessed the phenomena that are usually present in adults before the infants were a week old. Now, if my position (that opiumism is a disease with a well-marked and constantly-appearing symptomatology and well-defined pathology) is not well taken, then how can we explain the crying of an infant, excessive lacrimation, sneezing, restlessness, refusal to nurse, and the pallor, all of which promptly disappear when a dose of morphine is administered, to reappear in a few hours and again disappear when more morphine is given? These infants were but a few days old and certainly too young to reason. How can we explain the tolerance to one-half grain doses of morphine in an infant but a few hours old?

Again, my experiments with dogs and chickens prove conclusively that there can be no mistake in my premise.

It would seem, therefore, that debate is not necessary, and that opiumism surely is a disease within the meaning of the term.

Then the question arises: Why should it be expected that the addict could rid himself of the disease without proper medical attention? Surely this much is not expected of any other class of sick persons. Nor is any other sick person thrown in jail to receive "cold turkey" instead of medical attention.

OPIUM ADDICTION A PSYCHOPATHY.

Let us consider seriously why and how the disease is incurred. The seed of the trouble is sown in the preceding generations; that is, the psychopath is born, the nervous and mentally unfit goes forth to battle without proper armor. An accident occurs resulting in bodily injury, or a surgical operation is necessary, or some prolonged illness, perhaps painful in character, all of which make necessary the use of narcotics to sustain or save life. The drunkard finds a relief more swiftly and certainly if narcotics are employed following an acute debauch. He resorts to this remedy in the future without the aid of his physician via the "bootlegger" route. How frequently have we observed two patients suffering the same type of illness receiving narcotics. To one it brought only passing relief and to the other joy. The first represented the normal type and the latter obviously the psychopath.

There exists an underground world of addicts, no doubt, who actually take up the use of narcotics and encourage others to do so from a mere desire to get the "kick" which had been lauded to them by vendors of drug. However, in my opinion, this class represents but a small minority.

It is apparent that any drug or agent which will produce brain stimulation has a seductive action on the human economy. Opium has a direct action on these cells of the cerebrum that preside over intellectual action. Wood says: "Some of the world's most famous writings have been produced under its influence." Further, it appears to stimulate those tissues that have to do with the imagination. The higher up the scale of intellect we reach, the less amount of drug is necessary to give effect, while the low type (spinal type) will take great quantities without marked effect on the intellect.

This stimulation disappears in many after the disease is well established, giving way to the sluggish brain action seen in overstimulation, and a fear not unlike that found in anxiety neurosis.

We have observed some patients, using the small quantity of one-eighth grain of morphine twice daily, as helpless to rid themselves of its influence as one taking many times that much.

Mrs. U., the wife of a West Virginia coal miner, actually consumed by mouth three 54-grain doses a day, and an attempt at reduction produced the usual symptoms observed in withdrawal.

Here we have both types. The one getting the necessary action to make life livable on one-fourth grain daily, while the other actually used 162 grains in the same period, which is a ratio of 648 to 1.

The seductive action is most marked in the psychopath, for we have noted asthmatics taking relatively large doses of morphine daily for a period of a week or more, and when the attack abates leave off the narcotic until the attack reappears, sometimes after a period of weeks, to resume the use and repeat the procedure for years, yet they never present the symptoms of addiction. On the other hand, a few doses administered under like circumstances in other persons awaken within the brain a demand which, if encouraged in the least, leads to disaster.

ADDICTS NOT ALL CRIMINALS.

Why are addicts usually termed "criminals"? We have seen the phenomena that appear when the daily dose of an accustomed narcotic is lessened or cut off. All drug addicts are subject to fear, an awful fear, of something worse than death overtaking them when once their panacea for all ills is denied them or about to be denied them.

Up to the time the patient begins to find it difficult to obtain the usual supply he or she is, generally speaking, normal morally.

To lie is a wrong to him, to steal a disgrace unthought of, to resort to any dishonesty a crime. But once the "shoe pinches" he will lie and steal to obtain his drug which is his life.

I have never known one to commit murder, though it is generally believed that they do; never have I known them to even strike another nor to commit rape, even in the criminal class. It is the general opinion that there is no crime too low for their hands. Self-preservation prompts them to steal and lie. Society is responsible for their pitiable plight. It is asserted to be a disgrace to be addicted to drugs. That is the first mistake made by society. If society is in the right, then it is a disgrace to be born unfit, nervously, to face the problems of life. It is a disgrace, even a crime, for any man or woman to knowingly take up the use of narcotics for their intoxicating effect, but (as I have said), in my opinion, only a small per cent of the whole addict population acquire the disease that way.

Owing to this "disgrace," the poor unfit is forced to secrecy. He lies to hide this disgrace. Is he to blame for shielding himself?

In my daily association with these people I have found them as honorable as the average in their equal rank socially.

However, everyone is acquainted with the criminal addicts; these are the ones best known to the public. There is a criminal element in the ranks of the "addict" that would be criminals in the church or in the Masonic fraternity or elsewhere, and the courts of justice should make searching investigations into the indictments brought against physicians or others for alleged violations of the narcotic drug act when the charges are based on the testimony of this element. Give any one of them into my hands for 48 hours, and I can make him swear in any court, with a good face, too, that he had just witnessed the battleship Maine riding at anchor at the corner of State and Adams with Washington at the helm, "Bob" Evans lashed in the rigging and Woodrow Wilson in the hold stoking. A promise of a continuation of drug or a threat to discontinue it is sufficient. Many physicians in the United States have been dealt with on just such unreliable evidence.

FROM ALL WALKS OF LIFE.

I have found many and various people in the ranks of addicts. The medical profession contributes a large per cent, next the legal profession, and a large per cent of the whole comes from the ministry. These people freely admit that, if the emergency had arisen, they would have lied to shield themselves or to procure drugs. It would seem that there is no question that the demand for the drug stands first in intensity; hunger for food or thirst for water taking second and third rank.

I offer as proof of this the following: A charitable society brought to my attention a widow with three children under 10 years of age, all dependent on a boy 14 years old for their support. She would not only sell the food from her own mouth, but would rob her starving children of the scanty supply provided by the older boy in order to obtain her dose of morphine.

THE REMEDY.

Now that we have fixed in our minds the status, so to speak, of the addict and have placed him in the true light, the question is paramount: What shall we do to relieve the situation and to cure the unfortunate addict? On various occasions I have tried to point out that the mere stopping of the drug does not constitute a cure, even though it may be continued for a period of months. It must be remembered that there yet exists the underlying pathology of the nervous system and the awakened demand for a brain stimulant. This must be reckoned with.

In the case of an addict coming under my care a few months ago with the following history this feature is aptly illustrated:

C. D., age 47, syphilitic, with alcoholic ambliopia; addicted for 24 years.

"I was committed to the Federal prison at Atlanta on the — day of —, 1918, for selling narcotics. I had pleaded guilty to the charge at the suggestion of the members of my family, and was given a sentence of two and a half years by a well-meaning and kind-hearted judge, who stated to me as he sentenced me that he was giving me a long sentence hoping that I would be cured while in prison. He knew that I had served one previous term of 12 months in the same prison a few years back. When I was granted my liberty a little over two years afterwards I had been 'off drug' for two years and more. I shall never forget the day I walked out of the prison. There had been some changes made at the gate since my incarceration, and in my blindness I staggered down the steps and breathed the air of freedom once more.

"But my first thought was, where can I obtain morphine? Strange, is it not? The old craving was there, and with the $5 the Government had given me I made off for the first drug store I could think of. After a time I got track of a peddler, obtained a few cubes of the sulphate, and with a hypo needle fastened to an eye dropper I managed to get a dose under my hide. I felt that freedom, indeed, is a precious thing.

"I took the next train home, 180 miles away, where I soon found the usual source of supply awaiting me, and you know the rest of the story."

It has been several months since we discharged this patient. This time, no doubt, the results have been of a permanent nature.

PRISON CURES USELESS.

I have had the privilege of questioning most of the patients confined from this vicinity as to the results of their stay in prison. Save one, all report that they resorted to drugs immediately after liberation. It is apparent that the gradual reduction of the daily dose is noncurative, as well as nonsense. Well might we argue that if these patients could be thus cured one afflicted with tuberculosis of the pulmonary type could also be cured by daily reducing the number of coughs. I have yet to see one single case where a permanent cure of addiction has been effected by reducing dosage.

The addict most frequently selects this method, feeling that he will not be "cut off" and allowed to "kick it out." But he seldom reached the final reduction until about the day he is to be discharged, and then, of course, he finds excuse enough for his return to the drug.

Yet, according to Treasury Decision No. 2200, we are allowed to proceed with these cases only by "gradually reducing doses." It is evident that the commissioner was not well advised when this ruling was made. Not only is the method a failure but it admits of no progress whatever. The physician who would investigate, who would like to develop a rational treatment, is precluded from doing so for fear of transgressing this ruling, which would mean the loss of his good name and liberty. No doubt this ruling came about as the result of ignorance, and it should be brought to the attention of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who surely would correct it. At the time it was put in effect, Commissioner Osbern was the active head of the Keely Institute, at Greensboro, N. C., and his institution advertised "Gradual reduction and hyoscine knockout" as the methods of treatment used there. He was empowered by the statute to use his judgment in putting the law into effect, and doubtless he believed that "gradual reduction" was the proper thing, since his own institution used it and approved it.

It is monstrous that Congress should become medical dictator. Never before has a lawmaking body attempted to direct the method by which physicians should treat any disease.

Up to the time of the passage of the act (December 17, 1913) few physicians had even taken the time to make the slightest investigation into this world evil. Little was known of it in this country or in any other for that matter. The drug taker could, and did, supply himself without the aid of the physician. If he desired treatment, he usually went to some quack institution where a secret cure was given, and the busy physician (for lack of knowledge) termed him a "doper," passing him up on a laity diagnosis as hopeless.

Gradual reduction was then presumed to be a cure. It sounded rational. De Quincy, being the only authority on the subject, gave the impetus necessary to cause Congress to endow a layman with the authority to say to the profession "treat addicts by gradual reduction methods only" and further to make such rulings from time to time, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury as he saw fit, to put the law into effect, and that these rulings should automatically become a part of the law thus endowing the commissioner with as much power as both Congress and the President combined possess.

If any medical authority has been consulted before these rulings were made, it is not apparent.

Gradual reduction of dosage produces restlessness, insomnia, diarrhea (mild at first, and later severe), loss of appetite for food, leg pains, and sneezing; in fact, all the symptoms seen in the usual case of withdrawal of drug. The demand for drug is daily increased until the patient stops the treatment, unless restrained by confinement, and if carried to termination, its use is resumed on the first opportunity. Therefore, we conclude that the discontinuation or gradual-reduction method is not a cure.

Neither are any of the delirifacients, atropine, hysocine, and their kindred, of value in the treatment. It is hard to imagine why these agents have heretofore been so freely resorted to in the face of overwhelming evidence of failure. Common judgment would seemingly preclude their use. Delirifacients to counteract brain stimulants!

TREATMENT MUST BE PERSONAL.

In the treatment of these cases, it is first necessary to get on intimate friendly terms with your patient. To instill in him the belief that you will not permit him to suffer either for the lack of morphine or for kind and sympathetic treatment. This is necessary in order that the fear referred to heretofore may be abated. Once this confidence is established further control of the patient is easily accomplished. His quarters in the institution should be suited to his station in life. He should be made to feel at home, in fact. He should regard his nurse as his guardian and not as his guard, his physician as his guide, his advisor, and his friend. He should be given a sufficient amount of morphine to completely appease his requirements; in fact, to make him comfortable in so far as morphine will do so. His food should be wholesome and attractively served. His conversation with other patients of the same type should be confined to other subjects than narcotics. This can be accomplished by properly trained nurses without offense to the patient. He should be encouraged and led, never driven.

The morphine should be continued from day to day until confidence is established, keeping in mind that the best results can not be attained unless the patient is in balance when the final dose is to be given.

In the vast majority of cases, it will never be necessary to place the patient in bed during the treatment for his addiction.

Insomnia and nervousness we have admirably controlled with the use of barbiturin, grains 2, every four hours. Leg pains never appear and no sneezing is observed. The patient eats and gains flesh, he enjoys daily outdoor recreations, and is never allowed to lose sight of the fact that he is regarded as any other sick person, and that he is receiving the individual care and attention that a sick person is entitled to and the sympathy that his condition deserves.

His peculiar nervous affliction should be sought out and receive attention, proper remedies being administered. Finally, a discharge should never be granted until one week or more has elapsed after the final dose of any sort of medicine has been administered, thus assuring the patient that he has not been "propped up" by some temporary stimulant, to fall as soon as he is left on his own resources.

PROPHYLACTIC MEASURES.

How shall we combat this evil for the future? How shall we proceed to stop the continued growth of this disease?

First, we must breed a better and more stable race. The psychopath should be recognized before adolescence. School inspectors should seek out children belonging to this class and report all to proper authority, so that their families may be put on guard. Proper treatment will thus be assured in many cases before disaster overtakes them.

Next, an all-important step is demanded. Few people in this country know the real source of opium more than in a general way. Opium is grown in India and under the supervision of the English Government. There one can get land rent free and borrow money interest free from the British opium department if wishing to engage in opium growing. Also the assurance is given that the Government will purchase the entire crop at prevailing prices at maturity. I know of no other article of commerce in the world where so much inducement is offered to the producer. The opium department also supervises the growing of the crop and experts give advice freely to the grower, in order to insure the greatest production at the least cost.

One is not long kept in darkness as to why this encouragement if the yearbook of the British Government is consulted. We find that 51 per cent of the gross tax of the entire colonial possession is derived from opium. We further read in the same publication that "opium has been used as a household remedy in India for centuries." Further on it is recommended as such a remedy. This opium is, after harvest, packed in chests and collected in the various centers, Bombay and other cities, where yearly auctions are conducted and the world's supply of opium is sold.

The histories of the various opium wars indicate the startling fact that England has forced this traffic upon China for years. When China wished to purge herself of the evil, nearly a hundred years ago, she met British opposition and finally yielded, after years of bloody wars, paying England large indemnities in both land and money.

The excess of opium production is stated to be about one hundred times the necessary amount to supply the legitimate calls of medicine for it. This excess is wherein the trouble lies. After the sale of opium in India, it finds its way everywhere. China still gets her part despite the treaties.

Congress recently aimed to cut off this illegitimate surplus by enacting a law which prohibits either import or export of opium except through the Treasury Department. This is a good law, but it will serve only to advance the price of opium and its products, and the smuggling will go on so long as there is an excess grown. The opium ring, like the liquor ring, will operate. British possessions are at our very door. The advanced price will bring it in.

The paramount problem to settle is that of supply.

I hope that the public will eventually come to see the addict in his true light; to understand him as the most unfortunate of all sick persons. Scorned by society, a slave to his affliction, he is in prison every day within himself. And before passing final judgment on him, in our ignorance, it would be in place to remember the words of the Great Physician, "I was sick and in prison, and ye visited Me, and, so oft as ye do it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye do it unto Me."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the calendar of motions to discharge committees the bill (H. R. 264) providing an additional judge for the district of Arizona, that legislation having been enacted as a part of the Walsh Act, providing for the appointment of additional Federal judges, approved September 14, 1922, Public law No. 298.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to strike from the calendar the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to lay on the table the bill (H. R. 11074), Union Calendar No. 373, to authorize Federal farm loans on lands under United States reclamation projects. The exact language of that bill was enacted as the final section of the Raker Act, to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, approved May 15, 1922, Public law No. 219.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to lay on the table the bill indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico may address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, it is only to comply with a public duty that I again raise my voice to protest against the continuance of E. Mont Reily as Governor of Porto Rico. We have no other course to follow. We have repeatedly appealed to the administration without any results, and our patience is entirely exhausted. In presenting our charges against this governor, appointed by a Republican President, we asked for the most impartial investigation by a Republican Congress and a Republican administration. No higher tribunal can be called upon. If innocent, Reily was entitled to a public exoneration; if guilty, we were entitled to his removal. But our claim has not been heeded, and it seems that there is no justice for a helpless people. The continuance of Reily in Porto Rico is undermining the faith that we always have had in America. As our protests have been unheard, we appeal as a last resort to the American people and the American press, asking for their assistance in this struggle for justice and a square deal. Porto Rico can not tolerate Reily, because Reily is morally and mentally unfit for the position he fills; because he is disrupting the insular service by removing from office men of the highest type—honest, intelligent, respected and admired by everybody—and replacing them in some instances by men notoriously unfit. The situation in Porto Rico to-day is worse than ever, and business is seriously handicapped because public works and improvements are, in general, neglected and falling into a critical condition.

On the day before yesterday I joined a commission to visit President Harding to present to him a memorial of friendship from the people of Porto Rico. That is the real sentiment of the people of my island. They love this country. They have confidence in the American people. They were made citizens of the United States by the Congress of the United States and expect to be treated as such. Now, gentlemen, are you going to allow 1,300,000 American citizens to be treated in the way that the people of Porto Rico have been treated under the administration of E. Mont Reily? Are you going to allow the confidence that the people of Porto Rico have in this country to be destroyed? Are you going to break faith with your fellow citizens of Porto Rico? Are you going to allow a dishonest man to remain governor of the island? When I say that he is dishonest it is because I am convinced of that fact. When I say that he is corrupting the public service in the island it is because I have the honest conviction that he is doing that destructive work. We are merely asking for an investigation. Are you going to refuse it? Is there no justice for the people of Porto Rico? We want the people of America to know what is happening in my country, and the only way to find out the truth is by an impartial investigation of the affairs of the island under Reily's administration. I think that we are entitled to be heard. The American people are not going to deny a forum to the people of Porto Rico. It is not fair to hear only one side of the controversy.

I have the greatest respect and admiration for the present incumbent of the White House, and God knows that I hate to be placed in the position of attacking one of his appointees, but I have to perform my duty and to respond to the call of my own conscience. The President of the United States has been imposed upon by Reily and is not aware of the real conditions of the island. He seems not to understand my attitude, but I expect that at a no distant day he will recognize that I was right and that Reily was not entitled to the confidence which has been placed in him. I have confidence in the sense of justice of President Harding and am sure that he would not delay doing justice to my country if he were acquainted with our real situation.

I was told by reliable authorities that the President would not act as long as Reily was being attacked and I was advised to keep quiet, as this was the best way to obtain the recall of the governor. I followed this advice, and I have been silent for nearly four months without saying a word, in spite of the continuous blunders and aggressions committed by Reily in Porto Rico, and without any regard to the propaganda he is launching here in some newspapers. I recommended my people to be patient, and after four months of silence I do not see any sign of relief.

After the removal of the district attorney charged with the investigation of Reily for misuse of public funds, he appointed in his place Mr. R. Arrillaga. This officer has been made a victim by Governor Reily. An exoneration of the governor signed by him was published in the American newspapers before it was known in Porto Rico. I have information that the exoneration was written by the governor himself, and we do not know yet if it carries the signature of the district attorney. Before this exoneration was published the governor showed it to prominent people in Porto Rico without the signature of the district attorney, and later it was printed in the press. This district attorney who appears authorizing this exoneration, after it was published here and before it reached Porto Rico, appeared before the district court of San Juan and declared under oath that he had not carefully read the record against the governor and had not been able to reach a conclusion in the case. This is a matter of record.

The attorney general, in view of the attitude of District Attorney Arrillaga in favor of the governor, transferred him to another district, and the governor immediately set aside the order of the attorney general. The case was taken to the court, and the supreme court held that while the attorney general was acting within his power in ordering the transfer of District Attorney Arrillaga, the governor had authority to rescind the order, but the opinion written by Chief Justice Toro is a serious reflection on the governor's policy. Chief Justice Toro says:

I can not conceal that the facts under which this case originated, the motives that might have actuated a governor menaced by a grand jury indictment to prevent a certain district attorney from being eliminated from the conduct of the case, the manner in which the order of the governor was drawn, the person to whom it was addressed, the date on which it was issued, the helpless position in which for the time being an official was placed who alleges his desire to perform his duty and asked for the protection of the court, if his intention is honest, have constantly agitated my conscience during the consideration of this case and have kept me hesitating about the ultimate attitude I should assume. But after careful meditation I am convinced that the only proper solution is the one stated above, to wit: That the writ of mandamus asked for shall not be granted.

The conflict involved, the abnormal situation which the records show, ought to be decided by the duly constituted executive power of the Government. The chief of this power is the President of the Republic. To do justice is not an exclusive attribute of the courts, and it is to be expected with entire confidence that the President will do justice in this case.

Judge Foote, of the district court of San Juan, ordered the attorney general to deliver the record of the investigation against Reily to District Attorney Arrillaga. The supreme court set aside the order of Judge Foote against the attorney general. After these two cases were decided a cable was sent to the United States stating that the supreme court had upheld Governor Reily in his controversy against the Unionist attorney general. This cable, which does not convey the truth, was sent to the States from the governor's palace.

From a letter written from Porto Rico to a friend of mine I quote the following:

I suppose that you are anxious to hear about the developments of the political situation. Things are worse now than they were three months ago. The latest news is that the governor has commissioned Mr. Huyke to call on Mr. Slaca Pacheco, executive secretary; also Treasurer Benedicto, and Mr. Almiroty, secretary of the Public Service Commission, and request from them their resignation. All of these three men are gentlemen of the highest type, honest, intelligent, respected, and admired by everyone in our community. I understand that they will refuse to tender their resignations and we expect that the governor will remove them summarily. Yesterday was another day of excitement. The governor sent for District Attorney Quinones, of the district of Guayama, and told the district attorney that he was calling him as a friend and not as the governor to inform him that the attorney general had very serious charges to present against him, which might result in his removal from office unless he resigned beforehand. The district attorney then tendered his resignation in writing to the governor and immediately went to the attorney general's office, where the attorney general informed him that it was not true that he had any charges, stating that he had never said a word to the governor about Quinones. The district attorney naturally got very angry and went back to the governor's office and in the presence of his secretary and several persons within hearing told the governor that he was a "damn liar," and that if he did not return to him the resignation that he had extorted from him there was going to be trouble, and I believe that he let the governor see that he had the revolver that he has a right to carry as prosecuting attorney. The governor got afraid and handed him the paper, which Mr. Quinones tore to pieces and threw in the governor's face.

The Porto Ricans are the most peaceable people in the world. They are obedient to law and order and have always honored and respected all the executives that have been sent to the island. Reily is the only executive who has lost the respect of the people. Honest and decent men are always respected by the people; dishonest and corrupt men are not entitled to any respect. The good name of the United States is being desecrated in Porto Rico. Reily is unworthy of representing the United States, because he is a repudiation of all that this great Republic stands for.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to add as part of my remarks two documents directly bearing on this controversy between the people of Porto Rico and the governor, which have recently been forwarded to me from the island.

The first is a copy of the letter forwarded by Hon. Martin Travieso to the governor in tendering his resignation as chairman of the Mediation and Conciliation Commission. There is no name more widely known nor more highly honored in Porto Rico than that of Mr. Travieso, and his reputation as a man of high principles and great ability is also widely recognized in continental United States.

For this reason what Mr. Travieso has to say regarding the course that has been followed by Governor Reily can not fail to make a profound impression upon all right-thinking people who investigate the case.

The other document is a tribute from the Porto Rican newspaper La Democracia to Judge Jesse W. Bonner, the upright and irreproachable continental American who was removed from office at the behest of Reily. Such treatment meted out to an old and faithful servant has filled the people of the island with a feeling of disgust and contempt for the governor.

The letter from Mr. Travieso is as follows:

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO, September 7, 1922.

Hon. E. MONT REILY,
Governor of Porto Rico, San Juan, P. R.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have just received your letter of yesterday in reference to my resignation as president of the Mediation and Conciliation Commission.

With the purpose that you may complete the files of your office I sent you yesterday copies of my letter of resignation and of your letter acknowledging receipt of mine. You will see by my letter the reasons that I originally had to send you my resignation from the office with which you honored me.

You are very kind to say in your letter to which I refer that you would prefer me to remain in the office of president of the commission, and that you would also wish me to withdraw my resignation until the next session of the legislature.

I appreciate very much your kindness, but I am sorry to say that I must insist in the acceptance of my resignation and that I be relieved of giving more services.

My resolution is based not only on the original reasons—that is, lack of funds to duly carry out the purpose of the law and the inefficiency of the same—but also on other additional reasons that I will explain with my usual frankness.

Since 1906 I have filled the offices of prosecuting attorney, member of the executive council, executive secretary of Porto Rico, acting governor, member of the Dominican Claims Commission, and senator at large, from all of which I retired either by voluntary resignation, promotion, or by the abolition of the office. From none was I dismissed or my resignation asked. For this reason I consider my record as a public official a perfectly clean one.

At the beginning of your administration and for some time afterwards I tried to help you in everything possible, so that you might have an exact idea of our situation and obtain a perfect knowledge of our men in public life.

I told you clearly by word of mouth and in writing that I did not have personal interests to defend; that I did not want anything for myself, for my relatives, or friends; and that my only interest in offering you my cooperation was to help you to strengthen the ties of friendship between my country and our great American Nation.

All my efforts were made in vain because you had determined to follow the advice of men that were in no condition to put you in touch with the real heart of Porto Rico, for one of them is a social outcast and the other a renegade. In spite of all this our personal relations were always friendly.

Your advisers on one side, and some persons on the other, who are not your friends or mine, taking advantage of my absence in the United States and of your credulity, were successful in making you believe that I had attacked you personally while in Washington. And following your custom of believing everything you hear and of punishing men without previously hearing them, you stated on different occasions to friends of mine that I had double-crossed you, which expression is inapplicable to the truth because I never was either your associate nor the receiver of your confidence.

Before sailing for the United States I visited you and when you asked me if it was my intention to see the President, I answered in the affirmative. And when you asked what I was going to say to the President I told you that I was going to discuss with him your politics and your activities as governor, but that I would not descend to make attacks of a personal character, and, loyal to my word, I discussed your politics and activities and expressed to the President and others the same opinion that I have always expressed to you, to wit, that I consider that your politics as well as your activities are injuring the good name of the United States, are in conflict with the principles of American democracy, and destructive of the ties of love and affection which unite the people of the island with the people of the continent, and which were created as the result of the uninterested and patriotic work of many good continental Americans and many good Porto Ricans, belonging to all parties, during the last 23 years.

It is true that you have removed from office men who should never have been appointed or that should have been dismissed before. For such move I congratulated you at the time. But I can not congratulate you or back you up when you remove from office honorable and respectable men who have rendered efficient, loyal, and patriotic services without any excuse or justification and merely as a punishment for their political opinion. Your action might have been excusable if the vacancies should have been filled with men equally qualified, in which case it would have been said that although your attitude was unjust no injury was done to the public service and no impairment to the capacity of the public servants.

What you have done to others you may do to me as soon as it would occur to anyone of your competent advisers to ask of you as a reward my head as president of the Mediation and Conciliation Commission. Then my record, which I have tried to keep clean, would appear stained by a removal without reasons and without being heard.

Besides, Governor, I want to keep my personal liberty so that I may think as I please about what is happening here and in other places, without exposing myself to a punishment for expressing my opinion freely. And you know that under the system you have established even the frankness which I use in writing this letter might be perhaps sufficient cause for my removal.

I expect that you will understand that it is not my purpose in writing so frankly either to criticize nor to irritate you in any way but merely to submit to you in a clear manner the reasons why I consider it much better and prudent to remain out.

Very respectfully yours, MARTIN TRAVIESO.

The article from La Democracia is as follows:

VENGEANCE.

As the country well knows, the Hon. Jesse W. Bonner, the respectable official who for many years was auditor of Porto Rico, ceased in said office to make room for Mr. W. L. Kessinger, one of the many who came from Kansas City with the governor.

Judge Bonner held the office of auditor for a long term of years with the hearty indorsement of the entire island, which always saw in him a zealous, honest, and efficient officer. And as in addition to his competence in matters of finance Judge Bonner also possessed clear judgment as a lawyer, his opinions were always accepted as of great worth and were respected by all. His work as a member of the executive council was of the most intelligent and efficient kind, since the reasonable logic of his irrefutable and well-authorized arguments was prominent in all cases, and good faith was the seal which his immaculate honesty in all matters impressed on all his acts.

When Governor Reily obtained Mr. Kessinger's appointment as Judge Bonner's successor and realized the enormous injustice committed, he himself got Treasurer Benedicto to appoint Judge Bonner as accountant in the office of the public service commissioner and bank examiner. But later on, when Judge Bonner told the truth to the grand jury investigating the Reily charges, the latter directed Treasurer Benedicto to remove Judge Bonner. Said order of removal was not carried out, because Mr. Benedicto evaded the conflict with great ability until the governor spoke to him no more about the matter.

But Governor Reily had not forgotten Judge Bonner, as he never forgets those he picks out as the object of his mean vengeance. So when he decided to get rid of Treasurer Benedicto, one of the first conditions imposed by him on Mr. Benedicto's successor was the removal of Judge Bonner. This removal has just been ordered by the new treasurer of Porto Rico under pretext that the good and honest continental American is now old and can not perform his duties.

In the deed itself there is nothing strange, accustomed as we are to things of this and of a worse nature since the executive mansion has been occupied by the fatal and ignorant governor we suffer.

Moreover, Judge Bonner's removal has been expected by everybody ever since he honestly told the grand jury the truth of what had taken place as to the governor and the public funds of which he illegally and abusively disposed.

The trouble was that the governor lacked the willing instrument he has now found.

In falling, Judge Bonner may rest assured that the entire island of Porto Rico is pained over the injustice done him. He has been a good friend of the country and may enjoy the satisfaction of not being one of the glorious adventurers of which El Tiempo speaks.

Judge Bonner controlled and investigated many millions of dollars, and is to-day a poor man—so poor, indeed, that perhaps he may not have enough in his old age to keep him to the end of life's journey.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 438.

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed by the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. OLDFIELD.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes on a matter which I think interests the membership.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, there appeared in the Washington Post this morning what purported to be an interview with me regarding the question of public buildings and other matters. That interview was substantially correct. It was written by one of the best newspaper men in the country, Mr. Harry N. Price. It was written from memory, because the interview took place in the lobby of a hotel. It contains one or two inaccuracies that I want to explain. The impression was left by that interview that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has an omnibus public building bill now ready to report. That statement is not correct. What I did say was that we are securing and have secured a number of reports, and as rapidly as the officials of the Treasury Department can make reports on individual bills introduced they are making them. The other statement that we would report such a bill at the extra session was also incorrect. What I did say was that at the December session, if I can bring it about, there will be an omnibus public buildings bill reported to this House. [Applause.] I think I am not violating any confidence when I tell you that within the past 15 minutes the Postmaster General has called me up and approved of what I have said in this interview so far as public-building legislation is concerned and that he wishes to cooperate with our committee in furthering that sort of legislation. I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say also that the officials of the Treasury Department feel the same way about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I noticed some time ago that the Postmaster General had very earnestly urged a public-building program. I got the impression that he would favor buildings of a cheaper type than we have been accustomed to construct in the past; in other words, he would not favor what we call monumental buildings. I may say that if that is his idea I think he is quite right about it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think he is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What will be the policy of the gentleman's committee in that regard in so far as the gentleman can give it?

Mr. LANGLEY. Speaking only for myself, because the committee has not decided anything, my idea about that is that we ought not to have unnecessarily ornate buildings; they ought to be in keeping with the buildings in the city in which they are built. But I do think that we ought to have substantial buildings. I think we ought to have some standardization of these buildings, so that, instead of making plans and specifications for each individual building, cities of a certain size should have a certain type of building, and some plan adopted to hurry up their construction, so that they can at least be constructed within the lifetime of the man who secures the appropriation. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think that this idea of side-stepping Members of Congress and making contracts with private individuals to build colossal buildings in big cities and leave the smaller cities out is wrong, and if I can prevent it it shall not happen. I think the time has arrived when we should construct buildings all over the country where they are needed.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I notice in the article referred to a statement that it is the purpose of the committee to authorize the abandoning of the Government hotels occupied by the employees of the Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is not entirely correct. The Public Buildings Commission, of which I am a member, has absolute authority to do as it pleases, and no action of Congress is necessary. Personally, I think there is no excuse on earth for favoring a few hundred Government clerks when there are thousands who have to look out for themselves. We can use those buildings—they are permanent—and house in them these parts of bureaus that are all over the city, paying exorbitant rent, and save from $150,000 to $200,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Kentucky one minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have not had an opportunity to read the gentleman's interview, but what I want to ask is if this prospective program includes constructing additional Government buildings in Washington City on land that the Government has heretofore acquired for this purpose?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think we ought to stop this real-estate profiteering. We have acres and acres of land already owned by the Government in Washington, and we ought to use that. We ought to have an archives building erected on Government land, and we ought not to be buying a lot of real estate and spending money when we have plenty of land upon which to erect buildings. [Applause.]

MARIE DOUGHTY GORGAS.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3300, an act to grant a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas, reported from the Committee on Pensions, this being pension day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he ought to state in this connection that he has been requested by numerous Members for recognition to bring up bills by unanimous consent, and he has told them that he has no authority to do that. The Chair ought to point out this distinction. To-day is Friday, when bills on the Private Calendar are in order. Of course, this bill can only be taken up out of order by unanimous consent, and the Chair therefore submits the request of the gentleman from Minnesota for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

S. 3300. An act granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, there is one particular matter about this bill that establishes a precedent if it passes. Will the gentleman grant me 10 minutes' time to oppose it?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not know what time will be given for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If unanimous consent is given, the gentleman would be recognized for one hour, unless he moves the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will give me that time, I will not object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman going to speak on the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3300) granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marie Doughty Gorgas, widow of William Crawford Gorgas, late a major general in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $150 per month in lieu of any pension or compensation to which she might otherwise be entitled, in special recognition of the eminent services of said William Crawford Gorgas in the eradication of yellow fever from the island of Cuba and the Isthmus of Panama.

The SPEAKER. The Chair for a moment forgot that this bill was to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Does the gentleman from Minnesota wish it considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I am opposed to pensions for this amount, but I felt that the Pension Committee of the House, in view of the very great service rendered by the late Major General Gorgas in freeing the island of Cuba and the Isthmus of Panama from yellow fever, could do nothing less than confer this act of simple justice and report this measure out for $150 a month. I can say for the benefit of the House that if General Gorgas had been a British or French subject and had rendered equally conspicuous service to either of those countries he undoubtedly would have been given on retirement a grant in cash of anywhere from $50,000 to $150,000 in a lump sum.

It would not have been possible for this country to have constructed the Panama Canal but for the services of General Gorgas. The French tried it and failed, owing to the inroads made on the workmen by the yellow fever. General Gorgas within a year after having been made chief sanitary officer of the Canal Zone had entirely freed the Isthmus of yellow fever and by his work saved hundreds and thousands of lives.

I may say, further, to the House that there are ample precedents for granting a pension of this amount. Mrs. Walter Reed, whose husband definitely determined that yellow fever was caused by mosquito bites, is drawing a pension of $150 a month, as are four or five widows of men who worked with Maj. Walter Reed at the time he was conducting the investigation. So it seemed to your committee that it would be no more than fair to place Mrs. Gorgas upon an equal footing.

In fact, I think there is not a man who has ever been connected with the medical service in the Army who has rendered greater service than did Major General Gorgas. His service extended from June 15, 1880, to December, 1918, 38 years, and we feel that such service ought to be recognized in a substantial manner.

Mr. LANGLEY. What is the amount of the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. One hundred and fifty dollars a month.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I knew General Gorgas and his family very well and concur in all that he has said. I was down there in 1910 when he was in the early stages of his work in the extermination of the mosquito.

He did a great work, and I heartily concur in all that the gentleman from Minnesota has said in his praise and wish that the amount could be made larger.

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that General Gorgas left practically no estate?

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true.

Mr. OLIVER. He gave his service freely at all times, and his death probably was hastened by his zeal and work in the interest of humanity.

Mr. KNUTSON. The statement of the gentleman from Alabama is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me amplify the remark of the gentleman from Alabama. General Gorgas served this country for 38 years. He rendered service which earned for him not only the recognition of South American countries but a number of European countries, and had he been in private practice, I am sure he would have left a large estate.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman can state to the House also that Reed, Lazear, Farrel, and Gorgas made it not only possible to build the Panama Canal and stamp out yellow fever but made it possible to prevent yellow fever from entering the United States in the future.

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely. I am very glad the gentleman from Louisiana made that statement.

Prior to the work conducted by General Gorgas the Gulf coast was visited at intervals by yellow-fever outbreaks, and if my information is correct there has not been an outbreak of yellow fever in any of the Gulf States since 1904. Look at it any way you wish, it is a very small reward for the magnificent service rendered by General Gorgas to his country.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

Mr. LONDON. And the Congress is called upon to deal with an exceptional case of an exceptional man?

Mr. KNUTSON. I agree with the gentleman, absolutely.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is it not a fact that Congress has established a precedent by passing legislation to take care of wives of men who lost their lives in just such services?

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And this case is very similar to those other cases?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is on all fours with the case of Mrs. Walter Reed and some of the other cases where widows are receiving pensions under similar circumstances. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, no one has greater respect, admiration, and gratitude than I have for the distinguished work performed by General Gorgas. No one appreciates more the service that he has rendered to our country. But I want to call attention to the legislation that was brought before this House granting insurance to service men during the war. It provided that upon the death of a private his widow should receive $2,000 insurance, where it was taken out, but upon the death of a general, where insurance was taken out, the wife should receive as high as $17,000. My distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK] took the position that when a man gave his life to his country that is as much as any man can give, and that the widow of the private should receive the same amount as the widow of a general where her husband was killed in battle. And our colleague [Mr. BLACK] so amended it. I want to say that ought to keep my colleague [Mr. BLACK] in Congress for 25 years, if he wants to stay here that long, because the House backed him up on his proposition, and when it passed his amendment the law provided that insurance granted to men in the service should not discriminate in favor of officers, so that when a private lost his life in the service his widow should receive as much as $10,000 without regard to rank or station. Now, I take it that under this precedent the widow of a private who gave his life in France has just as much right to look to this Government for $150 a month as the distinguished widow of the distinguished General Gorgas. I am not minimizing his great service, but I want to say that the widow of a private has lost just as much when her husband dies as the widow of a general.

Mr. McSWAIN. I wish to remind the gentleman that we passed a bill giving to Mrs. N. May Jernigan, the widow of a private who gave his life, $125 a month, the same amount that was allowed to the widow of Dr. Walter Reed.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield longer, because I have only five minutes. That was the widow of only one private. There are thousands of others who are drawing only about $25 per month.

Mr. KNUTSON. We will get an extension of time for the gentleman. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] should be permitted to ask his question. That ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. That ought to and will go into the RECORD; but I want to say this, that there are privates who gave their lives in France in the service of their country whose wives to-day are not yet drawing a single cent from this Government, and there are numerous other widows of privates who are drawing only $25 per month. They are in destitute circumstances, and they have little children dependent upon them for support. They are not receiving the $61 per month, because, forsooth, their husbands did not take out the insurance and pay the premiums.

The widows whose husbands did take out insurance, and who paid the premium regularly on their insurance policies, widows who are destitute and have little children dependent upon them, are receiving only about $61 per month, and that is only for a limited number of years. I want to say that I am not minimizing the great service rendered by General Gorgas. I will go as far as anyone to emphasize and applaud that service. We ought to do justice to his widow, but at the same time we ought to do just as much for the widow of every brave private soldier who has given his life in the service of his country. I would vote to-day for this bill if at the same time it gave to every other soldier's widow the same amount. I would vote for it gladly. I am only voicing my protest and my view that we should treat them all alike. We should overlook rank and everything else and remember that the worthy private is entitled to just as much consideration as a major general. [Applause.]

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has intimated that the Committee on Pensions draws a distinction between the widows of high officers and the widows of privates. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that this Congress and this committee favorably acted upon a bill granting a pension of $150 a month to the widow of a Mr. Jernigan who served with Dr. Walter Reed in his experiments on yellow fever and who died as the result of that service. When the gentleman from Texas says that he knows of instances where a number of widows with children and dependents, widows of men who died in France, are not receiving compensation from the Government, I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not receiving a pension of more than $25.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, yes; they are receiving a pension of $60.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to pass the bill, we had better pass it promptly in order to give time for its enrollment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNUTSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
PARK TRAMMELL,
F. R. GOODING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amendment of the Senate numbered 1 defines that the word "employee" shall include enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

The amendment numbered 2 makes the settlement of claims retroactive to April 6, 1917.

G. W. EDMONDS,
JAMES P. GLYNN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to insist on the adoption of the conference report at this time?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so. I do not know of any reason for not doing that. The bill has passed the House, and the only thing remaining is to take action on certain Senate amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill was fought here on the floor from time to time, was it not? Under the provisions of this bill thousands and thousands of dollars may be paid out without any adjudication whatever except by a subclerk.

Mr. EDMONDS. No. The gentleman is mistaken entirely. This bill requires that the department shall make a report to the Committee on Appropriations for an appropriation. The committee does not have to appropriate the money.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. But when it does that it is a subclerk in the department, after all, who adjudicates the question. It is not adjudicated by a tribunal, and thousands and thousands of dollars could be paid out with no legal adjudication at all.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman knows as well as I do that the Committee on Appropriations will adjudicate them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if objection is to be made, it will save time to make it now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askeli;

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels; and

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to notify the President of the United States that the two Houses having completed the business of the present session are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

PERMISSION TO THE CITY OF CHICAGO TO ACQUIRE REAL ESTATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration, out of order, of the bill H. R. 11579, on the Private Calendar; and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute and explain why I make this request.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is absolutely impossible to get that bill enrolled in time for signature before the hour of adjournment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I have one minute in which to tell the gentleman about it?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, we passed a bill in January authorizing the condemnation of a strip of land in Chicago for widening a street. In the bill the real estate was misdescribed. This bill does nothing but correct the description of the real estate. If we pass it now, we can get it passed quickly through the Senate when we come back. It is an emergency proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11579) to amend section 1 of an act approved January 11, 1922, entitled "An act to permit the city of Chicago to acquire real estate of the United States of America."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved January 11, 1922, entitled "An act to permit the city of Chicago to acquire real estate of the United States of America," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That in consideration of the payment by the city of Chicago to the United States of America of the just compensation and damages for real estate hereinafter described, as ascertained by a jury in proceedings to condemn real estate, the city of Chicago is hereby authorized to acquire for street purposes, by condemnation proceedings, all interest of the United States of America in and to the following described real estate, viz:

"The west 17 feet, or any part thereof, of the east 50 feet (except the south 149 feet and except the north 33 feet) of the south quarter of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 30, township 38 north, range 14 east of the third principal meridian, situated in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, and State of Illinois."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "estate," insert the words "of the United States of America."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I want to be altogether fair with the House. I said there was no change whatever in the bill. I overlooked the fact that this authorizes taking less than 17 feet, to which there can not possibly be any objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHINDBLOM, a motion to consider the vote, whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Porto Rico asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Department of Justice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Department of Justice, I respectfully submit the following:

The numerous administrative problems which have come within our observation and called for wisest counsel in the Government during the past year bring to our attention the magnitude of the responsibility which rests upon the Department of Justice in the enforcement of the law and the defense and preservation of the best interests of the United States. That great department, with its network of courts and officials throughout the Nation, maintains its responsibility to protect our people, from the highest down to the humblest citizen. The firm and unwavering manner in which that department has pursued its painstaking but persistent course in the prosecution of wrong and the protection of the best interests of the law-abiding people in our country during this aftermath of the greatest war in all history must command the admiration of every thoughtful citizen in the land. To do justice to all requires care, courage, and deliberation. Justice and haste can not abide together. Personal opinions will always differ amonk those who are unacquainted with the stage of preparation of the various cases, the status of the evidence, and the merits and relative importance of the cases, but even a layman will appreciate the danger of trying to precipitate erratic or hasty action in any Government litigation which demands the care, deliberation, and best judgment of the officials of the Department of Justice.

I admire the great courage and ability with which my good friend Harry M. Daugherty, the Attorney General, has championed the cause of the Government and the people and successfully met the issues. The innumerable civil and criminal actions, antitrust prosecutions, Government claims involving millions, war fraud cases, and great industrial issues which have come before his department have been handled persistently, firmly, and in a judicious manner for the protection and preservation of the best interests of the American people.

It is evident from the recent press accounts that great progress has been made in the war frauds prosecutions by the Department of Justice, and that those alleged to be guilty of gigantic war frauds are being singled out and indictments returned against them. The most recent indictment returned in this connection by the Federal grand jury appears to be in the famous Old Hickory case, involving the fraudulent sale of that $80,000,000 powder plant.

I am gratified to note from the newspaper accounts that Maj. Heber H. Rice, special assistant to the Attorney General, an ex-service man, has been given much credit for the results in this case. The Attorney General is to be congratulated upon surrounding himself with such able and efficient attorneys in the prosecution of this important work. I assume that Major Rice is one of the $10,000 salaried men under the recent war frauds appropriation, and if such is not the case am confident that the Attorney General will unhesitatingly place him upon that basis in view of his valuable services to the Government. It is but natural that I should take an especial pride in the fact that Major Rice is not only one of my close friends but is a scion of one of the most distinguished families of the mountains of Kentucky whose friendship I have been proud to claim all my life.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of interest to the statement by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] a few minutes ago, when he stated there would probably be a public buildings bill that would take out of the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars, and in that same connection he said that for the purpose of saving a few dollars they perhaps would transfer the Government hotels to some other department and turn out perhaps 2,000 women employees of the Government who are here away from their homes. I want to say that in the short time I have been here, day in and day out, the real-estate people and landlords of this District and of this city have made a continuous effort to take away from these girls, who are down there in these Government hotels, the little pittance that is being given by the United States. I want to go further, and say that so long as I have been here, and so long as the record has been made, not one breath of suspicion has ever been brought against any woman who has lived down there. They are as sweet and pure and chaste as any on earth, and I testify here to their character. Not one single thing has ever been brought against the management of these hotels except that they take away from a lot of profiteering landlords of this city opportunity to mulct a few girls, who are working away from home, out of what they earn. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Not now. I am going to say further that of these 2,000 women many of them not getting $900 a year. I watched them last year during the cold of winter, and I saw them thinly clad going about their daily work [laughter] with nobody on the face of the earth who cared a thing about them. Oh, yes; I presume it is a thing to be laughed about, because they have not the pull of the profiteers, but somewhere a father and mother loves them and grieves that we make merry over their misfortune. [Applause.] But I want to say to the gentleman now that I have not the power to keep him from passing a bill that will take away from these women this little privilege which they have of living down where they are safe from those who might prey on them and where they are a long way from home and parents. But they made $45,000 per year profit to the Government last year.

Mr. LANGLEY. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I said nothing against the women in the Government hotels. I have no doubt they are as good and no better than thousands of others who do not have that privilege. Now I wish to say that it does not require a bill. I did not say it did.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I understand the gentleman did not say it required a bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes. Now, if the gentleman does not want a public building in his district, to be included in our bill, the gentleman can just say so and we will leave him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I had rather give protection and a decent place to live to the girls who come from my State than to get a public building in every township in my district. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I do not want anybody to think I said the gentleman reflected upon these women. The thing I said was that he was in favor of giving the landlords the right to rent to these girls rooms at a high price. I want to say to him that I can not interfere with his building program, because he has a majority that intends to put it through, but I do want to say to him, in order that nobody may misunderstand it—and it is not a threat—that the day these 2,000 girls who came here to make an honest living in the employment of the Government are turned out of these Government hotels for the purpose of giving the landlords of this city who have 2,000 rooms to rent the right to charge them a high and unreasonable rent, then that day unanimous consent for the next two years is abolished in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman simply exaggerates and misunderstands the situation. There is no issue between us as to the facts. It is a question of fair dealing and equal and exact justice to all. The gentleman, unintentionally, of course, puts me in a false light. I am trying to block the game of these real estate profiteers by cutting off the exorbitant rentals they are soaking the Government for. That is the point. They are not trying and will not try to profiteer off of these clerks with meager salaries who will want to rent rooms. These outrageous rentals of buildings to the Government is where the profiteering really occurs. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let me say to my distinguished friend from Arkansas what I undertook to say a moment ago. All I said was that I did not think the Government ought to be in the hotel business. I say that I have as much respect for the women in the plaza buildings, and as much admiration for them, whether richly clad or thinly clad, as I have for the remainder of the women in the Government service. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; because the gentleman declined to yield to me, although he had more time than I have. I will say I am a Jeffersonian Democrat to the extent that I believe in equal and exact justice to all and exclusive privileges to none. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman think that having passed this tariff bill which now goes into effect, they will be more thinly clad in the future than they have ever been before?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think the gentleman believes that such will be the effect of the tariff bill. The question of cost of apparel is a matter of taste and styles rather than of tariff.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the anticipated deficit in the Treasury, as recited by the President in his veto message.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the anticipated deficit in the Treasury. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in his message vetoing the bonus bill, President Harding stated:

The latest Budget figures for the current fiscal year show an estimated deficit of more than $650,000,000, and a further deficit for the year succeeding, even after counting upon all interest collections on foreign indebtedness which the Government is likely to receive.

This declaration confirms the statements repeatedly made by Democratic members of the Appropriations Committee familiar with the commitments of the Government, that as a result of the extravagant appropriations of the present Congress the Treasury now faced a deficit of $650,000,000, and that several measures pending and certain of passage after the election, together with the deficiency appropriations to be made during the year, will increase this deficit to at least $850,000,000.

The President calls to the attention of the country in a most forcible manner that while professing economy this Congress through its extravagance has brought about the greatest deficit ever incurred by the Government in time of peace. He shows the unreliability of the statements made by the Republican congressional leaders as to the alleged economy of the present Congress.

He shows further the utter absurdity of the claim made by Republican leaders that under the administration of the Bureau of the Budget the receipts and expenditures of the Government have been made to balance, his statement indicating that the Government after the election must proceed to borrow from the people at least $675,000,000 to meet the ordinary operating expenses of the Government.

Disturbing as the statement is to the professional politicians who have been misleading the people as to the economy of this Congress, it is far more disturbing to the people. For a year they have sat down to breakfast with the comforting knowledge that the headlines of the morning newspapers would bring the glad intelligence that on the day previous the administration had saved many millions of dollars. The climax to the deception was the announcement on July 1 of a surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. This surplus, like the alleged savings, was of the paper variety. In April, 1922, the Bureau of the Budget announced that the deficit, which in December previous they had estimated at $24,000,000, would be increased to more than $200,000,000. The political effect was immediately apparent. The first year of the Harding administration, with a Budget Bureau in operation and a Congress professing economy, was to close with a deficit. With an election approaching this would be disastrous. So on July 1, to the surprise of all, except those familiar with the political juggling of figures during the past two years, the Treasury announced a surplus instead of a deficit of $200,000,000, stating it was due to increased sales of surplus war material and the fact that expenditures were "almost $200,000,000 less than the estimate given last December."

This reduction the Treasury will advise you upon inquiry was due to the fact that obligations of the Government which they expected to pay before June 30 were simply postponed until after that date, thus making possible before the election the announcement of a surplus, and, of course, increasing by $200,000.000 the deficit for the year ending July, 1923, now stated by the President to be $650,000,000. This enormous deficit for the current year has for months been predicted by Democratic members and denied by Republican members of the Appropriations Committee. And only now, when the effort to sustain the veto of the bonus bill has made it necessary for the administration to make known the facts, is the issue removed from doubt by the statement of the President that without further commitments the deficit will reach at least $650,000,000.

But there will be further commitments. The bill providing for the $5,000,000 loan to Liberia, urged by the administration, has passed the House and has been favorably reported to the Senate. The subsidy bill will be taken up at the extra session of Congress to be called immediately after the election, entailing an additional expenditure estimated all the way from $30,000,000 to $75,000.000. At least $50,000,000 more will be appropriated for roads. An omnibus public building bill has been promised by the Republican leaders for the session beginning in December. A bill has been passed authorizing a naval scrapping fund, which the Republican leader in charge of naval appropriations estimates will require $75,000.000. During the last fiscal year there were deficiency appropriations amounting to $200,000,000. It is fair to estimate an equal amount this year, especially in view of the fact that within 90 days after the beginning of the fiscal year we have already passed one deficiency bill appropriating several million dollars. So it is fair to estimate that before the close of the fiscal year the deficit will amount to at least $850,000,000.

In making these claims of reduction in appropriations Republican leaders have announced that the total appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 amounted to $4,066,316,366.74, and that for the fiscal year 1923 they amount to only $3,747,035,382.64. This is true, but misleading. The total for 1922 represents not only the appropriations made at the beginning of the year but all the appropriations made in deficiency bills and in special acts during the year, whereas the 1923 figures represent only the amount appropriated at the beginning of the year. The amount appropriated on the 1st of July, 1922, for the year ending June 30, 1923, is $95,872,535.37 more than was appropriated at the same time of the previous year, July 1, 1921, for expenses of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. When the total appropriations to be made this year are added to the amount appropriated at the beginning of the year it will make the total greatly exceed the total for the previous year.

The average Republican Congressman claims this Congress has been economical because it has appropriated less than was appropriated by a Democratic Congress in 1918 when we were engaged in the World War. Four years after the war their goal seems to be to reduce expenditures slightly below the amounts appropriated when the Nation was engaged in war. But the citizen wants a comparison of the announced direct appropriation for 1923 of $3,747,035,382.64, with the appropriations of the Democratic Congress for the last year prior to the war, 1916, when the amount appropriated, including all appropriations made during the year, was $1,115,004,194.55, or $2,632,031,188.09 less than this Congress has already appropriated for 1923.

In making such a comparison it is fair to deduct from the amount appropriated this year the interest on the war debt, approximately $1,000,000,000, which still leaves a difference of $1,600,000,000 more than was appropriated by a Democratic Congress for the last year prior to our entering the war.

Even these figures fail to give a true picture of the extravagance of the present Congress. In addition to the amount directly appropriated by the appropriation bills, bill after bill has contained legislative authority for the expenditure of unexpended balances, an indirect way of authorizing expenditures. For instance, in addition to the amount actually appropriated for the Navy Department there is a provision authorizing the Navy to spend an additional $54,000,000 out of certain unexpended balances in the Treasury. The amount is not included in the total announced by the Republican leaders, but it will come out of the Treasury. Similar expenditures are authorized in other bills, and while they make possible the claims of reduced appropriations the money is authorized to be spent, and such authorizations account in a measure for the wide variance in the claims of the congressional leaders of alleged savings and the statement of the President and of the Secretary of the Treasury that by reason of the authorizations of Congress the Treasury faces a huge deficit.

In considering the expenditures by the present Congress one must bear in mind that the Government has had for use an unlimited amount of supplies left over from the war which should have made possible reduced expenditures, and, again, the departments of the Government have been able to purchase supplies at lower prices than in the immediately preceding year.

Republicans claim great credit for having reduced the public debt during the fiscal year 1922 by $1,014,000,000. But in a much shorter period, to wit, from August, 1919, when the peak of the public debt was reached, to June 30, 1920, the end of that fiscal year, a Democratic administration reduced the debt by the sum of $2,297,380,180.

The Democratic Party has contended that the Government should balance its receipts and expenditures, but that it should be done by reducing expenditures, not by increasing taxation. If this Congress, in its extravagance was determined to authorize the expenditure of a sum $650,000,000 in excess of receipts, as declared by the President, it should have had the courage to follow the course suggested by the President with reference to the bonus bill and first provide the revenue to meet the expenditures. Congress failing to do so, the President should have refused to approve such appropriations. While authorizing expenditures which, according to the President, are $650,000,000 in excess of receipts, this Congress repealed the excess-profits tax, from which source the Treasury received $450,000,000 a year, reduced the surtaxes on higher incomes, and repealed many taxes affecting special interests. For instance, the manufacturers' tax upon chewing gum was one of the few taxes absorbed by the manufacturers and not paid by the consumer, the selling price of a package of gum having remained at 5 cents. Among those upon whom this tax was levied was Wrigley's Chewing Gum Co.

During the last campaign Mr. Wrigley placed at the disposal of the Republican Party his advertising agencies and display signs, and made substantial financial contributions to the campaign fund. It was a splendid investment. The Republican Congress promptly repealed the tax upon chewing gum. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1920 shows that in that year the tax upon chewing gum manufactured in Illinois amounted to $561,772.96. Mr. Wrigley is the one large manufacturer in the State, and it is fair to assume that of the total tax paid in the State he paid approximately a half million dollars. The repeal of the tax saved him this amount, and it was not surprising to learn from the press that at a recent meeting of Republican leaders called for the purpose of financing their campaign Mr. Wrigley announced he was no orator, but that "money talks" and subscribed $25,000 and expressed his willingness to give an additional $25,000 if needed. The facts indicate he ought to give a much larger sum, and he probably will.

The announcement is made that Congress will be called in extra session immediately after the election for the purpose of passing a bill granting a bonus or subsidy to the shipowners, a bill which could not be passed prior to the election. Consideration was postponed because of the disclosure that the administration had announced a new policy: That the Constitution follows the flag—to the 3-mile limit only. That beyond that limit the Government, through the United States Shipping Board, would continue to engage in the whisky business on ships flying the flag of the United States. Postponement was wise. The American people, regardless of their views on the subject of prohibition, will want to know of Republican Members of Congress why they appropriated money for certain employees to arrest a citizen found within the 3-mile limit with a quart of whisky in his possession and at the same time appropriated money for the Shipping Board to enable other employees of the Government to sell whisky on ships of the United States Shipping Board when beyond the 3-mile limit to those fortunate enough to enjoy the pleasures of European travel.

The announcement that the President will probably call an extra session immediately after the election indicates that he fears the result of the approaching election. He evidently believes that the people have determined to elect a Democratic House. His heart is set upon the passage of the ship subsidy bill. With justification he believes that the next House, with a Democratic majority, will not pass a bill granting a bonus to the shipowners and at the same time allow the Government, through the United States Shipping Board, to continue in the whisky business, as urged by Mr. Lasker. He therefore will call an extra session for the consideration of the subsidy bill by the present Congress after the election and before the consideration of appropriation bills absorbs the attention of the Congress.

But while the President is correct in believing that the subsidy bill will have more supporters in this Congress than it will have in any future Congress, he can rest assured that if the people intrust to the Democratic Party the control of the next House an efficient and wisely led Democratic majority will give to him in all matters promising to promote the welfare of the Nation and of its people much greater cooperation than has been accorded him by the present inefficient and leaderless Republican majority in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the legislation before Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the legislation before Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] have permission to extend his remarks upon the pension bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] have leave to extend his remarks on the pension bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Muscle Shoals.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of Muscle Shoals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, when Congress reconvenes I hope opportunity will then be given for the consideration of the question of leasing the Muscle Shoals properties to Henry Ford.

Let me express the hope that every Member of Congress will, between now and the time when Congress will reconvene, give this matter careful study, and that you will thoughtfully consider the will and desire of the people regarding the solution of the problem.

Needless for me to say, I am sorry that Congress has thus far failed to act upon the Ford proposal, but I hope the leaders in the House and the House steering committee will arrange to bring the matter up on the floor here just as soon as Congress reconvenes. Congress should, by all means, have opportunity to openly discuss and vote on the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals.

I believe every Member of the House who has indicated any interest in Muscle Shoals is in favor of giving attention at the earliest possible time to this proposition which is before this country and which is of such great importance to the entire Nation.

PEOPLE OF ALL CLASSES FAVOR CONTRACT WITH FORD.

The completion and development of the mammoth Muscle Shoals project is of really great importance to the whole country, not only to the South. You will find that the interest of the people in Muscle Shoals is not confined to any certain class of people or to any section or locality. You will find that interest is nation-wide and that people of every class and every walk of life want Congress to "let Henry Ford have Muscle Shoals."

The farmers of every agricultural section of the United States have told us in unmistakable terms that they are unanimous in favor of the approval of a contract with Henry Ford. The agricultural interests of the country have, through their organizations, made very careful and exhaustive investigations of the whole subject; they have gone thoroughly over all the properties and have studied the terms of the various proposals that have been made; their engineers and their experts have rendered detailed analytical reports which prove conclusively that the farmers of the whole country are indorsing the Ford proposal because of sound economic reasons and because of the advantages it offers the farmers and the public, and so the agricultural people and all those interested in their welfare and progress are especially concerned about the effort to put through the deal with Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals.

As for the southern farmers and as for the whole people of the entire South, I believe that it can be said in all fairness that practically the whole people of the South, except a comparatively few who are allied directly or indirectly with power interests, want Congress to make a trade with Henry Ford without further delay.

They believe that the big power, fertilizer, and aluminum interests are bringing evil influences to bear upon Congress to prevent its acceptance.

They are confident that with Ford in charge down there a great industrial center would be created at Muscle Shoals which would be of prodigious benefit to the territory.

They see in the Ford proposal the development of motor vehicles and motorized farm implements and the modernization of the South as an agricultural section. They believe also, of course, that such operations would benefit the entire country.

MORE AND CHEAPER FERTILIZER FOR THE FARMERS.

They believe that the approval of a contract with Henry Ford is the only chance for the production at Muscle Shoals of fertilizers for the farms of the United States, and they believe, furthermore, that Henry Ford would produce the fertilizer at the lowest possible cost, and that he would sell it to the farmers more cheaply than they can buy it to-day, and thus agriculture throughout the country will be benefited.

In the "Views of the minority," from the report of the Military Affairs Committee of the House—Report No. 1084—we find the following statement:

Moreover, the company—the Ford company—will be obligated to determine by research whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at a lower price than farmers in the past have been able to obtain; and if so found and determined, to reasonably employ such improved methods. It is confidently expected that the commercial fertilizer industry would be revolutionized and that farmers would be supplied with it in a concentrated form, without the approximately 1,700 pounds inert matter or filler in each ton of commercial fertilizer as now manufactured, and thus save the immense burden and cost of handling and transporting this filler, and, in addition, at a greatly reduced price. No less an authority than Mr. Thomas A. Edison has made the statement that fertilizers could be manufactured at Muscle Shoals at approximately one-half the present cost.

Let me say that we can not overlook or fail to recognize the weight and the importance of such testimony when offered by a man like Thomas A. Edison. That statement from Thomas A. Edison is evidence of convincing nature.

THE TRUSTS SEEK TO SPREAD POISONOUS PROPAGANDA AGAINST FORD.

The propagandists of the Fertilizer Trust, the Aluminum Trust, and the Power Trust have undertaken to poison the public mind by calling the Ford proposal "a fraud," and by saying the prospects for cheaper fertilizers for the farms of the country are "hollow promises." But the people are wise, and they have confidence in Henry Ford, and they have seen what that matchless wizard, Thomas Edison, has said about the possibilities for Ford to make cheaper fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, and so the people have not been fooled or turned aside by the propaganda which has been spread by the agents of the giant interests who are fighting to keep Henry Ford from gaining control at Muscle Shoals. The people have recognized in that propaganda the old trick of crying out "Stop thief" to deflect the attention of the public while the selfish special interests try to get away with the goods.

People of all classes want the Government to accept the Henry Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals because they believe that Henry Ford is a practical business man and manufacturer who has the money, the managerial brain, and the inclination to successfully operate a project of this magnitude and to really make it a great development; and because they know that Henry Ford will share prosperity and spread prosperity over the whole community by paying all employees of all classifications better and fairer wages than other interests would pay them; and also because they believe he will sell the products of the project—power, fertilizer, and any other products or by-products as may be put upon the market as a result of the development—at a fairer price to the consumer than some other interest would.

The people have faith in Ford's ability and preparedness to handle this tremendous work. They believe he will pay—not cheat—the Government, and they believe that Henry Ford will not exploit the consumer.

IF NOT FORD'S OFFER, THEN WHAT? GOVERNMENTAL OPERATION?

The Military Affairs Committee of the House in its report submitted by Mr. MCKENZIE, said:

Inasmuch as the committee decided that the Ford proposal was the only proposal worthy of serious consideration, and, for the sake of brevity, it is not deemed essential or necessary to take up space in this report in a discussion of the relative merits of the several proposals, but to confine the report to matters relevant and material to the Ford proposal.

So you see that the committee, after all of its deliberation, has said that the Ford proposal is the "only proposal worthy of serious consideration."

The only alternative is some sort of governmental operation.

Do the people of this country, including the great mass of farmers of the country, want any sort of governmental operation at Muscle Shoals?

Does Congress believe governmental operation would be more advantageous to the people and to the Government than to accept the Henry Ford proposal?

No, indeed, we well know that the answer to both those questions is emphatically negative.

As a Government project Muscle Shoals belongs to the people of the country. They have voiced their desire that the deal be put through with Ford. Of course, the people are within their right in presenting their urgent appeals to their Representatives, Senators, and others, and they will no doubt continue to present their appeals in their effort to have the deal consummated in accordance with the earnest desire of the people.

Let Congress have one chance to vote on it, and let us have that chance at the earliest possible time. I think Congress is ready to approve the contract with Henry Ford, and I earnestly hope that the floor leaders and the steering committee will not again block the way when Congress reconvenes.

WILL LEADERS IN CONGRESS IGNORE THE "PRAYER OF THE PEOPLE"?

Will Congress ignore the prayer of the people and yield to the powerful pressure of the influence of the Fertilizer Trust, Aluminum Trust, and power monopoly? I hope not. I hope Congress will be given the chance, as has been promised, to pass upon this question.

I regret exceedingly to see the adjournment of Congress now without action having been taken on this matter.

The failure to act rests entirely with the leaders of the political party now in power.

I hope and trust that we may look forward to Congress being given the opportunity to take action, as soon as Congress reconvenes, upon this proposition, which is of such really great importance to the whole United States.

When Congress does have that opportunity and has all the evidence presented, I fully believe that Congress will place its stamp of approval upon a contract between the Government and Henry Ford for the completion and most advantageous operation of the great Muscle Shoals project.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I will raise no controversial questions. One of the reasons I want to get the floor is to keep the Republicans and Democrats from unseemly disputes in the last moments of the expiring session. We will soon be face to face with more or less irritated constituencies. So far as the future is concerned, those of us who amount to something or think they do will be judged in accordance with the prevaricating proclivities of their respective historians. [Laughter.] I do not want to say anything that may arouse any dispute, nor is it possible now, 20 minutes before adjournment, to effect any legislation. What I do want to say in these few minutes is this:

One of the things upon which Congress has failed to act and upon which the President has failed to act is the amnesty resolution. That has been easy to forget because it involves a comparatively small number of persons. There have been several resolutions introduced in the House dealing with the subject of amnesty, and there has been a hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary. Petitions bearing millions of signatures have been submitted to the President. He has released some political offenders, but there are still many political prisoners who are in duress.

I wish to call your particular attention to a group who refuse to make application for clemency. They insist that they have been all their lives sincere devotees to principle; that they have been guilty of no crime except the advocacy of unpopular economic doctrines, and they feel that they would rather decay in jail than sign any petition which will involve a surrender of their principles.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. How many of them are there?

Mr. LONDON. I have seen what purports to be an open letter signed by 52 of them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. What is the offense with which they are charged?

Mr. LONDON. They are charged with a violation of a section of the espionage law; that section which deals with promoting insubordination in the Army. Of course it was by a violent construction of the statute that their conviction has been accomplished. Anything during the war could have been held to encourage insubordination. A reading of the ten commandments with an emphasis upon the injunction "Thou shalt not kill," would surely have been held to be a promotion of insubordination.

They have recently issued an open letter in the nature of an appeal in which they state their case. They state the interesting fact that of the 166 men who were indicted in Chicago in one of these cases, and many of whom are still in jail with something like 500 years imprisonment hanging over them, there were indicted three men who were dead at the time the alleged offense was committed; that two names in the indictment were fictitious; that three of the men were absent from the country; that they were indicted principally, if not solely, because they happened to belong to the I. W. W. It is also interesting to note that only one defendant eligible for military service failed to register.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact that some of these men that the gentleman is now speaking about were men who were indicted and convicted along with William Haywood, who is now in Russia?

Mr. LONDON. That may be so.

Mr. BLACK. Is not that the fact?

Mr. LONDON. Very likely so.

Mr. BLACK. And if a general amnesty resolution was passed through Congress it would mean the release of all these men without respect to a discrimination between individuals.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from Texas has really emphasized what I wanted to say.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from Texas has emphasized what I wanted to bring out. These men were indicted jointly with Haywood, and because Haywood was indicted jointly with them their cases are not receiving consideration. The administration fears that a review of their cases will inure to the benefit of Haywood. Haywood has a right to be Haywood. He has the right to be an American rebel, with an industrial philosophy of his own.

Mr. BLACK. The point I want to emphasize is that these men refuse to file individual applications for clemency and want the Congress to pass a sweeping resolution of amnesty that will release them all.

Mr. LONDON. I have not the slightest doubt that so far as that case is concerned Haywood has not been guilty of any crime. I would like to point out that the Government investigator, Major Lanier, wrote the President and told him that there was not a scintilla of evidence against any of these men, that they were convicted solely because of the hysteria of the war. As far as Haywood was connected with the case it only helped to prejudice the case against these men. And that was perhaps the principal reason for tying up Haywood with the case.

Now, I ask you if you can spare a few minutes before the elections to read the hearings and write to the President to urge him to act.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] has been talking about freeing a lot of people. I ask him if he wants them to be turned out of jail to go out into the cold, hard world up against the legislation that the Republican Congress has passed? [Laughter.] Is it possible that he wants these poor people to be turned out of jail to meet that awful situation? They are well fed now. If they are turned out they can not get a job and will face starvation under conditions that the Republican Party has brought about.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] yesterday shed tears as big as horse apples on the provisions of the Fordney tariff bill, and said that it would help the people that work on the farms and in industries and various vocations more than any bill ever passed by the Congress. The gentleman said it would help the farmer. He does not know what a farmer is if he believes that a bill that will reduce the prices of the farmer's products and make him pay three times or more for what he buys can be for his benefit.

That is not the only thing you have done. The boys who fought for their country, who went out in defense of the American flag, have had flaunted in their faces the assertion that they were commercial patriots, and the Republican Party, through the President and the Senate, have succeeded in killing the bonus or compensation bill for the ex-service men. Not content with that the Republican Party has said, through the messages from the White House and newspapers, that an extra session of Congress would be called in November after the election for the purpose of further depressing and robbing the people by passing the administration's ship subsidy bill.

Talk about achievement; you gentlemen on the Republican side are going to the American people at election in November with the infamous Daugherty injunction up against you. The big-interest newspapers proclaim that celebrated act of the Republican administration as a glorious achievement. In my judgment it is a burning shame on the Republican Party. Do you expect that the American railway laboring men who belong to the union, do you expect that the laboring people in any industry in this Republic, are going up to the polls with a good taste in their mouth for the Republican Party at the November election? Do you expect any laboring man or farmer to indorse the Republican tariff bill? Do you expect the preelection proclamation that Congress will be called in extra session so as to speed up the ship subsidy bill to further enrich the rich and oppress the poor to help you at the polls?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. QUIN. No; I can not yield; I can not give away a part of my time, I have so little. But I am asking questions that I want you to answer between now and the November elections. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I only want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. QUIN. No. You Republicans have the great newspapers that will go out and talk for you. You will have the speakers on the platform, and I am asking questions which I hope you will be able to answer in such a manner that you will give us a Democratic House and Democratic Senate for the benefit of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Just one question.

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield. Please do not bother me. It is plain and manifest that the great international bankers of Wall Street, who are reaching out into every corner of the United States, have approved this Republican administration. They approve of the fact that the Railroad Labor Board has been stacked against the poor men in the service of the railroads, who labor in the shops, on the tracks, on the engines, on the trains, and elsewhere to transport the products of this country. They approve of your tariff bill, which is for the benefit of the great and powerful, and they approve of the fact that you took off for their benefit the excess-profits tax and reduced the income tax, wherein you helped the rich and the powerful and at the same time you laid the tax burden on the backs of the poor people of this country. These great papers and organized capital you have at your backs, but will the people approve of it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. QUIN had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. QUIN. The same big interests which proclaim through the subsidized press of organized wealth that the Republican administration has accomplished wonders are determined to have the ship subsidy bill passed as soon as possible after the election in November. Is it possible that your administration is afraid to have you vote for that measure before November for fear that you would meet the wrath of an outraged constituency at the polls?

Those same instrumentalities of organized wealth that praise the infamous Esch-Cummins railroad bill, that robbed the people and gave a subsidy to the railroads, are praising President Harding and Attorney General Daugherty and the Republican Party for the "great" injunction against the poor workingmen in the shops of the railroad systems. These poor men, who had gone on a strike for their rights, under the well-defined provisions of the Clayton Antitrust Act, are told that they have no rights. The Democratic Party gave the labor unions and farmers' unions these specific rights in the Clayton Act, yet your administration, in the face of that wise and just legislation, gets out this sweeping Daugherty injunction.

Do the working men and women believe that they can get justice at the hands of the Republican Party? If they believe such a thing, they must in their hearts and minds indorse your legislation in taking the excessive profits tax off of the big corporations, trusts, and combines and reducing the income tax on the rich people and placing the taxes on the poor people.

Do the ex-service men, who saved the United States in the late war, believe that they can get justice for themselves from the Republican Party?

Do the farmers of the United States believe that they can get justice from the hands of the Republican Party?

Do the people who work for a living, both union and nonunion laboring people, believe that they can get justice from the hands of the Republican organization?

Do you believe that you can get wool at a goat's house?

The handiwork of this Republican administration shows it to be the instrumentality of big business. Do the majority of the voters in the United States favor this?

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the farmers in the hard wheat raising areas have never been in such a financial plight as at this time. Even during the panic of 1893 they were able to exist and pay their taxes. They can not do that this year. When the tax sale occurs this year in North Dakota there will be a list of sales very much longer than ever before.

HARD-WHEAT FARMERS HARD HIT.

Here are a number of letters in which the insolvency of the hard-wheat farmers is demonstrated, which I ask leave to print in the RECORD, for the information of House Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

YORK, N. DAK., August 26, 1922.

Hon. GEO. M. YOUNG,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: The farmers of the Northwest, especially to my own knowledge the farmers of North Dakota, are going to be up against it worse this year than they ever have been. Some of them had a little profit during war times and high prices, but this profit is all gone, and most of them are behind two years in taxes and interest. The tenant on the land has his personal property mortgage for close to what it is worth, and it is all getting old, and new stuff will have to be purchased by him if he continues to farm. There will be a great bunch of foreclosures, and the owner of land is helpless in protecting himself. There will be nothing left out of the crop this year to pay interest and taxes, and I am sending you a statement of a quarter just threshed out near here. This is an average income on a quarter of land this season around here, and a great many will not be near so good.

130 acres into crop, 30 acres pasture and hay land:
20 acres of oats, yield 20 bushels per acre, equals 400 bushels, at 18 cents	$72.00
30 acres of winter rye, yield 15 bushels per acre, equals 450 bushels, at 50 cents	225.00
80 acres of wheat, yield 13 bushels per acre, equals 1,040 bushels, at 70 cents	728.00
Total income	1,025.00
Expenses:
Threshing oats, 10 cents per bushel; wheat and rye, 15 cents per bushel	$229.80
Twine, 300 pounds, at 12 cents	36.00
Seed	170.00
Shocking	40.00
Taxes	160.00
Cost of plowing, $1.50 per acre	195.00
Cost of seeding, 50 cents per acre	65.00
Cost of cutting	195.00
Interest on real estate mortgage	200.00
Taxes	100.00
Total expense	1,300.80

The land on which this was raised is valued at $50 per acre. There is on an average a loan of $2,500 on each quarter, with an average rate of interest of 7 per cent, making $175 of an interest item to be paid. This brief statement does not take into account depreciation, insurance, and a number of other items of expense.

Now, it seems to me that something has to be done at once or the farmers are going bankrupt, and we are going to have no wheat to feed our people with. They surely can not go on this way, and it has always been the policy of our Government to try and meet a situation when it presents itself instead of looking forward and making preparations before the catastrophe happens. Again, the farmer has to save seed for another year, and I can not understand how he is going to do it at present prices. The question of how his family is going to exist for another year also is very important. This is a serious situation and must be remedied or we are going to have an awful thing happen to us in this country.

I shall be pleased to hear from you in this matter.

Yours very truly,

J. E. MCCARTHY.

MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK OF WIMBLEDON,
Wimbledon, N. Dak., August 30, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
United States Congressman,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: Does it lie within the power of Congress to do something for the wheat grower, for instance, fix the price of wheat?

This is the most important question confronting the general welfare of the Northwest to-day, and if there is any power resting in Congress to fix a price upon wheat that will give results at once—before this crop gets out of the farmers' hands—it should be used to that end.

Based upon the price of flour which is selling for $4.55 per hundred here wheat should be worth $1.50. The No. 1 Northern price is 88 cents. A large portion of the wheat is Durum, which the buyers will not classify as a milling wheat and pay us but 66 cents for here, yet it is all used in the flour we are eating every day.

The average yield of wheat is about 10 bushels per acre net. Owing to a heavy crop of straw threshing is done by the hour and expense is high per bushel.

Here is one concrete example which as about an average, and you can see what it is doing to the majority of the farmers:

Threshed, 1,400 bushels of wheat, of which he gets three-fourths, balance to landlord; 1,050 bushels at 66 cents	$693.00
Expense of threshing, 15 hours at $20	300.00
Expense of threshing oats and barley feed	120.00
Expense of twine	42.90
Seed lien	275.25
Shockers	48.00
Total expense	786.15

He has stock that needs the oats and barley and has none to sell, so he is at a loss on the year's operations in the amount of $93.15.

All the farmers are discouraged. The tenants will nearly all quit unless something is done in 60 days to put the price up so they can get $1 a bushel for Durum wheat. There will be an exodus from the State this fall unless some improvement takes place that will cripple many who have trusted these people, and the general condition will be made very bad.

This is no idle talk; such is the true condition in this part of the State to-day. It is probably better in many parts, but the fact remains that the price is too low to keep the farmer in the game, and they will quit by the hundreds if there is no improvement.

He who gets to work on this proposition and is instrumental in getting results in time to give relief in the price situation before the grain has passed out of the farmer's hands is going to be a big man with them. Perhaps it is beyond the power of Congress to do anything of the kind; I do not know; but would like to get your views as to the feasibility of the proposition.

Very truly,

C. E. BURGESS.

VALLEY CITY, N. DAK., September 2, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG.

DEAR FRIEND: Will drop you a few lines to thank you for the work you have done to bring about H. R. 12022.

But now the matter of our grain price, I will inclose slip of our local price—that is, on first-grade stuff—but the farmers do not get first grade on account color or gluten test or some little excuse. Now, you know as well as I do that on those prices the farmer can not exist, and when the farmers quit or go broke all other business is at a standstill. What they need now, that would bring prosperity back, is $1.75 per bushel for wheat at terminal, say Minneapolis, for us. I will not say any more; know you are familiar with our problems, and I only wish to call your attention to get such immediate action that we need to save the farmers, bankers, and business men.

Yours truly,

L. NOLTIMIER.

OAKES, N. DAK., September 7, 1922.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: I am writing this letter for the purpose of asking you if something can not be done to guarantee our farmers a fair price for their wheat, say, about $2 per bushel. The conditions in this part of the country are simply pitiful—both farmers and business men are facing certain ruin unless something is done, and done quickly.

With the present low price for wheat and the high cost of production people are unable to pay even the taxes on their land, not saying anything about the interest on the principal. If with this crop, the best in many years, the farmers are losing money, it means that no further attempt will be made to raise wheat; consequently a famine will be the result. It appears to me that legislation should be enacted which would assure those who produce the food to feed the nations at least a fair living.

During the war legislation was passed to protect the consumer—why not do the same thing now for the producer and save the people of the grain-growing States from becoming bankrupt and ruined?

The Northwest seems to be getting the worst of it, as Oklahoma, Nebraska, and Kansas have sold their soft wheat for 50 cents a bushel more than the farmers of the Northwest are getting for their good hard wheat. Is there no way that this injustice can be remedied? It seems to me that a fair uniform price for everybody could be established, and thus save the farms from being sold for taxes and from being lost through foreclosure.

I would appreciate very much hearing from you about this, and, thanking you, remain,

Yours very truly,

H. J. JOHNSON LAND & CATTLE CO.,
H. J. JOHNSON, Manager.

I call special attention to the letter of Mr. McCarthy in which he gives the proceeds of a quarter-section farm in North Dakota, 130 acres of which was in crop and 30 acres used for pasture and hay land. He credits as part of income $72 for oats, although without doubt these oats will be fed to his horses and not sold.

He also gives the items of expense and calls special attention to the fact that he has included nothing for depreciation, insurance, and a number of other items. Even without such additional expenditures this farmer is shown to have a deficit of $375, and is facing a long winter in a cold climate.

His statement is as follows:

INCOME.

20 acres of oats, yield 20 bushels to acre, equals 400 bushels, at 18 cents	$72.00
30 acres of winter rye, yield 15 bushels to acre, equals 450 bushels, at 50 cents	225.00
80 acres of wheat, yield 13 bushels to acre, equals 1,040 bushels, at 70 cents	728.00
Total income	1,025.00

EXPENSES.

Threshing oats, 10 cents per bushel; wheat and rye, 15 cents per bushel	$229.80
Twine, 300 pounds, at 12 cents	36.00
Seed	170.00
Shocking	40.00
Taxes	160.00
Cost of plowing, $1.50 per acre	195.00
Cost of seeding, 50 cents per acre	65.00
Cost of cutting	195.00
Interest on real estate mortgage	200.00
Taxes	100.00
Total expenses	1,300.80

It will be noticed that this farmer produced about 1,500 bushels of wheat and rye, which should have put him in comfortable shape rather than facing bankruptcy.

BUREAU OF MARKETS SHOULD BE TRANSFERRED.

Representatives from the Northwest have been working hard to find some way to bring relief to this farmer and others like him. While some definite plan is being worked out, it occurs to me that it may be well to get back of a proposition which will help not only wheat farmers but farm producers of all kinds.

When Congress reconvenes, to my mind, the Committees on Agriculture of the House and Senate can not do better than boost the proposal for the transfer of the Bureau of Markets from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Commerce.

AN AGE OF SPECIALISTS.

This is an age of specialists. The all-absorbing thought of the Department of Agriculture has been production, and they have succeeded admirably in that direction. They are specialists in that line and should devote themselves to that field. The thought which permeates the Department of Commerce is salesmanship. They are specialists in that field.

No industry is in such need of specialists for the marketing of its products as agriculture, and to my mind the problem will increase when Russia and other foreign countries get back to their pre-war production. So I am hoping the marketing of farm products will be given over to the Department of Commerce.

HOOVER THE GREATEST ADMINISTRATOR OF THE WAR.

I advocate this change entirely without taking into account the present personnel of these departments, simply as a matter of intelligent reorganization. If the change is made, however, it will be very pleasing to northwestern farmers to know that the work will be under the able direction of Secretary Herbert Hoover, the greatest administrator produced by the recent war. They recall with gratitude his changing of the wheat grades after the former officials of the Department of Agriculture had refused to do so, and which resulted in their receiving many additional millions of dollars. They appreciate, too, that his was the only Government business venture—the United States Grain Corporation—which accumulated a surplus.

RECORD OF HARDING ADMINISTRATION UNEQUALED.

Mr. Speaker, having made these suggestions to the Committee on Agriculture, it is only fair to them to acknowledge the great service for agriculture performed by them during the past 18 months. The record for farm legislation during this period is unequalled in the history of our country. Some of the bills were introduced at the suggestion of President Harding, and all of them had his support. More legislation favorable to the farming industry has been passed since March 4, 1921, than during the preceding quarter of a century.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6750. An act for the inclusion of certain lands in the Wenatchee National Forest, the Olympic National Forest, and the Snoqualmie National Forest, all in the State of Washington, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 382. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month; and

H. J. Res. 382. A joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for September, 1922, on the 23d day of said month.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate to wait on the President and notify him that Congress had concluded its work for this session and is ready to adjourn attended to that duty, and the President informs us that he has no further communication to make at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the present Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on legislation for the farmers enacted by the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, when the Harding administration came into power agriculture lay prone upon its back wounded and nigh unto death at the hands of those who should have been its friends.

The Federal Reserve Board, in order to accomplish its policy of deflation, unmindful of its effect on agriculture, instituted a system of retrenchment of credits by insisting on the payment of outstanding loans.

Owing to the depletion of deposits in country banks in the agricultural sections caused by the excessive buying of Liberty bonds by their depositors, very many of the country banks were heavy borrowers from their city correspondents, and were straining their credit in an effort to finance the farmers of the Nation.

When the Federal Reserve Board instituted its policy of a retrenchment of loans it immediately caused the city banks to call upon the country banks to reduce their indebtedness to them. This made a bad situation worse, and it immediately forced the country banks to call upon the farmers to make heavy sacrifices to pay their loans, and also created such a stringency of credit that loans secured by real estate were also called for payment, thus cutting like a two-edged sword.

To add to the distress of the agricultural interests of the country the Underwood tariff law invited the importation of wheat and other grain, so that in one year Canada shipped into this country 44,000,000 bushels of wheat, which naturally meant the displacement of an equal amount of American wheat.

All of these elements acting together so demoralized the grain markets of the country that the farmer was compelled to sell his products at much less than the cost of production.

Immediately upon the convening of the present Congress the emergency agricultural tariff bill was reported and passed in the House and was enacted into law in a little more than a month. It had a marked tendency to check the downward trend of prices, and there soon became evident an upward trend which increased as surplus stocks were exhausted.

The wool industry was in a ruinous condition, but after the enactment of this meritorious legislation soon reached higher levels and a far more satisfactory price was obtained for it.

In order to overcome the impaired credit of the agricultural sections the present Congress established a loan fund of $1,000,000,000 to be administered by the War Finance Corporation; and out of this fund approximately $400,000,000 was advanced, with the result that the agriculture and live-stock industries of the West were again placed upon a sound basis.

The packers' bill, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock and dairy products, was then passed, and its beneficial effects have been so pronounced that it has met the unqualified approval of the country.

The operations of grain gamblers had become such a menace that the antigambling in grain futures act was passed; and while the first bill was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is felt that the objections have been fully met in the new measure and that gambling in grain will be reduced to a minimum through its enforcement.

As a further incentive to agriculture an act was passed to authorize producers of agricultural products to form associations for the purpose of collectively preparing and marketing their products. This is a measure much desired by farm organizations and will be highly beneficial to them.

In order that agricultural interests might be better represented on the Federal Reserve Board legislation has been enacted by this Congress which practically calls for a fair representation of that important industry on the Federal Reserve Board.

This Congress found the Federal Farm Loan Board unable to function because of its inability to place Federal farm loan bonds on an unfavorable financial market, and to meet this situation Congress created a revolving fund of such amount to enable the Federal Farm Loan Board to finance its succeeding series of bond issues with the result that the last issue of $75,000,000 was oversubscribed within a few hours.

Considerable criticism has been directed at the present Congress by the business interests of the East on account of the tendency to favor agriculture and live stock by the Representatives in Congress from the agricultural sections, who were fully cognizant of the perilous condition into which agriculture had fallen, and who exerted their utmost efforts and were exceedingly successful in securing this list of beneficial legislation.

It is well understood that the financing of agriculture and live stock by the War Finance Corporation is only temporary and that the passage of a permanent rural credits measure is imperative.

Committees are industriously active in an effort to construct appropriate legislation of this character, and it is a foregone conclusion that within a reasonable time a comprehensive rural credits act will be reported and passed and become effective at an early date.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course every Member of the House knows that the gentleman's remarks need much revision [laughter], and to that part of his request I do not object, but I want to know if the gentleman is going to put the same sort of stuff in his revision that he has been delivering to the House now. If so, while I do not like to object, I hesitate to consent to it.

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman does not want good political philosophy, of course, the gentleman can object.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he seriously thinks that there is any doubt about Mississippi going Democratic this year, and if there is not, what is the use of his speech unless he is addressing it to Mud Puddle Precinct, in which I am advised he is very popular. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIN. Of course, Mississippi is going Democratic; why even Kentucky is going Democratic when the people read what I have to say and you fail to answer my questions between now and the election in November.

Mr. LANGLEY. It will not go Democratic if my friend from Mississippi goes down there and makes a few of these same sort of speeches. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

STRIKING JOINT RESOLUTION FROM CALENDAR.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have stricken from the calendar House Joint Resolution 354, a similar resolution having passed both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There are one or two measures—at least one, I know—that have passed both Houses that will not be enrolled or can not be enrolled by 2 o'clock. Now, the inquiry I wish to make is whether, having passed both Houses and being in that condition at the regular meeting of the Congress in December, or whenever it may meet, the legislation will still be good——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The Chair thinks it is still pending legislation. There is no limit of time, and the Chair thinks that the Speaker and the Vice President, if the Congress is in session, can sign them.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Has he any information or can he advise the House that we will have an extra session, and when?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no information on that subject.

Mr. WINGO. It is not decided?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not so far as I know.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair, wishing you all a safe journey home and a refreshing and agreeable vacation, declares the session of Congress adjourned sine die.
